**Mr. Webster* and Mr. Jones, contra, [463 insisted, that no question could arise on the sufficiency of the plea in point of law, for by going to issue on the facts alleged in the plea, the parties have waived all objections of that nature; or, in the words of Gilbert, "if a party replies to a plea before it comes on to be argued, this is as full an admission of the plea as if it had been argued and allowed; for the plea by this replication is allowed to be good; only the defendant is put to the proof thereof; and so he may be, when it is argued and allowed. But if he proves his plea, the bill must be dismissed at the hearing."<sup>2</sup> Thus, if the defendant, in pleading a purchase for a valuable consideration, omits to deny notice; if the plaintiff replies to it, all that the defendant has to do, is to prove his purchase; and even if the plaintiff proves notice, it is immaterial; for it is the plaintiff's own fault if he does not set down the plea to be argued, in which case it would be overruled.<sup>3</sup> So here, if the plea had been bad, the plaintiff should have set it down for argument. The plea consists of two material parts; it alleges a judgment at law, for the same cause of action, in a court of competent jurisdiction; and it avers that there is no ground to impeach that judgment, and no new evidence discovered to enable the plaintiff to go behind it. There is the same strictness of pleading in equity, as at law;<sup>4</sup> but if the rule were not so, this plea is sufficient. *The general principle is clear, that a [464 judgment in a competent court, is a bar to a proceeding for the same cause of action in any other court. It is conclusive as to every matter which might have been litigated and decided in the first suit. The rule in equity is the same in this respect as at law.<sup>5</sup> Nor does it make any difference, that the case is proper, in itself, for equity jurisdiction. If so, a judgment at law could never be pleaded in bar of a suit in equity. Questions of fraud and trust are not the peculiar and exclusive subjects of equity jurisdiction. Whenever courts of common law can reach these subjects, they dispose of them effectually and conclusively.<sup>6</sup> If a particular subject is common to the two jurisdictions, the judgment of the tribunal which first

1.—Coop. Pl. 227.

2.—Gilb. For. Rom. 98; Mitf. Pl. 244; Beames's Eq. Pl. 317; 2 Eq. Abr. 79; Wyatt's Prac. Reg. 376; 1 Scho. & Lefr. 725.

3.—Harris v. Ingleden, 3 P. Wms. 95.

4.—2 Atk. 632.

5.—3 Atk. 623.

6.—1 Burr. 396; Mitf. Pl. 90; 3 Bl. Com. 431; 2 P. Wms. 156; 1 P. Wms. 154.

appropriates it to itself, must necessarily be conclusive, otherwise the party might speculate upon his chances of recovery in both; and as the courts of the Union are now constituted, we should be presented with the novel spectacle of a party suing on both sides of the circuit court for the same cause of action. Here the judgment is as good a bar to the discovery as to the relief.<sup>1</sup> So, a plea of the statute of limitations, or the statute of frauds, is a bar to discovery as well as relief.<sup>2</sup> And it is now the settled course of proceeding, that if a bill is 465* filed for discovery and relief, *and the plea is sufficient to bar the relief, it is held sufficient to bar the discovery.<sup>3</sup> It is the general rule, that a plea confesses and avoids; but that principle does not apply in this case, where the defendant denies every allegation of the bill, and supports his denial by the former trial and verdict. Had it been a plea of payment, or release, or of the statute of frauds, or limitations, the rule might be applicable. The real defense is, that this matter has been before tried, and found against the plaintiff. If the defendant had answered more, he would have overruled his own plea.

Where is the authority for asserting, that it is no objection to the present bill, that a discovery was not sought pendente lite? What use could now be made of a discovery? It could not aid any proceeding elsewhere; and could only be used as a ground for relief in the present suit. The whole of the argument on the other side, on this point, rests on the notion, that the plaintiff may sue at law, and being defeated there, may, of course, file a bill in equity for the same matter. The unavoidable consequence of that doctrine would be, that in no case could the judgment of a court of law be pleaded in bar to a suit in equity. Here the cause of action is equally within the jurisdiction of a court of law, which has pronounced upon it, and whose judgment must, therefore, be conclusive in all other courts; and the argument against its conclusiveness, in this case, goes on the supposition, that the defendant can 466* not set up *the judgment without undertaking to prove that it was a correct judgment on the merits, or, in other words, without going through the whole process of trial again. The plaintiff had to choose between three different courses. He might sue in equity; he might sue at law, and file a bill for discovery, lite pendente; or he might bring an action at law, and go to trial without the aid of a discovery. He elected the latter course, and must be bound by it. The verdict and judgment constitute a flat bar. The plaintiff is not now entitled to a discovery, unless he is entitled to relief; he is not entitled to relief, because it is a res judicata. A court of equity cannot try over again the merits which were fully tried in the former cause. To revise the merits of a cause which has been once tried between the same parties, and in a competent court, is the province of an appellate court, and not of a coordinate tribunal, or one of a different jurisdiction. Parties must prosecute their rights in due time, and before the proper forum; and having once elected their forum, the decision is conclusive, not only as to the matter actually adjudged, but as to every matter which might have been litigated and decided.<sup>4</sup> In the action at law, the judge's charge might have been excepted to, if erroneous, and a new trial granted, which is in itself a sort of equitable right; but if the charge was correct, no injustice has been done. The present bill avows it to be for the same cause of action, and does not allege any *incompetency in the jurisdiction [467 of the court of law. It sets up no new right, but merely contends, that the plaintiff had a right then, on matter discovered since, but existing at the time. The question now is, not as to the goodness of the counts in the plaintiff's declaration, but whether the merits have been substantially tried upon them; not intending, however, to admit, that the counts were not sufficient. The regular course of the Court of Chancery, in such a case, is to refer them to the master to report whether the cause of action be substantially the same.<sup>5</sup>

As to the principles which govern courts of equity in setting aside verdicts as against equity, it must be shown that at the time of the trial at law some material fact existed, within the defendant's own knowledge, different from the finding of the jury.<sup>6</sup> Here there is no such fact; and even if there had been, if it was also within the plaintiff's knowledge, he should have filed a bill of discovery, lite pendente, to obtain the defendant's answer on oath. Supposing the testimony of E. Williams to be true, it establishes no fact existing at the time, which is essential to entitle the plaintiff to relief in equity.<sup>7</sup> But his testimony is explicitly contradicted by the defendant's answer; and the plea must therefore stand, being supported by the answer, and contradicted by the testimony of a single witness only, unsupported *by circumstances to strengthen its [468 credibility.<sup>8</sup> The transactions between the parties took place more than twenty years ago. The plaintiff had an opportunity of establishing his pretended claim in the tribunal which he had elected, and in which he failed; and the defendant has a just right to avail himself of that failure as a bar to any further proceedings in a case where, besides the solemn trial which has already been had at law, he has now purged his conscience of the allegations of fraud, which have been made against him without the slightest foundation in the facts and circumstances of the case.

Mr. Justice LIVINGSTON delivered the opinion of the court, and after stating the pleadings, proceeded as follows:

In examining whether there be any error in the decree of the court below, we shall have to inquire whether the plea of the respondent is proved; and if so, whether any other decree,

1.—Mitf. Pl. 193.

2.—Coop. Pl. 251, 255, 257; 1 Bro. Ch. 305.

3.—9 Ves., Jun., 75.

4.—Le Guen v. Gouverneur, 1 Johns. Cas. 436; Per Kent, C. J., Bateman v. Willoe, 1 Sch. & Lef. 201.

Wheat. 6.

5.—1 Vern. 310.; note; Raithby's ed.

6.—Lee v. Williams, 3 Atk. 224.

7.—Standish v. Radley, 2 Atk. 178.

8.—Walton v. Hobbse, 1 Atk. 19, and the cases there cited; 2 Ves., Jun., 243; 1 Bro. Ch. 52; 1 Johns. Ch. Cas. 459; 3 Ves., Jun., 170.

except that of dismissing the bill, could have been made by the court below.

In examining the question of fact, that is, whether the plea were proved or not, it will be borne in mind, that no decree can be made against a positive denial of the defendant, of any matter directly charged in the bill, on the testimony of a single witness, unaccompanied by some corroborating circumstance. 469* There is no pretense that there is anything untrue in any of the averments which the plea contains on the subject of the proceedings at law—such as that a judgment was obtained by the respondent—that the same is in full force, &c. The first averment in the plea, which will require a more particular consideration, is the one denying that the respondent had at any time obtained from E. Williams, any allowance or payment, for, on account of his being bail for Gibson, in an action brought against him by one Evans. The respondent had been permitted, as appears by the facts of the case, to retain out of a fund, on which the appellant had a claim, a considerable sum to save him harmless against this responsibility, and which was, in all probability, allowed to him, on the trial at law. If, therefore, it could have been shown that Blake had been fully indemnified, or paid for this liability from any other quarter, and that this fact had come to the appellant's knowledge since the judgment at law, it would seem no more than equitable, notwithstanding these proceedings, thus far to open the account between them. But has this been done? The allegation of the bill in substance is, that Blake has been twice indemnified for the same loss, or, in other words, that he had been twice re-imbursed the moneys which he paid as the bail of Gibson. This fraud, which is so unhesitatingly charged upon the respondent, is not made out by any testimony in the cause. Independent of Blake's positive and absolute denial, which is equivalent to the testimony of one witness, there is nothing in the deposition 470* of Williams, who is the only *witness to this point, to establish the fact as stated in the bill. This gentleman has been twice examined, once in the year 1805, as a witness in the trial at law, and again, as a witness in this cause. On his first examination, he stated that he was informed by Blake that he held in his hand about $6,300, which had been received of Henry Newman, as an indemnity for his having become bail for Gibson in an action by some person whose name he did not recollect, on which pretense Blake refused to pay him this sum. In the second deposition, which was taken in this cause, he swears that he was informed by Blake, that he had received from Newman about $6,000, which he should retain, in consequence of his liability to Evans, as the bail of Gibson; and that he, Williams, allowed the respondent to apply this money for that purpose. Now, admitting that Blake retained these moneys, and with the consent of Williams, who, it appears, however, had no interest in, or control over them, with intent to apply them in this way, where is there any proof whatever, in contradiction of Blake's answer that he ever did make that use of them? He might have securities of Gibson of various kinds, the avails of which he might have a right to retain for the same object, but if he actually made only one appropriation for such object, no one could complain. That the fund spoken of by Williams, which arose out of Newman's note, was not applied to the indemnity which has so often been mentioned, appears not only by an averment in Blake's plea to that effect, but by the testimony of Gibson *him- [471 self, a witness of the appellant, who declares, that the note of Newman was subject to his order; that no privity existed between Williams and Blake respecting the same; and that it had not been placed in Blake's hands as an indemnity for becoming his bail. It follows, therefore, that Blake could not have obtained from Williams any allowance or payment on account of this responsibility; and we accordingly find, from the bill itself, that on a settlement which took place between Blake and Gibson, in November, 1796, about two months after the acceptance in favor of the appellant, the former fell in debt to the latter a sum exceeding two thousand dollars, the payment of which, by Blake, is one subject of complaint in the appellant's bill. Now, it is more than probable, that in this settlement, Gibson received a credit for the very money of which Williams speaks, as Gibson acknowledges it to have been a final settlement of all the accounts between him and Blake. The court, therefore, is entirely satisfied, that the averment in the respondent's plea, which it has just been considering, is fully established, and that the proof is such as to leave no room whatever to believe, that Blake was ever repaid the moneys he advanced as the bail of Gibson, from any other fund than that which the appellant had consented should stand pledged for that purpose. As little truth is there in the allegation, that what Williams could testify on this subject, was unknown to Hughes during the pendency of the action at law; for Williams, who is examined as a witness for the *plaintiff in this [472 suit, swears to the very fact, which he had been produced to prove in the action at law respecting the declarations of Blake concerning Newman's note; and this he does without any variation from his former testimony, materially affecting the present suit. The other averment, therefore, in the plea, that no new evidence has come to the appellant's knowledge respecting the matters in litigation, is fully and satisfactorily established.

The truth of the plea being thus made out, what is to be the consequence? If the rule of courts of equity in England is to be applied, there can be no doubt. If a plea, in the apprehension of the complainant, be good in matter, but not true in fact, he may reply to it, as has been done here, and proceed to examine witnesses in the same way as in case of a replication to an answer; but such a proceeding is always an admission of the sufficiency of the plea itself, as much so, as if it had been set down for argument and allowed; and if the facts relied on by the plea are proved, a dismissal of the bill on the hearing is a matter of course. Whatever objection there may be to adhering strictly to this course of proceeding in every description of cases, it is considered as the long and established practice of a court of equity, which ought not lightly to be departed from. It is not perceived, that any serious mischief can arise from it. Counsel will generally be able to decide on the merits of any defense which may be spread on a plea, and if insufficient, it is not probable they will do otherwise than set it down for argument. 473*] *Nor will they ever take issue on it, but in a case which presents a very clear and sufficient defense, if the facts be proved. If a replication should be filed inadvertently, the court would have no difficulty in permitting it to be withdrawn. But if the plaintiff will persevere in putting the defendant to the trouble and expense of proving his plea, it must be from an entire conviction that it contains a substantial defense, and in such case there is no hardship in a court's considering it in the same light. But without applying the rule which has been mentioned, to the present case, the court has no difficulty in saying, that the matters set forth in this plea, which has been drawn with great care and judgment, constitute a complete defense to the present action, and that the appellant has failed in showing any good cause why the judgment at law should not be conclusive on all the matters stated in the bill. Whatever claim he may at one time have had on Blake for one fourth of $75,000, secured by Barrel's notes, if Blake knew at the time of taking them of his interest to that extent, or for not taking a note for that amount in the name of Hughes himself, it is very certain, that with a full knowledge on his part, that Blake utterly denied a liability to account with anyone but Gibson, he came to a settlement with him, by allowing him to accept of Gibson's draft, in his favor, in such way as to charge the fund on which it was drawn with so many deductions as entirely to exhaust it. And when he is apprised of this conditional acceptance by his 474*] agent, or the person who *presented the draft, instead of returning it, or making any complaint, he acquiesces in it for seven or eight years, and then brings an action to enforce this very contract of acceptance, which he must have known put it in the power of the acceptor to make all the deductions from the fund in his hands, which were designated in the act of acceptance. After six years' litigation in a court of law, it is now attempted to revive the same controversy, at least in part, on an allegation that Blake received a compensation in some other way than out of the fund, on which the bill in his favor was drawn, for one of the liabilities mentioned in the acceptance. That this was not the case, is abundantly proved. But if Blake had other funds of Gibson, besides the note of Barrel, which he also considered as under Gibson's exclusive control, out of which his indemnity as bail might have been obtained, what right has Hughes now to complain, that such other funds were not applied in that way, after he had agreed or consented that this indemnity should come out of those funds of Gibson in the hands of Blake, out of which he was to be paid? Having come into the arrangement, Blake might well think himself at liberty, as it seems he did, to apply the other funds of Gibson in any other way which he and Gibson might think proper. Whether Gibson be liable to the appellant for the subtraction of any part of his fund for the payment of his debt, is a question not before the court; but we cannot see that an application of them in express con-475*] formity with the agreement of *the Wheat. 6.

parties to this suit, can give the appellant any claim on the respondent. At any rate, the plea having denied all the allegations which were relied on as grounds for removing the bar which it was anticipated would be interposed to the appellant's bill, and all the matters stated in the plea, on which issue was taken, having been fully proved, the court is of opinion, that the decree of the Circuit Court must be affirmed, with costs.

Decree affirmed.<sup>1</sup>

Aff'g.—1 Mason, 515.

Cited—10 Pet. 209, 211; 14 Pet. 257; 2 Wall. 430; 16 Wall. 30; 9 Otto, 206; 5 Bank. Reg. 264; 1 Cliff. 278, 506; 2 Cliff. 51, 79; 3 Cliff. 497; 4 Cliff. 459; Bald. 491, 495; 1 Ware, 388.

[LOCAL LAW. PRACTICE.]

BARTLE v. COLEMAN.

Under the act of Assembly of Virginia, the defendant may enter special bail, and defend the suit at any time before the entering up of judgment upon a writ of inquiry executed; and the appearance of the defendant, or the entry of special bail, before such judgment, discharges the appearance bail.

If the defendant does not appear, or give special bail, the appearance bail may defend the suit, and is liable to the same judgment as the defendant would have been liable to; but the defendant cannot appear and consent to a reference, the report and judgment on which is to bind the appearance bail as well as himself. Such a joint judgment is erroneous, and will be reversed as to both.

THIS cause was argued by Mr. Swann for the *plaintiff in error,<sup>2</sup> and by [*476 Mr. Jones and Mr. Taylor for the defendant in error.<sup>3</sup>

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to a judgment rendered by the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia and county of Alexandria, against Andrew Bartle and Samuel Bartle, on a writ issued by George Coleman against Andrew Bartle, on the service of which, Samuel Bartle became bail for his appearance. The defendant in the court below not having entered his appearance, a conditional judgment was entered at the rules held in the clerk's office, against the defendant and his appearance bail. This being an action on the case, the judgment at the rules was for no specific sum, but for the damages which the plaintiff in that suit has sustained, which damages are to be inquired into, and ascertained by a jury. After this writ of inquiry shall be executed, and not till then, a final judgment for the damages assessed by the jury is rendered by the court. In the meantime, the cause stands on the court docket for trial.

The act of Assembly respecting this subject is in these words: "And every judgment entered in the office against a defendant and bail,

1.—Vide 1 Mason's Rep. 515., S. C.

2.—He cited Dunlop v. Laporte, 1 Hen. & Mun. 22; Gray v. Hines, 4 Hen. & Mun. 437; Fisher v. Riddle, 1 Hen. & Mun. 329.

3.—They cited Holdup v. Otway, 2 Wms. Saund. 106, and the cases there cited; Gould v. Hammersley, 4 Taunt. 148.

477*] or against a defendant *and sheriff, shall be set aside, if the defendant at the succeeding court shall be allowed to appear without bail, put in good bail, being ruled so to do, or surrender himself in custody, and shall plead to issue immediately." "If the defendant shall fail to appear, or shall not give special bail, being ruled thereto by the court, the bail for appearance may defend the suit, and shall be subject to the same judgment and recovery as the defendant might or would be subject to, if he had appeared and given special bail."

The courts of Virginia have never construed this act strictly as to time. Although the absolute right given to the defendant to appear and set aside the judgment rendered in the office, is limited to "the succeeding court," he has always been allowed to appear, and set it aside, at any time before it became final. In all actions which sound in damages, the judgment cannot become final, until the damages shall be ascertained for which it is to be rendered.

In other respects, too, this law which authorizes a judgment against the appearance, or common bail, without the service of process on him, has been construed with great liberality. The cases which have been cited, show that the decisions in the Court of Appeals of Virginia have settled principles which seem to decide this case. It has not only been determined that the defendant may enter special bail, and defend the suit at any time before a final judgment, but also, that if he appears and pleads, without giving special bail, or appears and confesses judgment, the appearance bail is discharged. 478*] *It is also well known to be the settled practice of Virginia, if special bail be given, to discharge the appearance bail, although the defendant should not appear, but the judgment should become final, either on his default, or on the execution of a writ of inquiry.

It is then settled, that the appearance of the defendant, or the entry of special bail, before final judgment, discharges the appearance bail.

Let these principles be applied to the case before the court. While the writ of inquiry was depending, we find this entry on the record: "In the case of George Coleman, plaintiff, and Andrew Bartle, defendant; and Andrew Bartle, plaintiff, and George Coleman, defendant; by consent of parties this case is referred to Joseph Deane," &c.

Could this rule be made without consent? Or could this consent be given without the appearance of the party, by himself or his attorney? Both these questions must be answered in the negative. What party, then, did appear and give this consent? Was it Andrew Bartle, the defendant in the cause, who is named as the party, or was it Samuel Bartle, his appearance bail, who is not named? In addition to the omission of the name of Samuel Bartle, an omission which could not have been made had he actually appeared, and been a party to the rule, it is to be observed that he had no power to consent to it. The law allows him to defend the suit, but does not allow him to refer it to arbitrators. We do not hazard much in saying, that no court would or ought to permit such a rule as this to be made, without the consent of the defendant given in person, or 479*] by his attorney. *But were it even supposed to be in the power of Samuel Bartle, to refer the suit of Coleman against Andrew Bartle, he could not refer that of Andrew Bartle against Coleman; and this suit also is embraced in the same rule.

It is then apparent, that it is Andrew Bartle who consented to this rule.

It has been contended, that the consent of Samuel Bartle must also be implied. We do not think so. It is reasonable to suppose that his name would have appeared, had he been a party to the rule. But it was not necessary that he should be a party to it. Andrew Bartle was himself competent to make this reference, and the appearance bail never comes into court, unless it be to defend the suit in consequence of the non-appearance of the defendant. But, were it even true that the consent of Samuel Bartle could be inferred, it would, nevertheless, be also true, that Andrew Bartle appeared, by the admission of the plaintiff; and such appearance, according to the decisions in Virginia, discharges his bail.

In the mode pursued by the clerk, in making his entry, the usual form of saying "this day came the parties," &c., is not pursued. But this is immaterial, because the parties perform an act in court, which could not be performed without appearing; they consent to a rule which implies appearance, and the form of the entry cannot affect its substance. Were it otherwise, the appearance of the defendant is entered in the usual form before final judgment. On the return of the *award, the following [*480 entry is made: "And now here, &c., at this day, &c., came, as well the plaintiff aforesaid, by his said attorney, as the said defendant, by Thomas Swan, his attorney, and the following award was returned," &c. The award is then recited, which shows, that the arbitrators proceeded on notice to Andrew Bartle only, and the judgment of the court is immediately rendered for the amount of the award against "Andrew Bartle, the defendant, and Samuel Bartle, the security for his appearance." Yet the appearance of Andrew Bartle is formally entered on the record previous to this judgment. If, instead of entering the judgment in pursuance of the award, it had been entered in pursuance of the confession of the defendant, this would have been the very case cited from 1 Hen. & Munf., 329. And what distinction can be taken between this case and that? The counsel for the defendant in error says, that a judgment by confession is a different judgment from that entered in the office, and, therefore, must be a substitute for it received by consent of the plaintiff. And is not this also a different judgment from that rendered in the office? And is it not entered at the instance of the plaintiff?

Were it necessary to pursue this argument further, we should all be of opinion, that judgment could not be rendered against the appearance bail on this award, and without executing the writ of inquiry, unless by his consent. But as we are of opinion, that the appearance of the defendant has discharged his bail, it is unnecessary to pursue the subject *far- [*481 ther. The judgment against Samuel Bartle is erroneous, and as it is joint, it must be reversed against both.

Judgment reversed.

[CHANCERY.]

PREVOST v. GRATZ ET AL.

GRATZ ET AL. v. PREVOST.

To establish the existence of a trust, the onus probandi lies on the party who alleges it.

In general, length of time is no bar to a trust clearly established to have once existed; and where fraud is imputed and proved, length of time ought not to exclude relief.

But as length of time necessarily obscures all human evidence, and deprives parties of the means of ascertaining the nature of the original transactions, it operates, by way of presumption, in favor of innocence, and against imputation of fraud.

The lapse of forty years, and the death of all the original parties, deemed sufficient to presume the discharge and extinguishment of a trust, proved once to have existed by strong circumstances; by analogy to the rule of law, which after a lapse of time presumes the payment of a debt, surrender of a deed, and extinguishment of a trust, where circumstances require it.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of Pennsylvania.

This was a bill in Chancery, filed in the court below, by the plaintiff, George W. Prevost, as administrator de bonis non, with the 482*] will annexed, of *George Croghan, deceased, against the defendants, Simon Gratz, Joseph Gratz, and Jacob Gratz, administrators of the estate of Michael Gratz, deceased, for a discovery and account of all the estate of G. Croghan, which had come to their hands, or possession, either personally or as the representatives of M. Gratz, who was one of the executors of G. Croghan, who died in August, 1782, having appointed M. Gratz, B. Gratz, T. Smallman, J. Tunis, and W. Powell, executors of his last will and testament. All the executors, except W. Powell, died before the commencement of the suit. B. Gratz died in 1800, and M. Gratz in 1811. W. Powell was removed from his office as executor in the manner prescribed by the laws of Pennsylvania, after the death of M. Gratz; and the plaintiff was thereupon appointed administrator de bonis non, with the will annexed. The bill charged M. Gratz and B. Gratz (the representatives of B. Gratz not being made parties), with sundry breaches of trust in respect to property conveyed to them in the life-time of the testator, and with other breaches of trust in relation to the assets of the testator after his decease; and also charged the defendants with neglect of duty in relation to the property and papers of G. Croghan, which had come to their hands since the decease of M. Gratz.

The first ground of complaint, on the part of the plaintiff, related to a tract of land lying on Tenederah River, in the state of New York, which was conveyed by G. Croghan to M. Gratz, as containing 9,050 acres, by deed, dated the 2d of March, 1770, for the consideration expressed in the *deed of £1,800. The [*483 deed was upon its face absolute, and contained the covenants of general warranty, and for the title of the grantor, which are usual in absolute deeds. At the time of the execution of the deed, G. Croghan was in the state of New York, and M. Gratz was at Philadelphia. The land, thus conveyed, was, in the year 1795, and after the death of G. Croghan, sold, by M. Gratz, to one Lawrence, in New York, for a large sum of money. The plaintiff alleged, that this conveyance made by G. Croghan to M. Gratz, though in form absolute, was in reality a conveyance upon a secret trust, to be sold for the benefit of the grantor; and he claimed to be allowed the value of the lands at the time the present suit was brought, upon the ground of a fraudulent or improper breach of trust by the grantee, or at all events to the full amount of the profits made upon the sale in 1795, with interest up to the time of the decree. This trust was denied by the defendants, in their answer, so far as respects their own knowledge and belief; and if it did ever exist, they insisted, that the land was afterwards purchased by M. Gratz, with the consent of G. Croghan, for the sum of £850 15s. 5d., New York currency. It appeared from the evidence, that G. Croghan, and B. and M. Gratz, were intimately acquainted with each other, and a variety of accounts were settled between them, from the year 1769, to a short period before the death of G. Croghan;

NOTE.—In equity, length of time is no bar to a trust clearly established, provided no circumstances exist to raise a presumption from lapse of time of an extinguishment of the trust, and no open denial or repudiation of the trust is brought home to the knowledge of the parties in interest which requires them to act as upon an adverse title. Baker v. Whiting, 3 Sumn. 475; Manning v. Hayden, 7 Reporter, 434; 13 West. Jur., 318.

And where fraud is imputed and proved, the length of time during which that fraud has been concealed and practiced is rather an aggravation of the offense, than a circumstance to exclude relief. Bk. of U. S. v. Beverly, 1 How. 134; Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. 503; Platt v. Oliver, 2 McLean, 267.

Time only begins to run against an express trust from a period when it is openly disavowed by the trustee, who insists upon an adverse right and interest, which is fully and unequivocally made known to the cestui que trust. Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 177; Oliver v. Platt, 3 How. 333.

The statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of a trustee who has received money from his cestui que trust, until a demand and refusal. Taylor v. Benham, 5 How. 238.

Where a bill in equity avers an express trust, and defendant pleads the statute of limitations, the plea must be supported by an answer denying the facts which are alleged as the evidence of the trust. Harpending v. Ref. Dutch Ch., 16 Pet. 455.

A violation of trust growing out of a mistaken Wheat. 6.

construction of a will by the executors unaccompanied by fraudulent intent, is within the ten years statute of limitation of the State of New York, concerning actions for relief in cases of trust not cognizable by courts of law. Clarke v. Boorman, 18 Wall. 493.

The proposition that lapse of time constitutes no bar in cases of trust must be received with its appropriate qualifications. As long as the relation of trustee and cestui que trust is acknowledged to exist between the parties, and the trust is continued, lapse of time can constitute no bar to an account or other proper relief for the cestui que trust. But when this relation is no longer admitted to exist, or time so long acquiescence have obscured the nature and character of the trust, or the acts of the parties or other circumstances give rise to presumptions unfavorable to its continuance; in all such cases, a court of equity will refuse relief upon the ground of lapse of time and its inability to do complete justice. This doctrine will apply even to cases of express trust, and a fortiori it will apply with increased strength to cases of implied or constructive trust. Portlock v. Gardner, 1 Hare, 594, 603, 604; Attorney-General v. Fishmonger's Co., 5 Mylne & Cr. 16, 17; Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 4 Mylne & Cr. 41; 2 Story Eq. Jur., s. 1520, a.

As to the effect of lapse of time (in the absence of express stationary provisions), as a bar to relief in express and constructive trusts, see Hill on trustees, 264, 265.

that he was involved in pecuniary embarrassments, and extensively engaged in land speculations; and some portions of his property were 484* conveyed to one or *both the Messrs. Gratz upon express and open trusts. It also appeared, that in an account which was settled at Pittsburg, in May, 1775, between B. and M. Gratz, and G. Croghan, there was the following item of credit:

“ August, 1774. By cash received of Howard, for 9,000 acres of land on Tenederah, sold him for £850 15s., New York currency, is here,	£797 12 6
Interest on £797 12s. 6d. from August, 1774, to May, 1775, is eight months at 6 per cent. -	31 18 1
	£829 10 7

Upon the back of another account between B. & M. Gratz and G. Croghan, which was rendered to the latter in December, 1779, there was a memorandum in the handwriting of G. Croghan, in which he enumerates the debts then due by him to B. & M. Gratz, amounting to £1,220 1s. 2d., and then adds the following words: “ Paid of the above £144 York currency, besides the deed for the land on the Tenederah River 9,000 acres patented;” which memorandum appeared to have been made after the conveyance of the land to M. Gratz. It also appeared that the value of the land, as fixed in the account of May, 1775, was its full value; which was proved by public sales of adjoining lands at the same period when Howard was asserted to have purchased the land. A counterpart of 485* the account of 1775 *was also in the possession of M. Gratz, in which the word Howard was crossed out with a pen, but so that it was still perfectly legible, and the name of Michael Gratz, in his own handwriting, written over it. M. Gratz continued in possession of the Tenederah land, paid great attention to it, and incurred great expenses in making improvements on it after the year 1786. The mother of the plaintiff was the heir of G. Croghan, and it was proved that his father had unreserved and frequent access to the papers of G. Croghan, and resided several years in Philadelphia, with the view of investigating the situation of the estate, and finally abandoned all hopes of deriving any benefit from it. The account of May, 1775, from which the alleged trust was sought to be proved, was delivered over to him by the representatives of M. Gratz, among the other papers of G. Croghan.

The second principal ground of the plaintiff's complaint respected a judgment obtained by the representatives of one W. M'Ilvaine, against G. Croghan, which was purchased by B. Gratz, during the life-time of G. Croghan, and was by him assigned to S. Gratz, one of the defendants, who, under one or more executions issued on that judgment, became the purchaser of certain lands belonging to G. Croghan. It appeared, that on the 30th of March, 1769, G. Croghan gave his bond to W. M'Ilvaine, for the sum of £400, which debt by the will of M'Ilvaine, became on his death vested in his widow, who afterwards intermarried with J. Clark. A judgment was obtained upon the bond against 486* G. Croghan, in the name of W. *Humphreys, executor of M'Ilvaine, in the Court of Common Pleas in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, at the October term, 1774, upon which a fi. fa. issued, returnable to the April term of the same court, in 1775. On the 8th of March preceding the return day of the fi. fa., Bernard Gratz purchased this judgment from Clark, and received an assignment of it, for which he gave his own bond for £300, and interest. About this time G. Croghan was considerably embarrassed, and several suits were depending against him. Bernard Gratz, having failed to pay his bond, was sued by Clark, and in 1794 a judgment was recovered against him for £89 6s. 10d., the balance then due upon the bond, which sum was afterwards paid by M. Gratz. The judgment of Humphreys against G. Croghan was kept alive from time to time, until 1786, and in that year, on the death of Humphreys, J. Bloomfield was appointed administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of Humphreys, and revived the judgment, and it was kept in full force until it was finally levied on certain lands of G. Croghan. In the year 1800, B. Gratz assigned this judgment to his nephew, S. Gratz, one of the defendants, partly in consideration of natural affection, and partly in consideration of the above sum of £89 6s. 10d. paid towards the discharge of the bond of B. Gratz, by his (Simon's) father, M. Gratz. S. Gratz, having thus become the beneficial owner of the judgment, proceeded to issue execution thereon, at different times, between September, 1801, and November, 1804, caused the same to be levied on sundry tracts of land *of G. [487 Croghan, in Westmoreland and Huntington counties, of five of which he, being the highest bidder at the sale, became the purchaser. The tracts thus sold, contained upwards of 2,000 acres, and were sold for little more than $1,000. The title to some part of this land is still in controversy. Shortly after the assignment of the judgment to B. Gratz, on the 16th of May, 1775, G. Croghan, by two deeds of that date, conveyed to B. Gratz, for a valuable consideration therein expressed, about 45,000 acres of land. A declaration of trust was executed by B. Gratz on the 2d of June, 1775, by which he acknowledged that these conveyances were in trust to enable him to sell the same, and with the proceeds to discharge certain enumerated debts of G. Croghan, and among them the debt due on the M'Ilvaine bond, and to account for the residue to G. Croghan.

The bill charged, that the assignment of this judgment was procured by B. and M. Gratz, or both of them, after the death of G. Croghan, and that nothing was due upon the judgment; or if anything was due, it was paid upon the assignment out of moneys belonging to the estate of G. Croghan. But the evidence disproved these charges, and showed, that the assignment was made to B. Gratz in the life-time of G. Croghan, and that the judgment never was paid or satisfied by G. Croghan, or out of his estate.

The defendants, in their answer, denied, to their best knowledge and belief, all the material charges of the bill; and upon replication, the cause was heard in the court below upon the bill, answer, evidence, *and exhibits; [488 and a decree was pronounced dismissing the bill as to all the charges, except that respecting the lands lying on Tenederah River; and as to this, a decree was pronounced in favor of the plaintiff for all the profits made upon a sale of those lands by M. Gratz. From this decree, both parties appealed to this court.

Wheat. 6.

Mr. Webster and Mr. D. B. Ogden, for the plaintiff, argued, (1) That not only ought M. Gratz to be considered as a trustee of the Tenederah lands, but a decree ought to have been given for the value of the lands at the date of the decree, instead of the amount for which the lands were sold by him. They insisted that the original existence of the trust was fully proved by the evidence, and being thus clearly established, the burden of proof was on the defendants to show how and by what means it had been discharged. M. Gratz being a trustee to sell, he could not buy.<sup>1</sup> This is the universal, inflexible rule of a court of equity; and even if the trust is to pay a debt due to a trustee himself, still he is a trustee for the surplus, subject to the same prohibition; and in this case, never having sold the land in execution of the trust, he must now be regarded as still holding it, and ought to be accountable for its value at the present time, and not at the time of the pretended sale. If he now held the land, the court would compel him to account for its 489* present value, *or to reconvey it; but he does hold it in equity, and no act of his ought to prejudice the cestui que trust. The lapse of time is nothing, unless it appear that he knew the purchase by the trustee, and must, therefore, be presumed to have acquiesced.<sup>2</sup> But here no such knowledge is proved, and, therefore, no such acquiescence can be presumed. (2) They insisted that S. Gratz had no right to purchase the lands sold at the sheriff's sale under the M'Ilvaine judgment; but under the circumstances of the case ought to be considered as holding them in trust for the plaintiff. This being a proceeding without any notice to the party interested, cannot be sustained. The notice given by the scire facias was only to B. Gratz, the executor of G. Croghan; that is, the owner of the judgment revived it by notice to himself. It is a settled principle that an executor cannot purchase the property of his testator;<sup>3</sup> and the purchaser of an equity takes it subject to all claims. Besides, this is a judgment which the law would presume to be satisfied from length of time; which is attempted to be executed by the judgment creditor who has in his own hands the funds with which it was to be satisfied, and thus attempts to convert a legal right into an instrument of injustice, which forms a strong ground for equitable relief.<sup>4</sup>

Mr. Pinkney and Mr. Sergeant, contra, contended, (1) That the present plaintiff had no right, alone, to call the defendants to account 490* for the alleged trust *as to the Tenederah lands, nor jointly with other parties as the administrator de bonis non, with the will annexed, of G. Croghan. Equitable estates descend as well as legal estates. Mrs. Prevost, the heir of Croghan, died while the supposed trust existed, leaving several children, besides the plaintiff, who ought also to have been made parties, if he is to be considered as suing as a parcener. The sale of the trust estate indeed extinguishes the right of the heirs to the land, but it entitles them to the money for which it was sold, which now represents and stands in place of the land. Nor has Croghan's will any effect upon the matter. The will empowers a majority of his executors (of whom B. Gratz, during his life, was always to be one) to sell such of his lands as they should think fit, for the payment of his debts. It does not devise to the executors to be sold, but gives them a naked authority to sell and convey. Even admitting that the Tenederah lands fell within the authority, the executors could only have sold the equitable estate of Croghan, which on his death descended to his heir. But this supposes that very equitable estate, for the existence of which we contend. But the executors did not sell that equitable estate. M. Gratz, though one of those executors, did not sell under the will. He sold, not the equitable interest merely, but the whole estate, and threw the equitable claimants under Croghan, upon the surplus of the proceeds which he could not appropriate. To sell under the will, he must have had the sanction of the other executors, which he had not; and the plaintiff, as administrator de bonis non, *could not have authorized it, be- [491 cause he did not become administrator until M. Gratz had rendered a sale by his orders or consent impossible. The will, therefore, did not reach the case, and cannot now in any degree control it. Nor does the interest which creditors may have in the proceeds make it personal estate in Croghan, or subject it to the control of the administrator de bonis non. (2) The counsel argued that there was no sufficient proof of the existence of any such trust as that alleged respecting the Tenederah lands, but that M. Gratz became the absolute owner of the lands, with the knowledge and consent of Croghan. Fraud is never to be presumed, especially after such a lapse of time; and even if the trust ever existed, equity will rather presume it to be satisfied, than indulge a presumption of fraud, where the parties are dead, and the evidence respecting the transaction is lost.<sup>5</sup> Even if there was here a trust to sell, it was a trust to sell for a fixed price, created by a person of full age, and full knowledge of the circumstances, for the benefit only of the trustee and himself. The reason of the rule, that a trustee cannot purchase, is, that the trustee might be tempted from his duty, and buy at an inadequate price. Where the power is general, or, where other persons are interested in the execution of the trust, it may be conceived to be a salutary rule, though sometimes operating severely. But where the trustee is a creditor, *where the price is fixed, and no one [492 else is interested, it would be difficult to assign any good reason why the trustee might not be the purchaser. (3) As to the M'Ilvaine judgment, they principally relied upon the same grounds which are stated in the opinion of the court below, quoted infra in a note to the opinion of this court in the present case.

1.—10 Ves. 423; 1 Ves., Sen., 9; 2 Bro. Ch. Rep. 400; 2 Johns. Ch. Rep. 252; 5 Ves. 794; 4 Ves. 497; 6 Ves. 631.

2.—12 Ves.

3.—2 Johns. Rep. Ch. 252.

4.—3 Ves., Jun., 170.

Wheat. 6.

5.—12 Ves. 261, 374; 2 Ves. 581; 3 P. Wms. 266; 2 Atk. 67; 3 Atk. 105; 3 Bro. Ch. Rep. 640; 2 Scho. & Lefr. 41, 71.

Mr. Justice STORY delivered the opinion of the court, and after stating the proceedings in the court below, proceeded as follows:

The first point upon which the cause was argued, respects the tract of land on the Tenederah River. It appears from the evidence that this tract of land, containing 9,050 acres, was conveyed by Col. Croghan to Michael Gratz, by a deed bearing date on the 2d of March, 1770, for the consideration expressed in the deed of £1,800. The deed is upon its face absolute, and contains the covenants of general warranty, and for the title of the grantor, which are usual in absolute deeds; but are unnecessary in deeds of trust. At the time of the execution of the deed, Col. Croghan was in the state of New York, and Michael Gratz was at Philadelphia. The land was, after the death of Col. Croghan, and in the year 1795, sold by Michael Gratz to a Mr. Lawrence, in New York, for a large sum of money. The plaintiff contends that this conveyance made by Col. Croghan to Michael Gratz, though in form absolute, was in reality a conveyance upon a secret trust, to be sold for the benefit of the grantor; and in this view of the case, he contends farther, that he is entitled to be allowed the full value of the lands at the time the present suit was brought, upon the ground of a fraudulent or improper breach of trust by the grantee, or at all events, to the full amount of the profits made upon the sale in 1795, with interest up to the time of the decree.

The attention of the court will, therefore, be directed, in the first place, to the consideration of the question, whether this was a conveyance in trust, and if so, of what nature that trust was; and, in the next place, whether that trust was ever lawfully discharged or extinguished. If there be still a subsisting trust, there can be no doubt that the plaintiff is entitled to some relief.

It appears from the evidence that Col. Croghan, and Bernard and Michael Gratz, were intimately acquainted with each other, and a variety of accounts was settled between them, from the year 1769, to a short period before the death of Col. Croghan. During all this period, Col. Croghan appears to have had the most unbounded confidence in them; and particularly by his will, made in June 1782, a short time before his decease, he named them among his executors, and gave to Michael Gratz, in consideration of services rendered to him, five thousand acres of land, and to his daughter, Rachel Gratz, one thousand acres of land on Charter Creek, with an election to take the same number of acres in lieu thereof, in any other lands belonging to the testator. The situation of the parties, therefore, was one in which secret trusts might, probably, exist from the pecuniary embarrassments in which 493 Col. Croghan appears to have been involved, as well as from his extensive land speculations. And, in point of fact, some portions of his property were conveyed to one or both of the Messrs. Gratz, upon express and open trusts.

Still, however, the burthen of proof to establish the trust in controversy, lies on the plaintiff. The circumstances on which he relies are, in our judgment, exceedingly strong in his favor; and sufficient to repel any presumption against the trust drawn from the absolute terms of the deed. In an account which was settled at Pittsburg, in May, 1775, between Bernard and Michael Gratz, and Col. Croghan, is the following item of credit:

" August, 1774 By cash received of Howard, for 9,000 acres of land at Teuederah, sold him for £850 15s., New York currency, is here,	-	£797 12 6
Interest on £797 12s. 6d. from August, 1774, to May, 1775, is eight months, at 6 per cent.	-	31 18 1
		<hr/> £829 10 7

There is no question of the identity of the land here stated to be sold to Howard, with the tract conveyed to Michael Gratz by the deed, in 1770. If the conveyance to Michael Gratz had been originally made for a valuable consideration then paid, it seems utterly impossible to account for the allowance of this credit upon any sale at a subsequent period. It seems to us, therefore, that the only 495 rational explanation of this transaction is, that the conveyance to Michael Gratz, though absolute in form, was, in reality, a trust for the benefit of Col. Croghan. What the exact nature of this trust was, it is, perhaps, not very easy now to ascertain with perfect certainty. It might have been a trust to sell the lands for the benefit of Col. Croghan, and to apply the proceeds in part payment of the debts due from him to Bernard and Michael Gratz; or, it might have been a sale of the lands directly to Michael Gratz, in part payment of the same debt, at a price thereafter to be agreed upon, and fixed by the parties; and, in the meantime, there would arise a resulting trust, in favor of Col. Croghan, by operation at law.

Time, which buries in obscurity all human transactions, has achieved its accustomed effects upon this. The antiquity of the transaction, the death of all the original parties, and the unavoidable difficulties as to evidence, attending all cases where there are secret trusts and implicit confidences between the parties, renders it, perhaps, impossible to assert, with perfect satisfaction, which of the two conclusions above suggested, presents the real state of the case. Taking the time of the credit only, it would certainly seem to indicate that the trust was, unequivocally, a trust to sell the land. But there are some other circumstances which afford considerable support to the other conclusion. Upon the back of an account between B. & M. Gratz, and Col. Croghan, which appears to have been rendered to the latter, in December, 1769, there is a memorandum 496 in the handwriting of Col. Croghan, in which he enumerated the debts then due by him to B. & M. Gratz, amounting to £1,220 1s. 2d., and then adds the following words: "Paid of the above £144 York currency, besides the deed for the land, on the Tenederah River, 9,000 acres patented." This memorandum must have been made after the conveyance of the land to M. Gratz, and demonstrates that the parties intended it to be a part payment of the debt due to B. & M. Gratz, and not a trust for any other purpose. The circumstance too, that the word "paid" is used, strongly points to a real sale to M. Gratz, rather than a conveyance for sale to any third person. And if the sale was to be to M. Gratz, at a price thereafter to be fixed between the parties, the transaction could not be inconsistent with the terms of the credit, in the account of 1775. It will be recollected that M. Gratz resided at Philadelphia, and the conveyance was executed by Col. Croghan at Albany. There is no evidence that the consideration stated in the deed of £1,800, or any other consideration was ever agreed upon between the parties; and the circumstance that no sum is expressed in the memorandum of Col. Croghan, shows, that at the period when it was made, no fixed price for the land had been ascertained between the parties. If, then, it remained to be fixed by the parties, whenever that value was agreed upon, and settled in account, the resulting trust in Col. Croghan would be completely extinguished. It is quite possible, and certainly consistent with the circumstances in proof, that B. & M. Gratz might not have been acquainted 497* with the *real value of the land, or might be unwilling to take it at any other value than what, upon a sale, they might find could be realized. From the situation of Col. Croghan, his knowledge of the lands, and his extensive engagements in land speculations, ignorance of its value can scarcely be imputed to him. If, therefore, M. Gratz afterwards sold it to Howard, and Col. Croghan was satisfied with the price, there is nothing unnatural in stating the credit in the manner in which it stands in the account in 1775. It would agree with such facts, and would by no means repel the presumption, that the land was not originally intended to be sold to M. Gratz. It would evidence no more than that the parties were willing that the sale so made should be considered the standard of the value; and that M. Gratz should, upon his original purchase, be charged with the same price for which he sold. Upon this view of the case, the resulting trust would be extinguished by the consent of the parties, and no want of good faith could be fairly imputed to either.

Wheat. 6.

But it is said that there is no proof that any such purchase was ever made by Howard; and the trust being once established, the burthen of proof is shifted upon the other party, to show its extinguishment; and if this be not shown, the trust travels along with the property and its proceeds down to the present time.

It is certainly true, that length of time is no bar to a trust clearly established; and in a case where fraud is imputed and proved, length of 498* time ought not *upon principles of eternal justice, to be admitted to repel relief. On the contrary, it would seem that the length of time, during which the fraud has been successfully concealed and practiced, is rather an aggravation of the offense, and calls more loudly upon a court of equity to grant ample and decisive relief. But length of time necessarily obscures all human evidence; and as it thus removes from the parties all the immediate means to verify the nature of the original transactions, it operates by way of presumption, in favor of innocence, and against imputation of fraud. It would be unreasonable, after a great length of time, to require exact proof of all the minute circumstances of any transaction, or to expect a satisfactory explanation of every difficulty, real or apparent, with which it may be incumbered. The most that can fairly be expected in such cases, if the parties are living, from the frailty of memory, and human infirmity, is, that the material facts can be given with certainty to a common intent; and, if the parties are dead, and the cases rest in confidence, and in parol agreements, the most that we can hope is to arrive at probable conjectures, and to substitute general presumptions of law, for exact knowledge. Fraud, or breach of trust, ought not lightly to be imputed to the living; for, the legal presumption is the other way; and as to the dead, who are not here to answer for themselves, it would be the height of injustice and cruelty to disturb their ashes, and violate the sanctity of the grave, unless the evidence of fraud be clear, beyond a reasonable doubt.

Now, disguise the present case as much as we may, *and soften the harshness of [499 the imputation as much as we please, it cannot escape our attention, that if the plaintiff's case be made out, there was a meditated breach of trust, and a deliberate fraud practiced by M. Gratz, or Bernard Gratz, with the assent of M. Gratz, upon Colonel Croghan. If the sale to Howard was merely fictitious, it was an imposition upon Colonel Croghan, designed to injure his interest, and violate his confidence. If the fraud were clearly made out, there would certainly be an end to all inquiry as to the motives which could lead to so dishonorable a deed between such intimate friends. But the fraud is not clearly made out; it is inferred from circumstances in themselves equivocal, and from the absence of proofs, which it is supposed must exist, if the sale were real, and could now be produced.

In the view which the court is disposed to take of this case, it must consider that Howard was a real, and not a fictitious person. It is then asked, why are not the facts proved who Howard was, where he lived, and the execution of the deed to him? It is to be recollected that this proof is called for, about forty years after the original transaction; when all the parties, and all who were intimately acquainted with the facts, are dead. It is called for, too, from persons, some of whom were unborn, and some very young at the period to which they refer. They cannot be supposed to know, and they absolutely deny, all knowledge of the facts. What reason is there to suppose that Colonel Croghan did not know who Howard was? He had a deep interest in *the value of the [500 property, and could not be presumed to be indifferent to such inquiries, as every considerate man would be likely to make, in such a case. And after this lapse of time, it is fair to presume, that he did know the purchaser, and was satisfied with the purchase. But it is said that no deed is produced. Now, it does not necessarily follow, that if a sale was made to Howard, that the contract was consummated by an actual conveyance of the land. If M. Gratz was the bona fide owner of the land, he might sell it to Howard by an executory contract, and take a bond or other security for the purchase money, and from a failure to comply with the contract, M. Gratz might afterwards have refused to give a deed to Howard. And in this case, if in the intermediate time the settlement was made with Colonel Croghan, the credit must have been allowed in that account as it stands, and having been once allowed, M. Gratz could not, on a rescission of the sale, have been entitled to countermand that credit. He would have been bound to take the land at the sum which he had elected to allow for it, and for which he had sold it. On the other hand, supposing a deed actually to have passed to Howard, the latter may have become dissatisfied with his bargain, or have failed to pay the consideration money, and have yielded it back to Gratz, and dissolved the purchase. But this circumstance could not have varied the situation of Gratz in respect to the settlement with Colonel Croghan. All that was important, or useful, or necessary, as between them, upon the supposition that the trust was merely a 501* sulting trust, until the price was fixed, was, that the price should have been satisfactorily ascertained and agreed to between them. In this view of the transaction, there could be no ground to impute fraud to M. Gratz; nor could his conduct involve a violation of trust. In the absence of all contrary evidence, is it not just, is it not reasonable, to presume such to have been the reality of the case? That there is no evidence to the contrary, may be safely affirmed.

In addition to this, it may be asked, whether M. Gratz had any adequate motive for practicing a deception in this case. Men do not usually act under circumstances such as are imputed to M. Gratz, unless from some strong inducement of interest. It cannot be presumed that any man of fair character, such as M. Gratz is proved to have been, could perpetrate a fraud or deception without some motive that should overbalance all the ordinary influence of prudence and honor. If there be anything beyond all doubt established in this case, it is, that the value of the land, as fixed in the account of 1775, was its full value. It is proved by public sales of adjoining tracts, at the very period when Howard is asserted to have purchased the land; and so far from there being any chance of an immediate rise in value, the state of the country, on the very eve of the revolutionary war, forbade the indulgence of every such hope, and must have dissolved every dream of speculation. As far, then, as we can investigate motives, by referring to the general principles of human action, there does not seem to have been any motive for disguise or concealment on the part of Michael 502* Gratz towards Colonel Croghan. The reasonable conclusion, therefore, would certainly be, that no such disguise or concealment was practiced.

There is one circumstance also which has been thought to have thrown some cloud over this part of the case, that upon the opinion already indicated, would admit of a favorable exposition. It is this: In the possession of M. Gratz, a counterpart of the account of 1775 is found, in which the word Howard is crossed out with a pen, but so that it is perfectly legible, and the name of Michael Gratz, is, in his own handwriting, written over it. The writing seems to be of great antiquity, and supposing that there was a real sale to Howard, which was afterwards abandoned, it is not unnatural that M. Gratz should, after the event, have communicated the fact to Colonel Croghan, and with his consent, altered the account, so as to conform to it. Or, the interlineation might have been made in the account, after the failure of the contract with Howard, in order to show against which of the firm of B. & M. Gratz this sum ought to be charged, in the adjustment of their partnership concerns. It adds some force to these considerations, that Colonel Croghan continued, during the residue of his life, to entertain the same friendship and confidence in M. Gratz; and this, at least, demonstrated his belief that the Tenederah lands had not been unjustly sacrificed by him.

If we look to the subsequent conduct of M. Gratz, in relation to the Tenederah lands, his great expenses in making improvements on it, after the year 1786, and his diligent attention to it, it leads to the conclusion that he [*503] always considered himself as the real bona fide owner. His possession of it must have been known to the parents of the plaintiff, whose mother was the heir of Colonel Croghan; and it is proved, that his father had the most unreserved and frequent access to the papers of Colonel Croghan; and that he actually resided several years in Philadelphia, with the express view of examining the estate, and finally abandoned all hopes of deriving any benefit from the fragments that were left of it. The very account now produced by the plaintiff, by which this trust is brought to light, was delivered over to him by the representatives of M. Gratz, among the other papers of Colonel Croghan; and yet, if there had been anything false or foul in the transaction, it seems almost incredible that M. Gratz, into whose possession it came as early as 1782, should have suffered it to remain as a monument of his own indiscretion, and an evidence of his want of good faith.

If, on the other hand, the trust is to be considered as a trust to sell, and apply the proceeds to the payment of the debt due to B. & M. Gratz, most of the considerations already stated will apply with equal force. If the sale was real, and Howard did not comply with the terms of sale, Col. Croghan having knowledge of the fact, might have been well satisfied to let M. Gratz hold the land, at the price thus fixed by the sale. To him, it must have been wholly immaterial who was the purchaser, if the full value was obtained; and that it was obtained, in Col. Croghan's own judgment, seems undeniable. The only [*504] question is, whether such knowledge can be inferred; and after such a length of time, under all the circumstances of this case, we are clearly of opinion that it ought to be inferred. Col. Croghan had it in his power to make inquiries on the subject; if he did, and was satisfied, his acquiescence was conclusive; if he did not, he considered that the sale, as between himself and Gratz, was consummated when the price was fixed, and was willing that the trust should be deemed extinguished forever. If, after the lapse of forty years, and the death of all the original parties, we were to come to a different conclusion, it would be pressing doubtful circumstances with uncommon rigor against unblemished characters; where the confidence reposed was so intimate, that the whole evidence could not be presumed to be before us. We should indulge in opinions which might be erroneous, and might, in an attempt to redeem the plaintiff from a conjectured fraud, inflict upon others the most gross injustice. We think, therefore, that the true and safe course is to abide by the rule of law, which, after a lapse of time, will presume payment of a debt, surrender of a deed, and extinguishment of a trust, where circumstances may reasonably justify it. The doctrine in Hillary v. Waller (12 Vez., 261, 266), on this subject, meets our entire approbation. It is there said, that general presumptions are raised by the law, upon subjects of which there is no record or written instrument, not because there are the means of belief or disbelief, but because mankind, judging of matters of antiquity from the infirmity and necessity*] of their situation must, for the preservation of their property and rights, have recourse to some general principle, to take the place of individual and specific belief, which can hold only as to matters within our own time, upon which a conclusion can be formed from particular and individual knowledge. In our judgment, the trust in the Tenederah lands, such as it was, must be now presumed to have been extinguished by the parties, in the lifetime of Col. Croghan. There is no ground, then, for relieving the plaintiff, as to this part of his claim.

The remaining point in this case respects the M'Ilvaine bond and judgment. On the 30th of March, 1769, Col. Croghan gave his bond to Wm. M'Ilvaine, for the sum of £400, which debt, by the will of M'Ilvaine, became, on his death, vested in his widow, who afterwards intermarried with John Clark. A judgment was obtained upon this bond against Col. Croghan, in the name of Wm. Humphreys, executor of M'Ilvaine, in the Court of Common Pleas, in Westmoreland County, in Pennsylvania, at the October term, 1774, upon which a fi. fa. issued, returnable to the April term of the same court, in 1775. On the 8th of March preceding the return day of the fi. fa., Bernard Gratz purchased this judgment from Clark, and received an assignment of it, for which he gave his own bond for £300 and interest. About this period, Col. Croghan appears to have been considerably embarrassed in his pecuniary affairs, and several suits were depending against him. Bernard Gratz having failed to pay his bond, was sued by Clark, and in 1794 a judgment *was recovered against [*506 him for £89 6s. 10d., the balance then due upon the bond, which sum was afterwards paid by M. Gratz. The judgment of Humphreys against Col. Croghan, was kept alive from time to time, until 1786, and in that year, on the death of Humphreys, Joseph Bloomfield was appointed administrator de bonis non, with the will annexed, of Humphreys, and revived the judgment; and it is kept in full force until it was finally levied on certain lands of Col. Croghan, as hereafter stated. Some time in the year 1800, Bernard Gratz assigned this judgment to his nephew, Simon Gratz, one of the defendants, partly in consideration of natural affection, and partly in consideration of the above sum of £89 6s. 10d. paid towards the discharge of the bond of Bernard Gratz, by his (Simon's) father, Michael Gratz. Simon Gratz having thus become the beneficial owner of the judgment, proceeded to issue executions on the same, and at different times between September, 1801, and November, 1804, caused the same executions to be levied on sundry tracts of land of Col. Croghan, in Westmoreland and Huntington counties, of five of which he, being the highest bidder at the sale, became the purchaser. The tracts so sold, contained upwards of 2,000 acres, and were sold for little more than $1,000. The title to some part of the land so sold, appears to be yet in controversy.

Shortly after the assignment of the M'Ilvaine judgment to Bernard Gratz, on the 16th of May, 1775, Col. Croghan (probably having knowledge of the assignment, though the fact does not appear), *by two deeds of that [*507 date, conveyed to B. Gratz, for a valuable consideration expressed therein, about 45,000 acres of land. A declaration of trust was executed by Bernard Gratz, on the 2d of June, 1775, by which he acknowledged that these conveyances were in trust to enable Bernard Gratz to sell the same, and with the proceeds to discharge certain enumerated debts of Col. Croghan, and among them, the debt due on the M'Ilvaine bond, and to account for the residue with Col. Croghan.

The subject of the M'Ilvaine judgment was very minutely considered in the court below, by the learned judge who decided the cause, and the principle grounds on which the plaintiff relied for a decree were so fully answered there, that a complete review of them does not seem to be necessary in this court.<sup>1</sup> It is ob-

1.—The following is that part of the opinion of Mr. Justice Washington in the court below, here alluded to:

"Upon these facts, it is contended by the complainant's counsel, that B. Gratz ought to be considered by this court, as having purchased the above judgment with the trust funds, and, consequently, for the benefit of G. Croghan; and that even if it was purchased with his own money, still, being a trustee for Croghan, the purchase should be considered as having been made for his benefit, entitling B. Gratz to claim no more than the sum which he actually paid, and to retain the same out of G. Croghan's estate, the whole of which is charged with the payment of his debts. That Simon Gratz, being an assignee of this judgment, with notice of the trust, and without a valuable consideration paid for the same, can stand in no better situation than the assignor did, and ought, therefore, to be treated as a trustee for the estate of G. Croghan, of the lands which he purchased under the executions issued on that judgment, and be entitled to claim merely the sum actually paid by B. Gratz, with interest.

It is to be observed, in the first place, that there is not the slightest evidence on which to ground a presumption, that this judgment was purchased with trust funds. B. Gratz gave his own bond for the £300, at which time he and M. Gratz were considerably the creditors of G. Croghan; and it further appears by the exhibits in the cause, that the accounts between these parties were regularly settled from time to time, leaving at each settlement a balance against G. Croghan.

Neither did any funds arise from the trust property, no part of the same having at any time been sold by the trustee.

As to the argument predicated upon the admission that the purchase was made upon the credit and with the funds of B. Gratz, I hold it to be altogether untenable. B. Gratz became the purchaser some months before the date of the conveyances to him, of the 45,000 acres of land, and I am yet to learn upon what principle of equity it is,

508]* servable, that the bill charges that *the assignment of this judgment was secretly procured by Bernard or Michael Gratz, or both of them, after the death of Col. Croghan, and that 509]* nothing *was due upon the judgment; or if anything was due, it was paid upon the assignment out of moneys belonging to the 510]* tate of Col. Croghan. The bill *asserts no other ground for relief on this subject. The proof in the cause completely establishes the material charges in the bill to be false. The 511]* assignment *was made to Bernard Gratz, in the life-time of Col. Croghan; the judgment never was paid or satisfied by Col. Croghan, or out of his estate; and no fraud is pretended in the bill to have taken place in the levy of the judgment on Col. Croghan's lands, independently of the legal inference to be deduced from the facts charged in the bill. If Bernard Gratz was not, at the time, in the situation of a trustee of Col. Croghan, there is no pretense to say, that he might not rightfully and lawfully purchase the judgment. And there are very strong reasons to believe, that it was purchased with the knowledge, and for the relief of Col. Croghan. It was somewhat insisted upon in the court below, that by a power of attorney of the 10th of July, 1772, Col. Croghan constituted Bernard and Michael Gratz trustees of all his lands, with unlimited power to sell them and pay off his debts. But this ground has not been insisted upon here, and, indeed, for the best reasons. There is the strongest presumptive evidence, that this power was never acted upon, or was revoked, and held a nullity before the time of the assignment in question.

The ground that has been principally relied upon here, is, that Bernard Gratz having taken the two trust deeds in 1775, already referred to, in trust for the payment of this very debt out of the proceeds of the sale of the lands conveyed by those deeds, could not proceed to satisfy the judgment out of any other lands, without notice to Col. Croghan, or his representatives. But there is not the least evidence in the cause to show, that any of the lands *conveyed by [512 either of these deeds ever turned out productive. And there are the strongest presumptions in the case, and it seems, indeed, to be on all sides conceded, that either the title to these lands wholly failed, or became altogether unsalable. There is no reason to suppose that these facts lay more peculiarly in the knowledge of one party than the other; and if the trust became utterly frustrated and inert, there could not be any necessity of giving a formal notice, that Bernard Gratz must look to other property, and particularly to the property in Westmoreland county, upon which alone, it is understood by the laws of Pennsylvania, the lien of the judgment attached.

There is no proof that any assets ever came to the hands of Bernard Gratz or Michael Gratz, out of which this judgment was, or could be satisfied. Bernard Gratz was alone interested in it; and it was kept alive from time to time, that a creditor, who after he is so, becomes a trustee for his debtor, does by that act impair or affect rights which he had antecedently acquired against him. I admit the soundness of the doctrine laid down by the complainant's counsel, that if a trustee, executor, or agent, buy in debts due by his cestui que trust, testator, or principal, for less than their nominal amount, the benefit gained thereby belongs not to him, but to the person for whom he acted. A court of equity will not permit a person, acting as a trustee, to create in himself an interest opposite to that of his cestui que trust or principal. But this doctrine is inapplicable to the case of a fair bona fide creditor, who became so, prior to the assumption of his fiduciary character. In such a case he is entitled to claim the full amount of what was due from his cestui que trust, &c., and the latter has no right to inquire how much the former paid for it; so, too, the trustee, &c., may pursue all legal remedies for enforcing payment of the debt, which would have been open to him if he had not become a trustee.

It is said, however, that the declaration of trust of the 2d of July, 1775, contains a promise to discharge this very debt out of the trust property, as soon as the same could be disposed of. But it was not disposed of, and there are the strongest reasons for believing that it was altogether unsalable.

Independent of the doubts which clouded the title, it would seem sufficient to observe, that B. Gratz had the strongest temptations to sell, and even to sacrifice this property, if it had been possible to dispose of it upon any terms.

It is further contended, that the power of attorney given by G. Croghan to B. & M. Gratz, dated the 10th of July, 1772, constituted them trustees of all his lands, with unlimited power to sell them, and to pay off his debts. It is in this part of the case that I experience the difficulty of deciding satisfactorily to myself, in consequence of the antiquity of these transactions, and the death of all those who might have explained them. What became of this power of attorney, and why it was never acted upon, are questions which no evidence in the cause enables me to resolve. There are, however, strong reasons for presuming, that the powers vested in these agents were found unproductive of any useful results; and, that the instrument which bestowed them was afterwards delivered back to G. Croghan, or remaining with the Gratzs, was considered by all the parties as a blank paper. This conjecture is strongly countenanced by the fact that this paper, as well as the deeds of May, 1775, was found amongst the papers of G. Croghan, after his death. These very deeds furnish themselves the most persuasive evidence in support of this presumption. For, if the general power to sell the whole of G. Croghan's lands, continued in force up to the year 1775, there could have been no necessity for giving to one of those agents an authority to sell a part of them. The fact that no part of those lands was sold by the agents, or by Croghan himself, without a complaint having been uttered by the latter, that appears, is nearly conclusive to prove that they were unsalable.

Another point insisted upon by the complainant's counsel under this head is, that G. Croghan was not in reality a debtor to M'Irvine, inasmuch as there was found amongst Croghan's papers, a bond of M'Irvine to him, dated the 5th of March, 1769, with condition that M'Irvine should by a certain day reconvey to Croghan certain lands lying in Virginia, which Croghan had conveyed to M'Irvine, in trust for the payment of a particular debt, or in case it should not be in his power to make such conveyance, then to pay to Croghan the sum of £400. It was contended, that this bond being found uncanceled amongst the papers of the obligee, proves that neither of the conditions had been performed.

The short, but conclusive answer to this argument is, that the condition of this bond was to be performed in the year 1770, and that if it was broken by the failure of M'Irvine to make the reconveyance, M'Irvine became in that year a debtor to G. Croghan, in the sum of £400, the equivalent; yet Croghan suffered judgment to pass against him, and execution to issue in the year 1775, after which he lived about seven years, without having brought a suit on the bond, or asserted, in any manner whatever, a right to the money. If, after a lapse of so many years, and under these strong circumstances, the court is not bound to presume against the existence of this debt, I know of no instance in which such a presumption ought to be made. If in truth the debt was really due, the charge of neglect is fairly imputable to Croghan, but not to his executors. Upon the whole, I am of opinion, upon this point, that the complainant is entitled to no relief." 1 Peters, Jun., Rep. 372.

until the levies in question were made. It will be recollected also, that even if Michael Gratz were disposed to connive, after the death of his brother, in the levies of his son Simon, William Powell, who was another executor, had no such motive. And, it is not shown that, by any law or usage in Pennsylvania, any notice is required to be given to any other persons than the personal representatives of the deceased, of the execution of any such judgment on lands, so that laches could be fairly imputed to the executors for neglect to give notice to the heirs of Col. Croghan of the sale. The very length of time during which this judgment remained unsatisfied, is evidence 513* of the desperate state <sup>of</sup> Col. Croghan's affairs; and the record abounds with corroborations of the great embarrassments attending all his concerns, and of apparent insolvency at the time of his decease. No evidence has been submitted to us to establish that the levies on the lands, under the judgment, were fraudulently conducted by the sheriff, or that they did not sell for the full value of the title, such as it was, which Col. Croghan had in them. It appears that the title, as to some part of them, is still in controversy. And Simon Gratz, the judgment creditor, had as much right, if the sale was bona fide conducted, to become the purchaser, if he was the highest bidder, as any other person.

Upon the whole, the majority of the court entirely concurs in the opinion of the Circuit Court upon this part of the case. But, as to the decree respecting the proceeds of the Tenederah lands, we are all of opinion that it ought to be reversed.

If the court had felt any doubts as to the merits, it would have been proper to have given serious consideration to the very able argument made at the bar, respecting the defect of proper parties to the bill. But, as upon the merits, the court is decidedly against the plaintiff, it seemed useless to send back the cause upon this objection, if it should be found tenable, when, after all, the case furnished no substantial ground for relief in equity.<sup>1</sup>

DECREE.—These causes, being cross appeals, 514* came on to be heard at the same time, and were argued by counsel. On consideration whereof, it is ordered and decreed, that the decree of the Circuit Court for the District of Pennsylvania in the premises, be, and the same is hereby reversed. And this court proceeding to pass such decree as the said Circuit Court should have passed, it is further ordered and decreed, that the complainant's bill, as to all the matters contained therein, be, and the same is hereby dismissed; and that a mandate issue to the said Circuit Court, to dismiss the same accordingly, without costs.

Rev'g.—Pet. C. C. 364.

Cited—11 Wheat. 381 (n); 9 Pet. 417; 1 How. 194; 4 How. 555, 561; 5 How. 276; 2 Wall. 92; 18 Wall. 506; 1 Wood. & M. 148; 2 McLean. 396; 2 Cliff. 155; 3 Cliff. 621; 4 Cliff. 559; 4 Mason, 153; 1 Curt. 219; 3 Sumn. 486.

1.—Vide 1 Peters., Jun., Rep. 364, S. C. Wheat. 6.

[LOCAL LAW.]

BOWIE v. HENDERSON ET AL.

The third section of the act of Congress, of March 30th, 1803, for the relief of insolvent debtors in the District of Columbia, does not create any express or implied exception to the operation of the statute of limitations, by making the insolvent a trustee for his creditors, in respect to his future property, or by making any demand, included in the schedule of his debts, a debt of record.

The including of a demand in the schedule of the insolvent's debts, is sufficient evidence to sustain an issue on a replication of a new promise to the plea of the statute of limitations, if the period of limitation has not elapsed after the date of the schedule.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia.

*This suit was instituted by the ap-<sup>[515]</sup>pellant against the respondents, on the chancery side of the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia, for the county of Alexandria, under the local law giving a process in chancery in the nature of a foreign attachment.

The bill charged a debt due on bills of exchange, from the defendant, Henderson, to the complainant; that the debtor was an absentee; that he had funds in the hands of the defendant Auld; and prayed a condemnation of those funds, to answer the complainant's demand. The defendant, Henderson, pleaded the statute of limitations, non assumpsit infra quinque annos. To this plea the complainant filed the following replication: And the said W. Bowie saith, that he ought not to be precluded from having and maintaining his bill aforesaid, by anything alleged by the defendant, Henderson, in his plea aforesaid; because he saith, that the said A. Henderson, on the 8th of May, 1806, in the county of Alexandria, before N. F., one of the judges of the district of Columbia, did take the benefit of the act for the relief of insolvent debtors within the district of Columbia, and did then and there give a schedule of his estate, and a list of his creditors; and in the said list of his creditors so given in, he, the said Henderson, did state, that the said complainant was a creditor of his to the amount of $4,586.39—which said list of creditors so given in, he, the said Henderson, did state, was entered of record in the clerk's office of the court of the county of Alexandria, as by reference to the records of the said court will fully and at large appear, and which said debt <sup>so</sup> [516] given in, is the debt for which the complainant has instituted his suit aforesaid. And the said complainant saith, that the moneys and effects which the said complainant seeks, in his bill aforesaid, to subject to the payment of his debt aforesaid, were obtained and acquired by the said defendant, Henderson, long subsequent to his taking the oath of insolvency aforesaid. And the said complainant saith, that as soon as he, the said complainant, obtained any knowledge of the said defendant, Henderson, having obtained the funds aforesaid, and within the period of six months after he obtained a knowledge thereof, he, the said complainant, did institute his aforesaid bill in chancery, to subject the funds to the payment of his said debt, all which, &c. The defendant demurred to this replication, and the court below, on hearing, adjudged the demurrer good.

The question in this case turned upon the construction of the third section of the act of Congress, for the relief of insolvent debtors within the district of Columbia, passed March 3d, 1803, which is in these words:

"And be it further enacted, That upon the petitioning debtor's executing a deed or deeds to the said trustee, conveying all his property, real, personal, and mixed, and all his claims, rights, and credits, agreeably to the oath or affirmation of the said debtor, and on delivering all his said property which he shall have in his possession, together with his books, papers, and evidences of debts of every kind, to the said trustee, and the said trustee's certifying the same to the said judge in writing, it shall 517* be lawful *for the said judge to make an order to the marshal, jailer, or keeper of the prison, in which said debtor is then confined, commanding that the said debtor shall be thenceforth discharged from his imprisonment; and he shall be immediately discharged, and the said order shall be a sufficient warrant therefor. Provided, That no person who has been guilty of a breach of the laws, and who has been imprisoned for or on account of the same, shall be discharged from imprisonment. And provided, likewise, That any property which the debtor may afterwards acquire (except the necessary wearing apparel and bedding for his family, and his tools, if a mechanic or manufacturer), shall be liable to the payment of his debts, anything herein to the contrary notwithstanding.

This cause was argued by Mr. Swann and Mr. Jones for the appellant, and by Mr. Taylor for the respondents. The former insisted, that the above section of the insolvent act created an exception to the general operation of the statute of limitations in favor of those demands on which the insolvent's person was discharged under that section. They argued that the insolvent, after his discharge, was to be considered, in respect to his future property, as a trustee for his creditors, and that the statute of limitations does not run against a trust; and, also, that this debt was to be considered as excepted out of the statute of limitations, because it was made a debt of record by being included in the list of creditors under the insolvent act.

518* **Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL* delivered the opinion of the court, and after stating the case, proceeded as follows:

It is perfectly clear that no such exception is contained in the statute of limitations, or in the act of Congress concerning insolvent debtors. If it is to be created at all, it must be by implication. It is contended in the first place, that the insolvent debtor, after his discharge, is to be considered, in respect to his future property, as a trustee for his creditors; and the statute of limitation does not run against a trust. If he is a trustee for his creditors, is he a trustee for those creditors only who were such at the time he obtained the benefit of the act? or, is he a trustee for those who afterwards become his creditors? It will not be pretended that he is exclusively a trustee for the former; and if he be a trustee for the benefit of all his creditors, then this suit should have been brought for the benefit of all, and not for the benefit of a single creditor. The proviso of the section respecting the liability of the future property of the insolvent, has been supposed to aid the argument that he is a trustee. But we are all of a different opinion. The previous part of the section having exempted his person from imprisonment, the object of the proviso was to make all his future effects liable, and to retain all the remedies against it, in the same manner as if his person had not been discharged. The act, therefore, did not intend to create any new liability, or any new trust.

It is farther insisted, that this is to be considered as an exception out of the statute of limitations, because *it is a debt of [519 record. But a debt of record, in the sense of the common law, is a debt or contract created of record; such as a statute staple, or statute merchant, and not one whose previous existence is only admitted of record. The effect of recording this debt was merely an admission of its existence, and not a change of its nature. It would have been sufficient evidence, if five years had not elapsed after recording, to have sustained an issue on a replication of a new promise to the plea of the statute of limitations. But more than five years having elapsed, it could have no application in this case. It is the opinion of the court, that the demurrer to the replication is sustained, and that judgment ought to be given for the defendant.

Deeree affirmed.

Cited—2 Cranch, C. C. 121; 12 Bank. Reg. 542, 546

[PRACTICE.]

SPRING ET AL.

v.

THE SOUTH CAROLINA INSURANCE COMPANY.

In an equity cause, the res in litigation may be sold by order of the Circuit Court, and the proceeds invested in stocks, notwithstanding the pendency of an appeal to this court.

MR. HUNT, for the respondents, moved to docket and dismiss the appeal in this case, which was a suit in chancery, commenced in the Circuit Court of South Carolina, no transcript of the record having *been [520 lodged by the appellants with the clerk of this court, within the first six days of the term, according to the rule.

Mr. Wheaton, for the appellants, opposed the motion, upon the ground that no certificate was produced from the clerk of the court below, stating that an appeal had been taken, according to the rule.

The court denied the motion, but stated that as the object of the respondents was to have the proceeds of the property in litigation, which had been sold by order of the court below, invested in stocks, such investment might be made by the court below, notwithstanding the pendency of the appeal in this court.

Motion denied.<sup>1</sup>

1.—Vide new rule of court of the present term. Ante, Rule XXXII.

Wheat. 6.

[INSTANCE COURT.]

THE UNITED STATES
v.
SIX PACKAGES OF GOODS.
TOLER, Claimant.

Under the 67th section of the collection act of the 2d of March, 1799, c. 128, where goods were entered by an agent of the owner on his behalf, and the entry included only a part of the goods which [521*] the *packages contained, and the owner subsequently made a further, or post entry of the residue of the goods; and the packages being opened several days afterwards and examined by the collector in the presence of two merchants, and their contents found to agree with the two entries taken together, but to differ materially from the first entry; held, that the collector was not precluded from making a seizure of the goods after the second entry, for a variance between the contents of the packages and the first entry, and that such seizure must be followed by confiscation, unless it should appear that such difference proceeded from accident and mistake, and not from an intention to defraud the revenue.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York.

This was a libel of information filed in the court below against certain goods imported from London in the ship Isabella, at the port of New York, as forfeited under the 67th section of the collection act of the 2d of March, 1799, c. 128.

The cause was argued by the Attorney-General and Mr. Pinkney for the United States, and by Mr. D. B. Ogden and Mr. Wheaton for the claimant.

Mr. Justice LIVINGSTON delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a libel under the 67th section of the collection law, passed the 2d of March, 1799.

This section provides, that it shall be lawful for the collector, naval officer, or other officers of the customs, after entry made of any goods, wares, or merchandise, on suspicion of fraud, to open and examine, in the presence of two or more reputable merchants, any package or packages thereof, and if, upon examination, [522*] they shall be found to agree with *the entries, the officer making such seizure and examination shall cause the same to be repacked, and delivered to the owner or claimant forthwith; and the expense of such examination shall be paid by the said collector or other officer, and allowed in the settlement of their accounts; but if any of the packages so examined shall be found to differ in their contents from the entry, then the goods, wares or merchandise contained in such package or packages, shall be forfeited. Provided, that the said forfeiture shall not be incurred, if it shall be made appear to the satisfaction of the collector and naval officer of the district where the same shall happen, if there be a naval officer, and if there be no naval officer, to the satisfaction of the collector or of the court in which a prosecution for the forfeiture shall be had, that such difference arose from accident or mistake, and not from an intention to defraud the revenue.

These goods being claimed by Hugh K. Toler, of the city of New York, merchant, were condemned by the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New Wheat. 6. U. S., Book 5.

York, which sentence being reversed by the Circuit Court for that district, an appeal from the last sentence has been taken to this court.

Before we examine the facts of the case, or whether they establish a fraud, without which the prosecution under this section cannot be sustained, it will be necessary to dispose of a question of law, which has been made by the counsel for the claimant.

It is conceded on all hands, that on the 3d of November, 1810, the six packages which are libeled *were entered at the [523 custom-house by Thomas Ash, on behalf of the claimant, and that the entry covered only a part of the goods which the packages contained. That two days after, Toler himself completed the entry of the residue of the goods which were in these packages, and which had not been previously entered by Ash. Several days after, the packages were opened and examined by the collector, in presence of two merchants, and their contents were found not to differ, but to agree with the two entries taken together; but to differ very materially from the first entry made by Ash; upon which the collector made a seizure of them. On these facts about which there is no dispute, it is denied that the collector had any right to seize, inasmuch as, when the inspection took place, there was no difference between the goods found in the packages, and those mentioned in the invoices. It is said, that the collector, if he suspected a fraud, ought to have made a seizure before the second entry, in which case the difference which would have existed between the goods on which a duty was secured, and those in the packages, would have justified such an act, but that by waiting until a second entry was made, the fraud, if any committed, was purged. In support of this position, it is said, that the collection law provides for a post entry of this kind, and that the very oath which is taken when an entry is made, imposes on the party who makes it, the duty, in case he shall afterwards discover any other goods in a package than those first entered by him, of immediately informing the collector, and making a further entry thereof.

*This provision, and the form of the [524 oath, suppose no more than that a deficient or defective entry may be made innocently, and under a mistake, without any certain knowledge at the time, of the contents of the packages entered. For, if the party making an entry, knows at the time of other goods, such other goods cannot be entered afterwards, and the oath usual on such occasions cannot be taken, without admitting that a perjury had been committed at the time of the first entry. The court is therefore of opinion, that, although the seizure was not made until after the second entry, the collector had a right to seize for any variance between the contents of the packages, and the first entry, and that such seizure will be valid, and must be followed by sentence of condemnation, unless it shall turn out that such difference proceeded from accident or mistake, and not from an intention to defraud the revenue. Whether the case of the claimant be entitled to this favorable interpretation, the court will now proceed to inquire.

A great deal of testimony, which was not produced in the Circuit Court, and which might easily have been (as all the witnesses resided in the city of New York), has been taken since the appeal; and it is on this testimony, as well as on that which was there taken, that the sentence of that court must now be reviewed.

It is in truth, and indeed, admitted by the claimant, that a very imperfect entry of the goods contained in these packages was made on Saturday, the third day of November, 1810, by Thomas Ash, who had been employed by Toler 525*) to enter the same; and that *the residence of the goods therein contained was not entered by the claimant until the fifth day of the same month. To escape from the consequences of the first entries not being complete, and to repel the imputation of its originating in fraud, the plaintiff has endeavored to prove that the letter covering the invoices of the goods contained in the second entry, was not received by him when the first entry was made. To establish this fact, his clerk, Mr. Crane, has been examined as a witness, and admitting that he has told the truth, there would be some reason to believe that such were the fact; but there are many circumstances which now appear in this cause which compel us to withhold from Mr. Crane the credit which might otherwise be due to him. The usual course of business, as testified to by several very respectable merchants, stand opposed to his relation, that invoices of only part of the goods contained in those packages were inclosed in a letter to H. K. Toler & Co., and invoices of the other goods in a letter to J. K. Jaffray, which had been forwarded to that gentleman at Albany. It appears from all the testimony, that if a package, consigned to one person, contains goods belonging to different persons, it is customary—and some of the witnesses say indispensable—to send to the consignee of the package, invoices of all the goods which it contains, or to refer, in the main invoice of the consignee, to the invoice of the other goods; and that the withholding such invoices or information, would be considered as strong evidence of an intention to defraud the revenue. Another circumstance which *detracts much from the credit of this witness is, that it is more than probable, that at the time of this consignment, a copartnership subsisted between the claimant and the Jaffrays of London. This appears not only from an advertisement of a dissolution of such copartnership, which has been published since the decree of the Circuit Court, in one of the New York papers, but from other testimony in the cause, and from no contrary proof being furnished by Mr. Toler. Now, if such partnership really existed, which cannot well be disbelieved, it is most extraordinary, indeed, that all the invoices of the goods in that package should not have been sent to the partner residing permanently in the city of New York, but that an invoice of part of them should be transmitted to him, and of another, and of the most valuable part, to a partner who might or might not have reached this country when the Isabella arrived. If merchants, who must be presumed to know how to manage their business, will act in a manner so contrary to the general practice of commercial men, they must expect, and cannot complain, if such deviation from established usage create suspicions unfavorable to the integrity of the particular transaction. It would have added something to the value of the testimony of Mr. Crane, if the name of the merchant at Albany, to whose care the letter of Mr. Jaffray had been transmitted, or if the letter itself, with the post-marks, had been produced. The importance of the testimony of Mr. Ash, as delivered before the Circuit Court, is much weakened by that of Judge Van 527*) Ness, who has also been examined since the appeal; for, instead of being simply told at the custom-house, when he asked for a permit, that he must call again, it appears he stated, on his examination in the District Court, that when he applied for a permit on the third of November, he was told at the custom-house, that "they wished to examine the goods before they were delivered;" and that although he did not see Mr. Toler until Monday, he communicated to his clerk, Mr. Crane, what had passed, who doubtless gave the same information to his principal, which will account for the solicitude which he discovered so early on Monday morning to enter the goods which had been omitted in the entry of Mr. Ash. There are other circumstances in this case, that are not here noticed, which render the explanation given by Mr. Toler, to say the least, extremely questionable.

The court cannot dismiss this cause without expressing its surprise, that more than ten years have elapsed since the filing of the libel in the District Court. As all the witnesses who have been examined since the appeal, reside in the city in which the cause was tried, they might, and ought, to have been examined in that court, and if their testimony had there been reduced to writing, and used in the Circuit Court, a final decision might have been had many years ago, and before the insolvencies which it is suggested have happened, and have rendered the further prosecution of these proceedings of little or no importance to the parties.

*The decree of the Circuit Court is 528*) revoked, and the sentence of condemnation pronounced by the District Court affirmed.

[CHANCERY.]

BRASHIER v. GRATZ ET AL.

The general rule is, that time is not of the essence of a contract of sale; and a failure on the part of the purchaser, or vendor, to perform his contract, on the stipulated day, does not, of itself, deprive him of his right to a specific performance, when he is able to comply with his part of the engagement.

But circumstances may be so changed, that the object of the party can no longer be accomplished, and he cannot be placed in the same situation as if the contract had been performed in due time. In such a case, a court of equity will leave the parties to their remedy at law.

Part performance will, under some circumstances, induce the court to relieve.

But where a considerable length of time has elapsed, where the party demanding a specific performance has failed to perform his part of the contract, and the demand is made after a great change in the title and the value of the land, and there is a want of reciprocity in the obligations of the respective parties, a court of equity will not interfere.

Wheat. 6.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of Kentucky.

This cause was argued by Mr. B. Hardin<sup>1</sup> for the appellant, and by Mr. Sergeant for the respondents.<sup>2</sup>

529*] Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court for the District of Kentucky, dismissing a bill brought by the appellant against the heirs of Michael Gratz for the specific performance of a contract.

Michael Gratz, who resided in Philadelphia, had purchased from John Craig, of Kentucky, a tract of land containing, by the survey, one thousand acres, for which no patent had then issued. Subsequent to this purchase, the patent issued in the name of Craig, who sold a part of the land to Keyser, and a suit had been brought in the federal court of Kentucky by Gratz, against Craig and Keyser, to compel a conveyance of the land. Michael Gratz had, in the meantime, sold eight hundred and twenty-four acres, part of his tract, to Robert Barr.

While the suit against Craig and Keyser was depending, Walter Brashier, the plaintiff, who resides in Kentucky, came to Philadelphia on business, and on the second day of March, in the year 1807, purchased the residue of the land from Gratz. Brashier had married the daughter of Robert Barr.

The residue of the land was estimated by the parties at 302 acres, for which Brashier agreed to give the sum of $6,795 in his negotiable notes, payable in six, twelve, and eighteen months. From this sum was, however, deducted $250, "allowed to the said Walter Brashier, towards the costs and expenses of prosecuting the suits now depending, for the recovery of the lands hereby contracted for, 530*] which is accepted *by the said Walter, as a full satisfaction for all costs, trouble and expense which he may be at, in prosecuting the said suits, and which he hereby agrees and undertakes to manage at his own costs and expense. And it is hereby agreed that a correct and accurate survey shall be made, at the expense of the said Michael, of all the said residue of the above-mentioned tract of land, lying within the limits of the original survey thereof, not sold to the said Robert Barr; and if, upon such survey, it shall be found, that the said residue doth not contain the quantity of 302 acres, then, for every one deficient, the said Michael Gratz, his heirs, executors, or administrators, shall pay or allow to the said Walter Brashier, his executors, administrators or assigns, the sum of twenty-two dollars and a half; and if any part of the said residue shall be lost, in all, or any of the said suits now depending, or that may be instituted hereafter, for any part of the said residue, the said Michael Gratz, his heirs, executors or administrators, shall only be liable to refund to him, the said Walter Brashier, his executors, administrators, or assigns, the sum of $11.25, for each and every acre so lost. It being hereby declared, that the said Walter Brashier has purchased the title of the said Michael Gratz, at his own risk and hazard, and so that he shall have no recourse against the said Michael Gratz, for want of, or for any defect in the title to the said residue, or any part thereof, save only the price of $11.25 per acre, for every acre which shall be lost as aforesaid. And the said M. G., for himself, his heirs, executors and administrators, *doth covenant and agree, that he or [531 they shall and will, at any time after payment of the notes aforesaid, when thereunto required, by a good and sufficient deed, conveyance, or assurance in the law, convey and assure unto the use of him, the said Walter Brashier, his heirs and assigns forever, all his, the said Michael Gratz's estate, right, title and interest, of and in all the said residue of the above-mentioned tract of land.

Mr. Brashier executed his notes in conformity with this contract, and returned to Kentucky, where he requested his brother-in-law, Thomas T. Barr, to attend to the prosecution of the suits then depending. Mr. Barr resided near the place where the court was held, and Mr. Brashier at the distance of sixty or seventy miles. Mr. Barr immediately employed Mr. Bledsoe, a lawyer of eminence, to assist Mr. Hughes, who had been engaged by Mr. Gratz, and some time afterwards spoke to Mr. Wickliffe, but did not pay him a fee. No progress, however, seems to have been made in these suits, and the plaintiff failed to pay the fees of the officers of the court, which were demanded and received from Michael Gratz, in the year 1811, and afterwards from his representatives.

The notes for the purchase money were protested for non-payment, and have not been paid.

In 1811, Mr. Brashier came to Philadelphia, when Gratz offered to convey the land on his paying his notes. Mr. Brashier being unable to pay them, Gratz offered to rescind the contract, which Brashier declining to do, the question was referred *to arbitrators, who [532 were of opinion that the contract was still binding. About this time, Brashier, who had been for some time much embarrassed, appears to have become notoriously insolvent. In the

1.—He cited 1 Fonbl. Eq. 227; 9 Ves. 415, 2 P. Wms. 243; 4 Bro. Ch. Rep. 329, 469, 391; 1 Ves., Jun., 221; 1 Atk. 12.

2.—Who cited Sugd. Vend. 246; 5 Ves. 720, note; 1 Ves., Jun., 450; 9 Cranch, 456; 8 Cranch, 471.

NOTE.—For cases relative to specific performance, see note to Pratt v. Carroll, 8 Cranch, 471, and note to Hepburn v. Dunlop, 1 Wheat. 179, and note to Morgan v. Morgan, 2 Wheat. 290, and note to Colson v. Thompson, 2 Wheat. 336.

In equity, time may be dispensed with if it be not the essence of the contract. Hepburn v. Auld, 5 Cranch, 262.

Where the time of payment is made a substantial circumstance, it enters into the essence of the contract. Wheat. 6.

tract, and it must be observed. Hollingsworth v. Fry, 4 Dall. 345.

Mere excess of price over what appeared to be the just value at the time, not a bar to specific performance. A vendor cannot have the aid of a court of equity to enforce specific performance, if the vendee will pay the penalty stipulated in his contract. Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Peters, 264.

A court of equity will not force a doubtful title on a purchaser. Watts v. Waddle, 6 Peters, 389.

autumn of 1811, Gratz departed this life, and in July, 1812, his heirs again offered to convey, on payment of the notes which Brashier had given for the purchase money. Payment not being made, the heirs of Gratz took the management of the suits again into their own hands, which were prosecuted with vigor, and in 1813, were finally determined by a decree in their favor. About this time the land rose suddenly to about $80 or $100 per acre. After the decision of the cause, and after this rise in the value of the land, Brashier, in November, 1813, entered into an agreement with Lewis Saunders, by which he was to convey to Saunders half the land purchased of Gratz, in consideration of Saunders paying, or tendering to the heirs of Gratz, the full amount of the notes he had given for the purchase. Saunders immediately offered his contract to the heirs of Gratz, and requested them, if they were willing to take it, and to indemnify him, to acknowledge a tender of the money, which the contract bound him to tender. They avowed their opinion, that the contract of Michael Gratz with Brashier was of no validity, but consented to take the contract with Saunders, and acknowledged the tender. When in possession of this acknowledgement, Brashier instituted his suit in the court of Kentucky for a specific performance of the contract of the 2d of March, 1807. The defendants removed this suit into the Circuit Court of the United States, where they filed their answer, insisting, that the court ought not to decree a specific performance, because the plaintiff had totally failed to perform his part of the contract until there was such a change of circumstances as materially to affect the rights of the parties. The Circuit Court dismissed the bill, and from that decree the plaintiff has appealed to this court.

The appellant insists, that in equity, time is not of the essence of the contract; that it is in part performed; and that his failure to pay the purchase money until December, 1813, when the tender was made, is justified by the circumstances of the case.

The rule, that time is not of the essence of a contract, has certainly been recognized in courts of equity; and there can be no doubt, that a failure on the part of a purchaser or vendor, to perform his contract on the stipulated day, does not, of itself, deprive him of his right to demand a specific performance at a subsequent day, when he shall be able to comply with his part of the engagement. It may be in the power of the court to direct compensation for the breach of contract in point of time, and in such case the object of the parties is effectuated by carrying it into execution. But the rule is not universal. Circumstances may be so changed, that the object of the party can be no longer accomplished; that he who is injured by the failure of the other contracting party, cannot be placed in the situation in which he would have stood had the contract been performed. Under such circumstances, it would be iniquitous to decree a specific performance, and the court of equity will leave the parties to their remedy at law.

It is true, that he who has been ready to perform, may at any time file his bill in chancery, requiring the other party to perform his contract or to rescind it; and the court will rescind the contract if he who has failed cannot, or will not, perform it. But this is not always necessary, and would not be always an adequate remedy.

If, then, a bill for a specific performance be brought by a party who is himself in fault, the court will consider all the circumstances of the case, and decree according to those circumstances.

A consideration always entitled to great weight, is, that the contract, though not fully executed, has been in part performed. The plaintiff claims the benefit of this principle, and alleges, that by prosecuting and managing, at his own expense, the suits depending in Kentucky, he has performed that part of the agreement.

If this allegation be supported by the fact, it will undoubtedly have great influence in the decision of the cause.

The evidence is, that the plaintiff, soon after his return to Kentucky, employed a gentleman of the bar, in addition to the counsel previously engaged by Mr. Gratz, and paid him his fee. It is also in evidence, that finding the business did not advance, he spoke to other counsel; but his application was not accompanied with a fee, and was not much regarded. It appears that a survey was necessary, and that the deposition of a Mr. William Morton was indispensable to the successful termination of the cause. Yet the survey was not made, and the deposition of Mr. Morton, though its importance had been communicated to Brashier, was not taken. The fees to the officers of the court were not paid, and Mr. Gratz was required to pay them. From March, 1807, when the contract was made, to the autumn of 1811, when Mr. Gratz died, the suit did not advance. The clerk informs us, that during this time, no other step was taken in the cause than to move for leave to amend the bill and to continue it. The embarrassment of Mr. Brashier's affairs, and his insolvency, added to this experience of his neglect of the cause, were but little calculated to inspire confidence in its future progress, or in his future attention to it. In 1812, the heirs of Mr. Gratz took the management of the business in their own hands. The deposition of Mr. Morton was taken, the survey was made, and, in 1813, a decree was obtained in their favor.

We think this cannot be considered as such a performance of his undertaking, "to manage the suits at his own expense," as to entitle him to call on the vendor for an execution of the contract.

It has also been contended, that by the agreement between the parties, Mr. Gratz was bound to survey the land, and that this was a preliminary step to be taken by him before he could justly require Mr. Brashier to pay his notes for the purchase money.

Although this could not, at law, be pleaded to notes importing an absolute promise to pay money, it will readily be admitted, that if the understanding of the parties had been, that Mr. Gratz should make the survey, and that it should precede the payment of the notes, such understanding would account for the non-payment of the notes, and would place the demand for a specific performance of the contract on very strong ground.

But the agreement does not indicate the expectation, that Mr. Gratz should make the survey, although the expense of it would be chargeable to him, and as it might be of advantage to Mr. Brashier, and could be of none to Mr. Gratz, as Mr. Brashier was a resident of Kentucky, and Mr. Gratz of Philadelphia, the expectation was not unreasonable, that Mr. Brashier would cause it to be made. He might be expected to move in this business, and to require Mr. Gratz to attend to it. His not having done so, is a proof that he did not suppose the survey to be of any consequence, because he did not intend to pay so much of the purchase money as the survey would show he ought to pay.

But the article of agreement, far from showing that the survey was to precede the payment of the notes, contain expressions indicating the intention, that their payment was not to depend on the survey. The party stipulate, that for every acre which the survey shall show the tract to contain less than 302 acres, Gratz "shall pay or allow" to Brashier the sum of $22.50. That is, shall "pay" him if the notes shall have been received, shall "allow" to him if the deficiency shall appear before payment of the notes.

Had Mr. Brashier been able and willing to pay his notes as they became due, he had sufficient motives *for surveying the land. He had reason to believe, that there would be a deficiency. On his return from Philadelphia, in 1807, Mr. Barr, who lived upon the land, and was acquainted with its boundaries, told him that there could not possibly be the quantity he had purchased. He knew, too, that the land had been actually surveyed in October, 1807, by a son of Mr. Gratz, and had reason to believe, that this survey must have disclosed a deficiency. His omission to make any inquiries of Mr. Gratz, or to make a survey, or to demand one, show that his conduct respecting his notes did not depend on a survey.

We do not think, then, that Mr. Brashier is justified in withholding the payment of the purchase money by the fact that the quantity of land was not ascertained; nor does the evidence support the opinion that this fact had any influence on his conduct.

The plaintiff also attempts to justify the non-payment of the purchase money by the inability of Mr. Gratz to make him a title. But this excuse entirely fails him. He knew perfectly the state of the title, and the articles of agreement show that he knew it. They expressly declare that "the said Walter Brashier has purchased the title of the said Michael Gratz, at his own risk and hazard;" and that if any part of the land be lost, the said Michael "shall only be liable to refund to him the sum of $11.25 for each acre that may be lost." The contract states that suits were depending for the land, which suits Brashier undertook to manage; and all the testimony in the cause shows 538* that he knew those *suits were brought for the legal title. With this full knowledge, he purchases the title of Gratz, and stipulates that, after the payment of the purchase money, Gratz shall convey, not the land, or a good and sure title to it, but "all his, the said Michael Gratz's estate, right, title and interest, of and in all the said residue of the above-mentioned tract of land."

It is then an essential ingredient in this contract, that the purchase money shall be paid without waiting for the termination of the cause. Brashier takes the whole risk upon himself, except as to half the price of every acre which may be lost; and he is not to retain even that portion of the purchase; but it is to be "refunded" to him whenever the loss shall take place. He had then no right to withhold the payment of the purchase money until the suits should be determined; and any attempt to do so was a violation of the letter and the spirit of his contract. The state of the title furnishes no sort of apology for this violation. Gratz was able to make the conveyance which he had contracted to make, and which Brashier had contracted to receive; and his want of the legal title furnished no excuse for the non-payment of the purchase money.

The situation of the parties, and the circumstances in which the property was placed, deserve serious consideration. The contract was made while a suit for the title was depending, and there is a reason to suppose that this circumstance had some influence on the price of the article. We perceive that if any part of the land should be lost, one-half the purchase money should be lost by Brashier. [*539] While the suits were depending, and the purchase money unpaid, Brashier became insolvent. Consequently, should the land be recovered, it would be the property of Brashier at the stipulated price; should it be lost, Brashier could not pay that portion of the price which he was to pay in the event of loss. Under such circumstances, had a suit in chancery been brought to have the contract rescinded, unless he would pay the purchase money, no court could have hesitated to decree according to the prayer of the bill. No court could allow one party to hold the other bound, while the obligation was not reciprocal; or to hold himself prepared to avail himself of all favorable contingencies, without being affected by those which were unfavorable.

Mr. Brashier, then, if he did not execute his part of the contract with punctuality, ought to have executed it before a great change of circumstances took place; before the doubts which hung over the title, and under which he had purchased, were dissipated. That he did not do so, and was unable to do so, that in the event of an unfavorable termination of the suits he would be totally unable to comply with his contract, weakens very much the claim to a specific performance, which he sets up after the removal of the difficulties which attended the title.

Another circumstance which ought to have great weight, is the change in the value of the land. It was purchased at $22.50 per acre. Mr. Brashier failed to comply, and was unable to comply with his engagements. More than five years *after the last payment had [*540] become due, the land suddenly rises to the price of $80 per acre. Then he tenders the purchase money, and demands a specific performance. Had the land fallen in value, he could not have paid the purchase money. This total want of reciprocity gives increased influence to the objections to a specific performance, which are furnished by this great alteration in the value of the article.

Both parties have sought to avail themselves of the transaction with Mr. Saunders, by whom the purchase money was tendered in December, 1813. The defendants say that Brashier was still unable to comply with his contract, and that the tender was made in consequence of an arrangement by which Saunders was to advance the whole purchase money, and to receive half the land. But it was unimportant to them, whose money was tendered, or how it was obtained. Of this circumstance, therefore, they cannot avail themselves.

The plaintiff insists that the contract between the defendants and Saunders was a fraud on him, because he had a right to consider Saunders as his friend and agent. But the tender of the purchase money was the only service he was to expect from Saunders, and this service has been performed. He is precisely in the same situation as if the contract between Saunders and the defendants had never been made.

It has been also contended, that the concealment of the survey made by Joseph Graiz, in October, 1807, and the demand of the whole 541* amount of his *notes, after a knowledge of the deficiency in the quantity of land, were fraudulent on the part of the defendants.

Mr. Brashier knew that the survey had been made, and had reason to believe that it disclosed a deficiency in the quantity of land. He has sustained no injury by the omission to make a full communication to him. It is certainly true, that after the knowledge of this deficiency, Mr. Gratz in his life-time, and his heirs since his decease, ought not to have demanded the full amount of his notes. The court, therefore, allows them no advantage from their repeated offers to convey, on receiving the whole amount of the notes; but considers the case as if no such offers had ever been made.

This, then, is a demand for a specific performance, after a considerable lapse of time, made by a person who has failed totally to perform his part of the contract; and it is made after a great change, both in the title, and in the value, of that which was the subject of the contract; and by a person who could not have been compelled to execute his part of it, had circumstances taken an unfavorable direction.

In such a case, we are of opinion, that a court of equity ought to leave the parties to their remedy at law.

Decree affirmed.

Cited—14 Pet. 175; 2 Wood. & M. 203, 384; 3 Wood. & M. 472, 474; 2 Brock. 247, 249; 1 McLean, 401.

542***

[*PRACTICE.]

THE UNITED STATES v. DANIEL.

A division of the judges of the Circuit Court, on a motion for a new trial, in a civil or a criminal case, is not such a division of opinion as is to be certified to this court for its decision, under the 6th section of the judiciary act of 1802, c. 291. [xxi.]

THIS was an indictment in the Circuit Court of South Carolina against Lewis Daniel, charging him with having knowledge of the actual commission of the crime of willful murder, committed on the high sea, by John Furlong; and with unlawfully, wickedly, and maliciously, concealing the same, &c.

The indictment set forth, at large, the indictment and conviction of John Furlong, for willful murder on the high seas, and then charged Lewis Daniel with the knowledge and concealment of that murder, and with not having disclosed the same, in the words of the act of Congress. The prisoner was tried on the plea of not guilty. It was proved that some of the persons present on board, when the principal felony was committed, had in conversation stated the fact of the murder to the defendant, who advised them to escape, promised secrecy, offered them the means of escape, and actually assisted one of them in escaping; but there was no evidence that the defendant knew of any fact which would have constituted legal evidence on the trial of the principal felon. The judge charged the jury, that the concealment, under the circumstances, was sufficient to convict the defendant, and the jury found a verdict *of guilty. The defendant then [*543] moved in arrest of judgment, and for a new trial, on the following grounds: That a person is not liable to be indicted and convicted under the 5th section of the act of April, 1790, c. 36, for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States, unless he has such knowledge of the felony as will enable him to testify in court, at the trial of the principal felon, and particularly that in this case the evidence did not prove the defendant guilty of misprision of murder, according to the terms of the said act. The motion was also supported by an alleged misdirection of the court to the jury. The judges being divided in opinion on this motion, it was ordered to be certified to this court.

Mr. Hunt, for the prisoner, (1) argued, that, to constitute the offense of misprision of felony, under the 5th section of the crimes act of 1790, c. 36, the accused must be proved to have had such a direct and positive knowledge of the actual commission of the felony, as would be legal evidence on the trial of the principal felon. Here the offense is, what in law is termed negative misprision.<sup>1</sup> All the definitions of misprision imply such a personal knowledge of the fact as would be legal evidence.<sup>2</sup> But here there was no such knowledge; and if the court, upon the review of the whole case, is satisfied that the *defend- [*544] ant has not been found guilty of any legal offense, the judgment will be arrested.<sup>3</sup> In order to bring a case within the intention of a statute, its language must include the case; it is not sufficient that it is within the reason or mischief, or that the crime is of equal atrocity, and of an analogous character.<sup>4</sup> The prisoner could not have been a witness against the principal felon. The law never credits the bare assertion of anyone, however high his rank or pure his morals, but always requires the sanction of an oath; and it also requires his personal attendance in court, that he may be examined

1.—4 Bl. Com., c. 9; 3 Inst. 140.

2.—4 Jac. Law Dict. 295; Staundf. P. C. L. 1, c. 19; Hawk. P. C., c. 20, s. 4; 1 Hale's P. C. 375; Terms de la Ley, 291, 3 Inst. 36; 1 Chitty's Crim. Law, 2.

3.—1 East's P. C. 146; 1 Chitty's Crim. Law, 663; 1 Hargr. St. Tri. 290.

4.—Wiltberger v. United States, 5 Wheat. Rep. 96.

Wheat. 6.

and cross-examined by the different parties. The few instances in which this rule has been departed from, and in which hearsay evidence has been admitted, will be found on examination to be such as from their very nature are incapable of positive and direct proof. (2) This court has decided, that the refusal of the Circuit Court to grant a new trial, is not matter for which a writ of error lies. But in those cases the judges of the court below were unanimous in refusing the new trial; here a division of opinions is certified, and this court is bound to decide by the express words of the judiciary act of 1802, c. 291.

The Attorney-General, contra, (1) insisted that there was no ground for arresting the judgment, or *granting a new trial. The evidence brought the case completely within the crimes act of 1790, c. 36. The object of the act was the prompt detection and punishment of the crimes enumerated. The degree of knowledge required to bring a party within the misprision described, is such as is sufficient to justify an arrest; and well-founded suspicion is sufficient for that purpose.<sup>1</sup> (2) The motion in the court below, in arrest of judgment, combined with a motion for a new trial, is novel and unprecedented. But this combination cannot vary the legal character of these two motions, which is entirely distinct. A motion in arrest of judgment must be confined to objections which arise upon the face of the record itself, and which make the proceedings apparently erroneous; therefore, no defect in evidence, or improper proceedings at the trial, can be urged as a ground for arresting the judgment.<sup>2</sup> The exceptions in arrest of judgment are to the indictment.<sup>3</sup> On the other hand, a motion for a new trial is for causes other than defects in the pleadings; and the circumstance that the verdict was obtained because the pleadings were defective, will not be permitted to operate on this motion.<sup>4</sup> On inspection of the record in this case, it will be found that the only grounds assigned in support of the joint motion are such as are entirely inapplicable to the motion for a new trial. These grounds are 546* the misdirection of *the judge, and that the verdict was obtained on insufficient evidence. The court will, therefore, throw out of view the motion to arrest the judgment, and consider this as a motion for a new trial, on which the judges of the court below were divided in opinion. And if so, there is no question before this court; since it has repeatedly decided, that the granting or refusal of a new trial, is mere matter of discretion in the court below; and hence, the refusal of a new trial, even though the grounds on which the motion was founded are spread on the record, is no sufficient cause for a writ of error from this court.<sup>5</sup> In a civil case, if the court below be divided on such a motion, the motion falls. Nor is it otherwise in a criminal case. This court has no appellate criminal jurisdiction. It is only by virtue of the 6th section of the judiciary act of 1802, that a criminal case can ever be brought to this court. That section was not, however, made exclusively for criminal cases. The provision is general; and it is only by reason of its generality that a question in a criminal case can ever reach this court. But being general, it must have the same construction in all cases. If, then, in a civil case, a division of the judges on the mere discretionary question of a new trial, would bring no question here; neither will it in a criminal case.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

*The indictment in this case is certainly sufficient to sustain a judgment according to the verdict, and all the other proceedings are regular. There is therefore no cause for arresting the judgment.

The motion for a new trial has never before been brought to this court on a division of opinion in the Circuit Court. It had been decided, that a writ of error could not be sustained to any opinion on such motion, and the reasons for that decision seemed entitled to great weight, when urged against determining such a motion in this court, in a case where the judges at the circuits were divided on it. When we considered the motives which must have operated with the legislature for introducing this clause into the judiciary act of 1802, we were satisfied that it could not be intended to apply to motions for a new trial.

Previous to the passage of that act, the circuit courts were composed of three judges, and the judges of the Supreme Court changed their circuits. If all the judges were present, no division of opinion could take place. If only one judge of the Supreme Court should attend, and a division should take place, the cause was continued till the next term, when a different judge would attend. Should the same division continue, there would then be the opinion of two judges against one; and the law provided, that in such case that opinion should be the judgment of the court. But the act of 1802 made the judges of the Supreme Court stationary, so that the same judge constantly attends the same circuit. This great improvement of the pre-existing system, 548 was attended with this difficulty. The court being always composed of the same two judges, any division of opinion would remain, and the question would continue unsettled. To remedy this inconvenience, the clause under consideration was introduced. Its application to motions for a new trial seems unnecessary. Such a motion is not a part of the proceedings of the cause. It is an application to the discretion of the court, founded on evidence which the court has heard, and which may make an impression not always to be communicated by a statement of that evidence. A division of opinion is a rejection of the motion, and the verdict stands. There is nothing, then, in the reason of the provision which would apply it to this case.

Although the words of the act direct generally, "that whenever any question shall occur before a circuit court, upon which the opinion of the judges shall be opposed, the point upon which the disagreement shall happen shall" be certified, &c., yet it is apparent that the ques-

1.—Chitty's Crim. Law, 10, 27; 4 Bl. Com. 290.

2.—1 Chitty's Crim. Law, 539.

3.—4 Bl. Com. 375.

4.—1 Chitty, 535.

5.—Wheat. Dig. Dec. tit. Practice XV. (A.)

tion must be one which arises in a cause depending before the court relative to a proceeding belonging to the cause. The first proviso is, "That nothing herein contained shall prevent the cause from proceeding, if, in the opinion of the court, farther proceedings can be had without prejudice to the merits."

It was also contended, that under the second proviso, Lewis Daniel ought to be discharged. That proviso is in these words: "And provided also that imprisonment shall not be allowed, nor punishment in any case be inflicted, 549*] where the judges of the said *court are divided in opinion upon the question touching the said imprisonment or punishment."

A motion for a new trial is not "the question touching the said imprisonment or punishment." That question must arise on the law, as applicable to the case; and is not, it would seem, to be referred to this court. The proviso, if applicable to such a case as this, would direct the Circuit Court not to certify their division of opinion to this court, but, in consequence of that division, to enter a judgment for the defendant. This court can only decide the question referred to it, and certify its opinion upon that question to the Circuit Court, who will then determine what judgment it is proper to render.

CERTIFICATE.—This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record, and on the points on which the judges in the Circuit Court were divided in opinion, and was argued by counsel. On consideration whereof, this court is of opinion, that there is no error in the record and proceedings of the Circuit Court, for which judgment ought to be arrested. And this court is farther of opinion, that a division of the judges of the Circuit Court, on a motion for a new trial, is not one of those divisions of opinion which is to be certified to this court for its decision, under the act, entitled, "an act to amend the judicial system of the United States."

All which is ordered to be certified to the United States Court for the sixth Circuit and District of South Carolina.

Cited.—5 Pet. 206; 8 Pet. 303; 10 Pet. 289; 4 How. 15; 5 How. 224; 7 How. 191; 3 Wall. 255; 4 Wall. 111; 7 Wall. 531; 2 Sumn. 61; 2 Wood. & M. 3; 2 Ware (Da.) 386; 4 Wash. 333; Bald. 406.

550*] [*CHANCERY. LOCAL LAW.]

KERR ET AL. v. WATTS.

The decision of this court, in Massie v. Watts, 6 Cranch, 148, revised and confirmed.

Who are necessary parties in equity.

The rule applied in equity to the relief of bona fide purchasers without notice, is not applicable to the case of purchasers of military land warrants under the laws of Virginia.

Such purchasers are considered as affected with notice by the record of the entry, and also of the survey; and subsequent purchasers are considered as acquiring the interest of the person making the entry; so that purchasers under conflicting entries are considered as purchasing under distinct rights, in which case the rule, as to innocent purchasers, does not apply.

The principle, that only parties, or privies, or purchasers pendente lite, are bound by a decree in equity, how applied to this case.

The surveys actually made on the military land warrants of Virginia, have not the force of judicial acts, or of acts done by the deputations of officers as general agents of the continental officers.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of Ohio.

Ferdinando O'Neal was owner of a Virginia military warrant for 4,000 acres of land, dated the 17th of July, 1783, and employed Nathaniel Massie, a deputy-surveyor, to locate it, and to survey and return the plats.

John Watts purchased the right of O'Neal, and on the 7th of January, 1801, paid Massie £50 in full satisfaction for locating and surveying the warrant.

On the 3d of August, 1787, Massie made an entry on part of O'Neal's warrant for 1,000 acres. On *the same day an entry had [*551 been made for 1,000 acres for Robert Powell, which was purchased by Massie.

On the 27th of January, 1795, Massie made an entry in his own name for 2,366 acres, and the bill, filed in the court below by the respondent, Watts, against the appellants, Kerr and others, charges, that on the 26th of April, 1796, Massie fraudulently made a survey for O'Neal, for 530 acres, purporting to be made upon his said entry of 1,000 acres; but, in fact, on different land, having fraudulently appropriated to himself the land covered by O'Neal's entry, by surveys made on Powell's and his own entries, having purchased Powell's warrant and entry before the surveys were made.

The bill further states, that Massie had obtained grants upon his survey.

Watts commenced a suit in chancery against Massie in the State Court of Kentucky, claiming a conveyance of the legal title, and proceeded to a final hearing upon the merits, in the Circuit Court of Kentucky, to which it had been removed; which last court, in the November term, 1807, made an interlocutory decree, in favor of Watts, and directed the proper surveyor to lay off the several entries in the manner pointed out in that decree, and to report to the court in order to a final decree in the premises.

The cause was finally decided by a decree directing Massie to convey the 1,000 acres to Watts according to certain metes and bounds reported, and to deliver possession, &c.; and upon performance of *the decree by [*552 Massie, Watts was directed to transfer to him 1,000 acres of O'Neal's warrant.

Massie appealed to this court, where the decree of the Circuit Court was affirmed, at February term, 1810.<sup>1</sup>

Massie refused to convey or deliver possession when demanded; and in the meantime part of the property recovered had been laid out into lots of the town of Chillicothe, and the bill charges the appellants, and others, who were made defendants in the present suit, with having in possession, respectively, part of the complainant's property, and claiming to hold the same by titles derived under Massie.

1.—6 Cranch, 148.

NOTE.—As to necessary parties to a bill in equity, see note to Morgan v. Morgan, 2 Wheat. 260, and note to Marshall v. Beverly, 5 Wheat. 313.

The record of the proceedings in Kentucky, and in the Supreme Court, were referred to, and made part of the bill in this case.

The entries before mentioned are as follows:

"No. 503: Captain Robert Powell enters 1,000 acres of land, &c. Beginning at the upper corner on the Scioto of Major Thomas Massie's entry, No. 480, running up the river 520 poles, when reduced to a straight line, thence from the beginning with Massie's line, so far that a line parallel to the general course of the river shall include the quantity."

"No. 509: Captain Ferdinand O'Neal enters 1,000 acres, &c. Beginning at the upper corner on the Scioto of Robert Powell's entry, 503, running up the river 500 poles, when reduced to a straight line, and from the beginning with Powell's line, so far that a line parallel with the general course of the river will include the quantity."

553*] "No. 2462: Nathaniel Massie enters 2,366 acres, &c., on the bank of Scioto, corner to Robert Powell's survey, No. 503, thence with his line south 43 east 293 poles; south 80 east to the upper back corner of Thomas Massie's survey, No. 480, thence with his line south 10 west, to Paint Creek, thence up the creek to the corner of Thomas Lawes' survey, thence with his line, and from the beginning up the Scioto to the lower corner of Daniel Stull's survey, thence with his line so far that a line south 10 west will include the quantity."

But these entries depended on one which preceded them on the entry-book, made by Thomas Massie, as follows:

"No. 480: 1787, August 3d. Thomas Massie enters 1,400 acres, &c. Beginning at the junction of Paint Creek with the Scioto, running up the Scioto 520 poles when reduced to a straight line, thence off at right angles, with the general course of the river so far that a line parallel thereto will include the quantity."

This court, in the case referred to, decided, that Thomas Massie's survey ought to commence at the mouth of Paint Creek; and that the upper corner on the river should be placed at the termination of a right line at the distance of 520 poles, and the survey extended out at right angles with the general course of a right line supposed from the beginning to the upper corner; and that, from the upper corner of Thomas Massie's survey, a point on the river, at the distance of 520 poles on a right line 554*] should be *ascertained for the upper corner of Powell's, and that the real course of a right line from Thomas Massie's corner to Powell's upper corner, should be considered as a base from which Powell's survey should be extended by lines at right angles therewith, except only so far as the lower line might interfere with Thomas Massie's property.

The survey of O'Neal to depend upon the same principles in relation to the survey of Powell.

The object of the present suit was to carry into execution against the defendants, who have acquired Massie's title, the decree against him in Kentucky, affirmed in this court.

The court below, by their decree, gave relief against each, for the specific property claimed by the answer of each, construing the entries according to the principles of the former decision, except in varying the complainant's survey, by a decision that a piece of land called an island in the river, was part of the main shore when the entries were made, and included as a part of the bank.

The defendants all submitted to the decree, except Kerr, Doolittle, Joseph Kirkpatrick, Sen., Joseph Kirkpatrick, Jun., and the heirs of James Johnston, who appealed to this court.

The Attorney-General and Mr. Scott, for the appellants, argued, (1) that the survey made for Powell ought to be established, because made under the superintendence of officers to whom the state of Virginia had deputed the sovereign and exclusive authority to regulate such surveys, similar to the *powers of [555 commissioners to adjust pre-emption rights; and that their determination was conclusive, being an inseparable condition annexed to the grant from the state.<sup>1</sup> The existence and power of these agents has been recognized by the court.<sup>2</sup> (2.) The appellant, Kerr, is an innocent purchaser without notice, who holds the legal estate with superior equity, and therefore cannot be disturbed by the alleged equity of Watts. The cause having been set down for hearing on the bill and answers, his answer is conclusive evidence as to every fact which it states;<sup>3</sup> and it does state that at the filing of the bill he had the legal title; and that before either party purchased, the entries had been surveyed and become matters of record. A survey returned and recorded is notice.<sup>4</sup> He is not affected by the supposed fraud of Massie, in making Powell's survey. Massie was only one of several mesne purchasers of Powell's rights; and if Powell, the original holder, was innocent, a subsequent purchaser under him has a right to the shield of his innocence, even though such purchaser had notice.<sup>5</sup> Nor is the appellant a lite pendente purchaser, because the former suit was brought in Kentucky, out of the jurisdiction where the land lies.<sup>6</sup> The rule is borrowed from the common *law; and its analogies must, therefore, be pursued. A verdict and judgment at law, or a decree in equity, affecting the title to land, are local in their nature. The lis pendens must be on the question of title directly, and not incidentally. The principle is confined to those who attempt to originate a title pendente lite; and is never extended to those who had acquired a title previously, and who ought, therefore, to have been made parties to the lis pendens. Its policy is to prevent the parties from alienating, and thus evading the justice of the court. Even if the appellant had no legal title, but had only the better right to call for it, he could not be affected in equity by the pendency of the former suit.<sup>7</sup> Nor is he bound as privy to the former decree. No person can be bound as such, who ought to have been made a party; as to all who ought to have been parties, such a decree is

1.—2 Ventr. 365; 3 Ch. Cas. 135.

2.—Wallace v. Anderson, 5 Wheat. Rep. 291.

3.—Wheat. Dig. Dec. tit. Chancery, pl. 142; Leeds v. Mar. Ins. Co., 2 Wheat. Rep. 380.

Wheat. 6.

4.—3 Binney's Rep. 118.

5.—2 Atk. 242; 11 Ves. 478; Sugd. Vend. 438.

6.—2 P. Wms. 482.

7.—2 Vern. 599.

considered as a fraud.<sup>1</sup> Those only are privies, who acquire this interest subsequent to the institution of the suit, by the decree in which they are sought to be affected. Besides, the question here is substantially different from that which arose in the former case. There it was as to the responsibility of an agent to his principal, for an alleged fraud. Here it is as to the dispossession of a bona fide purchaser.

Mr. Doddridge and Mr. Hardin, contra, stated that they should not examine the correctness of the *decision in the former case, nor the question whether the appellants were bound by the decree against Massie, under whom they claim; since, whether they were bound by it as a res judicata or not, the court would not change the application of the former adjudication, unless the appellants showed themselves to be purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice, or unless the respondent had been guilty of some gross negligence. The defense of being a purchaser without notice, can never be set up by or against one claiming under a different original title. It is admitted to be the general rule, that where the cause is set down for a hearing on the bill and answer, the answer of the defendant is conclusive; but where the answer proceeds upon the ground of making the defendant an innocent purchaser, and the records, &c., made part of the bill, show that he cannot be such, there the law charging him with notice from the registry, forms an exception to the rule. The title of the respondent is an imperfect legal title; and his claim being a matter of record, cannot be treated as a latent equity, for negligence in prosecuting which he shall lose his property. In the system of land laws which has been established in this country, land titles commence by a record, and the very first step confers an inchoate legal title.

Mr. Justice Johnson delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause has its origin in the case decided in this court between Watts and Massie, in the year 1810.

558* That suit came up from the Kentucky District, and was prosecuted there because Massie, the defendant, then resided in that state, and either was, or was supposed to be, actually seized of the land in question.

Since that decision, it has been ascertained that the present defendants are in possession of the land, or the greater part of it; and Massie also having changed his residence to Ohio, this suit has become necessary, both to enforce the former decree against him, and to obtain relief against the actual possessors of the land.

In the course of discussion, the court has been called on to review its decision in Watts and Massie, and it has patiently heard, and deliberately considered, the able and well-conducted argument on this subject. But, after the maturest reflection, it adheres to the opinion that, whether the case be viewed with reference to the time, intent, and meaning of the calls, to analogy to decided cases, or convenience in the voluntary adoption of a principle of the most general application, that laid down in the case of Watts and Massie, for running the lines of the land called for, cannot be deviated from. So far, therefore, as Massie himself, and his privies in estate, are concerned, Watts is now entitled to the full benefit of that decision.

But there are various other defendants, and several grounds of defense assumed in this case, which are unaffected by the decision referred to.

It is contended, in the first place, that there is a radical defect of parties. That the representatives *of O'Neal and Scott, [559 through whom the complainant claims, and those of Powell and Thomas Massie, supposed to be hostile to his interests, ought to have been made parties.

On this point there may be given one general answer. No one need be made a party complainant in whom there exists no interest, and no one party defendant from whom nothing is demanded. Watts rests his case upon the averment that all the interests once vested in O'Neal and the Scotts, now centre in himself, and, provided he can recover the land now in possession of those actually made defendants, he is contented afterwards to meet the just claims of any others who are not made defendants. No rights will be affected by his recovery, but those of the actual defendants, and those claiming through them. As to the supposed interference of the lines ordered to be surveyed, with those of Thomas Massie, or Powell, the former is merely hypothetical by way of reference, or imaginary; and the latter is only asserted on the ground that Massie had acquired all the interest in Powell's survey that Powell ever had. There was therefore nothing to demand of Powell, as the case is exhibited by the record. It must be subject to these modifications, that the obiter dictum of the court, in the case of Simms and Guthrie, is to be understood.

It is next contended, in behalf of Kerr, and several other defendants, that they claim through purchasers who were bona fide purchasers without notice, for a valuable consideration. And at first view it would seem, that the principles so often applied to the relief *of innocent purchasers, are applicable [560 to the case of these defendants, wherever the facts sustain the defense. But it will not do at this day, to apply this principle to the case of purchasers of military land-warrants, derived under the laws of Virginia. In all the courts in which such cases have come under review, the purchasers have been considered as affected by the record notice of the entry, and also of the survey, such as it legally ought to be made, as incident to, or bound up in the entry. It is altogether a system sui generis, and subsequent purchasers are considered as acquiring the interest of the entor, and not necessarily that of the state. So that purchasers under conflicting entries are considered as purchasing under distinct rights, in which case the principle here contended for does not apply; since the ignorance of a purchaser of a defective title, cannot make that title good, as against an independent and better right. These principles may safely be laid hold of, to support a doctrine which, however severe occasionally in its operation, was perhaps indispensable to the protection of the interests acquired under military land-warrants, when we take into consideration the facility with which such interests might otherwise, in all cases, have been defeated by early transfers.

2.—1 Binney's Rep. 217; 2 Binney, 40, 455; 3 Binney, 114.

It is further contended, that the defendants are not bound by the decree in the case of Watts and Massie because neither parties, nor privies, nor pendente lite purchasers.

That those who come not into this court, in any one of those characters, are not subject to 561 the direct and binding efficacy of an adjudication, is unquestionable. But it is not very material as to the principal question in this case, whether the parties are to be affected by the former adjudication directly, or by the declared adherence of this court to the doctrines established in that case. The consequence to the parties on the merits of the case is the same.

But in one view it is material, and that is with regard to the proof of the exhibits, through which Watts, the complainant, deduces his title through the Scotts from O'Neal. As Massie, in the former case (the record of which is made a proof of this), acquiesced in this deduction of Watts' title, we are of opinion that it is, as to him and his privies in estate, a point conceded. As to parties and privies, the principle cannot be contested; and as to pendente lite purchasers, it is not necessary to determine the question, since the only defendants who have appealed from the decision below, to wit, Kerr, the Kirkpatrick, Doolittle, and the Johnstons, claim under purchases made long anterior to this scrip, in Kentucky.

Those defendants certainly were entitled to a plenary defense, and where they have, by their answers, put the complainant upon proof of his allegations, as to his deduction of title, the question arises, whether it appears from the record that the deduction of title was legally proved.

There can be no doubt that this question passed sub silentio in the court below, but it does not appear from anything on the record that the point was waived; and we are not at 562 liberty to look beyond the record for the evidence on which the deduction of title was sustained.

Although we entertain no doubt, that exhibits may, on the trial, be proved by parol testimony, yet a note on the minutes, or on the exhibit, became indispensable to transmit the fact to this court; and as the case furnishes no such memorandum, we must consider the assignments through which Watts derived his title from O'Neal, as not having been established by evidence. Such was the decision of this court in the case of Drummond v. M'Gruder.

But Kerr is the only one of these appellants who has expressly put the complainant on proof of his title. The rest of the appellants having passed over this subject without any notice in their answer, the question is, whether they waived their right to call for evidence to prove these exhibits. We are of opinion they have not, and that the complainant is always bound to prove his title, unless it be admitted by the answer.

There are two principles of a more general nature, of which all the appellants claim the benefit, and which, as the cause must go back, will require consideration.

Wheat. 6.

It is contended, that Nathaniel Massie was the acknowledged agent of both O'Neal and Watts, and that the complainant is precluded by his acts done in that capacity. This argument is resorted to, as well to fasten on Watts the survey made in his behalf above the town of Chillicothe, as a relinquishment of all claim to a location at the place now contended for in his behalf. But in neither of these views can this court apply this principle in favor of the defendants; for, it follows from the principles established for surveying O'Neal's entry, that the survey made by Massie on O'Neal's entry, was illegal and void; and, certainly, when employed in locating the entries made in favor of Powell and himself, Massie was not acting as the agent of O'Neal or Watts, but as the agent of Powell, or, in fact, in his own behalf. The survey, on which this argument rests, was at best but partial; and it is conclusive against it to observe, that the powers of Massie, as agent of Watts, were limited to the entry and mechanical acts of the survey. The recording of that survey, and all those solemn acts which give it legal validity, it does not appear that his powers extended to. Watts never recognized that survey, or assumed the obligatory effects of it by any act of his own, and in fact, in the event (though not a material circumstance to the result we come to), it has since been ascertained that it was not only made off Watts' entry, but on land appropriated by another.

But it has been contended, also, that all these surveys actually made on the military land-warrants of Virginia, derive the authenticity and force of judicial acts, or of acts done by the general agents of the continental officers respectively, from the superintending and controlling powers vested in the deputations of officers, as the law denominates them, appointed by themselves to superintend the appropriation of the military reserves set apart for their use. It is to be presumed, it is contended, that every survey made by their authorized surveyors, was made under their control and direction. 564 This court does not feel itself authorized to raise any such presumption. The powers actually exercised by those commissioners, were limited to very few objects. The surveying of entries at a very early period, became a judicial subject. And the commissioners, or rather deputations of officers, never assumed a right to adjust the conflicting interests of individuals upon the locating and surveying of such entries. To appoint surveyors, to superintend and direct the drawing of lots for precedence among the locators, to direct the survey for officers and soldiers not present or not represented, and to determine when the good lands between the Cumberland and Tennessee should be exhausted, comprehended all the powers with which they were vested. As individual agents capable of binding their principals, they appear in one case, and only one, which was, when the officer or soldier was absent and unrepresented. And so to judicial powers, there is no provision of the act that vests them with a semblance of such a power, unless it be to judge of the right of priority as determined by lot. But here, also, they appear more properly in the character of ministerial officers discharging a duty without the least latitude of judgment or discretion. Their powers in nothing resemble that of the courts of commissioners established through the back counties of Virginia. As to the subjects submitted to the boards so constituted (of which military warrants were no part), those boards were expressly vested with judicial power. But the powers of the deputations of officers were purely ministerial. *And if it be admitted, that they might have exercised the power of defining the principles on which surveys should have been made, yet it is certainly incumbent on him who would avail himself of that power, to show that it was exercised, and to bring himself within the rules prescribed by their authority.

Decree reversed as to these appellants, and sent back for further proceedings.

Cited—10 Wheat. 188 (n); 15 Pet. 109; 2 Paine, 541; Bald. 217.

[CHANCERY.]

LEEDS ET AL.

v.

THE MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Application of the law of set-off and lien in equity, under peculiar circumstances.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia.

This was a suit in equity, commenced in the court below by the respondents against the appellants, in which the injunction obtained on the filing of the bill was made perpetual. The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

This cause was argued by Mr. Swann and Mr. Jones for the appellant, and by the Attorney-General and Mr. Lee for the respondents.

566* Mr. Justice JOHNSON delivered the opinion of the court:

This case involves a great many questions both of law and fact, but we will consider it as it is affected by those circumstances, concerning which there is no dispute.

Leeds and Straas being engaged in commercial enterprises, Straas employed Hodgson to effect insurance on the Sophia and her cargo. A note of Hodgson, with Patton and Dykes as indorsers, is taken for the premium. Another adventure on the brig Hope, grows out of the first on the Sophia; and the same agent, at the request of the same principal, effects insurance upon this also, with the same company. The Sophia arrives in safety, but though one of the indorsers is unquestionably sufficient, the premium note remains unpaid. The Hope is lost, and Hodgson professedly suing for the use of Straas and Leeds, has recovered judgment against the underwriters for the amount of the policy. From this amount the premium note connected with that policy was discounted, but that growing out of the insurance on the Sophia was not pleaded, notwithstanding the identity of the legal plaintiff in that action, with the debtor to the company in the transaction on the Sophia.

The note taken for the insurance on the Sophia, is now set up against the policy on the Hope, in a different form. This bill is filed to compel the parties in interest, Hodgson, Leeds and Straas, to discount it from the judgment against the underwriters.

The equity of this demand is now to be tested.

*The right to the discount considered [567 with reference to the identity of parties, was clearly a legal one. And had not the company been enjoined in the chancery of Virginia, during the pendency of the suit upon the policy, they must have lost all claim to the interposition of this court, by failing to assert their legal rights in the court to which they properly belonged. But the chancery of Virginia might have considered the company in contempt, had they set up in discount a claim then pending, and then enjoined in the courts of that state, and, therefore, we may now be justified in considering the legal rights of the company, against the policy on the Hope, as derived through the premium note on the Sophia, under all the advantages that it would have possessed, if pleaded as a set-off to the action at law.

The bill, it is true, does not explicitly rest on this, as the ground of its equity, but the facts are so set out, and may be properly considered as making up the case.

What was the state of right as it stood at law? Hodgson, as holder of the policy which he had effected, was, to the amount of his commissions, advances, or even liability incurred in the transaction, a privileged creditor, and that possession could not be violated until he was indemnified or compensated. If he be considered as the legal plaintiff in the action on the policy, and, in fact, the legal owner of the money recovered for the use of others, the law would not suffer him to be deprived by transactions between Straas and Leeds, to which he never assented, of any *legal advantage [568 derived from possession of that money.

Suppose, to come up to the very case before us, the company had pleaded this note as a set-off to the suit on the policy, and Hodgson, the legal plaintiff, had tendered a replication admitting the plea, in what manner could the company or himself have been deprived of the benefit of its being thus disposed of? That Hodgson was entitled to indemnity from Straas at least, against this note, is unquestionable; and he would, as against Straas, have, under any circumstances, been entitled to retain a sufficient sum to cover his liability. Then how could he, by the act of Straas, either by assigning away his interest, or by impeding by an injunction, that act in a third person, which would have secured him in its consequences, be deprived of the benefit of compelling the admission of this set-off? The case in equity, as it now stands, is precisely that which would have arisen at law, upon the state of things supposed. For, Hodgson, in his answer to this bill, admits this set-off, and solicits the court to enforce the admission of it by Leeds, who, in the right of Straas, is thus endeavoring to deprive him of his legal right to indemnity. The case in no part contests the reality of this state of facts, but the defendant, Leeds, in every part of it, rests his defense upon the ground that Straas has succeeded in defeating the claims of Hodgson, and deprived the company of the benefit incident to the assertion of those claims; first, by tying the hands of the company in a court of chancery, in a suit in which he finally 569* failed, and then by a transfer of a *chat-tel interest, the evidence of which, or the contract itself, was in the hands of Hodgson, and legally subject to his control, until the money due on it was reduced into possession.

It is true, that had this set-off been pleaded at law to Hodgson's suit upon the policy, and the equitable interest of others been set up against such plea, or against Hodgson's admission of it, the Court of Common Pleas must, according to modern practice, have heard the parties on affidavit, before it determined to admit Hodgson's replication on its files. But, supposing the case to have been presented on affidavit, such as it now appears to this court, that court would not have taken upon itself to deprive the legal plaintiff of a legal advantage, in favor of an assignee of a chose in action, where the equity of the case was so strong in favor of the legal plaintiff.

It is obvious, that the principal difficulties in this case arise from the inverted and peculiar state of the parties. Hodgson (and with him his indorser), who is really the party to be relieved, appears in the character of defendant, and the question presents itself, why should the underwriters be at liberty to quit their hold upon their note for indemnity, and come upon the judgment holder on the policy for satisfaction in the first instance?

But to this several answers present themselves.

Why, if the underwriters had several remedies, should they, by the act of the opposite party, be deprived of any one of them? Why, 570* if they might *legally have availed themselves of their remedy by discount, should they now be deprived of it because they were prevented, unconsciously by their antagonist, from asserting it in its proper place? And why, if they can in this way certainly save their money, should they be put to the risk and labor of prosecuting a recovery upon their note?

But the case affords another answer of a more general nature. Notwithstanding Hodgson's insolvency, his claims upon this policy remain unpaid, if it be only for the purpose of shielding his indorsers; and notwithstanding his appearance here as a co-defendant, it is obvious, that dismissing this bill must give rise to new suits between the persons liable to pay this note, and the assignee of Straas's interest under the policy. This consideration affords the additional reason, that entertaining this suit terminates litigation, and the reverse would be the consequence of dismissing this bill. If having been deprived by his antagonist of his remedy at law, is a sufficient ground for entertaining the suit of the complainant, it is certainly no objection to it, that relief is at the same time extended to one who, though nominally a co-defendant, is essentially a co-plaintiff, and might have been made such.

Had he been made such, the case would have presented fewer difficulties. If Straas himself could not have demanded of Hodgson this policy, or the money recovered on it, without securing him against the premium note, neither can his assignee. Even the courts of law have 571* recognized the lien of a broker *on a Wheat. 6.

chose in action for a general balance of account, and much more so ought a court of equity in the application of a principle so peculiarly its own, as that which gives effect to a transfer by assignment of a chose in action not in its nature negotiable.

The parties in this case sue only to be restored to their legal advantages; as that cannot be done specifically, they certainly have a claim on this court to secure to them all the beneficial consequences that would have resulted from them. And as Straas's interest in the Hope would have been amply sufficient to enable Hodgson to pay this premium note, had the money on the policy come into his hands, there is nothing unreasonable in making it, in the hands of the officer of this court, subject to be disposed of in the same manner.

Let it be distinctly understood, that the court does not, in this decision, countenance the idea that a separate debt may be set-off to a joint action. The debtor and creditor at law are the same. And upon Hodgson's reducing the money into possession, the same identity of parties would exist. For Leeds and Straas do not appear in the case at all, in the relation of copartners in trade, but Leeds himself represents them as holding distinct interests, although in the same subject. Leeds' defense rests altogether on Straas's assignment, not on their blended rights; nor does he pretend to ignorance of the offset now contended for, when he took the assignment, but only observes, with a view, it is presumed, to show he had no reason to believe it to be a subsisting debt, *that it was at that time enjoined [*572 before the Chancellor of Virginia. This is setting up a wrong in Straas to support a right in his assignee.

Decree affirmed.

[PROMISSORY NOTES.]

THE UNION BANK v. HYDE.

A protest of an inland bill or promissory note is not necessary, nor is it evidence of the facts stated in it.

The following undertaking of the indorser of a promissory note, "I do request that hereafter any notes that may fall due in the Union Bank, in which I am, or may be indorser, shall not be protested, as I will consider myself bound in the same manner as if the said notes had been or should be legally protested," held to be ambiguous as to whether it amounted to a waiver of demand and notice; and parol proof admitted to show that it was the understanding of the parties that the demand and notice required by law to charge the indorser, should be dispensed with.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia.

This cause was argued by Mr. Jones for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. Swann and Mr. Key for the defendant in error.

Mr. Justice JOHNSON delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause turns upon the construction of a written *instrument, in these words: "I [*573 do request that hereafter any notes that may fall due in the Union Bank, on which I am, or may be indorser, shall not be protested, as I will consider myself bound, in the same manner as if the said notes had been, or should be legally protested.

(Signed)

THOMAS HYDE."

Two constructions have been contended for: the one, literal, formal, vernacular; the other, resting on the spirit and meaning, as a mercantile and bank transaction.

The former has been sustained in the court below, and the correctness of that opinion is now to be examined.

The defendant, it appears, became indorser to one Foyles, and the note was discounted in the Union Bank; on its falling due, it is admitted that no demand was made on the drawer, or notice given to the indorser.

The case presents the right of the plaintiffs under two aspects: 1st. Upon the just construction of the written instrument. 2d. The practical exposition of it by the defendant himself; and it might also have presented a third—the specific waiver of demand and notice on the note in suit. By some assumed analogy, or mistaken notions of law, this practice of protesting inland bills has now become very generally prevalent; and since the inundation of the country with bank transactions, and the general resort to this mode of exposing the breaches of punctuality which occur upon 574 notes, a solemnity, cogency, and legal effect, have been given to such protests in public opinion, which certainly has no foundation in the law-merchant. The nullity of a protest on the legal obligations of the parties to an inland bill, is tested by the consideration, that independently of statutory provision (if any exists anywhere), or conventional understanding, the protest on an inland bill is no evidence in a court of justice of either of the incidents which convert the conditional undertaking of an indorser into an absolute assumption.

The protest belongs altogether to foreign mercantile transactions, upon which, on the contrary, it is an indispensable incident to making a drawer of a bill, or indorser of a note, liable. On foreign bills, it is the evidence of demand, and an indispensable step towards the legal notice of non-payment, in consequence of which the undertaking of the drawer or indorser becomes absolute. Hence, as to foreign transactions, it is justly predicated of a protest, that it has a legal or binding effect.

But the writing under consideration has reference, exclusively, to inland bills, and as to them, the protest has no legal or binding effect. The indorser became liable, only on demand and notice, and of these facts the protest is no evidence. How, then, shall the waiver of the protest be adjudged a waiver of demand and notice, or in effect convert his conditional into an absolute undertaking?

Had the defendant omitted one word from his undertaking, it would have been difficult to maintain an affirmative answer to this proposition. But what are we to understand him to intend, when he says, "I will consider myself bound in the same manner as if said notes had been, or should be legally protested?" Except as to foreign bills, a protest has no legal binding effect, and as to them, it is evidence of demand, and incident to legal notice. It either then had this meaning, or it had none.

This reasoning, it may be said, goes no farther than to a waiver of the demand, but what effect is to be given to the word bound? It must be to pay the debt, or it means nothing. But to cast on the indorser of a foreign bill an obligation to take it up, protest alone is not sufficient; he is still entitled to a reasonable notice in addition to the technical notice communicated by the protest. To bind him to pay the debt, all these incidents were indispensable, and may, therefore, be well supposed to have been in contemplation of the parties, when entering into this contract.

It is not unworthy of remark, that the writing under consideration asks a boon of the plaintiff, for which it tenders a consideration. It requests to be exempted from an expense, exposure, or mortification, on the one hand; and on the other, what is tendered in return? The intended object and conceived effect of the protest on the one hand, is to convert his undertaking into an unconditional assumption, and the natural return is to make his undertaking at once absolute, as the effectual means of obtaining the benefits solicited.

If this course of reasoning should not be held conclusive, it would at least be sufficient to prove the language of the undertaking [*576] equivocal; and that the sense in which the parties used the words in which they express themselves, may fairly be sought in the practical exposition furnished by their own conduct, or the conventional use of language established by their own customs or received opinions.

On this point the evidence proves, that, by the understanding of both parties, this writing did dispense with demand and refusal, that the company on the one hand discontinued their practice of putting the notes indorsed by defendant in the usual course for rendering his assumption absolute, and the defendant, on the other, continued up to the last moment to acquiesce in this practice, by renewing his indorsements without ever requiring demand or notice. This was an unequivocal acquiescence in the sense given by the company to his undertaking, and he cannot be permitted to lie by, and lull the company into a state of security, of which he might, at any moment, avail himself, after making the most of the credit thus acquired.

Judgment reversed, and venire facias de novo awarded.

Cited—4 How. 282; 1 McLean, 334.

[*LOCAL LAW.]

[*577]

CLARK ET AL. v. GRAHAM.

A power to convey lands must possess the same requisites, and observe the same solemnities, as are necessary in a deed directly conveying the lands.

A title to lands can only be acquired and lost according to the laws of the state in which they are situate.

The laws of Ohio require all deeds of land to be executed in the presence of two witnesses, and a deed executed in the presence of one witness only is void.

A parol exchange of lands, or parol evidence, that a conveyance should operate as an exchange, will not convey any estate or interest in lands.

Wheat. 6.

MR. JUSTICE TODD delivered the opinion of the court in this cause, which was submitted without argument:

This is an action of ejectment brought in the Circuit Court for the District of Ohio. At the trial, the plaintiff proved a title sufficient in law, prima facie, to maintain the action. The controversy turned altogether upon the title set up by the defendants. That title was as follows: A letter of attorney, purporting to be executed by John Graham, bearing date the 23d of September, 1805, authorizing Nathaniel Massie to sell all his estate, &c., in all his lands in Ohio. This power was executed in the presence of two witnesses in Richmond, in Virginia, and was there acknowledged by Graham before a notary public.

578*] *Nathaniel Massie, by a deed dated the 7th day of June, 1810, and executed by him in Ohio, in his own right, as well as attorney to John Graham, conveyed to one Jacob Smith, under whom the defendants claimed the land in controversy. This deed was executed in the presence of one witness only, and was duly acknowledged and recorded in the proper county in Ohio. The deed and letter of attorney so executed and acknowledged, were offered in evidence by the defendants, and were rejected by the court, upon the ground that they were not sufficient to convey lands according to the laws of Ohio. The defendants also offered in evidence a deed from Jacob Smith and wife, to the said Graham, dated the 7th of March, 1811, duly witnessed, acknowledged, and recorded, conveying a certain tract of land in Ohio, and offered farther to prove, that the tract of land so conveyed was given in exchange for and in consideration of the lands conveyed by the deed first mentioned to Smith. This evidence, also, was rejected by the court. A bill of exceptions was taken to these proceedings by the defendants; and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, upon which a judgment was entered for the plaintiff, and the present writ of error is brought by the defendants to revise that judgment.

The principal question before this court, is, whether the deed so executed by Massie was sufficient to convey lands by the laws of Ohio. If not, it was properly rejected; if otherwise, the judgment should be reversed. Two objections have been taken to the *execution [*579 of this deed; first, that the power of attorney was not duly acknowledged, as every deed is required to be in Ohio in order to convey lands; and if so, then the subsequent conveyance is void, for it is a general principle, that a power to convey lands must possess the same requisites, and observe the same solemnities, as are necessary in a deed directly conveying the lands. On this objection, which is apparently well founded, it is unnecessary to dwell, as another objection is fatal; that is, the deed of Massie was executed in the presence of one witness only, whereas the law of Ohio requires all deeds for land to be executed in the presence of two witnesses. It is perfectly clear, that no title to lands can be acquired or passed, unless according to the laws of the state in which they are situate. The act of Ohio regulating the conveyance of lands, passed on the 14th of February, 1805, provides, "that all deeds for the conveyance of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, situate, lying, and being within this state, shall be signed and sealed by the grantor in the presence of two witnesses, who shall subscribe the said deed or conveyance, attesting the acknowledgment of the signing and sealing thereof; and if executed within this state, shall be acknowledged by the party or parties, or proven by the subscribing witnesses, before a judge of the Court of Common Pleas, or a justice of the peace in any county in this state." Although there are no negative words in this clause, declaring all deeds for the conveyance of lands executed in any other manner to be void, yet this must be necessarily inferred from the *clause in the absence of all words [*580 indicating a different legislative intent, and in point of fact such is understood to be the uniform construction of the act in the courts of Ohio. The deed, then, in this case, not being executed according to the laws of the state, the evidence was properly rejected by the Circuit Court.

The remaining point, as to the rejection of the evidence of the deed from Smith to Graham, and the proof to show that it was given in exchange for the land in controversy, has not been much relied on in this court. It is, indeed, too plain for argument, that if a deed imperfectly executed would not convey any

NOTE.—An agent cannot bind his principal by deed, unless he has authority by deed to do so. The only exception to the rule that the authority to execute a deed must be by deed, is where the agent or attorney affixes the seal of the principal in his presence and by his direction.

Co. Litt. 52. a.; Harrison v. Jackson, 7 Term R. 209; 5 Mass. R. 40; 1 Comyn's Dig. tit. Attor., c. 1, c. 5; Ball v. Dunsterville, 4 Term R. 313; Mackay v. Bloodgood, 9 John. R. 285; Liverm. on Agency, 35; 2 Kent's Comm. 478; 7 Cow. 453; Stergity v. Eggington, 1 Holt, 141; Banorgue v. Hovey, 5 Mass. 14; Hanford v. McNair, 9 Wend. 54; Blood v. Goodrich, 9 Wend. 68; Combe's Case, 9 Co. Rep. 75, 77; Paley on Agency, by Lloyd, 157, 158; Damon v. Granby, 2 Pick. 345; Reed v. Van Ostrand, 1 Wend. 424; Blood v. Goodrich, 12 Wend. 525; Cooper v. Rankin, 5 Binn. 613; Gordon v. Bulkley, 14 Serg. & R. 331; Hunter v. Parker, 7 Mees. & W. 322, 343; Wills v. Evans, 20 Wend. 251; McNaughton v. Partridge, 11 Ohio R. (Stanton) 223; Cummings v. Cassily, 5 B. Munr. 75; Hibblewhite v. McMorine, 6 Mees. & W. 200, 214, 215; Skinner v. Dayton, 19 John. 512; Cady v. Shepherd, 11 Pick. 400; Story on Agency, s. 49-51.

The title to land can be acquired and lost only in the manner prescribed by the law of the place where such land is situate. Morris v. Marmor, 7 Pet. 554, 564; Society, &c., v. Wheeler, 2 Gall. 105, 138; U. S. v. Crosby, 7 Cranch, 115; Oakey v. Bennett, 11 How. 33; 14 Vesey, 537, 541; Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. 543. Title by devise can be acquired only under a will duly proved and recorded according to the law of the state in which the lands lie. McCormick v. Sullivant, 10 Wheat. 192; Darby v. Mayer, 10 Wheat. 465.
Wheat. 6.

Title to lands in Ohio cannot be devised by will, except under and in accordance with the laws of Ohio. Kerr v. Moon, 9 Wheat. 565.

This court has uniformly adopted the decisions of the state tribunals, respectively, in the construction of their statutes. This has been done in all cases where the decision of a state court has become a rule of property. Green v. Neal, 6 Peters, 291; Elmendorf v. Taylor, 10 Wheat. 152.

A power to sell, so far as it gives directions as to persons, time and mode of execution, must be strictly pursued. Waldron v. Chastaney, 2 Blatchf. 62; Williams v. Peyton, 4 Wheat. 77; Rule v. Parker, 1 Cooke, 365.

As to the mode of the execution of powers, see note to Williams v. Peyton, 4 Wheat. 77.

estate or interest in the land, a parol exchange, or parol proof of an intention to convey the same in exchange, cannot be permitted to have any such effect.

Judgment affirmed with costs.

Cited—6 Otto, 298, 635.

[LOCAL LAW.]

PRESTON'S HEIRS v. BOWMAR.

It is a universal rule, that course and distance yield to natural and ascertained objects.

But where these objects are wanting, and the course and distance cannot be reconciled, there is no universal rule that obliges us to prefer the one to the other.

Cases may exist in which the one or the other may be preferred according to the circumstances.

In a case of doubtful construction, the claim of the party in actual possession ought to be maintained, especially where it has been upheld by the decisions of the state tribunals.

581*] ERROR to the Circuit Court of Kentucky.

This was an ejectment brought in the court below, in which the lessor of the plaintiff claimed title under a patent, describing the survey as "beginning at an ash in the middle of a line of Glenn's land, and with it north 20 degrees, east 800 poles, crossing three branches to a hoop wood and sugar tree corner to Moffat's land, and with a line thereof north 70 degrees, west 100 poles, crossing the creek to a sugar tree south 33 degrees, west 820 poles, crossing three forks of the creek to two sugar trees, south 70 degrees, east 300 poles, to the beginning." The question arising upon the construction of this patent, is stated in the opinion of the court.

This cause was argued by Mr. B. Hardin for the plaintiff, and by Mr. Talbot for the defendant.

Mr. Justice STORY delivered the opinion of the court:

Whatever might be our opinion (and we wish to be understood as expressing none) if the question in this case were entirely new, it cannot be affirmed, that there has been such a clear mistake of construction as that justice and law require us to depart from the decision of the local tribunals. The question here is, whether the third and fourth lines of this patent (following the order of the lines as they are given in the patent) are to be continued upon the courses called for by the patent until they intersect, or whether the fourth line is to be extended from the beginning to the distance called for by 582*] the patent, and then the closing line is to be drawn, so as to strike the termination of the second and fourth lines at the patent distances. In the former case, the fourth line will be longer than the distance called for by the patent; in the latter, the third line will vary from the course called for by the patent. The counsel have stated, that the question resolves itself into this, whether the course shall yield to distance, or distance to the course. It may be laid down as an universal rule, that course and distance yield to natural and ascertained objects. But where these are wanting, and the course and distance cannot be reconciled, there is no universal rule that obliges us to prefer the one or the other. Cases may exist in which the one or the other may be preferred upon a minute examination of all the circumstances. In the present case, whichever construction is adopted, the plaintiffs will hold a larger portion of land than their patent calls for. We must consider that the construction of the patent is somewhat doubtful. That it is susceptible of two constructions, each of which has some reasons to support it. If it be doubtful, it would seem reasonable not to press the broadest construction against a party who is now in actual possession under a perfectly good legal title. That possession ought not to be ousted without a clear title in the other party, especially where it has been upheld by the state tribunals. This very case, between the same parties, has been already adjudicated in the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, and that court, upon full deliberation, decided *in favor [*583 of the defendant.<sup>1</sup> It would be a great mischief for the same title to be in perpetual litigation from the conflict of opinion between the courts of the state and the federal courts; and we, therefore, acquiesce in the opinion of the Court of Appeals, upon the ground that the point is one of local law, has been fully considered in that court, and is a construction which cannot be pronounced unreasonable, or founded in clear mistake.

Judgment affirmed.

Aff'g. 2 Bibb. 493.

Cited—9 How. 469; 5 Wall. 836; 23 Wall. 62; 2 Story, 291.

[CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.]

OTIS v. WALTER.

Under the embargo act of the 25th April, 1808, c. 170 [lxvi.], if a vessel, not actually arriving at her port of original destination, excites an honest suspicion in the mind of the collector, that her demand of a permit to land the cargo was merely colorable, this is not a termination of the voyage so as to preclude the right of detention.

Under what circumstances the collector has a right to land the cargo of the vessel thus detained.

THIS cause was argued by the Attorney-General for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. Webster and Mr. Wheaton for the defendant in error.<sup>2</sup>

**Mr. Justice LIVINGSTON* delivered [*584 the opinion of the court:

This is an action of trover brought by the defendant in error, against the plaintiff and others, in the Court of Common Pleas, held at Boston, within and for the county of Suffolk, to recover the value of eighty-six barrels of flour, and sundry other articles, in which judgment was recovered against the plaintiff in error, from which judgment there was an appeal to the Supreme Judicial Court, which is the highest court of law in the commonwealth of Massachusetts, in which judgment was rendered against the plaintiffs in error, for the sum of $2,488.75 and costs of suit, and in favor of the other defendants. On the judgment, the defendant below, William Otis, has prosecuted a writ of error to this court, under the 25th section of the judiciary act of the United States; and we are now to decide whether there was any error in the direction given by the judge before whom this action was tried, and which appears on the bill of exceptions attached to the record in this cause.

1.—Preston's heirs v. Bowmar, 2 Bibb. Rep. 493.

2.—They cited Otis v. Bacon, 7 Cranch, 596; Crowell v. M'Faddon, 8 Cranch, 98; Slocum v. Mayberry, 2 Wheat. Rep. 11.

The property in question had been seized by William Otis, a deputy-collector of the customs for the port and district of Barnstable, in the commonwealth of Massachusetts, under the 11th section of an act in addition to the act entitled, "An act laying an embargo on all ships and vessels in the ports and harbors of the United States;" and the several acts supplementary thereto, and for other purposes, passed the 25th April, 1808. On the bill of exceptions, the following facts appear: On the part 585* of the *plaintiff, Lynde Walter, it was proved, that the goods mentioned in the declaration were his property; that they were put on board of the sloop Ten Sisters, at Ipswich, in Massachusetts, bound for the port of Yarmouth; that it was agreed or understood between Walter and Hallett, who was master of the sloop, that the latter was to carry said goods to Barnstable, or to a place called Bass River, in Yarmouth, with orders to sell the same, provided he could obtain a certain price fixed by Walter, otherwise to deliver them to Freeman Baker, of Yarmouth; that said sloop, on the 19th November, 1808, cleared out at Ipswich to proceed to the port of Yarmouth as expressed in the clearance obtained from the collector at that place; that said sloop proceeded round Cape Cod to Hyannis, in the town and district of Barnstable, and the master applied to William Otis, a deputy-collector for that port and district, for a permit to land the cargo, which he refused to give, but ordered him not to discharge anything from the sloop, until he should have a permit so to do. That in a day or two afterwards, Otis came on board the sloop with four men, and seized sloop and cargo, and putting a pilot and crew on board, he sent her to Falmouth, in the district of Barnstable, where Otis had the cargo discharged and stored, in, and under a dwelling-house in Falmouth; the master forbidding Otis to meddle with the sloop or cargo. The master also exhibited to Otis his manifest, and swore to the correctness of the same.

On the part of Otis, it was proved, that he was deputy-collector for Barnstable; that on the 586* 29th November, *1808, he duly reported to the President of the United States, the detention of this sloop and her cargo, under and by virtue of the act above mentioned, which detention was confirmed and approved by the President, on the 8th of December, 1808. That the sloop, when seized, lay at anchor about half a mile from the shore or beach, which is in the town and port of Barnstable, near the centre thereof, six miles distant from Bass River, on which Freeman Baker's house and store are situated, and about five miles from the harbor of Yarmouth. That Freeman Baker's landing is situated above a quarter of a mile from the mouth of Bass River, on said river, in the town of Yarmouth, about six miles and an half by water, from where the sloop was seized, and lies to the eastward of Point Gammon. Hyannis, where the vessel was seized, is westward of Point Gammon, and in the towu of Barnstable. That the sloop when seized, had not arrived at the harbor of Yarmouth, but was lying in the port or harbor of Barnstable, about three miles from the harbor of Yarmouth, which lies east north-east from the port of Barnstable, and the sloop on her way from Ipswich to the place where she was seized, passed the place from which she was cleared, because the weather would not permit the master to get her either into the harbors of Bass River, or Gage wharf, and because he lived near Hyannis, and wished to see his family, and to lay his vessel in a safe place, and to land certain articles of bedding, &c., from the vessel, as it was his intention to strip the vessel when she arrived at Yarmouth. After the master arrived in *Hyannis [587 Bay, it was his intention to land his cargo at Gage wharf, which is in the town of Yarmouth, about three rods distant from the line of Barnstable, and about six miles and a half from the place where the sloop was anchored when seized. Between Yarmouth harbor or Bass River harbor, and Hyannis, or Barnstable harbor, where the vessel was seized, is a long point of land, called Point Gammon, extending several miles into the sea, and the distance by the nearest course of the ship channel, or deep water, from Bass River to Hyannis, is ten miles, and in going from Ipswich to Hyannis, the sloop passed Bass River harbor, or Yarmouth harbor and Point Gammon. The cargo, when stored by the collector, was some of it in bad and perishable condition, and was put in better order by coopering, &c., before being stored.

On this evidence the jury were charged, that under the clearance, the captain had a right to go to any part of Yarmouth with his vessel, notwithstanding it might have been the intention of him and the owner, that she should go to Bass River in that town; that if she had been carried beyond Bass River by force of the winds, and contrary to the master's intention, and came to anchor in Hyannis Bay, within the limits of the towu of Barnstable, for that cause, still, if the jury believed that, in consequence of this state of things, the captain had concluded to give up his intention of going to Bass River, and in lieu thereof, to carry his vessel to Gage's wharf, which is within the town of Yarmouth, on the same side of Point Gammon as Barnstable, and to all substantial *pur- [588 poses, the same harbor; and for this purpose, was waiting only for a proper opportunity to take the vessel into that wharf, they might justly and fairly determine that the voyage was terminated at the time Otis took possession of the vessel.

Whether this part of the charge were correct, will depend on the true construction of the 11th section of the act of Congress, under which this seizure was made, and which has already been referred to. Its language is, "that the collectors of the customs be, and they are hereby respectively authorized to detain any vessel ostensibly bound with a cargo to some other port of the United States, whenever, in their opinion, the intention is to violate or evade any of the provisions of the acts laying an embargo, until the decision of the President of the United States be had thereupon.

Of the ostensible destination of the Ten Sisters, at the time of her leaving Ipswich, there can be no doubt. This, from the manifest and clearance, was Yarmouth or Bass River. What better evidence, then, could Otis have of this fact, than that which he acquired from an inspection of these papers. If, then, such was her ostensible destination at the time of her sailing from Ipswich, and she had not arrived at Yarmouth or Bass River at the time of seizure, it would seem that he would have a right, under the provisions of this section, to detain the Ten Sisters, if in his opinion an intention existed of violating the embargo laws. It is not pretended, that this was not his real opinion, or that, for an honest exercise of such an opinion, he ought to be punished. There 589* is a confidence placed in the discretion of a collector, in cases of this kind, which may be abused, but which ought to protect him from loss when there is no reason to believe, as there is not in this case, that the detention proceeded from sinister motives, and not from a conscientious desire of discharging his duty. To subject a collector, or any public officer, to such an imputation, when acting under a discretion thus reposed in him, the circumstances ought to be such as almost to preclude the possibility of his having acted but from some unworthy or dishonorable motive. The court is much mistaken, if the facts in this case are such as to lead to this conclusion. The only question, then, is, whether the circumstances were such at the time of seizure, as to confer on the collector, or his deputy, the right of acting under the influence of an opinion, that such illegal intention existed. But it is supposed that the Ten Sisters had substantially terminated her voyage, or that being driven beyond Point Gammon into Hyannis Bay, she might lawfully terminate her voyage, and land her cargo at Barnstable. If a permit had been obtained to land her cargo at Barnstable, this argument would be entitled to much consideration; but when the master of a vessel, bound by her papers to one port, applies for a permit to land her cargo at another place, he cannot, in that way, deprive the collector of considering the vessel as still in itinere, to her original port of destination, and if he suspects such application to be a mere pretense to conceal some illicit object, he has as good a right to make the 590* seizure as if a permit had not been applied for. In the case of Otis v. Bacon, 7 Cranch, 596, a permit to land the cargo had been granted before any seizure took place, which was considered by the court as evidence of the termination of the voyage, and that she could not, thereafter, be considered as actually or ostensibly bound to any other port. Nor can the exhibition of the manifest, or swearing to its contents, be considered as equivalent to a permit to land the goods. It might, on the contrary, furnish evidence, as it did here, of an ostensible destination from one port of the United States to another, where she had not yet arrived, and in which case the collector had authority to act; nor was he bound to believe, merely from that circumstance, or from the then situation of the vessel, that such destination was abandoned. On a former trial of this cause, no clearance was produced, and the only testimony on this subject came out on the examination of the master, who declared that the vessel was bound to Yarmouth or Barnstable. Upon the whole, this court is of opinion, that the learned judge who tried the cause committed an error in telling the jury that they might fairly and justly determine the voyage was terminated at the time of seizure, if they believed the captain had given up his intention of going to Bass River, and had determined to land his cargo at Gage's wharf, which, though within the boundary of Yarmouth, is in fact in the harbor of Barnstable, and that he was waiting only for a proper opportunity to take the vessel into that wharf. Now, this was placing the termination of the voyage, not on the fact of its having *actually ended, but on an [*591] intention of the master, of which it was impossible the collector could know anything with certainty, who was to judge of his right and duty to make the seizure only from the papers of the vessel, and the situation in which she was found, which is admitted to have been short of her destined port. But if a secret intention of the master be permitted to be set up as a ground of decision, and this, too, contrary to the written evidence in the cause, on which alone a public officer can act with safety, he would always be exposed to risks which might deter him from acting altogether. The jury, therefore, should have been left to decide from the other evidence in the cause, independent of any secret, or even declared, intention in the mind of the master, whether the ostensible voyage was terminated or not; and it seems difficult to conceive how their decision could have been otherwise than favorable to Otis. In this part of the charge, therefore, the court is of opinion, there is error.

Another part of the court's construction to the jury is also complained of; it is, that in which the Chief Justice remarks, that the collector has no authority, without the consent of the master, or person having the care of the cargo, to unlade it from the vessel and store it. It is not known what influence this opinion had on the jury; but in the unqualified terms in which the collector's right to unlade the cargo is denied, this court does not concur. We have already decided, that with the consent of the master, or agent of the owner, the cargo may be landed, but it was not intended to say, that in no other case *could such landing [*592] and storing be justifiable. If it appear that the collector, during the detention of the vessel, shall, bona fide, think it will tend to the security and preservation of the property to unlade it, and will do it at his own expense, it is not perceived why he may not do so, but at the peril of such an act being regarded, per se, as a conversion of the property. At any rate, this consequence ought not to follow, unless it shall appear that the property was lost or injured in consequence of such landing. That not appearing to have been the case here, it is not necessary to say what effect such a circumstance could have had in this suit. All that it is intended to say here, is, that a landing for the purposes, and under the circumstances which appear on this record, is not of necessity, or in itself, a conversion.

Judgment reversed, and a venire facias de novo awarded.<sup>1</sup>

Cited—11 Wheat. 192.

593*] [*LOCAL LAW.]

GOSZLER

v.

THE CORPORATION OF GEORGETOWN.

The power given to the corporation of Georgetown, by the act of Maryland, of November, 1797, c. 56, to graduate the streets of that city, is a continuing power, and the corporation may from time to time alter the graduation so made.

The ordinance of May, 1799, by which the corporation of Georgetown first exercised the power of graduating the streets, is not in the nature of a compact, and may be altered by the corporation.

THIS cause was argued by Mr. Key for the appellant, and by Mr. Jones for the respondent.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia, on the following case:

In the year 1797, the legislature of Maryland, among certain additional powers given to the corporation of Georgetown, enacted, that they "shall have full power and authority to make such by-laws and ordinances for the graduation and leveling of the streets, lanes and alleys within the jurisdiction of the same town, as they may judge necessary for the benefit thereof." (Act of Nov., 1797, c. 56, sec. vi., p. 35.)

In pursuance of this authority, the corporation 594*] tion *passed an ordinance in May, 1799, for the graduation of certain streets—the first section of which appoints commissioners, and authorizes them "to make the level and graduation of the streets;" and the second is in these words:

"And be it ordained, that the said level and graduation, when signed by the said commissioners or a majority of them, and returned to the clerk of this corporation, shall be forever thereafter considered as the true graduation of the streets so graduated, and be binding upon this corporation, and all other persons whatever, and be forever thereafter regarded in making improvements upon said streets."

The plaintiff in error owned lots upon one of these streets, and made improvements thereon, according to the graduation made and returned to the clerk of the corporation, under the directions of this ordinance. In September, 1816, the corporation passed another ordinance, directing the level and graduation of this street to be altered; and the commissioners appointed, being about to cut down the street by the plaintiff's house, were enjoined from proceeding by a bill filed by the plaintiff against them and the corporation.

Upon the final hearing of this case, the Circuit Court dismissed the bill, being of opinion that the corporation had the power asserted in their answer, of altering the level and graduation of a street graduated under their former ordinance of May, 1799.

The counsel for the appellant contends, that the Circuit Court erred in dismissing his bill, because,

1st. The power to graduate streets as given by *the legislature of Maryland, was not [*595 a continuing power, but was completely executed by the ordinance of May, 1799, and has never been renewed.

2d. The ordinance of May, 1799, is in the nature of a compact, and is unalterable.

1. The language of the act certainly does not imply that the power it confers is exhausted in its first exercise. The power is not "to graduate and level the streets," or "to make a by-law for the graduation and leveling of the streets;" but "to make such by-laws and ordinances for the graduation and leveling of the streets, &c., within the jurisdiction of the same town, as they may judge necessary for the benefit thereof."

The act seems to contemplate a continuance of the power, and a repetition of the by-laws and ordinances, as the corporation "may judge necessary for the benefit of the town." It gives a power to legislate on the subject, and to pass more than one by-law and ordinance respecting it. Unless, then, there be in the nature of the operation something which forbids its repetition, the words of the act import no such prohibition.

There can be no doubt that the power of graduating and leveling the streets ought not to be capriciously exercised. Like all power, it is susceptible of abuse. But it is trusted to the inhabitants themselves, who elect the corporate body, and who may therefore be expected to consult the interests of the town.

Although this power may be oppressively repeated, the possession of it cannot be pronounced so improper *or so dangerous [*596 as to control, essentially, the words which confer it. The graduation and leveling of the streets, is not, necessarily, a single operation. There may be circumstances to produce a general desire to vary the graduation, to bring the streets more nearly on a level than was contemplated in the first ordinance; and, if this may occur, we cannot say that the legislature could not intend to give this power of varying the graduation, when the words they employ are adapted to the giving of it.

Two acts of Congress for amending the charter of Georgetown have been relied on. That passed in January, 1805, empowers the corporation "to open and extend, and regulate streets within the limits of the said town, provided they make to the person or persons who may be injured by such opening, extension, or regulation, just and adequate compensation, to be sustained by the verdict of an impartial jury, summoned," &c., "who shall proceed in like manner, as has been usual in other cases, where private property has been condemned for public use."

For the corporation, it has been contended, that the word "regulate" implies some operation on the streets themselves, or is entirely senseless; and if it implies any such operation, it must comprehend their graduation.

1.—Vide Ante, Vol. II., p. 18.
Wheat. 6.

The objection made by counsel to this argument, is, the improbability that the word "regulate" would be substituted for "graduate," if it were used in the same sense; and the words directing the duty of the jury. They are to "proceed in like manner as has been usual in other cases, where private property has 597"] *been condemned for public use." The word "regulate," then, it is said, is shown by this expression to be applicable only to those cases in which private property is condemned to public use, which is not done in graduating a street.

This construction is supposed to be strengthened by the act of 1809, which again empowers the corporation "to lay out, open, extend, and regulate streets, lanes and alleys," but confines the use of the jury for assessing damages to those sustained "by reason of opening or extending any street, lane or alley."

The opinion that the original power continues after its first exercise, renders it unnecessary to decide on the extent which may and ought to be given to the word "regulate."

2. The second point presents a question of some difficulty. One object of the ordinance probably was, to give as much validity to the graduation made by the commissioners as if it had been made under the direct superintendence of the corporate body. But it cannot be disguised, that a promise is held forth to all who should build on the graduated streets, that the graduation should be unalterable. The court, however, feels great difficulty in saying, that this ordinance can operate as a perpetual restraint on the corporation.

When a government enters into a contract, there is no doubt of its power to bind itself to any extent not prohibited by its constitution. A corporation can make such contracts only as are allowed by the acts of incorporation. The 598"] power of this body to make *a contract which should so operate as to bind its legislative capacities forever thereafter, and disable it from enacting a by-law, which the legislature enables it to enact, may well be questioned. We rather think that the corporation cannot abridge its own legislative power.

Decree affirmed.

Cited—11 Pet. 569; 10 How. 535; 16 How. 403; 7 Bank. Reg. 426; 2 Dill. 89; 7 Biss. 483.

[CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.]

M'CLUNG v. SILLIMAN.

A state court cannot issue a mandamus to an officer of the United States.

THIS cause was argued by Mr. Harper for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. Doddridge for the defendant.

Mr. Justice JOHNSON delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents no ordinary group of legal questions. They exhibit a striking specimen of the involutions which ingenuity may cast about legal rights, and an instance of the growing preteusions of some of the state courts over the exercise of the powers of the general government.

The plaintiff in error, who was also the plaintiff *below, supposes himself enti- [599 tled to a pre-emptive interest in a tract of land in the state of Ohio, and claims of the register of the land-office of the United States, the legal acts and documents upon which such rights are initiated. That officer refuses, under the idea that the right is already legally vested in another; and that he possesses, himself, no power over the subject in controversy. A mandamus is then moved for in the Circuit Court of the United States, and that court decides, that Congress has vested it with no such controlling power over the acts of the ministerial officers in the given case. The same application is then preferred to the state court for the county in which the subject in controversy is situated. The State Court sustains its own jurisdiction over the register of the land-office, but on a view of the merits of the claim, dismisses the motion.

From both these decisions appeals are made to this court, in form of a writ of error.

In the case of M'Intire v. Wood,<sup>1</sup> decided in this court, in 1813, the mandamus contended for was intended to perfect the same claim, and in point of fact the suit was between the same parties. The influence of that decision on these cases, is resisted, on the ground that it did not appear, in that case, that the controversy was between parties who, under the description of person, were entitled to maintain suits in the courts of the United States; whereas, the averments in the present cases, show that the parties litigant are citizens of different states, and, *therefore, competent parties in the Cir- [600 cuit Court. But we think it perfectly clear, from an examination of the decision alluded to, that it was wholly uninfluenced by any considerations drawn from the want of personal attributes of the parties. The case came up on a division of opinion, and the single question stated is, "whether that court had power to issue a writ of mandamus to the register of a land-office in Ohio, commanding him to issue a final certificate of purchase to the plaintiff for certain lands in the state."

Both the argument of counsel, and the opinion of the court, distinctly show, that the power to issue the mandamus in that case, was contended for as incident to the judicial powers of the United States. And the reply of the court is, that though, argumenti gratia, it be admitted that this controlling power over its ministerial officers would follow from vesting in its courts the whole judicial power of the United States, the argument fails here, since the legislature has only made a partial delegation of its judicial powers to the circuit courts; that if the inference be admitted as far as the judicial power of the court actually extends, still, cases arising under the laws of the United States are not, per se, among the cases comprised within the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court, under the provisions of the 11th section; jurisdiction being in such cases reserved to the Supreme Court, under the 25th section, by way of appeal from the decisions of the state courts.

1.—7 Cranch, 504.

There is, then, no just inference to be drawn from the decision in the case of M'Intire v. Wood, in favor *of a case in which the circuit courts of the United States are vested with jurisdiction under the 11th section. The idea is in opposition to the express words of the court, in response to the question stated, which are, "that the Circuit Court did not possess the power to issue the mandamus moved for."

It is now contended, that as the parties to this controversy are competent to sue under the 11th section, being citizens of different states, that this is a case within the provisions of the 14th section, and the Circuit Court was vested with power to issue this writ, under the description of a "writ not specially provided for by statute," but "necessary for the exercise of its jurisdiction." The case certainly does present one of those instances of equivocal language, in which the proposition, though true in the abstract, is in its application to the subject glaringly incorrect. It cannot be denied, that the exercise of this power is necessary to the exercise of jurisdiction in the court below; but why is it necessary? Not because that court possesses jurisdiction, but because it does not possess it. It must exercise this power, and compel the emanation of the legal document, or the execution of the legal act by the register of the land-office, or the party cannot sue.

The 14th section of the act under consideration, could only have been intended to vest the power now contended for, in cases where the jurisdiction already exists, and not where it is 602* to be courted or *acquired, by means of the writ proposed to be sued out. Such was the case brought up from Louisiana, in which the judge refused to proceed to judgment, by which act, the plaintiff must have lost his remedy below, and this court have been deprived of its appellate control over the question of right.

The remaining questions bear a striking analogy to that already disposed of.

The State Court having decided in favor of its own jurisdiction over the register, the appellant, so far, had nothing to complain of. It is only where a state court decides against the claim set up under the laws of the United States, that appellate jurisdiction is given from the state decisions. But in the next step of his progress, he was not equally fortunate. The state court rejected his application on the merits of his claim, and appear to have decided that an entire section might be divided into fractions, by the river Muskingum, in a legal sense. Of this he now complains, and contends that the decision is contrary to the laws of the United States.

From this state of facts, the following embarrassment arises: The United States officer, the defendant, can have no inducement to contest a jurisdiction that has given judgment in his favor; and the plaintiff in error must sustain its jurisdiction, or relinquish all claim to the relief sought for through its agency. And thus this court, with its eyes open to the defect in the jurisdiction of the court below, is called upon to take cognizance of the merits of the question, Wheat. 6.

both parties being thus equally interested in sustaining the jurisdiction asserted by that court.

*Let the course which this court [*603 ought to pursue, be tested by consequences. The alternative is to give judgment for or against the plaintiff. If it be given for him, this court must invoke that court to issue the writ demanded, or pursuing the alternative given by the 25th section, it must itself proceed to execute the judgment which that court ought to have given. Or, in other words, to issue the writ of mandamus, in a case to which it is obvious that neither the jurisdiction of that court, nor this, extends.

No argument can resist such an obvious deductio in absurdum.

It is not the first time that this court has encountered similar difficulties, in its advance to questions brought up from other tribunals. It has avoided them by deciding that it is not bound to encounter phantoms. The party who proposes to avail himself of a defective jurisdiction, has nothing to complain of, if he is left to take the consequences. His antagonist might have had cause to complain—he can have none. And, notwithstanding express evidence of the contrary, this court feels itself sanctioned, in referring the decision of the State Court, in this case, to the ground on which it ought to have been made, instead of that on which it appears to have been made. The question before an appellate court is, was the judgment correct, not the ground on which the judgment professes to proceed.

Whether a state court generally possesses a power to issue writs of mandamus, or what modifications of its powers may be imposed on it, by the laws which constitute it, it is correctly argued, that this court *cannot be called [*604 upon to decide. But when the exercise of that power is extended to officers commissioned by the United States, it is immaterial under what law that authority be asserted, the controlling power of this court may be asserted on the subject, under the description of an exemption claimed by the officer over whom it is exercised.

It is not easy to conceive on what legal ground a state tribunal can, in any instance, exercise the power of issuing a mandamus to the register of a land-office. The United States have not thought proper to delegate that power to their own courts. But when in the cases of Marbury v. Madison, and that of M'Intire v. Wood, this court decided against the exercise of that power, the idea never presented itself to anyone, that it was not within the scope of the judicial powers of the United States, although not vested by law, in the courts of the general government. And no one will seriously contend, it is presumed, that it is among the reserved powers of the states, because not communicated by law to the courts of the United States.

There is but one shadow of a ground on which such a power can be contended for, which is, the general rights of legislation which the states possess over the soil within their respective territories. It is not now necessary to consider that power, as to the soil reserved to the United States, in the states respectively. The question in this case is, as to the power of the state courts over the officers of the general government, employed in disposing of that land, under the laws passed for that purpose. And 605*] here it is obvious that *he is to be regarded either as an officer of that government, or as its private agent. In the one capacity or the other, his conduct can only be controlled by the power that created him; since, whatever doubts have from time to time been suggested, as to the supremacy of the United States, in its legislative, judicial, or executive powers, no one has ever contested its supreme right to dispose of its own property in its own way. And when we find it withholding from its own courts, the exercise of this controlling power over its ministerial officers, employed in the appropriation of its lands, the inference clearly is, that all violations of private right, resulting from the acts of such officers, should be the subject of actions for damages, or to recover the specific property (according to circumstances), in courts of competent jurisdiction. That is, that parties should be referred to the ordinary mode of obtaining justice, instead of resorting to the extraordinary and unprecedented mode of trying such questions on a motion for a mandamus.

JUDGMENT.—This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record of the Supreme Court of the state of Ohio, for Muskingum county, and was argued by counsel. On consideration whereof, it is adjudged and ordered, that the judgment of the said Supreme Court of the state of Ohio, be, and the same is hereby affirmed, with costs; it being the opinion of this court, that the said Supreme Court of the state of Ohio, had no authority to issue a mandamus in this case.

S. C. 3 Pet. 270; 2 Wheat. 369.

Cited—5 Pet. 202, 204, 206, 207, 210; 12 Pet. 615, 624, 649, 652, 720; 14 Pet. 601, 606; 3 Wall. 239; 6 Wall. 189, 198, 537; 13 Wall. 249; 19 Wall. 660; 12 Otto, 393; Bald. 403, 406; 5 Cranch, C. C. 172, 243, 247, 250, 255; 3 Blatchf. 169; 7 Blatchf. 433; 1 Paine, 456; 1 Bliss. 12; 7 Bank. Reg. 426; Gilp. 39; 3 Wood. & M. 328, 332; 3 Cliff. 61.

606***]

[*LOCAL LAW.]

THE MUTUAL ASSURANCE SOCIETY v.

FAXON ET AL.

Under the laws in relation to the Mutual Assurance Society of Virginia, property offered for insurance, on which the premium has not been paid, and which is sold without notice, is not liable for the premium in the hands of the vendee.

MR. JUSTICE JOHNSON delivered the opinion of the court:

This case first came up on a difference of opinion certified from the Circuit Court of Alexandria, but the writ of error was dismissed, because that court could not, in law, or the nature of things, certify such a difference to this court.

It has since passed to a final decree, and although the sum on the record is small, a special permission to appeal has been granted on cause shown; it being a case affecting many others similarly situated.

The question is, whether property offered for insurance, in which the premium has not been paid, and which has been sold without notice, remains liable for the premium in the hands of the vendee.

The case of the Mutual Assurance Society v. Executors of Watts, decided in February, 1816,<sup>1</sup> in this court, is relied on as authority for maintaining the affirmative.

It is to be regretted, that the case referred to had *not been more fully reported. As [*607 it is not preceded by any statement of facts, abstracts of the history and laws of this society, or the arguments of counsel, the insulated, unexplained opinion of the court, as it is printed, must be ever unintelligible to all descriptions of readers, except those whose professional duties lead them to the study of the novel and extensive institution whose interests are involved in it.

But there is enough exhibited to show that it affords no precedent for the claim set up in this case. It is true, that the court occasionally uses the term premium, when speaking of the quota; but in every instance it will be found to be used when reasoning upon the quota as the purchase money, in part of the right of the insured to compensation, which, by analogy to other cases of insurance, is in that sense denominated a premium.

But there exists no analogy under the laws of the company between the liability of property insured for a premium and a quota.

The first is the sum paid down before the contract is entered into; the second, the occasional contribution exacted of individuals to make up the losses from time to time sustained. The 6th section of the act of December 22d, 1794, gives an express lien for the quota, and takes no notice of the premium, but as the rule for graduating the respective quotas. In the case alluded to, it was decided, that the lien thus created, had its origin in contract, although enforced by statute, and continued a mortgage on the premises, until vacated according to the provisions of the several laws which regulated the company.

*But the very reasons upon which [*608 that decision was placed, are fatal to the pretensions set up in this.

There is no express lien created in any of the laws of the company, and there are no provisions in any of those laws from which it could be inferred (if it were possible ever to infer a lien), but those which authorize a sale of land to satisfy the premium. But a right to sell the land is completely satisfied by subjecting it to such sale while in the hands of the first holder, and there are two of the by-laws of the company which expressly negative every pretense for carrying it any farther. The first is the 8th section, 4th article, of the act of January 29th, 1805, which requires immediate payment of the premium upon the acceptance of the declaration, and the second is, the 6th section of the 5th article, which declares, that insurance shall not commence until the premium be paid.

Decree affirmed.

1.—1 Wheat. Rep. 279.

Wheat 6.

APPENDIX.

3*]

[*NOTE I.]

TO THE CASE OF THE AMIABLE ISABELLA, ante, p. 1.

Articles of the Spanish Treaty of 1795, referred to in the Argument of the Case.

Art. 15. It shall be lawful for all and singular the subjects of His Catholic Majesty, and the citizens, people, and inhabitants of the said United States, to sail with their ships, with all manner of liberty and security, no distinction being made who are the proprietors of the merchandises laden thereon, from any port to the places of those who now are, or hereafter shall be, at enmity with His Catholic Majesty or the United States. It shall be likewise lawful for the subjects and inhabitants aforesaid, to sail with the ships and merchandises aforementioned, and to trade with the same liberty and security from the places, ports, and havens, 4*] *of those who are enemies of both, or either party, without any opposition or disturbance whatsoever, not only directly from the places of the enemy aforementioned, to neutral places, but also from one place belonging to an enemy, to another place belonging to an enemy, whether they be under the jurisdiction of the same prince or under several; and it is hereby stipulated, that free ships shall also give freedom to goods, and that everything shall be deemed free and exempt which shall be found on board the ships belonging to the subjects of either of the contracting parties, although the whole lading, or any part thereof, should appertain to the enemies of either; contraband goods being always excepted. It is also agreed, that the same liberty be extended to persons who are on board a free ship, so that, although they be enemies to either party, they shall not be made prisoners or taken out of that free ship, unless they are soldiers, and in actual service of the enemies.

5*] *Art. 16. This liberty of navigation and commerce shall extend to all kinds of merchandises, excepting those only which are distinguished by the name of contraband; and under this name of contraband, or prohibited goods, shall be comprehended, arms, great guns, bombs with the fuses, and the other things belonging to them, cannon-ball, gunpowder, matches, pikes, swords, lances, spears, halberds, mortars, petards, grenades, saltpetre, muskets, musket-ball, bucklers, helmets, breastplates, coats of mail, and the like kinds of arms, proper for arming soldiers; musket-rests, belts, horses, with their furniture, and all other warlike instruments whatever. These merchandises which follow, Wheat. 6.

Art. 15. Se permitirá á todos y á cada uno de los subditos de S. M. Católica, y á los ciudadanos pueblos y habitantes de dichos Estados, que puedan navegar con sus embarcaciones con toda libertad y seguridad sin que haya la menor excepcion por este respeto, aunque los propietarios de las mercaderias cargadas en las referidas embarcaciones vengan del puerto que quieran, y las traygan destinadas á qualquiera plaza de una potencia actualmente enemiga ó que lo sea despues, asi de S. M. Católica como de los Estados Unidos. Se permitirá igualmente a los subditos y habitantes mencionados navegar con sus buques y mercaderias, y frequentar con igual libertad y seguridad las plazas y puertos de las potencias enemigas de las partes contratantes, ó de una de ellas sin oposicion ú obstaculo, y de comerciar no solo desde los puertos de dicho enemigo á un puerto neutro directamente, si no tambien desde uno enemigo á otro tal, bien se encuentre baxo su jurisdiccion; ó baxo la de muchos; y se estipula tambien por el presente tratado que los buques libres aseguraran igualmente la libertad de las mercaderias, y que se juzgarán libres todos los efectos que se hallasen á bordo de los buques que perteneciesen á los subditos de una de las partes contratantes, aun quando el cargamento por entero ó parte de el fuese de los enemigos de una de las dos, bien entendido sin embargo que el contrabando se exceptua siempre. Se ha convenido asi mismo que la propia libertad gozaran los sugetos que pudiesen encontrarse á bordo del buque libre, aun quando fuesen enemigos de una de las dos partes contratantes; y por lo tanto no se podrá hacerlos prisioneros ni separarlos de dichos buques á menos que no tengan la qualidad de militares, y esto hallandose en aquella sazón empleados en el servicio del enemigo.

Art. 16. Esta libertad de navegacion y de comercio debe extenderse á toda especie de mercaderias exceptuando solo las que se comprehenden baxo el nombre de contrabando, ó de mercaderias prohibidas, quales son las armas, cañones, bombas con sus mechas, y demas cosas pertenecientes á lo mismo, balas, polvora, mechas, picas, espadas, lanzas, dardos, alabardas, morteros, petardos, granadas, salitre, fusiles, balas, escudos, casquetes, corazas, cotas de malla, y otras armas de esta especie propias para armar á los soldados, portamosquetes, bandoleras, caballos con sus armas, y otros instrumentos de guerra sean los que fueren. Pero los generos y mercaderias que se nombrarán shall not be reckoned among contraband or prohibited goods; that is to say, all sorts of cloths, and all other manufactures woven of any wool, flax, silk, cotton, or any other materials whatever; all kinds of wearing apparel, together with all species whereof they are used to be made; gold 6*] and silver, as well coined *as uncoined; tin, iron, latten, copper, brass, coals; as, also, wheat, barley and oats, and any other kind of corn and pulse; tobacco, and likewise all manner of spices, salted and smoked flesh, salted fish, cheese and butter, beer, oils, wines, sugars, and all sorts of salts; and, in general, all provisions which serve for the sustenance of life; furthermore, all kinds of cotton, hemp, flax, tar, pitch, ropes, cables, sails, sail cloths, anchors, and any parts of anchors, also ships' masts, planks, and wood of all kind, and all other things proper either for building or repairing ships, and all other goods whatever, which have not been worked into the form of any instrument prepared for war, by land or by sea, shall not be reputed contraband; much less, such as have been already wrought and made up for any other use; all which shall be wholly reckoned among free goods; as likewise, all other merchandises and things which are not comprehended and particularly mentioned in the foregoing enumeration of contraband goods; so that they may be transported and carried in 7*] the freest manner by the *subjects of both parties, even to places belonging to an enemy, such towns or places being only excepted as are at that time besieged, blocked up, or invested. And, except the cases in which any ship of war, or squadron, shall, in consequence of storms or other accidents at sea, be under the necessity of taking the cargo of any trading vessel or vessels, in which case they may stop the said vessel or vessels, and furnish themselves with necessaries, giving a receipt, in order that the power to whom the said ship of war belongs, may pay for the articles so taken according to the price thereof, at the port to which they may appear to have been destined by the ship's papers; and the two contracting parties engage, that the vessels shall not be detained longer than may be absolutely necessary for their said ships to supply themselves with necessaries. That they will immediately pay the value of the receipts, and indemnify the proprietor for all losses which he may have sustained in consequence of such transaction.

Art. 17. To the end that all manner of dissensions and quarrels may be avoided and 8*] *prevented on one side and the other, it is agreed, that in case either of the parties hereto should be engaged in war, the ships and vessels belonging to the subjects or people of the other party, must be furnished with sea-letters or passports, expressing the name, property, and bulk of the ship, as also the name and place of habitation of the master or commander of the said ship, that it may appear thereby, that the ship really and truly belongs to the subjects of one of the parties; which passport shall be made out and granted according to the form annexed to this treaty. They shall likewise be recalled every year, that is, if the ship happens to return home within the space of a year.

It is likewise agreed, that such ships being laden, are to be provided, not only with passports, as above mentioned, but also with cer-ahora, no se comprenderán entre los de contrabando ó cosas prohibidas, á saber: toda especie de paños y qualesquiera otras telas de lana, lino, seda, algodón, ú otras qualesquiera materias, toda especie de vestidos con las telas de que se acostumbra hacer, el oro y la plata labrada en moneda ó no, el estaño, hierro, laton, cobre, bronce, carbon, del mismo modo que la cevada, el trigo, la avena, y qualquiera otro genero de legumbres. El tabaco y toda la especieria, carne salada y ahumada, pescado salado, queso y manteca, cerbeza, aceytes, vinos, azucar, y toda especie de sal, y en general todo genero de provisiones que sirven para el sustento de la vida. Ademas toda especie de algodon, cañamo, lino, alquitran, pez, cuerdas, cables, velas, telas para velas, ancoras, y partes de que se componen. Mastiles, tablas, maderas de todas especies, y qualesquiera otras cosas que sirvan para la construccion y reparacion de los buques, y otras qualesquiera materias que no tienen la forma de un instrumento preparado para la guerra por tierra ó por mar, no serán reputadas de contrabando, y menos las que están ya preparadas para otros usos. Todas las cosas que se acaban de nombrar deben ser comprendidas entre las mercaderias libres, lo mismo que todas las demas mercaderias y efectos que no estan comprendidos y nombrados expresamente en la enumeracion de los generos de contrabando, de manera que podran ser transportados y conducidos con la mayor libertad por los subditos de las dos partes contratantes á las plazas enemigas, exceptuando sin embargo las que se hallasen en la actualidad sitiadas, bloqueadas, ó embestidas, y los casos en que algun buque de guerra ó esquadra que por efecto de averia, ú otras causas se halle en necesidad de tomar los efectos que conduzca el buque ó buques de comercio, pues en tal caso podra detenerlos para aprovisionarse, y dar un recibo para que la potencia cuyo sea el buque que tome los efectos los pague segun el valor que tendrian en el puerto adonde se dirigiese el propietario, segun lo expresen sus cartas de navegacion: obligandose las dos partes contratantes á no detener los buques mas de lo que sea absolutamente necesario para aprovisionarse, pagar inmediatamente los recibos, y indemnizar todos los daños que sufra el propietario á consecuencia de semejante suceso.

Art. 17. A fin de evitar entre ambas partes toda especie de disputas y quejas, se ha convenido que en el caso de que una de las dos potencias se hallase empeñada en una guerra, los buques y bastimentos pertenecientes á los subditos ó pueblos de la otra, deberán llevar consigo patentes de mar ó pasaportes que expresen el nombre, la propiedad, y el porte del buque, como tambien el nombre y morada de su dueño y comandante de dicho buque, para que de este modo conste que pertenece real y verdaderamente á los subditos de una de las dos partes contratantes; y que dichos pasaportes deberán expedirse segun el modelo adjunto al presente tratado. Todos los años deberán renovarse estos pasaportes en el caso de que el buque vuelva á su pais en el espacio de un año.

Igualmente se ha convenido en que los buques mencionados arriba, si estuviesen cargados, deberan llevar no solo los pasaportes sino tamtificates, containing the several particulars of the cargo, the place whence the ship sailed, that so it may be known whether any forbidden or contraband goods be on board the same; which certificates shall be made out by the officers of the place whence the ship sailed, in the 9*] accustomed form; and if any *one shall think it fit or advisable to express in the said certificates the person to whom the goods on board belong, he may freely do so; without which requisites they may be sent to one of the ports of the other contracting party, and adjudged by the competent tribunal, according to what is above set forth, that all the circumstances of this omission having been well examined, they shall be adjudged to be legal prizes, unless they shall give legal satisfaction of their property by testimony entirely equivalent.

Art. 18. If the ships of the said subjects, people, or inhabitants, of either of the parties, shall be met with, either sailing along the coasts or on the high seas, by any ship of war of the other, or by any privateer, the said ship of war or privateer, for the avoiding of any disorder, shall remain out of cannonshot, and may send their boats aboard the merchant ship, which they shall so meet with, and may enter her to the number of two or three men only, to whom the master or commander of such ship or vessel shall exhibit his passports, concerning the property 10*] of the ship, made out according to the form inserted in this present treaty, and the ship, when she shall have showed such passport, shall be free and at liberty to pursue her voyage, so as it shall not be lawful to molest or give her chase in any manner, or force her to quit her intended course.

bien certificados que contengan el pormenor del cargamento, el lugar de donde ha salido el buque, y la declaracion de las mercaderias de contrabando que pudiesen hallarse á bordo; cuyos certificados deberan expedirse en la forma acostumbrada por los oficiales empleados en el lugar de donde el navio se hiciese a la vela, y si se juzgase util y prudente expresar en dichos pasaportes la persona propietaria de las mercaderias se podra hacer libremente, sin cuyos requisitos será conducido á uno de los puertos de la potencia respectiva, y juzgado por el tribunal competente, con arreglo á lo arriba dicho, para que exâminadas dien las circunstancias de su falta, sea condenado por de buena presa si no satisfaciese legalmente con los testimonios equivalentes en un, todo.

Art. 18. Quando un buque perteneciente á los dichos subditos, pueblos y habitantes de una de las dos partes fuese encontrado navegando á lo largo de la costa ó en plena mar por un buque de guerra de la otra ó por un corsario, dicho buque de guerra ó corsario, á fin de evitar todo desorden, se mantendrá fuera del tiro de cañon, y podrá enviar su chalupa á bordo del buque mercante, hacer entrar en el dos ó tres hombres á los quales enseñara el patron ó comandante del buque su pasaporte y demas documentos, que deberan ser conformes á lo prevenido en el presente tratado, y probara la propiedad del buque; y despues de haber exhibido semejante pasaporte y documentos, se les dejará seguir libremente su viage, sin que les sea lícito el molestarle ni procurar de modo algune darle caza, u obligarle á dejar el rumbo que seguia.

The treaty with Spain of 1819 contains the following article :

Art. 12. The treaty of limits and navigation, of 1795, remains confirmed in all, and each one of its articles, excepting the 2d, 3d, 4th, 21st, and the second clause of the 22d article, which, having been altered by this treaty, or having received their entire execution, are no longer valid.

With respect to the 15th article of the same treaty of friendship, limits, and navigation, of 1795, in which it is stipulated, that the flag shall cover the property, the two high contracting parties agree that this shall be so understood with respect to those powers who recognize this principle; but if either of the two contracting parties shall be at war with a third party, and 11*] the other neutral, the flag of the *neutral shall cover the property of enemies, whose government acknowledge this principle, and not of others.

Art. 12. El tratado de limites y navegacion de 1795, queda confirmado en todos y cada uno de sus articulos, excepto los articulos 2, 3, 4, 21, y la segunda clausula del 22, que habiendo sido alterados, por este tratado, ó cumplidos enteramente no pueden tener valor alguno.

Con respecto al articulo 15 del mismo tratado de amistad, limites y navegacion de 1795 en que se estipula, que la bandera cubre la propiedad, han convenido las dos altas partes contratantes en que esto se entienda así con respecto á aquellas potencias que reconozcan este principio; pero que, si una de las dos partes contratantes estuviere en guerra con una tercera, y la otra neutral, la bandera de esta neutral cubrirá la propiedad de los enemigos, cuyo gobierno reconozca este principio, y no de otros.

Articles of the treaty with Algiers of 1795, referred to in the above case.

Art. 3. The vessels of both nations shall pass each other without any impediment or molestation; and all goods, moneys, or passengers, of whatsoever nation, that may be on board of the vessels belonging to either party, shall be considered as inviolable, and shall be allowed to pass unmolested.

Art. 4. All ships of war belonging to this Wheat. 6.

regency, on meeting with merchant vessels belonging to citizens of the United States, shall be allowed to visit them with two persons only beside the rowers; these two only permitted to go on board said vessel, without obtaining express leave from the commander of said vessel, who shall compare the passport, and immediately permit said vessel to proceed on her voyage.

age unmolested. All ships of war belonging to the United States of North America, on meeting with an Algerine cruiser, and shall have seen her passport and certificate from the consul of the United States of North America, resident in this regency, shall be permitted to proceed on her cruise unmolested; no passport to be issued to any ships but such as are absolutely the property of citizens of the United States; and eighteen mouths shall be the term allowed for furnishing the ships of the United States with passports.

12*]

[*NOTE II.]

TO THE CASE OF THE AMIABLE ISABELLA.

In some of the cases which were adjudged by the council of prizes at Paris, during the late European wars, several questions occurred respecting the form and effect of passports, analogous to those which were discussed in the case of The Isabella, in the text. Among the points, determined by that tribunal, in the case alluded to, were the following: (1) That a mere certificate that a ship was built at Stettin in a certain year, and was the property of Prussians, was not (properly speaking) a passport. (2) That the authority by which a passport shall be issued is regulated by the law and usage of the country where it is issued, and that it is unnecessary that it should be granted or signed by the supreme magistrate of the state, unless so required by the local usage. (3) That a passport is not valid for more than one voyage, without being renewed. (4) That under the treaty of 1778, between the United States and France, it was not necessary to express the name of the owner of the ship in the passport, but it was sufficient to state, generally, that it was French or American property. (5) That the signature of the public officer, and of the ship-owner, to the oath annexed to the passport provided by the French treaty of 1788, is essential to the validity of the passport. (6) That the passport provided by the treaties of 1778 and 1800, which is substantially the same in this respect, with the Spanish treaty of 1795 (except that the form of passport was actually annexed to the French treaties), is not conclusive evidence of the proprietary interest of the ship; but if shown by other papers found on board, or the depositions of the captured persons, to have been obtained by fraud and perjury, it will not give the protection intended by the treaty, but the case must be adjudged by the ordinary rules of the prize court.

13*] *In the case of The Carolina Wilhelmina, it appears that the ship had a certificate from the "First Inspector, Ordinary Inspector, and Controller of the Chamber of Imposts in Pomerania," that the ship was built at Stettin in 1796, and was the property of Prussians, which it was alleged by the captors was not sufficient to satisfy the requisitions of the French ordinances, which provide that the congé or passport of a neutral vessel shall express the name of the master, that of the ship, her bulk and lading, and the place of her departure and destination, and shall be renewed every voyage. M. Portalis in his conclusions in this case, speaking of the document in question, says:

"Il est impossible de reconnaître dans cette acte la nature et les caractères d'un véritable passe-port.

"On objecte que, dans la Poméranie Prussienne, on est dans l'usage constant de naviguer sans autre précaution, et qu'il faut respecter les usages de chaque pays.

"Mais distinguons les cas. Je sais que dans la Baltique, mer close, mare clausum, on voyage sans passe-port; et on le peut sans danger. Faut-il en conclure que les navires qui sortent de cette mer pour aller ailleurs, peuvent se passer d'un congé ou passe-port proprement dit? La pratique de toutes les nations qui ont des ports sur la mer Baltique, suppose le contraire. Tous les navires Danois, Suédois, qui voyagent dans nos mers ou dans les mers générales, se munissent d'un vrai passe-port. Pour la Prusse, nous pouvons citer l'art. 2 d'un règlement de S. M. Prussienne du 18 Septembre, 1796, pour ses consuls généraux, consuls, agents et vice-consuls dans les ports étrangers. Il porte: 'Le consul doit veiller d'abord à ce que, conformément aux règlements qui, à différentes reprises, sont émanés dans nos chambres, les capitaines, &c., se présentent au consulat, y produisent leurs passe-ports, &c. Il s'assurera de l'authenticité des passe-ports qui lui ont été produits, et au besoin les visera gratis.' Or, l'obligation de produire des passe-ports présupposant nécessairement l'obligation d'en avoir, on doit conclure que les Capitaines Poméranien ne se conforment pas aux règlements de leur prince, lorsqu'ils naviguent sans passe-port hors de la Baltique."

*After some further observations to the [*14 same purpose, he proceeds: "Il n'est sans doute pas nécessaire que les formes accidentelles d'un acte soient les mêmes partout; il est au contraire certain que, partout elles peuvent être différentes. De là c'est un principe que la forme de tous les actes quelqueconque dépend des coutumes reçues dans les lieux où ces actes sont faits; locus regit actum. Il y a des maximes générales, parcequ'il y a une raison commune.

Mais les formes varient selon les lieux et les temps, parce qu'elles n'appartiennent point à la raison universelle, et qu'elles ne tiennent point à la raison universelle, et qu'elles ne tiennent qu'aux pratiques ou aux mœurs particulières de chaque peuple.

"Ainsi, dans certains pays, les passe-ports sont expédiés par le premier magistrat de l'Etat; dans d'autres, ils le sont par un magistrat moins élevé en dignité. Ici, on met plus de solennité dans la rédaction ou dans l'être extérieur de l'acte; ailleurs, on en met moins. Il suffit, dans tous les cas, que le passe-port expédié, le soit par l'autorité compétente et dans la forme usitée: car c'est une maxime du droit des gens, que ce qui est authentique dans un pays, l'est pour tous. La juridiction d'un Etat ne peut s'étendre au delà de son territoire; mais le caractère public qu'un Etat attache ou donne à la forme des actes qui se font en son nom par ses officiers, ne peut être méconnu nulle part: s'il en était autrement, toute communication réglée entre les peuples deviendrait impossible. De là, c'est une maxime incontestable, que tout acte authentique, et reconnu tel dans le pays où il a été rédigé, fait preuve parini nous dans les affaires politiques et civiles. On a senti qu'il était nécessaire, pour les relations qui existent dans les divers gouvernemens, de communiquer aux formes particulières des actes faits dans chaque pays, la force de la foi publique.

"Conséquemment, s'il apparaissait, dans les circonstances présentes, un véritable passe-port, et s'il ne s'agissait pas de confronter les formes accidentelles et extrinsèques de cette pièce avec les réglemens du pays dans lequel elle a été expédiée, toute difficulté serait levée, si l'acte se trouvait conforme à ces réglemens. Mais nous ne sommes pas dans une telle hypothèse. Il ne s'agit de savoir si la pièce présentée comme [15*] *passe-port, est revêtue des formes usitées en Prusse; il s'agit d'examiner si cette pièce est un vrai passe-port. La question n'est pas uniquement relative à la forme de l'acte; elle frappe tout entière sur le fond et la substance de l'acte même.

"Il est évident pour les hommes de tous les pays, qu'un simple certificat de construction et de propriété Prussienne, n'est point un passe-port: cela résulte de la nature et de l'essence même des choses. Si un tel certificat peut suffire pour voyager dans la Baltique, ce n'est pas parce qu'il équivaut à un passe-port, mais parce qu'on peut voyager dans la Baltique sans passe-port. Aussi nous trouvons à bord des navires Prussiens qui sortent de la Baltique, des passe-ports véritables et proprement dits, comme nous en trouvons sur tous les navires Danois et Suédois qui sortent de cette mer close pour naviguer ailleurs.

"Il serait du plus grand danger de transporter hors de la Baltique, des usages particuliers dont on pourrait si facilement abuser contre la sûreté des autres nations. Nous voyons que les puissances du Nord ont toujours respecté, à cet égard, le droit commun de tous les peuples, —qu'elles n'ont jamais négligé de donner des passe-ports à ceux de leurs sujets qui viennent dans nos mers, ou dans les mers générales; et que l'on ne peut imputer qu'à la négligence du capturé, le défaut de passe-port, qui a été un des principaux motifs de son arrestation."

He then proceeds to examine the role d'équipage. Wheat. 6.

page, which he pronounces to be defective, and adds: "En principe, il suffit que la propriété neutre soit prouvée, pour qu'il n'y ait pas lieu à la confiscation; et la propriété neutre peut être prouvée, indépendamment de certaines irrégularités de forme: mais il faut alors que les preuves de neutralité que l'on présente, soient assez concluantes pour suppléer à celles qui manquent.

"Dans les circonstances actuelles, on exhibe, par exemple, des pièces qui constatent que le navire dont il s'agit, est de construction Prussienne, et qu'il appartenait à des Prussiens, lorsque le point de propriété a été vérifié par l'inspecteur de la douane à Stettin; mais, postérieurement, une propriété originairement Prussienne a pu devenir ennemie. Quelle assurance *avons nous que cela n'est pas? C'est au [*16] capturé à prouver la propriété neutre par le passe-port, par le rôle d'équipage, et autres pièces de bord. Toutes les présomptions sont contre lui, s'il n'est point en règle.

"Des pièces nulles ne vicient pas les autres pièces; elles peuvent même quelquefois concourir à la preuve de la vérité; ex acta nullo etiam elicitur veritas; mais, selon les occurrences, le défaut absolu de certaines pièces, et la nature des vices que l'on remarque dans d'autres, ont une influence générale sur toute la cause.

"Le passe-port est la preuve spécifique que l'on n'est pas l'homme de l'ennemi, et que l'on voyage sous la protection d'une puissance neutre; il prouve que le pavillon n'est point un masque, que la propriété du navire n'est pas devenue ennemie, et que le capitaine continue de voyager sous les lois et la tutelle de son prince. Supprimez le passe-port: c'est en vain que vous prouveriez la neutralité originaire du navire et du capitaine; vous n'avez plus aucune preuve légale de la neutralité actuelle; et c'est pourtant à ce point qu'il faut se fixer." Code des Prises par Dufrieche Foulaines, tom. 2 p. 929, et seq.

In the case of The Republican, which ship was taken sailing under American colors, it was insisted by the captors, among other grounds of condemnation, (1) that the vessel having been transferred from the former proprietor to the present claimant, the bill of sale ought to be produced. (2) That the ship was not provided with a passport according to the 25th article of the treaty of 1778, between France and the United States, because the name of the owner was not specified in the passport, and the oath annexed.

To this it was answered by the claimant, (1.) that the vessel not being enemy built, and never having been enemy owned, it was unnecessary to produce the evidence of her transfer from one American citizen to another. (2.) That the treaty of 1778 did not require the name of the owner to be expressed in the passport, but that it was sufficient to state that the vessel was American property.

*In his conclusions M. Portalis, pro- [*17] ceeded as follows:

"Il est de principe que la propriété neutre du navire et de la cargaison doit être prouvée, et que cette preuve, est à la charge du capturé. C'est une autre vérité, que la preuve de la propriété neutre a été déterminée par les réglemens.

"Dans l'hypothèse présente, la neutralité du navire, le Republicain, et de sa cargaison est elle constatée?

“Je ne m'arrêterai point à l'objection déduite de ce que le changement de propriété du navire, qui, dit-on, appartenait autrefois à des propriétaires actuels, n'est point prouvée par des actes authentiques. Je conviens, d'après le règlement de 1778, qu'une telle précaution ne serait nécessaire que dans le cas d'un navire originairement de construction ou de propriété ennemie.

“Je ne m'arrêterai pas non plus à la circonstance que le nom du propriétaire ou des propriétaires du navire n'est point spécifiquement désigné dans le passe-port. Le traité de 1778, passé entre la France et les Etats Unis d'Amérique, exige seulement que le navire soit reconnu propriété Américaine, sans une désignation particulière du nom du propriétaire.

“Mais je découvre dans le passe-port un vice qui m'a paru essentiel.

“Le capturé avoue, dans le mémoire manuscrit qui m'a été remis, que le capitaine, avant son départ, doit prêter serment, entre les mains des officiers de la marine, que le navire appartient à un ou plusieurs sujets des Etats Unis, sans autre désignation; il avoue encore que par la formule annexée au traité de 1778, cette affirmation assermentée doit être à la suite du passe-port.

“Or, j'ai vérifié qu'à la suite du passe-port dont le capturé était porteur, il n'existe qu'une déclaration d'affirmation, sans aucune signature ni de l'officier public devant lequel l'affirmation assermentée a dû être faite, ni de la partie même qui est censée avoir prêtée le serment. On ne s'est donc point conformé au traité de 1778.

“Un acte n'est rien s'il n'est signé; c'est la signature qui fait tout. Jusque là, je vois moins un acte qu'un simple projet, c'est à dire, une rédaction qui n'a été ni précédée ni suivie 18*] d'aucun *effet réel. Je suis donc autorisé à conclure que l'affirmation assermentée, prescrite par le traité de 1778, n'a point été faite.

“Le traité de 1778, dit-on, n'a point prescrit les formalités du passe-port à peine de nullité, mais seulement dans l'objet d'arrêter et de prévenir de part ou d'autre toutes dissensions et querelles.

“Le vice que j'ai découvert dans le passe-port du navire le Republicain, ne tient pas uniquement à la forme de l'acte; il tient à sa substance: car un acte non signé n'existe pas. Dans un cas pareil, la nullité n'a pas besoin d'être prononcée par la loi à titre de peine; elle est inhérente à la chose même.

“Vainement objecterait-on qu'un acte nul prouve toujours la bonne foi de celui qui en est porteur, puisqu'il prouve au moins le désir que l'on avait de se le procurer.

“Cela est vrai, quand l'acte n'est qu'irrégulier; mais la thèse change, s'il s'agit d'un acte imparfait et non consommé. Un tel acte n'ayant aucune existence, ne peut produire aucun effet.

“On prétend que la seule nullité du passe-port ne peut extraîner la confiscation si d'ailleurs la propriété neutre est constatée par les autres pièces.

“Je conviens du principe général; mais je crois que ce principe doit être appliqué avec discernement.

“Il n'est exactement et rigoureusement vrai, que lorsqu'il n'est question que d'une nullité qui ne peut faire suspecter la foi de la personne. Dans la cause actuelle, le défaut de signature de l'officier public et de la partie, est de nature à faire présumer qu'on n'a osé affirmer à serment la neutralité du navire. Ce défaut n'influe pas seulement sur le plus ou sur le moins de solennité de l'acte; il emporte l'acte même, et il fait suspecter la bonne volonté de celui qui était tenu de le rapporter.”

He then proceeds to state the other defects in the proofs of proprietary interest, the destination of a ship to an enemy's port combined with the possession of false papers, and other circumstances of suspicion, and concludes for the condemnation of the ship and cargo. Ib. p. 927.

*In the case of, The Quintus, a Swedish [*19 vessel, the grounds on which the captors insisted, are stated by M. Portalis as follows:

“On prétend que le passe-port, n'étant signé par le roi de Suède, n'est point authentique; qu'il n'indique point la destination précise du navire, puisqu'il est expédié pour aller dans la mer occidentale et plus loin; qu'enfin, dans la supposition ou un tel passe-port pourrait être légal, le capturé y aurait contrevenu par son retour à Alicante, où il était déjà venu une première fois dans le même voyage.

“Examinons ces objections. Nul doute que dans chaque pays, les passe-ports doivent être expédiés par l'autorité compétente; mais celui dont il s'agit, l'a été par le collège royal de commerce de Suède: il est expédié au nom du roi; mais nous ne voyons nulle part que la signature du roi fût requise. En général, dans les monarchies, le nom du roi est à la tête de tous les actes publics; mais la signature du roi n'est apposée qu'aux actes déterminés par les lois de chaque pays.

“Dire que le passe-port n'indiquait point une destination précise, c'est ne rien dire d'utile ou de concluant.

“Tous les voyages de mer ne se ressemblent pas. On distingue les voyages extraordinaires d'avec les voyages ordinaires; ceux de long cours d'avec la simple caravane; le petit cabotage du grand cabotage. Tous ceux qui ont écrit sur les affaires maritimes nous avertissent que les passe-ports diffèrent dans leur énonciation, selon les différentes espèces de voyages.

“Il est impossible, par exemple, qu'un passe-port pour un voyage de long cours et pour aller dans un lieu déterminé, soit conçu dans les mêmes termes qu'un passe-port pour la caravane; car la caravane, selon la définition de l'auteur du Traité des Assurances, “est une multiplicité de petits voyages qu'un capitaine fait dans le cours de sa navigation. Il se nolise pour un port, où, étant arrivé, il décharge la marchandise, exige le nolis, se nolise pour un autre endroit, où il aborde, fait les mêmes opérations, ainsi successivement d'un port à l'autre jusqu'à ce qu'il revienne au port d'où il était parti. Ces *divers petits voyages, [*20 pris cumulativement, ne forment qu'un voyage unique et principal.

“Ou comprend que par la nature même des choses, un passe-port pour la caravane, ne peut désigner avec précision, un lieu plutôt qu'un autre; mais les règlements et les coutumes de chaque pays déterminent la caravane, et pour l'espace que l'on peut parcourir en faisant ces

sortes de voyages, et pour le tems pendant lequel on peut demeurer en mer avant de retourner au lieu du départ. Ainsi, l'on sait qu'en France, le petit cabotage comprend tous les ports depuis Bayonne jusqu'à Duinkerque inclusivement; que le grand cabotage s'étend à toute autre navigation plus éloignée, qui n'est pas déclarée voyage de long cours. On sait encore que, par nos réglemens Français, la grande caravane peut durer 2 ans sans que l'on ait besoin de se munir d'un nouveau congé. On sait, enfin que les congés ou passe-ports sont rédigés différemment, selon qu'il s'agit d'un voyage de long cours ou d'une simple caravane.

"Dans les circonstances de la cause, il ne s'agissait que d'une simple caravane; cela est convenu. Le passe-port devait donc être conforme à la nature du voyage que l'on entreprenait. De-là, nous lisons dans ce passe-port, ad mare occidentale et ulterius, ad ordinationem. Les mots, ad mare occidentale et ulterius sont indéfinis, parce-que, dans un passe-port pour une caravane, il est impossible de désigner un lieu déterminé. Mais on ajoute, ad ordinationem, pour annoncer qu'on ne peut pas abuser de la latitude donnée par le passe-port, et excéder le temps et l'espace fixés par l'usage ou par réglemens relativement à ces sortes de voyages.

"Aucune loi n'a prohibé aux neutres a caravane en tems de guerre; car la neutralité d'une nation, qui n'est pour cette nation que la continuation de l'état de paix, doit lui garantir tous les avantages attachés à cet état.

"Le capturé était donc muni d'un passe-port régulier, légal et conforme à l'espèce de voyage qu'il avait entrepris.

"A-t-il contrevenu à ce passe-port? On le prétend; mais on ne le prouve pas. Peu importe qu'après avoir été une première fois à Alicante, il y soit retourné ou qu'il en ait eu 21* l'intention. Dans la caravane, on peut aller, venir et retourner au même port, pourvu qu'on ne fasse pas dégénérer la caravane en voyage de long cours, ou que, sans cause légitime et constatée, on ne voyage pas au-delà du tems déterminé par les réglemens ou par la coutume.

"Or, ici la conduite du capitaine ne pouvait être suspecte, ni par rapport à la durée de son voyage. Donc point de contravention au passe-port. Il est donc évident que la prise est iuvallide." (Ib. p. 935.)

In the case of The Molly, taken under American colors, after the ratification of the treaty of 1800 between the United States and France; the ship was provided with the passport, as stipulated by the treaty, but which was falsified by other papers found on board, showing the property to be British.

In his conclusions, M. Durand, after stating the facts, proceeded as follows:

"La preuve résultant d'un acte public, tel qu'un passe-port, est fondée sur la confiance réciproque que se doivent les Gouvernemens amis; il a été nécessaire au maintien de l'har-monie qui règne entre les nations, qu'on se contentât de part et d'autre des preuves fournies par des actes revêtus de signatures d'officiers publics préposés pour cet effet. Ces officiers publics de leur côté, ont été obligés, dans la plupart des cas, de s'en rapporter à la bonne foi de ceux qui s'adressent à eux pour obtenir leur attache, et sans doute leur confiance est quelquefois trompée. Il leur est difficile, pour ne pas dire impossible, de discerner les propriétés des administrés. Il faut donc qu'ils s'en rapportent à leur déclaration. Par exemple, à la suite du passe-port du Capit. Barrowdale, on trouve l'acte du serment qu'il a prêté, que le navire qu'il commande actuellement est un bâtiment des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, et qu'aucun citoyen ou sujet des Puissances présentement en guerre n'y a aucune part ou intérêt, soit directement soit indirectement. C'est sur la foi de cet exposé que le Gouvernement Américain le prend sous sa sauvegarde, et lui accorde sa protection. Ce gouvernement est trop loyal pour ne pas être indigné de la fraude et de l'imposture qu'on ne craint pas de mettre en usage pour surprendre un passe-port qui couvre la propriété Anglaise. Il le punirait, n'en doutons pas, s'il avait connaissance de la *22 surprise faite à sa bonne-foi.

"Plus il est facile d'abuser de la confiance qu'un Gouvernement est obligé d'accorder à ses négocians, plus on doit accueillir, je ne dis pas les présomptions, mais au moins les preuves des supercheries auxquelles ceux-ci peuvent avoir recours pour le tromper. Si donc le hasard en présente, et qu'elles sont de nature à faire suspecter les pièces de bord, il n'est pas douteux que le Conseil n'ait le droit de les peser dans la balance impartiale de la justice, et de les faire prévaloir sur les preuves légales, lorsqu'elles sont telles qu'elles ne peuvent se concilier avec elles.

"Les lois et les usages prescrivent de recueillir les déclarations des capturés, de les interroger. A quoi ces précautions serviraient-elles, s'il n'était pas permis de chercher la vérité à travers tous détours dans lesquels se cachent les négocians que la cupidité porte à favoriser l'ennemi par les moyens les moins délicats?"

"Une lettre est encore moins suspecte qu'une déclaration, et elle ne doit pas avoir moins de force; il est impossible de supposer que celui qui en était le dépositaire, suppose un titre qui lui porte préjudice; on doit donc ajouter foi à son contenu, et croire, lorsqu'elle présente des résultats contraires au pièces de bord, que celles-ci sont l'ouvrage de la simulation, et qu'elles ont été obtenues sur un faux exposé. Je pourrais maintenant examiner de plus près les connoissances, et l'on trouverait peut-être, en les comparant les uns aux autres et avec la lettre citée, que la plus grande partie de la cargaison est ennemie; mais s'il est prouvé que le bâtiment appartient aux Anglais, c'est une conséquence nécessaire que la cargaison soit confisquée. Tel est le droit consacré par nos traités, particulièrement par le dernier (art. 15), avec les Etats-Unis d'Amérique." (Ib. p. 985.)

23*]

[*NOTE III.]

TO THE CASE OF THE AMIABLE ISABELLA.

Articles of the French Treaties referred to in the Text.

Art. 4. The subjects, people, and inhabitants of the said United States, and each of them, shall not pay in the ports, havens, roads, isles, cities, and places under the domination of His most Christian Majesty, in Europe, any other or greater duties or imposts, of what nature soever they may be, or by what name soever called, than those which the most favored nations are or shall be obliged to pay; and they shall enjoy all the rights, liberties, privileges, immunities, and exemptions in trade, navigation, and commerce, whether in passing from one port in the said dominions, in Europe, to another, or in going to and from the same, from and to any part of the world, which the said nations do or shall enjoy.

Art. 12. The merchant ships of either of the parties which shall be making into a port belonging to the enemy of the other ally, and concerning whose voyage, and the species of 24*] goods on board her, there shall be just grounds of suspicion, shall be obliged to exhibit, as well upon the high seas, as in the ports and havens, not only her passports, but likewise certificates, expressly showing that her goods are not of the number of those which have been prohibited as contraband.

Art. 13. If, by the exhibiting of the above-said certificates, the other party discover there are any of those sorts of goods which are prohibited and declared contraband, and consigned for a port under the obedience of his enemies, it shall not be lawful to break up the hatches of said ship, or to open any chest, coffers, packs, casks, or any other vessels found therein, or to remove the smallest parcels of her goods, whether such ship belongs to the subjects of France, or the inhabitants of the said United States, unless the lading be brought on shore in the presence of the officers of the Court of Admiralty, and an inventory thereof made; but there shall be no allowance to sell, exchange, or alienate the same, in any manner, until after that due and lawful process shall have been had against 25*] such prohibited goods, and the Court of Admiralty shall, by a sentence pronounced, have confiscated the same; saving always as well the ship itself as any other goods found therein, which by this treaty are to be esteemed free, neither may they be detained on pretense of their being, as it were, infected by the prohibited goods, much less shall they be confiscated as lawful prize; but if not the whole cargo, but only part thereof, shall consist of prohibited or contraband goods, and the commander of the ship shall be ready and willing to deliver them to the captor who has discovered them, in such case, the captor having received those goods shall forthwith discharge the ship, and not hinder her by any means, freely to prosecute the voyage on which she was bound. But in case

350

Art. 4. Les sujets, peuples et habitants des dits Etats Unis, et de chacun d'eux, ne paieront dans les ports, havres, rades, isles, villes et places de la domination de sa Majesté très Chrétienne en Europe, d'autres ni plus grands droits ou impôts de quelque nature qu'ils puissent être et quelque nom qu'ils puissent avoir que les nations les plus favorisées sont, ou seront tenues de paier, et ils jouiront de tous les droits, libertés, privilèges et exemptions en fait de négoce, navigation et commerce soit en passant d'un port à un autre des dits états du roi très chrétien en Europe, soit en y allant ou en revenant du quelque partie ou pour quelque partie de monde que ce soit, dont les nations susdites jouissent ou jouiront.

Art. 12. Les navires marchands des deux parties qui seront destinés pour des ports appartenants à une puissance ennemie de l'autre allié, et dont le voyage ou la nature des marchandises dont ils seront chargés donneroit de justes soupçons, seront tenus d'exhiber soit en haute mer, soit dans les ports et havres, non seulement leurs passe-ports mais encore les certificats qui constateront expressément que leur chargement n'est pas de la qualité de ceux qui sont prohibés comme contrebande.

Art. 13. Si l'exhibition des dits certificats conduit à découvrir que le navire porte des marchandises prohibées et réputées contrebande, consignées pour un port ennemi, il ne sera pas permis de briser les écoutes des dits navires, ni d'ouvrir aucune caisse, coffre, malle, ballots, tonneaux et autres caisses qui s'y trouveront, ou d'en déplacer et détourner la moindre parties marchandises soit que le navire appartienne aux sujets du roi très chrétien ou aux habitants des Etats Unis jusqu'à ce que la cargaison ait été mise à terre en présence des officiers des Cours d'Amirauté, et que l'inventaire en ait été fait; mais on ne permettra pas de vendre, échanger ou aliéner les navires ou leur cargaison en manière quelconque, avant que le procès ait été fait et parfait légalement pour déclarer la contrebande, et que les cours d'amirauté aient prononcé leur confiscation par jugement, sans préjudice néanmoins des navires, ainsi que des marchandises qui en vertu du traité doivent être censées libres. Il ne sera pas permis retenir ces marchandises sous prétexte qu'elles ont été entachées par les marchandises de contrebande et bien moins encore de les confisquer comme des prises légales. Dans le cas où une partie seulement et non la totalité du chargement consisteroit en marchandises de contrebande, et que le commandant du vaisseau consente à les livrer au corsaire qui les aura découverts, alors le capitaine qui aura fait la prise, après avoir reçu ces marchandises doit incontinent relâcher le navire et ne doit l'empêcher en aucune manière de continuer son voyage. Mais dans le cas the contraband merchandises cannot be all received on board the vessel of the captor, then the captor may, notwithstanding the offer of delivering him the contraband goods, carry the vessel into the nearest port, agreeably to what is above directed.

Wheat. 6.

26*] *Art. 14. On the contrary, it is agreed, that whatever shall be found to be laden by the subjects and inhabitants of either party on any ship belonging to the enemies of the other, or to their subjects, the whole, although it be not of the sort of prohibited goods, may be confiscated in the same manner as if it belonged to the enemy, except such goods and merchandises as were put on board such ship before the declaration of war, or even after such declaration, if so be it were done without knowledge of such declaration, so that the goods of the subjects and people of either party, whether they be of the nature of such as are prohibited or otherwise, which, as is aforesaid, were put on board any ship belonging to an enemy before the war, or after the declaration of the same, without the knowledge of it, shall no ways be liable to confiscation, but shall well and truly be restored without delay to the proprietors demanding the same; but so as that if the said merchandises be contraband, it shall not be any ways lawful to carry them afterwards to any ports belonging to the enemy.

27*] *The two contracting parties agree, that the term of two months being passed after the declaration of war, their respective subjects, from whatever part of the world they come, shall not plead the ignorance mentioned in this article.

Art. 15. And that more effectual care may be taken for the security of the subjects and inhabitants of both parties, that they suffer no injury by the men of war or privateers of the other party, all the commanders of the ships of His Most Christian Majesty and of the said United States, and all their subjects and inhabitants, shall be forbid doing any injury or damage to the other side; and if they act to the contrary they shall be punished, and shall moreover be bound to make satisfaction for all matter of damage, and the interest thereof, by reparation under the pain and obligation of their person and goods.

Art. 23. It shall be lawful for all and singular the subjects of the most Christian King, and the citizens, people, and inhabitants of the said United States, to sail with their ships with all 28*] manner of liberty and security, no distinction being made who are the proprietors of the merchandises laden thereon, from any port to the places of those who now are, or hereafter shall be, at enmity with the most Christian King, or the United States. It shall likewise be lawful for the subjects and inhabitants aforesaid, to sail with the ships and merchandises aforementioned, and to trade with the same liberty and security from the places, ports, and havens of those who are enemies of both or either party, without any opposition or disturbance whatsoever, not only directly from the places of the enemy aforementioned to neutral places, but also from one place belonging to an enemy to another place belonging to an enemy, whether they be under the jurisdiction of the same prince or under several. And it is où les marchandises de contrebande ne pourroient pas être toutes chargées sur le vaisseau capteur, alors le capitaine du dit vaisseau sera le maître, malgré l'offre de remettre la contrebande, de conduire le patron dans le plus prochain port, conformément à ce qui est prescrit plus haut.

Art. 14. On est convenu, au contraire, que tout ce qui se trouvera chargé par les sujets respectifs sur des navires appartenant aux ennemis de l'autre partie ou à leurs sujets, sera confisqué sans distinction des marchandises prohibées ou non prohibées, ainsi et de même que si elles appartenaient à l'ennemi, à l'exception toutefois, des effets et marchandises qui auront été mis à bord des dits navires avant la déclaration de guerre ou même après la dite déclaration, si au moment du chargement on a pu l'ignorer de manière que les marchandises des sujets des deux parties, soit qu'elles se trouvent du nombre de celles de contrebande ou autrement, lesquelles comme, il vient d'être dit auront été mises à bord d'un vaisseau appartenant à l'ennemi avant la guerre ou même après la dite déclaration, lorsqu'on l'ignorait ne seront en aucune manière, sujettes à confiscation, mais seront fidèlement et de bonne foi rendues sans délai à leur propriétaires, qui les réclameront; bien entendu néanmoins, qu'il ne soit pas permis de porter dans les ports ennemis les marchandises qui seront de contrebande. Les deux parties contractantes conviennent que le terme de deux mois passés depuis la déclaration de guerre, leurs sujets respectifs, de quelque partie du monde qu'ils viennent, ne pourront plus alléguer l'ignorance dont il est question dans le présent article.

Art. 15. Et afin de pourvoir plus efficacement à la sûreté des sujets des deux parties contractantes, pour qu'il ne leur soit fait aucun préjudice par les vaisseaux de guerre de l'autre partie, ou par des armateurs particuliers, il sera fait défense à tous capitaines des vaisseaux de sa Majesté très Chrétienne et des dits Etats Unis, et à tous leurs sujets de faire aucun dommage ou insulte à ceux de l'autre partie, et au cas où ils y contreviendraient, ils en seront punis et de plus ils seront tenus et obligés en leurs personnes et en leurs biens de réparer tous les dommages et intérêts.

Art. 23. Il sera permis à tous et un chacun des sujets du roi très chrétien et aux citoyens, peuple et habitants des susdits Etats Unis, de naviguer avec leurs bâtimens avec toute liberté et sûreté, sans qu'il puisse être fait d'exception à cet égard, à raison des propriétaires des marchandises chargées sur les dits bâtimens, venant de quelque port que ce soit et destinés pour quelque place d'une puissance actuellement ennemie, ou qui pourra l'être dans la suite de sa majesté très chrétienne ou des Etats Unis. Il sera permis également aux sujets et habitants susmentionnés de naviguer avec leurs vaisseaux et marchandises et de fréquenter avec la même liberté et sûreté les places, ports, et havres des puissances ennemies des deux parties contractantes ou d'une d'entre elles sans opposition ni trouble, et de faire le commerce non seulement directement des ports de l'ennemi susdit à un port neutre, mais aussi d'un port ennemi à un autre port ennemi, soit qu'il se trouve sous sa juridiction ou sous celle de plusieurs; et il est hereby stipulated, that free ships shall also give a freedom to goods, and that everything shall be deemed to be free and exempt which shall be found on board the ships belonging to the subjects of either of the confederates, although the whole lading, or any other part thereof, should appertain to the enemies of either, 29]* contraband goods being always excepted. It is also agreed in like manner, that the same liberty be extended to persons who are on board a free ship, with this effect, that although they be enemies to both or either party, they are not to be taken out of that free ship, unless they are soldiers, and in actual service of the enemies.

Art. 24. This liberty of navigation and commerce shall extend to all kinds of merchandises, excepting those only which are distinguished by the name of contraband; and under this name of contraband, or prohibited goods, shall be comprehended arms, great guns, bombs with the fuses, and other things belonging to them, cannon-ball, gunpowder, matches, pikes, swords, lances, spears, halberds, mortars, petards, grenades, saltpetre, muskets, musket-ball, bucklers, helmets, breast plates, coats of mail, and the like kinds of arms, proper for arming soldiers, musket-rests, belts, horses with their furniture, and all other warlike instruments whatever. These merchandises which follow, 30]* shall not be reckoned among contraband or prohibited goods; that is to say, all sorts of cloths, and all other manufactures woven of any wool, flax, silk, cotton, or any other materials whatever, all kinds of wearing apparel, together with the species whereof they are used to be made, gold and silver, as well coined as uncoined, tin, iron, latten, copper, brass, coals; as also wheat and barley, and other kind of corn and pulse; tobacco, and likewise all manner of spices; salted and smoked flesh, salted fish, cheese and butter, beer, oils, wines, sugars, and all sorts of salts; and in general all provisions which serve for the nourishment of mankind and the sustenance of life; furthermore, all kinds of cotton, hemp, flax, tar, pitch, ropes, cables, sails, sail cloths, anchors, and any parts of anchors, also ships' masts, planks, boards and beams of what trees soever; and all other things proper either for building or repairing ships, and all other goods whatever which have not been worked into the form of any instrument or thing prepared for war by land or by sea, shall not be reputed 31]* contraband, *much less such as have been already wrought and made up for any other use; all which shall be wholly reckoned among free goods; as likewise all other merchandises and things which are not comprehended and particularly mentioned in the foregoing enumeration of contraband goods; so that they may be transported and carried in the freest manner by the subjects of both confederates, even to places belonging to an enemy, such towns or places being only excepted as are at that time besieged, blocked up or invested.

Art. 25. To the end that all manner of dissensions and quarrels may be avoided and prevented, on one side and the other, it is agreed, that in case either of the parties hereto should be engaged in war, the ships and vessels belonging to the subjects or people of the other stipulé par le present traité que les bâtimens libres assureront également la liberté des marchandises, et qu'on jugera libres toutes les choses qui se trouveront à bord des navires appartenant aux sujets d'une des parties contractantes, quand même ne le chargement ou partie d'icelui appartiendrait aux ennemis de l'une des deux; bien entendu néanmoins que la contrebande sera toujours exceptée. Il est également convenu que cette même liberté s'étendrait aux personnes qui pourraient se trouver à bord du bâtiment libre quand même elles seraient ennemies de l'une des deux parties contractantes, et elles ne pourront être enlevées des dits navires à moins qu'elles ne soient militaires et actuellement au service de l'ennemi.

Art. 24. Cette liberté de navigation et de commerce doit s'étendre sur toutes sortes de marchandises, à l'exception seulement de celles qui sont désignées sous le nom de contrebande: Sous ce nom de contrebande ou de marchandises prohibées doivent être compris les armes, canons, bombes avec leurs fusées et autres choses y relatives, boulets, poudre à tirer, mèches, piques, épées, lances, dards, hallebardes, mortiers, petards, grenades, salpêtre, fusils, balles, boucliers, casques, cuirasses, cote de mailles, et autres armes de cette espèce, propres à armer les soldats, portemousqueton, baudriers, chevaux avec leurs équipages, et tous autres instrumens de guerre quelconques. Les marchandises dénommées ci-après ne seront pas comprises parmi la contrebande ou choses prohibées, savoir toutes sortes de draps et toutes autres étoffes de laine, lin, soye, coton ou d'autres matières quelconques; toutes sortes de vêtements avec les étoffes dont on a coutume de les faire, l'or et l'argent monnoyé ou non, l'étain, le fer laiton, cuivre, airain, charbons, de même que le froment et l'orge, et toute autre sorte de bleds et légumes; le tabac et toutes les sortes d'épiceries, la viande salée et fumée, poisson sale, fromage et beurre, bière, huiles vins, sucres, et toute espèce de sel, et en général toutes provisions servant pour la nourriture de l'homme et pour le soutien de la vie. De plus, toutes sortes de coton, de chanvre, lin, goudron, poix, cordes, cables, voiles, toiles à voiles, ancres, parties d'ancres, mats, planches, madriers, et bois de toute espèce, et toutes autres choses propres à la construction et réparation des vaisseaux et autres matières quelconques qui n'ont pas la forme d'un instrument préparé, pour la guerre par terre comme par mer, ne seront pas réputées contrebande et encore moins celles qui sont déjà préparées pour quelque autre usage: Toutes les choses dénommées ci-dessus doivent être comprises parmi les marchandises, libres, de même que toutes les autres marchandises et effets qui ne sont pas compris et particulièrement nommés dans l'énumération des marchandises de contrebande; de manière qu'elles pourront être transportées et conduites de la manière la plus libre par les sujets des deux parties contractantes dans des places ennemies, à l'exception néanmoins de celles qui se trouveroient actuellement assiégées bloquées ou investies.

Art. 25. Afin d'écarter et de prévenir de part et d'autre toutes discussions et querelles il a été convenu que dans le cas où l'une des deux parties se trouveroit engagée dans une guerre, les vaisseaux et bâtimens appartenans aux sujets ou peuple de l'autre allié devront être pourvus ally, must be furnished with sea-letters or pass-ports, expressing the name, property and bulk of the ship, as also the name and place of habitation of the master or commander of the said ship, that it may appear thereby that the ship really and truly belongs to the subjects of one 32*] of *the parties, which passport shall be made out and granted according to the form annexed to this treaty; they shall likewise be recalled every year, that is, if the ship happens to return home within the space of a year. It is likewise agreed, that such ships, being laden, are to be provided not only with passports as above mentioned, but also with certificates, containing the several particulars of the cargo, the place whence the ship sailed, and whither she is bound, that so it may be known whether any forbidden or contraband goods be on board the same; which certificates shall be made out by the officers of the place whence the ship set sail, in the accustomed form; and if anyone shall think it fit or advisable to express in the said certificates the person to whom the goods on board belong, he may freely do so.

Art. 26. The ships of the subjects and inhabitants of either of the parties, coming upon any coasts belonging to either of the said allies, but not willing to enter into port, or being entered into port and not willing to unload their 33*] cargoes, or break bulk, they shall *be treated according to the general rules prescribed or to be prescribed, relative to the object in question.

Art. 27. If the ships of the said subjects, people, or inhabitants of either of the parties shall be met with, either sailing along the coasts, or on the high seas, by any ship of war of the other, or by any privateers, the said ships of war or privateers, for the avoiding of any disorder, shall remain out of cannonshot, and may send their boats aboard the merchant ship which they shall so meet with and may enter her to the number of two or three men only, to whom the master or commander of such ship or vessel shall exhibit his passport concerning the property of the ship, made out according to the form inserted in this present treaty, and the ship, when she shall have showed such passport, shall be free and at liberty to pursue her voyage, so as it shall not be lawful to molest or search her in any manner, or to give her chase, or force her to quit her intended course.

Art. 28. It is also agreed, that all goods when 34*] once put *on board the ships or vessels of either of the two contracting parties, shall be subject to no farther visitation; but all visitation or search shall be made beforehand, and all prohibited goods shall be stopped on the spot, before the same be put on board, unless there are manifest tokens or proofs of fraudulent practice; nor shall either the persons or goods of the subjects of His Most Christian Majesty or the United States, be put under any arrest, or molested by any other kind of embargo for that cause; and only the subject of that state to whom the said goods have been or shall be prohibited, and who shall presume to sell or alienate such sort of goods, shall be duly punished for the offense.

de lettres de mer ou passe-ports, lesquels exprimeront le nom la propriété et le port du navire, ainsi que le nom et la demeure du maître ou commandant du dit vaisseau, afin qu'il apparaisse par là que le même vaisseau appartient réellement et véritablement aux sujets de l'une des deux parties contractantes; lequel passe-port, devra être expédié selon le modèle annexé au présent traité. Ces passe-ports devront également être renouvelés chaque année dans le cas où le vaisseau retourne chez lui dans l'espace d'une année. Il a été convenu également que les vaisseaux susmentionnés dans le cas où ils seroient chargés devront être pourvus non seulement de passe-ports mais aussi de certificats contenant le détail de la cargaison, le lieu d'où le vaisseau est parti, et la déclaration des marchandises de contrebande qui pourroient se trouver abord; lesquels certificats devront être expédiés dans la forme accoutumée par les officiers du lieu d'où le vaisseau aura fait voile, et s'il étoit jugé utile ou prudent d'exprimer dans les dits passe-ports la personne à laquelle les marchandises appartiennent, on pourra le faire librement.

Art. 26. Dans le cas où les vaisseaux des sujets et habitants de l'une des deux parties contractantes approcheroient des côtes de l'autre, sans cependant avoir le dessein d'entrer dans le port ou après être entré, sans avoir le dessein de décharger la cargaison, ou rompre leur charge, on se conduira à leur égard suivant les réglemens généraux prescrits ou à prescrire relativement à l'objet dont il est question.

Art. 27. Lorsqu'un bâtiment appartenant aux dits sujets, peuple et habitants de l'une des deux parties, sera rencontré naviguant le long des côtes ou en pleine mer, par un vaisseau de guerre, ou armateur, le dit vaisseau de guerre, ou armateur, afin d'éviter tout désordre, se tiendra hors de la portée du canon, et pourra envoyer sa chaloupe à bord du bâtiment marchand, et y faire entrer deux ou trois hommes, auxquels le maître ou commandant du bâtiment montrera son passe-port, lequel devra être conforme à la formule annexée au présent traité, et constatera la propriété du bâtiment, et après que le dit bâtiment aura exhibé un pareil passe-port, il lui sera libre de continuer son voyage et il ne sera pas permis de le molester, ni de chercher en aucune manière, de lui donner la chasse, ou de le forcer de quitter la course qu'il s'étoit proposée.

Art. 28. Il est convenu que lorsque les marchandises auront été chargées sur les vaisseaux ou bâtimens de l'une des deux parties contractante, elles ne pourront plus être assujéties à aucune visite; tout visite et recherche devant être faite avant le chargement, et les marchandises prohibées devant être arrêtées et saisies sur la plage avant de pouvoir être embarquées à moins qu'on n'ait des indices manifestes ou des preuves de versements frauduleux. De même aucun des sujets de sa Majesté très Chrétienne ou des Etats Unis, ni leurs marchandises, ne pourront être arrêtés ni molestés pour cette cause, par aucune espèce d'embargo; et les seuls sujets de l'état, auxquels les dites marchandises auront été prohibées, et qui se seront émanipés à vendre et aliéner de pareilles marchandises, seront dûment punis pour cette contravention.

Treaty with Holland of 1782.

Art. 10. The merchant ships of either of the parties, coming from the port of an enemy, or from their own, or a neutral port, may navigate freely towards any port of an enemy of the other ally; they shall be, nevertheless, held, whenever it shall be required, to exhibit, as well upon the high seas as in the ports, their sea-letters and other documents, described in the twenty-fifth article, stating expressly, that their effects are not of the number of those which are prohibited, as contraband; and not 35* having any contraband goods for an enemy's port, they may freely, and without hindrance, pursue their voyage toward the port of an enemy. Nevertheless, it shall not be required to examine the papers of vessels convoyed by vessels of war, but credence shall be given to the word of the officer who shall conduct the convoy.

Art. 11. If, by exhibiting the sea-letters, and other documents, described more particularly in the twenty-fifth article of this treaty, the other party shall discover there are any of those sorts of goods which are declared prohibited and contraband, and that they are consigned for a port under the obedience of his enemy, it shall not be lawful to break up the hatches of such ship, nor to open any chest, coffer, packs, casks, or other vessels found therein, or to remove the smallest parcel of her goods, whether the said vessel belongs to the subjects of their high mightinesses the states general of the United Netherlands, or to the subjects or inhabitants of the said United States of America, unless the lading be brought on shore, in presence of the officers of the court of admiralty, and an inventory thereof made; but there shall be no allowance to sell, exchange, or alienate the same, until after that due and lawful process shall have been had against such prohibited goods of contraband, and the court of admiralty, by a sentence pronounced, shall have confiscated the same, saving always as well the ship itself, as any other goods found therein, which are to be esteemed free, and may not be detained on pretense of their being infected by the prohibited goods, much less shall they be confiscated as lawful prize; but, on the contrary, when, by the visitation at land, it shall be found that there are no contraband goods in the vessel, and it shall not appear by the papers that he who has taken and carried in the vessel has been able to discover any there, he ought to be condemned in all the charges, damages, and interests of them, which he shall have caused, both to the owners of vessels, and to the owners and freighters of cargoes with which they shall be loaded, by his temerity in taking and carrying them in; declaring most expressly the free vessels shall assure the liberty of the effects with which they shall be loaded, and that this liberty shall 36* extend itself equally to the persons who shall be found in a free vessel, who may not be taken out of her, unless they are military men actually in the service of an enemy.

Art. 12. On the contrary, it is agreed, that whatever shall be found to be laden by the subjects and inhabitants of either party, on any ship belonging to the enemies of the other, or to their subjects, although it be not comprehended under the sort of prohibited goods, the whole may be confiscated in the same manner as if it belonged to the enemy, except, nevertheless, such effects and merchandises as were put on board such vessel before the declaration of war, or in the space of six months after it, which effects shall not be, in any manner, subject to confiscation, but shall be faithfully and without delay restored in nature to the owners who shall claim them, or cause them to be claimed, before the confiscation and sale, as also their proceeds, if the claim could not be made but in the space of eight months after the sale, which ought to be public; provided, nevertheless, that if the said merchandises are contraband, it shall by no means be lawful to transport them afterwards to any port belonging to enemies.

The form of the Passport which shall be given to ships and vessels in consequence of the 25th article of this treaty:

To all who shall see these presents, greeting: Be it known, that leave and permission are hereby given to —, master or commander of the ship or vessel, called —, of the burden of — tons, or thereabouts, lying at present in the port or haven of —, bound for —, and laden with —, to depart and proceed with his said ship or vessel on his said voyage, such ship or vessel having been visited, and the said master and commander having made oath before the proper officer, that the said ship or vessel belongs to one or more of the subjects, people, or inhabitants of —, and to him or them only.

In witness whereof, we have subscribed our names to these presents, and affixed the seal of our arms thereto, and caused the same to be countersigned by —, at —, this — day of —, in the year of our Lord Christ —.

**Form of the Certificate which shall be given to ships or vessels in consequence of the 25th article of this treaty.*

We, —, magistrates, or officers of the customs of the city or port of —, do certify and attest, that on the — day of —, in the year of our Lord —, C. D., of —, personally appeared before us and declared, by solemn oath, that the ship or vessel called —, of — tons or thereabouts, whereof —, of —, is, at present, master or commander, does rightfully and properly belong to him or them only; that she is now bound from the city or port of —, to the port of —, laden with goods and merchandises, hereunder particularly described and enumerated, as follows:

In witness whereof, we have signed this certificate, and sealed it with the seal of our office, this — day of —, in the year of our Lord Christ —.

Form of the Sea-Letter.

Most serene, serene, most puissant, puissant, high, illustrious, noble, honorable, venerable, wise, and prudent lords, emperors, kings, republics, princes, dukes, earls, barons, lords, burgomasters, schepens, councillors; as, also, judges, officers, justiciaries, and regents, of all the good cities and places, whether ecclesiastical or secular, who shall see these patents or hear them read:

Wheat. 6.

We, burgomasters and regents, of the city of —, make known, that the master of —, appearing before us, has declared, upon oath, that the vessel called —, of the burden of about — lasts, which he at present navigates, is of the United Provinces, and that no subject of the enemy have any part or portion therein, directly nor indirectly; so may God Almighty help him. And, as we wish to see the said master prosper in his lawful affairs, our prayer is to all the before mentioned, and to each of them separately, where the said master shall arrive with his vessel and cargo, that they may please to receive the said master with goodness, and to treat *him in a becoming manner, [*38 permitting him, upon the usual tolls and expenses, in passing and repassing, to pass, navigate, and frequent the ports, passes, and territories, to the end, to transact his business, where and in what manner he shall judge proper: whereof we shall be willingly indebted.

In witness, and for cause whereof, we affix hereto the seal of this city.

(In the Margin.)

By ordinance of the high and mighty lords the states general of the United Netherlands.

Treaty with Sweden of 1783.

Art. 7. All and every the subjects and inhabitants of the kingdom of Sweden, as well as those of the United States, shall be permitted to navigate with their vessels in all safety and freedom, and without any regard to those to whom the merchandises and cargoes may belong, from any port whatever; and the subjects and inhabitants of the two states shall likewise be permitted to sail and trade with their vessels, and with the same liberty and safety to frequent the places, ports, and havens, of powers, enemies to both or either of the contracting parties, without being in any wise molested or troubled, and to carry on a commerce not only directly from the ports of an enemy to a neutral port, but even from one port of an enemy to another 39*] *port of an enemy, whether it be under the jurisdiction of the same or of different princes. And as it is acknowledged by this treaty, with respect to ships and merchandises, that free ships shall make merchandise free, and that everything which shall be on board of ships belonging to subjects of the one or the other of the contracting parties, shall be considered as free, even though the cargo, or a part of it, should belong to the enemies of one or both; it is, nevertheless, provided, that contraband goods shall always be excepted; which being intercepted, shall be proceeded against according to the spirit of the following articles. It is likewise agreed, that the same liberty be extended to persons who may be on board a free ship, with this effect, that although they be enemies to both or either of the parties, they shall not be taken out of the free ship, unless they are soldiers in the actual service of the said enemies.

Art. 8. This liberty of navigation and commerce shall extend to all kinds of merchant-40*] ships, except those only *which are expressed in the following article, and are distinguished by the name of contraband goods.

Art. 9. Under the name of contraband or prohibited goods, shall be comprehended arms, great guns, cannon-balls, arquebuses, muskets, mortars, bombs, petards, granadoes, saucisses, pitch balls, carriages for ordnance, musket-rests, bandoliers, cannonpowder, matches, saltpetre, sulphur, bullets, pikes, sabres, swords, morions, helmets, cuirasses, halberds, javelins, pistols and their holsters, belts, bayonets, horses with their harness, and all Wheat. 6.

Art. 7. Il sera permis a tous et un chacun des sujets et habitans du royaume de Suede, ainsi qu'à ceux des Etats Unis, de naviguer avec leurs bâtimens en touté sureté et liberté, et sans distinction de ceux à qui les marchandises et leurs chargemens appartiendront, de quelque port que ce soit. Il sera permis également aux sujets et habitans des deux etats de naviguer et de négocier avec leurs vaisseaux et marchandises, et de frequenter avec la même liberté et sureté, les places, ports et havres des puissances ennemies des deux parties contractantes, ou de l'une d'elles, sans être acunement inquiétés ni troublés, et de faire le commerce non seulement directement des ports de l'ennemi à un port neutre, mais encore d'un port ennemi à un autre port ennemi; soit qu'il se trouve sous la jurisdiction d'un même ou de différents princes. Et comme il est reçu par le présent traité par rapport aux navires et aux marchandises, que les vaisseaux libres rendront les marchandises libres, et que l'on regardera comme libre tout ce qui sera à bord des navires appartenants aux sujets d'une ou de l'autre des parties contractantes, quand même le chargement, ou partie d'icelui appartiendrait aux ennemis de l'une des deux; bien entendu néanmoins que les marchandises de contrebande seront toujours exceptées; les quelles étant interceptées, il sera procédé conformément à l'esprit des articles suivans. Il est également convenu que cette même liberté s'étendra aux personnes qui naviguent sur un vaisseau libre; de manière que quoi qu'elles soient ennemies des deux parties ou de l'une d'elles, elles ne seront point tirées du vaisseau libre, si ce n'est que ce fussent des gens de guerre actuellement au service des dits ennemis.

Art. 8. Cette liberté de navigation et de commerce s'étendra à toutes sortes de marchandises, à la reserve seulement de celles qui sont exprimées dans l'article suivant et désignées sous le nom de marchandises de contrebande:

Art. 9. On comprendra sous ce nom de marchandises de contrebande ou défendues, les armes, canons, boulets, arquebuses, mousquets, mortiers, bombes, pétards, grenades, saucisses, cercles poissés, affûts, fourchettes, bandoulières, poudre à canon, mèches, salpêtre, souffre, balles, piques, sabres, épées, morions, casques, cuirasses, hallebardes, javelines, pistolets et leurs fourreaux, baudriers, bayonettes, chevaux avec leurs harnois, et tous autres other like kinds of arms and instruments of war for the use of troops.

Art. 10. These which follow shall not be reckoned in the number of prohibited goods; that is to say, all sorts of cloths, and all other manufactures of wool, flax, silk, cotton, or any other materials, all kinds of wearing apparel, together with the things of which they are commonly made, gold, silver, coined or uncoined; brass, iron, lead, copper, latten, coals, wheat, barley, and all sorts of corn or pulse; 41*] tobacco, all kinds of spices, *salted and smoked flesh, salted fish, cheese, butter, beer, oil, wines, sugar, all sorts of salt and provisions which serve for the nourishment and sustenance of man; all kinds of cotton, hemp, flax, tar, pitch, ropes, cables, sails, sail-cloth, anchors, and any parts of anchors, ship-masts, planks, boards, beams, and all sorts of trees and other things proper for building or repairing ships; nor shall any goods be considered as contraband which have not been worked into the form of any instrument or thing for the purpose of war by land or by sea, much less such as have been prepared or wrought up for any other use; all which shall be reckoned free goods, as likewise all others which are not comprehended and particularly mentioned in the foregoing article; so that they shall not by any pretended interpretation be comprehended among prohibited or contraband goods; on the contrary, they may be freely transported by the subjects of the king and of the United States, even to places belonging to an enemy, such places only excepted as are besieged, blocked or in-42*] vested; and those places *only shall be considered as such, which are nearly surrounded by one of the belligerent powers.

Art. 11. In order to avoid and prevent on both sides all disputes and discord, it is agreed, that in case one of the parties shall be engaged in a war, the ships and vessels belonging to the subjects or inhabitants of the other shall be furnished with sea-letters or passports, expressing the name, property, and port of the vessel, and also the name and place of abode of the master or commander of the said vessel, in order that it may thereby appear that the said vessel really and truly belongs to the subjects of the one or the other party. These passports, which shall be drawn up in good and due form, shall be renewed every time the vessel returns home in the course of the year. It is also agreed, that the said vessels, when loaded, 43*] *shall be provided not only with sea-letters, but also with certificates containing a particular account of the cargo, the place from which the vessel sailed, and that of her destination, in order that it may be known whether they carry any of the prohibited or contraband merchandises mentioned in the 9th article of the present treaty; which certificates shall be made out by the officers of the place from which the vessel shall depart.

Art. 12. Although the vessels of the one and of the other party may navigate freely and with semblables genres d'armes et d'instruments de guerre servant à l'usage des troupes.

Art. 10. On ne mettra point au nombre des marchandises défendues celles qui suivent, savoir, toutes sortes de draps, et tous autres ouvrages de manufactures de laine, de lin, de soye, de coton et de toute autre matière, tout genre d'habillement avec les choses qui servent ordinairement à les faire; or, argent monnoyé ou non monnoyé, étain, fer, plomb, cuivre, laiton, charbon à fourneau, bled, orge, et toute autre sorte de grains et de légumes, la nicotiane, vulgairement appelée tabac, toutes sortes d'aromates, chairs salées et fumées, poissons salés, fromage et beurre, bière, huile, vins, sucres, toutes sortes de sels et de provisions servant à la nourriture et à la subsistance des hommes; tous genres de coton, chanvre, lin, poix tant liquide que sèche, cordages, cables, voiles, toiles, propres à faire des voiles, ancres, et parties d'ancres quelles qu'elles puissent être, mats de navire, planches, madriers, poutres et toute sorte d'arbres, et *toutes autres choses nécessaires pour construire ou pour radoubler les vaisseaux. On ne regardera pas non plus comme marchandises de contrebande, celles qui n'auront pas pris la forme de quelque instrument ou attirail, servant à l'usage de la guerre sur terre ou sur mer; encore moins celles qui sont préparées ou travaillées pour tout autre usage. Toutes ces choses seront censées marchandises libres, de même que toutes celles que ne sont point comprises et spécialement désignées dans l'article précédent, de sorte qu'elles ne pourront sous aucune interprétation prétendue d'icelles, être comprises sous les effets prohibés, ou de contrebande; au contraire elles pourront être librement transportées par les sujets du roi et des Etats Unis, même dans les lieux ennemis, excepté seulement dans les places assiégées, bloquées ou investies; et pour telles, seront tenues uniquement les places entourées de près par quelque une des puissances belligérantes.

Art. 11. Afin d'écarter et de prévenir de part et d'autre toutes sortes de discussions et de discordes, il a été convenu que dans les cas où l'une des deux parties se trouverait engagée dans une guerre, les vaisseaux et bâtimens appartenant aux sujets ou habitants de l'autre devront être munis de lettres de mer ou passeports, exprimant le nom, la propriété et le port du navire, ainsi que le nom et la demeure du maître ou commandant du dit vaisseau afin qu'il apparaisse par là, que le dit vaisseau appartient réellement et véritablement aux sujets de l'une ou de l'autre partie. Ces passeports qui seront dressés et expédiés en due et bonne forme, devront également être renouvelés toutes les fois que le vaisseau revient chez lui dans le cours de l'an. Il est encore convenu que ces dits vaisseaux chargés devront être pourvus non seulement de lettres de mer, mais aussi de certificats contenant les détails de la cargaison, le lieu d'où le vaisseau est parti et celui de sa destination, afin que l'on puisse connaître s'ils ne portent aucune des marchandises défendues ou de contrebande spécifiées dans l'article 9 du présent traité, lesquels certificats seront également expédiés par les officiers du lieu d'où le vaisseau sortira.

Art. 12. Quoique les vaisseaux de l'une et de l'autre partie pourront naviguer librement et all safety, as is explained in the 7th article, they shall nevertheless be bound at all times when required, to exhibit as well on the high sea as in port, their passports and certificates above mentioned. And not having contraband merchandise on board for an enemy's port, they may freely and without hindrance pursue their voyage to the place of their destination. Nevertheless, the exhibition of papers shall not be demanded of merchant ships under the convoy 44*] of vessels of war, but credit *shall be given to the word of the officer commanding the convoy.

Art. 13. If, on producing the said certificates, it be discovered that the vessel carries some of the goods which are declared to be prohibited or contraband, and which are consigned to an enemy's port, it shall not, however, be lawful to break up the hatches of such ships, nor to open any chest, coffers, packs, casks, or vessels, nor to remove or displace the smallest part of the merchandises, until the cargo has been landed in the presence of officers appointed for the purpose, and until an inventory thereof has been taken; nor shall it be lawful to sell, exchange, or alienate the cargo, or any part thereof, until legal process shall have been had against the prohibited merchandises, and sentence shall have passed declaring them liable to confiscation, saving, nevertheless, as well the ships themselves, as the other merchandises which shall have been found therein, which, by virtue of this present treaty, are to be esteemed free, and which are not to be detained 45*] on pretense *of their having been loaded with prohibited merchandise, and much less confiscated as lawful prize. And in case the contraband merchandise be only a part of the cargo, and the master of the vessel agrees, consents, and offers to deliver them to the vessel that has discovered them, in that case the latter, after receiving the merchandises which are good prize, shall immediately let the vessel go, and shall not by any means hinder her from pursuing her voyage to the place of her destination. When a vessel is taken and brought into any of the ports of the contracting parties, if upon examination she be found to be loaded only with merchandises declared to be free, the owner, or he who has made the prize, shall be bound to pay all costs and damages to the master of the vessel unjustly detained.

Art. 14. It is likewise agreed, that whatever shall be found to be laden by the subjects of either of the two contracting parties, on a ship belonging to the enemies of the other party, the whole effects, although not of the number 46*] of those declared contraband, *shall be confiscated as if they belonged to the enemy, excepting, nevertheless, such goods and merchandises as were put on board before the declaration of war, and even six months after the declaration, after which term none shall be presumed to be ignorant of it; which merchandises shall not in any manner be subject to confiscation, but shall be faithfully and specifically delivered to the owners, who shall claim or cause them to be claimed before confiscation and sale, as also their proceeds, if the claim be made within eight months, and could not be made sooner after the sale, which is to be public; provided, nevertheless, that if the said avec toute sûreté comme il est expliqué à l'article 7, ils seront néanmoins tenus toutes les fois qu'on l'exigera, d'exhiber tant en pleine mer que dans les ports, leurs passe-ports et certificats ci-dessus mentionnés. Et n'ayant pas chargé des marchandises de contrebande pour un port ennemi, ils pourront librement et sans empêchement poursuivre leur voyage vers le lieu de leur destination. Cependant on n'aura point le droit de demander l'exhibition des papiers aux navires marchands convoyés par des vaisseaux de guerre; mais on ajoutera foi à la parole de l'officier commandant le convoi.

Wheat. 6.

Art. 13. Si en produisant les dits certificats il fut découvert que le navire porte quelques uns de ces effets qui sont déclarés prohibés ou de contrebande, et qui sont consignés pour un port ennemi, il ne sera cependant pas permis de rompre les écoutilles des dits navires, ni d'ouvrir aucune caisse, coffre, malle, ballot et tonneau, ou d'en déplacer, ni d'en détourner la moindre partie des marchandises, jusqu'à ce que la cargaison ait été mise à terre en présence des officiers préposés à cet effet, et que l'inventaire en ait été fait. Encore ne sera-t-il pas permis de vendre, échanger ou aliéner la cargaison ou quelque partie d'icelle, avant qu'on aura procédé légalement au sujet des marchandises prohibées et qu'elles auront été déclarées confiscables par sentence: à la réserve néanmoins, tant des navires même que des autres marchandises qui y auront été trouvées et qui en vertu du présent traité doivent être censées libres; lesquelles ne peuvent être retenues sous prétexte qu'elles ont été chargées avec des marchandises défendues, et encore moins être confiscées comme une prise légitime. Et supposé que les dites marchandises de contrebande, ne faisant qu'une partie de la charge, le patron du navire agréat, consentit et offrit de les livrer au vaisseau qui les aura découvertes; en ce cas, celui-ci, après avoir reçu les marchandises, de bonne prise, sera tenu de laisser aller aussitôt le bâtiment, et ne l'empêchera en aucune manière de poursuivre sa route vers le lieu de sa destination. Tout navire pris et amené dans un des ports des parties contractantes, sous prétexte de contrebande, qui se trouve par la visite faite n'être chargé que de marchandises déclarées libres, l'armateur ou celui qui aura fait la prise, sera tenu de payer tous les frais et dommages au patron du navire retenu injustement.

Art. 14. On est également convenu que tout ce qui se trouvera chargé par les sujets d'une des deux parties dans un vaisseau appartenant aux ennemis de l'autre partie, sera confisqué en entier, quoique ces effets ne soient pas au nombre de ceux déclarés de contrebande, comme si ces effets appartenaient à l'ennemi même; à l'exception néanmoins des effets et marchandises qui auront été chargées sur des vaisseaux ennemis avant la déclaration de guerre, et même six mois après la déclaration, après lequel terme, l'on ne sera pas censé d'avoir pu l'ignorer; les quelles marchandises ne seront en aucune manière sujettes à confiscation, mais seront rendues en nature fidèlement aux propriétaires qui les réclameront ou feront réclamer avant la confiscation et vente; comme aussi leur provenu, si la réclamation ne pouvait se faire que dans l'intervalle de huit mois après la vente, laquelle doit être publique; bien entendu, néanmoins, merchandises be contraband, it shall not be in any wise lawful to carry them afterwards to a port belonging to the enemy.

que si les dites marchandises sont de contrebande, il ne sera nullement permis de les transporter ensuite a aucun port appartenant aux ennemis.

Treaties with Prussia, of 1785 and 1799.

Art. 12. If one of the contracting parties should be engaged in war with any other power, the free intercourse and commerce of the subjects or citizens of the party remaining 47* neutral with the belligerent powers, shall not be interrupted. On the contrary, in that case as in full peace, the vessels of the neutral party may navigate freely to and from the ports, and on the coasts of the belligerent parties, free vessels making free goods, inasmuch, that all things shall be adjudged free which shall be on board any vessel belonging to the neutral party, although such things belong to an enemy of the other; and the same freedom shall be extended to persons who shall be on board a free vessel, although they should be enemies to the other party, unless they be soldiers in actual service of such enemy.

Art. 13. And in the same case of one of the contracting parties being engaged in war with any other power, to prevent all the difficulties and misunderstandings that usually arise respecting the merchandise heretofore called contraband, such as arms, ammunition, and military stores of every kind, no such articles carried in the vessels, or by the subjects or citizens of one of the parties to the enemies 48* of the other, shall be deemed contraband, so as to induce confiscation or condemnation, and a loss of property to individuals. Nevertheless, it shall be lawful to stop such vessels and articles, and to detain them for such length of time as the captors may think necessary to prevent the inconvenience or damage that might ensue from their proceeding; paying, however, a reasonable compensation for the loss such arrest shall occasion to the proprietors; and it shall further be allowed to use, in the service of the captors, the whole, or any part of the military stores so detained, paying the owners the full value of the same, to be ascertained by the current price at the place of its destination. But in the case supposed, of a vessel stopped for articles heretofore deemed contraband, if the master of the vessel stopped will deliver out the goods supposed to be of contraband nature, he shall be admitted to do it, and the vessel shall not in that case be carried into any port, nor further detained, but shall be allowed to proceed on her voyage.

49* Art. 14. And in the same case where one of the parties is engaged in war with another power, that the vessels of the neutral party may be readily and certainly known, it is agreed, that they shall be provided with sea-letters, or passports, which shall express the name, the property, and burden of the vessel, as also the name and dwelling of the master, which passports shall be made out in good and due form (to be settled by conventions between the parties whenever occasion shall require), shall be renewed as often as the vessel shall re-

Art. 12. Si l'une des parties contractantes était en guerre avec une autre puissance, la libre correspondance et le commerce des citoyens ou sujets de la partie qui demeure neutre envers les puissances belligérantes, ne seront point interrompus. Au contraire, et dans ce cas, comme en pleine paix, les vaisseaux de la partie neutre, pourront naviguer en toute sûreté dans les ports et sur les côtes des puissances belligérantes, les vaisseaux libres rendant les marchandises libres, en tant qu'on regardera comme libre tout ce qui sera à bord d'un navire appartenant à la partie neutre, quand même ces effets appartiendraient à l'ennemi de l'autre. La même liberté s'étendra aux personnes qui se trouveront à bord d'un vaisseau libre, quand mêmes elles seraient ennemies de l'autre partie, excepté que ce fussent des gens de guerre, actuellement au service de l'ennemi.

Art. 13. Dans le cas où l'une des parties contractantes se trouveroit en guerre avec une autre puissance, il a été convenu que pour prévenir les difficultés et les discussions qui surviennent ordinairement par rapport aux marchandises ci-devant appelées de contrebande, telles qu'armes, munitions, et autres provisions de guerre de toute espèce, aucun de ces articles, chargés à bord des vaisseaux des citoyens ou sujets de l'une des parties, et destinés pour l'ennemi de l'autre, ne sera censé de contrebande, au point d'impliquer confiscation ou condamnation, et d'entraîner la perte de la propriété des individus. Néanmoins il sera permis d'arrêter ces sortes de vaisseaux et effets et de les retenir pendant tout le temps que le preneur croira nécessaire pour prévenir les inconvénients et le dommage qui pourroient en résulter autrement; mais dans ce cas on accordera une compensation raisonnable pour les pertes qui auront été occasionnées par la saisie. Et il sera permis en outre aux preneurs d'employer à leur service, en tout ou en partie, les munitions militaires détenues, en payant aux propriétaires la pleine valeur, à déterminer sur le prix qui aura cours à l'endroit de leur destination; mais que dans le cas énoncé, d'un vaisseau arrêté pour des articles ci-devant appelés contrebande, si le maître du navire consentait à délivrer les marchandises suspectes, il aura liberté de le faire, et le navire ne sera plus amené dans le port, ni détenu plus longtemps, mais aura toute liberté de poursuivre sa route.

Art. 14. Dans le cas où l'une des deux parties contractantes se trouverait engagée dans une guerre avec une autre puissance, et afin que les vaisseaux de la partie neutre soient promptement et sûrement reconnus, on est convenu qu'ils devront être munis de lettres de mer ou passe-ports, exprimant le nom, le propriétaire, et le port du navire, ainsi que le nom et la demeure du maître. Ces passe-ports, qui seront expédiés en bonne et due forme (à déterminer par des conventions entre les parties, lorsque l'occasion le requerra) devront être turn into port; and shall be exhibited whensoever required, as well in the open sea as in port. But if the said vessels be under convoy of one or more vessels of war, belonging to the neutral party, the simple declaration of the officer commanding the convoy, that the said vessel belongs to the party of which he is, shall be considered as establishing the fact, and shall relieve both parties from the trouble of further examination.

50*] *Art. 15. And to prevent entirely all disorder and violence in such cases, it is stipulated, that when the vessels of the neutral party, sailing without convoy, shall be met by any vessel of war, public or private, of the other party, such vessel of war shall not approach within cannonshot of the said neutral vessel, nor send more than two or three men in their boat on board the same, to examine her sea-letters or passports. And all persons belonging to any vessel of war, public or private, who shall molest or injure, in any manner whatever, the people, vessels, or effects of the other party, shall be responsible in their persons and property or damages and interest, sufficient security for which shall be given by all commanders of private armed vessels before they are commissioned.

renouvelés toutes les fois que le vaisseau retournera dans son port, et seront exhibés à chaque réquisition tant en pleine mer que dans le port. Mais si le navire se trouve sous le convoi d'un ou plusieurs vaisseaux de guerre appartenant à la partie neutre, il suffira que l'officier commandant du convoi déclare que le navire est de son parti moyennant quoi cette simple déclaration sera censée établir le fait, et dispensera les deux parties de toute visite ultérieure.

Art. 15. Pour prévenir entièrement tout désordre et toute violence en pareil cas, il a été stipulé que lorsque des navires, de la partie neutre, navigans sans convoi, rencontreront quelque vaisseau de guerre public ou particulier de l'autre partie, le vaisseau de guerre n'approchera le navire neutre qu'au delà de la portée du canon, et n'enverra pas plus de deux ou trois hommes dans sa chaloupe à bord, pour examiner les lettres de mer ou passe-ports. Et toutes les personnes appartenantes à quelque vaisseau de guerre public ou particulier, qui molesteront ou insultent en quelque manière que ce soit l'équipage, les vaisseaux ou effets de l'autre partie, seront responsables en leurs personnes et en leurs biens, de tous dommages et intérêts; pour lesquels il sera donné caution suffisante par tous les commandans de vaisseaux armés en course, avant qu'ils reçoivent leurs commissions.

Treaty with Prussia of 1799.

Art. 12. Experience having proved that the principle adopted in the twelfth article of 51*] the treaty of 1785, according to which free ships make free goods, has not been sufficiently respected during the two last wars, and especially in that which still continues, the two contracting parties propose, after the return of a general peace, to agree either separately between themselves, or jointly with other powers alike interested, to concert with the great maritime powers of Europe, such arrangements and such permanent principles as may serve to consolidate the liberty and the safety of the neutral navigation and commerce in future wars. And if, in the interval, either of the contracting parties should be engaged in a war, to which the other should remain neutral, the ships of war and privateers of the belligerent power shall conduct themselves towards the merchant vessels of the neutral power, as favorably as the course of the war then existing may permit, observing the principles and rules of the law of nations, generally acknowledged.

Art. 12. L'expérience ayant démontré, que le principe adopté dans l'article 12, du traité de 1785, selon lequel les vaisseaux libres rendent aussi les marchandises libres, n'a pas été suffisamment respecté dans les deux dernières guerres, et notamment dans celle qui dure encore, les deux parties contractantes se réservent de s'entendre après le retour de la paix générale, soit séparément soit conjointement avec d'autres puissances intéressées pour concerter avec les grandes puissances maritimes de l'Europe, tels arrangements et tels principes permanens, qui puissent servir à consolider la liberté et la sûreté de la navigation et du commerce neutres dans les guerres futures. Et si, pendant cet intervalle, l'une des parties contractantes se trouve engagée dans une guerre à laquelle l'autre reste neutre, les vaisseaux de guerre et les armateurs de la puissance belligérante, se comporteront, à l'égard de bâtimens marchands de la puissance neutre, aussi favorablement que la raison de guerre, pour lors existante pourra le permettre, en observant les principes et les règles du droit des gens généralement reconnus.

52*]

[*NOTE IV.]

TO THE AMIABLE ISABELLA.

Copy of the Convention with the Court of London, signed at St. Petersburg, the 5th (17th) of June, 1801.

In the name of the Most Holy and Undivided Trinity.

The mutual desire of His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, and of His Majesty the King of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, being not only to come to an understanding between themselves with respect to the differences which have lately interrupted the good understanding and friendly relations which subsisted between the two states, but also to prevent, by frank and precise explanations upon the navigation of their respective subjects, the renewal of similar altercations and troubles which might be the consequence of them; and the object of the solicitude of their said majesties being to settle, as soon as can be done, an equitable arrangement of those differences, and an invariable determination of their principles upon the rights of neutrality in their application to their respective monarchies, in order to unite more closely the ties of friendship and good intercourse, of which they acknowledge the utility and the benefits, have named and chosen for their plenipotentiaries, viz.: His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, the Sieur Niquita, Count de Panen, his counsellor, &c.; His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Alleyen, Baron St. Helens, privy counsellor, &c., who, after having communicated their full powers, and found them in good and due form, have agreed upon the following points and articles:

Art. I. There shall be hereafter between His Imperial Majesty of all the Russias, and His Britannic Majesty, their subjects, and the states and countries under their domination, good and unalterable friendship and understanding; and all the political, commercial, and other relations of common utility between the respective subjects, shall subsist as formerly, without their being disturbed or troubled in any manner whatever.

Art. II. His Majesty the Emperor and His Britannic Majesty declare that they will take the most especial care of the execution of the prohibitions against the trade of contraband of their subjects with the enemies of each of the high contracting parties.

Art. III. His Imperial Majesty of all the Russias, and His Britannic Majesty, having resolved to place under a sufficient safeguard the freedom of commerce and navigation of their subjects, in case one of them shall be at war whilst the other shall be neuter, have agreed:

1. That the ships of the neutral power shall navigate freely to the ports and upon the coasts of the nations at war.

2. That the effects embarked on board neutral ships shall be free, with the exception of contraband of war, and of enemy's property; and it is agreed not to comprise in the number of the latter, the merchandise of the produce, growth, or manufacture of the countries at war, which should have been acquired by the subjects of the neutral power, and should be transported for their account, which merchandise cannot be excepted in any case from the freedom granted to the flag of the said power.

3. That in order to avoid all equivocation and misunderstanding of what ought to be qualified as contraband of war, His Imperial Majesty of all the Russias and His Britannic Majesty declare, conformably to the 11th article of the treaty of commerce concluded between the two crowns on the 10th (21st) February, 1797, that they acknowledge as such only the following objects, viz., cannons, mortars, fire-arms, pistols, bombs, grenades, balls, bullets, firelocks, flints, matches, powder, saltpetre, sulphur, helmets, pikes, pouches, swords, sword-belts, saddles and bridals, excepting, however, the quantity of the said articles which may be necessary for the defense of the ship and of those who compose the crew; and all other articles whatever, not enumerated here, shall not be reputed warlike and naval ammunition, nor be subject to confiscation, and of course shall pass freely, without being subjected to the smallest difficulty, unless they be considered enemy's property in the above settled sense. It is also agreed, that which is stipulated in the present article shall not be to the prejudice of the particular stipulations of one or the other crown with other powers, by which objects of a similar kind should be reserved, prohibited, or permitted.

4. That in order to determine what characterizes a blockaded port, that determination is given only to that where there is, by the disposition of the power which attacks it with ships stationary, or sufficiently near, an evident danger in entering.

5. That the ships of the neutral power shall not be stopped but upon just causes and evident facts; that they be tried without delay, and that the proceeding be always uniform, prompt and legal.

In order the better to ensure the respect due to these stipulations, dictated by the sincere desire of conciliating all interests, and to give a new proof of their loyalty and love of justice the high contracting parties enter here into the most formal engagement to renew the severest prohibitions to their captains, whether of ships of war or merchantment, to take, keep, or conceal on board their ships any of the objects which, in the terms of the present convention, may be reputed contraband, and respectively to take care of the execution of the orders which they shall have published in their admiralities, and wherever it shall be necessary.

Art. IV. The two high contracting parties, wishing to prevent all subjects of dissention in future by limiting the right of search of merchant ships going under convoy to the sole causes in which the belligerent power may experience a real prejudice by the abuses of the neutral flag, have agreed,

1. That the right of searching merchant ships belonging to the subject of one of the contracting powers, and navigating under convoy of a ship of war of the said power, shall only be exercised by ships of war of the belligerent party, and shall never extend to the fitters out of privateers, or other vessels, which do not belong to the imperial or royal fleet of their Majesties, but which their subjects shall have fitted out for war.

55*] *2. That the proprietors of all merchant ships belonging to the subjects of one of the contracting sovereigns, which shall be destined to sail under convoy of a ship of war, shall be required, before they receive their sailing orders, to produce to the commander of the convoy their passports and certificates, or sea-letters, in the form annexed to the present treaty.

3. That when such ship of war, and every merchant ship under convoy, shall be met with by a ship or ships of war of the other contracting party, who shall then be in a state of war, in order to avoid all disorder, they shall keep out of cannonshot, unless the situation of the sea, or the place of meeting, render a nearer approach necessary; and the commander of the ship of the belligerent power shall send a sloop on board the convoy, where they shall proceed reciprocally to the verification of the papers and certificates that are to prove, on one part, that the ship of war is authorized to take under its escort such or such merchant ships of its nation, laden with such a cargo, and for such a port; on the other part, that the ship of war of the belligerent party belongs to the imperial or royal fleet of their Majesties.

4. This verification made, there shall be no pretense for any search, if the papers are found in due form, and if there exists no good motive for suspicion. In the contrary case, the captain of the neutral ship of war (being duly required thereto by the captain of the ship of war, or ships of war, of the belligerent power) is to bring to and detain his convoy during the time necessary for the search of the ships which compose it, and he shall have the faculty of naming and delegating one or more officers to assist at the search of the said ships, which shall be done in his presence on board each merchant ship, conjointly with one or more officers selected by the captain of the ship of the belligerent party.

5. If it happen that the captain of the ship or ships of war of the power at war, having examined the papers found on board, and having interrogated the master and crew of the ship, shall see just and sufficient reasons to detain the merchant ship, in order to proceed to an ulterior search, he shall notify that intention 56*] *to the captain of the convoy, who shall have the power to order an officer to remain on board the ship thus detained, and to assist at the examination of the cause of her detention. The merchant ship shall be carried immediately to the nearest and most convenient port belonging to the belligerent power, and the ulterior search shall be carried on with all possible diligence.

Wheat. 6.

Art. V. It is also agreed, that if any merchant ship thus convoyed should be detained without just and sufficient cause, the commander of the ship or ships of war of the belligerent power, shall not only be bound to make to the owners of the ship and of the cargo a full and perfect compensation for all the losses, expenses, damages, and costs, occasioned by such a detention, but shall farther be liable to an ulterior punishment for every act of violence or other fault which he may have committed, according as the nature of the case may require. On the other hand, no ship of war with a convoy shall be permitted, under any pretext whatsoever, to resist by force the detention of a merchant ship or ships, by the ship or ships of war of the belligerent power; an obligation which the commander of a ship of war, with convoy, is not bound to observe towards privateers and their fitters-out.

Art. VI. The high contracting powers shall give precise and efficacious orders, that the sentences upon prizes made at sea shall be conformable with the rules of the most exact justice and equity; that they shall be given by judges above suspicion, and who shall not be interested in the matter. The government of the respective states shall take care that the said sentences shall be promptly and duly executed, according to the forms prescribed. In case of the unfounded detention, or other contravention of the regulations stipulated by the present treaty, the owners of such a ship and cargo shall be allowed damages proportioned to the loss occasioned by such detention. The rules to observe for these damages, and for the case of unfounded detention, as also the principles to follow for the purpose of accelerating the process, shall be the matter of additional articles, which the contracting parties agree to settle between them, and which shall have the same force and validity *as if they were [57] inserted in the present act. For this effect, their Imperial and Britannic Majesties mutually engage to put their hand to the salutary work, which may serve for the completion of these stipulations, and to communicate to each other without delay, the views which may be suggested to them by their equal solicitude to prevent the least grounds for dispute in future.

Art. VII. To obviate all the inconveniences which may arise from the bad faith of those who avail themselves of the flag of a nation without belonging to it, it is agreed to establish, for an inviolable rule, that any vessel whatever, to be considered as the property of the country the flag of which it carries, must have on board the captain of the ship, and one-half of the crew of the people of that country, and the papers and passports in due and perfect form; but every vessel which shall not observe this rule, and which shall infringe the ordinances published on that head, shall lose all rights to the protection of the contracting powers.

Art. VIII. The principles and measures adopted by the present act, shall be alike applicable to all the maritime wars in which one of the two powers may be engaged whilst the other remains neutral. These stipulations shall, in consequence, be regarded as permanent, and shall serve for a constant rule to the contracting powers in matter of commerce and navigation.

Art. IX. His Majesty the King of Denmark, and His Majesty the King of Sweden, shall be immediately invited by His Imperial Majesty, in the name of the two contracting parties, to accede to the present convention, and at the same time to renew and confirm their respective treaties of commerce with His Britannic Majesty; and His said Majesty engages, by acts which shall have established that agreement, to render and restore to each of these powers, all the prizes that have been taken from them, as well as the territories and countries under their domination, which have been conquered by the arms of His Britannic Majesty since the rupture, in the state in which those possessions were found, at the period at which the troops of His Britannic Majesty entered them. The orders of His said Majesty for the restitution 58* of those prizes and conquests shall be immediately expedited after the exchange of the ratification of the acts by which Sweden and Denmark shall accede to the present treaty.

Art. X. The present convention shall be ratified by the two contracting parties, and the ratifications exchanged at St. Petersburg in the space of two months at farthest, from the day of the signature. In faith of which, the respective plenipotentiaries have caused to be made two copies perfectly similar, signed with their hands, and have sealed with their arms.

Done at St. Petersburg, the 5th (17th) June, 1801.

(L. s.)
(L. s.)

N. COUNT DE PANIN.
ST. HELENS.

Formula of the Passports and Sea-Letters which ought to be delivered in the respective Admiralties of the States of the two High Contracting Parties to the Ships of War, and Merchant Vessels, which shall sail from them, conformable to Article IV. of the present Treaty.

Be it known, that we have given leave and permission to N—, of the city or place of N—, master or conductor of the ship N—, belonging to N—, of the port of N—, of — tons, or thereabouts, now lying in the port or harbor of —, to sail from thence to N—, laden with N—, on account of N—, after the said ship shall have been visited before its departure in the usual manner by the officers appointed for that purpose; and the said N—, or such other as shall be vested with powers to replace him, shall be obliged to produce in every port or harbor which he shall enter with the said vessel, to the officers of the place, the present license, and to carry the flag of N—, during his voyage.

In faith of which, &c.

59*]

[*NOTE V.]

TO THE CASE OF THE BELLO CORRUNES, ante, p. 156.

Décision du Conseil des Prises sur les Précautions Conservatoires du Produit des Prises.

Au nom de la république Française, une et indivisible, le conseil a rendu la décision suivante:

Vu le mémoire présenté au conseil par le commissaire général des relations commerciales de sa majesté Danoise près la république Française;

Vu les conclusions du commissaire du gouvernement laissées ce jourd'hui sur le bureau, et dont la teneur suit:

Le commissaire-général des relations commerciales de sa majesté Danoise a présente au conseil des prises, le 13 floreal présent mois, un mémoire par lequel il demande la mise en sûreté ou le cautionnement du produit des ventes, dans les contestations sur la validité des prises Danoises, antérieure au 4 nivôse dernier, sans excepter celles qui se trouvaient pendantes au tribunal de cassation. Il se dit particulièrement chargé des intérêts des négocians Danois.

J'ai pris connaissance de ce mémoire, d'après l'invitation que le conseil m'a faite, par sa délibération du 23 floreal, de donner mes conclusions par écrit, conformément à l'article 13 de l'arrêté des consuls, du 6 germinal an 8, contenant règlement sur la manière de statuer relativement aux prises maritimes.

Avant de m'occuper de la demande, il m'a paru important d'examiner si le commissaire Danois avait qualité pour la former.

Ce commissaire est un agent politique. Dès qu'il est reconnu par le gouvernement français, il peut incontestablement remplir les fonctions attachées à son mandat; mais, peut-il, par des actions ou par des demandes, intervenir dans des contestations particulières, mues entre des négocians Français et des négocians de sa nation?

L'article 13 de l'arrêté du 6 germinal, n'admet que les *parties ou leurs défen- [*60] seurs qui justifieront préalablement de leurs droits et de leurs pouvoirs.

Le commissaire Danois ne se montre pas pour son intérêt propre, mais comme chargé des intérêts d'autrui. Il n'est point partie; il ne prétend exercer que le ministère de défen-seur. Justifie-t-il de son droit et de son pouvoir?

Wheat. 6.

Il est vraisemblable qu'il n'agit qu'en vertu de son titre de commissaire-général des relations commerciales. Il est possible qu'on l'ait autorisé, par ce titre, à donner une attention particulière aux contestations dans lesquelles il se dit chargé des intérêts des négocians Danois.

Mais tout titre, que le commissaire Danois ne tiendrait que de son gouvernement, ne saurait le rendre le véritable représentant des parties. Au gouvernement appartient la protection, et aux parties seules, la propriété. Un propriétaire peut disposer de son bien et exercer ses droits par lui-même ou par autrui. Mais, chacun étant arbitre et régulateur de sa propre fortune, il n'est libre à qui que ce soit d'intervenir dans les affaires d'un autre, s'il n'en a reçu de lui le pouvoir. La mission générale donnée au commissaire Danois par son souverain, pour le charger de veiller à l'intérêt des négocians de sa nation, et surtout de ceux qui ont essuyé des prises, ne suffirait donc jamais pour établir ce commissaire mandataire, proprement dit, de chacun de ses négocians. Dans les principes du droit politique, la mission du commissaire Danois est essentiellement limitée aux bons offices d'un protecteur qui recommande, et ne s'étend pas aux actes d'un fondé de pouvoir qui régit ou qui dispose.

Je conviens qu'un droit, plus ancien et plus sacré que le droit politique, je veux dire le droit social, autorise tout homme à suivre les affaires d'un absent qui ne connaît pas sa situation personnelle, et qui a besoin des secours spontanés de cette bienveillance naturelle dont le germe n'a pu être entièrement étouffé par nos vices, et dont le droit civil s'honore de sanctionner les effets.<sup>1</sup>

61*] *Il a été reconnu, dans tous les temps et chez tous les peuples policés, qu'un homme, à l'insu de son semblable, peut lui faire du bien, et que s'il n'est jamais permis de faire le préjudice d'un autre, il l'est toujours de contribuer à son avantage, quoiqu'il n'en ait pas donné le mandat.<sup>2</sup>

Le commissaire Danois, à défaut de tout mandat particulier ou spécial, pourrait peut-être se prévaloir de ces principes pour justifier les démarches qu'il fait, auprès du conseil des prises, dans la cause ou dans les affaires de ses compatriotes absens. Qui les défendra, s'il ne les défend pas, et si par leur éloignement ou par d'autres circonstances, ils sont dans l'impossibilité de se défendre eux-mêmes?

Cependant, comme, dans l'état de nos sociétés, il importe au maintien de l'ordre public et à la tranquillité ainsi qu'à la sûreté des particuliers, que les actions en justice ne soient pas populaires, il est de maxime constante et universelle que l'intérêt seul est le principe de l'action, et qu'il faut être partie ou muni d'un pouvoir de la partie, pour pouvoir intervenir dans un litige. On a cru qu'il était nécessaire de prévenir les incursions dangereuses que des esprits entreprenans ou inquiets peuvent faire dans des choses qui ne les concernent pas. On a cru encore que, pour arrêter les indiscretions d'un faux zèle, il était utile de prescrire des limites à la bienfaisance même.

Mais on a établi, près toutes les administrations et tous les tribunaux, un ministère public, connu aujourd'hui, en France sous le nom de commissaire du gouvernement, qui est le défenseur-né de tous ceux qui n'en ont point, qui est partie principale dans les affaires importantes, et partie jointe dans toutes. Cette institution admirable, qui manquait aux anciens, est une barrière contre les surprises, les dénis de justice, les violences et les abus. La partie publique agit, et tous les droits sont conservés. Elle veille, et tous les citoyens sont tranquilles. Elle exerce toutes les actions du public. Elle est la vive-voix *du faible et du pauvre. [*62 Elle représente les absens; et, parmi nous, une de ses principales fonctions, selon le témoignage du savant et vertueux d'Aguesseau, est de faciliter l'accès de la justice aux étrangers, de proposer leur défense, de leur offrir un appui, et de se rendre à leur égard le garant de la loyauté nationale.

Le commissaire Danois ne doit donc point s'alarmer, si je réclame les règles qui ne permettent qu'aux parties où à leurs fondés de pouvoirs d'exercer des actions et de former des demandes. L'intérêt de protection, qu'il doit à ses compatriotes, suffit pour l'autoriser à éclairer la religion des membres du conseil par des notes, par des instructions, par des mémoires. Jamais on ne doit dédaigner les moyens de connaître la vérité. De quelque part qu'elle vienne, elle a des droits sur l'esprit et sur le cœur des hommes.

En ma qualité de commissaire du gouvernement, je suis particulièrement obligé de faire valoir les exceptions favorables aux étrangers qui sont forcés de plaider en France, et d'encourager, par l'impartialité de mon ministère, des hommes entraînés hors du lieu de leur naissance et de leurs habitudes, des hommes auxquels il importe de persuader que rien n'est possible de ce qui ne serait pas juste. Il n'est point de Français qui ne me désavouât si je professais d'autres principes. Notre nation s'est toujours distinguée par ses procédés décens et modérés envers les autres peuples. Elle a rempli l'Europe de la gloire de ses armes; mais l'équité, la générosité sied bien à la toute-puissance.

J'ai donc pensé que si je ne pouvais regarder le commissaire Danois comme partie ou comme représentant de quelqu'une des parties intéressées, il était toujours de mon devoir d'examiner sa demande, et de la regarder comme un éveil donné à ma sollicitude; je serais dans le cas, si cette demande paraissait fondée, de la réaliser en mon nom, malgré le silence des parties et de leurs défenseurs. Car les objets, dont la sûreté et la conservation, pendant le litige, sont réclamées par le commissaire Danois, sont sous la garde du droit des gens. Or, en pareille occurrence, je pourrais agir d'office, comme ayant les actions du *gouvernement, qui est le [*63 gardien naturel, dans l'état, de tout ce qui repose sous la foi publique.

Je passe donc à l'examen foncier de la demande qui a été soumise à votre décision.

Cette demande tend à faire ordonner la mise

1.—Digeste, liv. III., tit. 5. De negotiis gestis, loi: hoc edictum necessarium est, quoniam magna utilitas absentium versatur, ne indefensi—patiantur.

2.—Si quis absentis negotia gesserit, licet ignorant, tamen quidquid utiliter in rem ejus impendebat—habeat eo nomine actionem. Lib. II., Ibid.

Sufficit, si utiliter gessit. Lib. X.

en sûreté ou le cautionnement du produit des ventes, dans les contestations sur la validité des prises Danoises, antérieures au 4 nivôse dernier.

On ne peut nier que, pendant le litigela chose litigieuse doit être en sûreté, et que rien ne doit être innové pendant le procès. Ce principe général, dicté par le bon sens et par la raison, a été appliqué à la matière des prises, par tous les réglemens qui régissent cette matière.

On lit par-tout qu'en général il ne doit y avoir ni vente, ni déchargement avant le jugement de la prise; que la vente provisoire ne peut avoir lieu que dans le cas où la prise serait dans un danger reconnu de dépérissement pour le navire ou la cargaison, et encore dans le cas où la prise serait reconnue constamment ennemie; que le produit des ventes provisoires doit être assuré par le dépôt ou par le cautionnement.

Le commissaire Danois est rassuré, par l'arrêté des consuls, du 6 germinal, pour toutes les prises postérieures au 4 nivôse d'aparavant. Il ne réclame l'autorité du conseil que pour les prises faites avant cette époque.

Mais ici les diverses époques ne doivent pas être confondues.

Avant l'établissement du conseil des prises, la matière des prises suivait l'ordre hiérarchique des tribunaux. Comme dans les autres matières, on pouvait recourir au tribunal de cassation, pour faire annuler le jugement rendu par le tribunal d'appel. Tout était conduit d'après les principes ordinaires de l'ordre judiciaire.

Parmi les contestations sur les prises antérieures au 4 nivôse, il y en a qui étaient pendantes au tribunal de cassation, quand le conseil des prises a été institué. D'autres étaient et sont encore devant les tribunaux d'appel, ou peut-être même devant les tribunaux de première instance.

D'après le vœu de tous les réglemens, les précautions pour la mise en sûreté d'une prise, ne doivent cesser qu'après que la validité ou l'indalité de cette prise a été définitivement jugée; d'où le commissaire Danois conclut que, 64*] tant qu'il y aura litige *devant quelque tribunal que ce soit, même celui de cassation, il faut continuer les précautions conservatoires.

Mais on peut répondre que l'on regardait une prise comme définitivement jugée, quand le tribunal d'appel avait prononcé sur sa validité ou sur son invalidité. En effet, dans les principes de l'ordre judiciaire, les jugemens des tribunaux d'appel sont des jugemens définitifs et en dernier ressort, dont aucune puissance, dans l'état, ne peut empêcher ni suspendre l'exécution.

L'appel a, par lui-même, un effet dévolutif, et il a de plus un effet suspensif, toutes les fois que l'on ne se trouve dans aucun des cas où les lois autorisent l'exécution provisoire des jugemens de première instance.

Le recours en cassation n'a aucun des effets ni des caractères de l'appel. Par ce recours, il n'y a ni dévolution de la matière, ni suspension du jugement contre lequel on l'exerce.

Le tribunal à qui le recours en cassation est porté, n'est juge que des infractions de formes, ou des contraventions formelles aux lois; il ne peut prononcer sur le bien ou le mal jugé; il est tenu, quand il casse, de renvoyer le fond de la contestation à un autre tribunal.

Le tribunal de cassation est plutôt le gardien des lois que l'arbitre de l'intérêt des parties. C'est l'institution par laquelle le législateur surveille, maintient et protège son propre ouvrage.

Par l'événement de la cassation, une cause est agitée de nouveau. Mais le jugement, qui la terminait, était définitif; il tenait lieu de la vérité même, res judicata pro veritate habetur. La cassation le fait disparaître, en le déclarant nul. Mais tant qu'il existe, il est le dernier terme de la justice nationale; il peut être anéanti et non réformé. Il est aussi souverain que la loi, à moins qu'il ne soit constaté que le magistrat qui l'a rendu cherchait à être plus puissant que la loi même.

Il est donc évident que, tant que la matière des prises a été laissée aux tribunaux ordinaires, il n'y avait plus lieu à continuer des précautions conservatoires, après le jugement d'un tribunal d'appel, vu que des précautions uniquement relatives à un état que l'on suppose provisoire, ne peuvent avoir de vie que jusqu'au jugement définitif.

*Je sais que tout est changé depuis la [*65 loi qui dépouille les tribunaux de la matière des prises, et depuis l'établissement du conseil auquel cette matière a été attribuée.

Mais quels sont les effets de ce changement? S'étendent-ils sur le passé, ou n'ont-ils trait qu'à l'avenir?

Les contestations qui ne sont plus pendantes devant aucun tribunal, et dans lesquelles tous les degrés de juridictions et tous les genres de recours ont été épuisés, sont terminées irrévocablement.

Celles que le nouvel ordre de choses a trouvées pendantes au tribunal de cassation, pouvaient revivre; suivant le langage des jurisconsultes, elles étaient encore dans le hasard des jugemens, in aleâ judiciorum. Si la nullité du jugement attaqué était reconnue, la question du fond demeurait entière, comme si elle n'avait point été définitivement jugée, et le renvoi en était fait à d'autres juges.

Dans les contestations dont je parle, le conseil des prises remplace à la fois et le tribunal de cassation où elles étaient pendantes, et le tribunal auquel elles auraient été renvoyées à la suite d'une sentence ou d'un jugement de cassation. Le conseil des prises n'a donc point une compétence limitée à des points de procédure ou de forme, et l'on voit, par les termes dans lesquels est conçu le titre de son établissement, que les questions foncières sur la validité ou invalidité des prises maritimes, sont le véritable objet de son attribution.

Il était possible, dira-t-on, que si l'ancien ordre eût été conservé, le tribunal de cassation n'eût point jugé nuls la plupart des jugemens qui lui étaient dénoncés comme tels, et, dans, ce cas, les parties que ces jugemens intéressaient, n'eussent pas été exposées à de nouvelles incertitudes sur le fond de leurs différends. J'en conviens; mais il était également possible que la cassation fut prononcée. Dans le doute, faut-il que le conseil des prises prononce sur des questions de forme, avant de se croire autorisé à prononcer sur les questions du fond? Mais, se trouvant juge du fond et de la forme, il séparerait des choses que son attribution unit; il mauquerait le but principal de son établissement; il agirait contre le bon sens et la raison qui ne permettent pas de sacrifier la justice <sup>66*</sup> essentielle à de *simples formes de procéder, dans une matière ou la loi juge nécessaire d'écarter les formes contentieuses de la procédure, pour laisser plus de latitude à l'application des principes de la justice essentielle.

Je remarquerai pourtant que, pour ne pas aggraver ou compromettre, sans des considérations majeures, le sort des parties qui peuvent, jusqu'à un certain point, se prévaloir de l'autorité de la chose jugée, il est équitable de ne pas reformer légèrement des décisions régulières dans la forme, et intervenues en dernier ressort. Un simple mal jugé, dans des hypothèses qui peuvent laisser plus ou moins de liberté à l'opinion du magistrat, ne serait point un motif suffisant de réformation; car si rien n'est purement arbitraire à la volonté du juge, il est une foule de circonstances dans lesquelles plusieurs choses demeurent arbitraires à sa raison. Mais nous ne sanctionnerons jamais une décision qui renfermerait une injustice évidente, ou qui blesserait l'intérêt d'état.

Je sais que l'injustice, même évidente, ne peut autoriser le tribunal de cassation à annuler un jugement rendu en dernier ressort, si elle n'est jointe à la violation formelle de quelque loi positive. Mais cette règle est fondée sur ce que les justiciables ordinaires du tribunal de cassation, sont des citoyens qui vivent entr'eux, non dans l'état de nature, mais sous des lois civiles.

Le conseil des prises, au contraire, n'a pour justiciables que des hommes, Français ou étrangers, qui n'ont eu, entr'eux, que des relations assises sur le droit de la guerre, c'est-à-dire, des relations absolument régies par le droit des gens; la cause de ces particuliers est toujours liée plus ou moins à celle même des nations dont ils font partie. Or, les nations vivant entr'elles dans l'indépendance de l'état de nature, il suit que, dans la matière qui nous est attribuée, la loi naturelle conserve un empire qu'elle obtient rarement dans les matières civiles; car, dans l'ordre civil, les principes du droit naturel dirigent; mais il n'y a que les lois positives qui commandent, au lieu que, relativement aux choses qui appartiennent au droit des gens, la loi naturelle est le véritable code des peuples: <sup>67*</sup> de-là toute infraction *manifeste de la justice, de l'équité, ou de la raison naturelle, peut déterminer la décision du conseil.

L'intérêt d'état, blessé ou méconnu, devient encore un juste motif de réformation; cet intérêt ne saurait atteindre les objets qui sont sous l'empire de la loi civile; mais il est lui-même la loi suprême dans ceux qui sont sous l'empire immédiat de la cité.

La guerre est le droit des états, et non celui des particuliers; la course est une délégation du droit de la guerre; personne ne peut armer en course, s'il n'y est autorisé par une permission spéciale du souverain ou du gouvernement; cette permission, que le souverain ou le gouvernement peut refuser; est, à plus forte raison, susceptible de conditions.

Un particulier, qui n'aurait pas le mandat de son souverain, et qui, forcé de se battre pour se défendre personnelle, prendrait un navire ennemi, n'en deviendrait point propriétaire; la propriété de ce navire appartiendrait à l'état.

Les produits de la course en faveur de l'armateur sont donc une cession du souverain.

Wheat. 6.

Ils pourraient être réduits à la juste et rigoureuse indemnité du négociant qui arme à ses frais et à ses risques. Tout ce qui va au-delà de cette indemnité, est un bénéfice librement abandonné par l'état à titre de dou, de récompense ou d'encouragement.

Ce qui n'est acquis qu'à titre d'encouragement, de récompense, ou même d'indemnité, ne l'est qu'autant qu'il est reconnu qu'on s'est trouvé dans le cas de la récompense ou de l'indemnité stipulée ou promise. Conséquemment le souverain demeure toujours juge de la manière dont on a exécuté son mandat.

Il est donc évident que l'on n'a droit aux produits de la course qu'après le jugement qui prononce la validité de la prise. Jusques-là, tout demeure incertain et contentieux. Il est encore incontestable que, dans ce jugement, l'intérêt de l'armateur demeure toujours subordonné à l'intérêt national. Car la puissance publique n'a ni la volonté ni le pouvoir de se nuire.

Les produits de la course ne peuvent donc être regardés que comme une propriété politique que l'on ne saurait assimiler <sup>68</sup> aux propriétés civiles ordinaires. C'est même parler peu exactement que de donner le nom de propriété à des émolumens ou à des produits dont la cession ne peut se réaliser qu'après due vérification des faits sur lesquels on fonde leur légitimité; vérification dans laquelle on doit avoir égard non aux règles de cette justice privée qui gouverne les individus, mais à cette sagesse supérieure qui régit les sociétés.

Les armateurs en course connaissent les conditions inhérentes à la nature de ce genre périlleux d'entreprises. Ils savent que la course étant la délégation d'un droit qui n'appartient qu'à l'état, ceux qui sollicitent ou qui acceptent cette délégation, ne peuvent jamais faire le préjudice de l'état qui les délègue; et qu'ils doivent être jugés d'après les principes sur lesquels le bien même de l'état repose.

Ces principes seront la base des jugemens du conseil, même dans les affaires que nous avons trouvées pendantes au tribunal de cassation.

D'autre part, j'ai déjà observé qu'indépendamment de tout texte positif, l'infraction manifeste de la loi naturelle pouvait autoriser, dans les mêmes affaires, la réformation des sentences rendues par les tribunaux d'appel.

Il semble donc qu'il ne restait plus qu'à conclure que, rien n'étant fini avant que le conseil des prises ait prononcé, il faudrait soumettre tous ceux en faveur de qui la main-levée a été ordonnée à une nouvelle consignation ou au cautionnement: car, avant que tout soit terminé par un jugement absolument irrévocable, le gage de toutes les parties intéressées doit, d'après les lois de la matière, demeurer en sûreté.

Une loi du 4 prairial, an 6, relative à la question que j'examine, portait: qu'aucun neutre ou soi-disant tel, ne pouvait, en matière de prises maritimes, mettre à exécution aucun jugement définitif, et qu'il ne lui serait accordé aucune main-levée, à moins qu'il n'eût fourni au préalable bonne et valable caution, dans le cas où les armateurs se seroient pourvus en cassation, ou seraient encore dans le délai utile pour se pourvoir.

Mais on voit, par cette loi, que la mesure du cautionnement ou du refus de toute main-levée, 69*] n'avait été prise qu'en faveur *des armateurs Français, et qu'elle ne grevait que les étrangers qui gagnaient leur cause dans les tribunaux d'appel; les armateurs Français obtenaient pleine main-levée, sans être soumis à un cautionnement lorsque les jugemens des tribunaux d'appel leur étaient favorables.

Le directoire, en provoquant la loi dont il s'agit, avait reconnu dans son message que, de droit commun, l'exécution des jugemens rendus par les tribunaux d'appel, ne peut être suspendue. Mais il pensait qu'il fallait faire exception à ce principe général, contre les étrangers dont la disparition pouvait rendre inutile l'action en nullité que des armateurs Français pouvaient être obligés de porter au tribunal de cassation.

Je n'ai point à examiner si ce motif était ou n'était pas raisonnable. Mais je ne dois pas perdre de vue qu'en force des lois existantes, les armateurs Français obtenaient, après un jugement du tribunal d'appel qui leur avait donné gain de cause, la main-levée qui, dans le même cas, était refusée aux étrangers. Une mesure qui, dans les circonstances obligerait les armateurs Français à déposer de nouveau le produit des ventes, ou à fournir caution, serait évidemment rétroactive; et tout effet rétroactif est réprouvé par la justice.

Mais si, par quelques considérations particulières, des armateurs français n'ont point obtenu la main-levée, quoiqu'ils aient gagné leur cause par un des jugemens que l'on regardait comme définitifs, il est équitable que cet état de choses ne soit pas changé jusqu'après le jugement du conseil des prises, saisi de toutes les affaires pendantes au tribunal de cassation. Car dans ce cas, il ne s'agit pas d'inquiéter ceux qui tiennent, mais seulement de ne pas investir ceux qui ne tiennent point encore. Or, comme il est plus favorable de suspendre une main-levée, que de la faire rétracter, quand elle a été consommée, il n'y aurait pas de raison, depuis la nouvelle législation sur les prises, de faire cesser un état provisoire qui est utile à tous, qui a été continué jusqu'à ce moment, et auquel les réglemens nouveaux, à quelques exceptions près, ne fixent d'autre terme qu'une décision du conseil établi pour remplacer, dans la matière des prises, tous les tribunaux.

70*] *On annonce des jugemens rendus par les tribunaux ordinaires, soit de première instance ou d'appel, depuis la publication de la loi qui les dépouille tous. Je n'ai pas des instructions assez précises sur l'existence de ces jugemens, et sur les circonstances dans lesquelles ils sont intervenus, pour pouvoir en faire l'objet de mes conclusions; mais je pense que de tels jugemens s'ils existent, sont incompetens et nuls, comme en fraude de la loi, et par des juges sans pouvoirs et sans caractère. Aucune main levée n'a pu valablement être accordée à la suite de ces jugemens, et les parties sont incontestablement autorisées à faire réparer le dommage qui pourrait en résulter.

Quant aux affaires qui peuvent avoir été terminées dans les tribunaux d'appel, avant la loi qui les dépouille, on doit distinguer celles où les parties sont encore dans le délai du recours en cassation, d'avec celles où les parties ont laissé passer ce délai, et ont exécuté les jugemens sans se plaindre. Dans les affaires de cette seconde espèce, tout est consommé et tout doit l'être, puisque les parties ont accédé à l'autorité de la chose jugée. Dans les premières, au contraire, les parties peuvent porter au conseil des prises, le recours qu'elles auraient pu porter au tribunal de cassation. Ce recours ne saurait être regardé comme une surcharge, puisqu'il était dans le vœu des lois, sous lesquelles la contestation était née, et dans la prescience des parties qui agissaient sous l'égide de ces lois. Ce n'est point une innovation, mais l'exécution d'un droit acquis à tous ceux qui ont été dans le cas de plaider devant les juges ordinaires; or, comme les jugemens rendus par les tribunaux d'appel ne pouvaient être suspendus dans leur exécution, si la main-levée a déjà été réalisée à la suite de ces jugemens, on laissera les choses en l'état où elles se trouvent sans rien innover non plus dans les causes où les jugemens en dernier ressort n'auront encore reçu aucune exécution, et où les parties sont conséquemment assez heureuses pour voir continuer les précautions conservatrices de leur gage.

Je ne crois pas avoir besoin de parler des contestations non jugées par les tribunaux d'appel, ou dont l'instruction est peut-être encore pendante devant les tribunaux de première instance. *Ces contestations sont portées de [*71] droit au conseil des prises, et il est incontestable qu'avant le jugement qui les terminera, on ne peut délivrer à aucune des parties les effets ou les marchandises qui sont l'objet du litige. Tout juge, tout agent, tout administrateur qui méconnaîtrait ce qui est prescrit par les réglemens, répondrait en son propre et privé nom, des dommages et intérêts auxquels il aurait donné lieu par sa conduite.

On voit, par les détails dans lesquels je suis entré, qu'indépendamment du défaut de pouvoir ou de qualité suffisante dans la personne du commissaire Danois, pour intenter des actions et former des demandes, proprement dites dans des contestations qui lui sont individuellement étrangères, il serait impossible de faire droit à sa réclamation, et surtout d'y faire droit par forme de mesure générale, sans s'exposer à commettre une foule d'injustices en confondant des hypothèses qui sont dans le cas d'être distinguées, et en assignant un sort commun à des parties qui sont dans des situations différentes.

Le commissaire Danois peut recommander et instruire. Il peut, par le devoir de sa place, protéger indéfiniment les négocians de sa nation. Mais pour pouvoir agir plus particulièrement dans les contestations pendantes, il aurait besoin d'un pouvoir spécial de la partie ou des parties au nom desquelles il agirait.

Le procureur fondé de plusieurs parties, doit agir, séparément dans chaque cause, pour l'intérêt de chaque client, et ne pas cumuler, par des demandes in globo, des intérêts divers qui ne se ressemblent souvent pas, et qui exigent chacun un examen séparé et une prononciation distincte.

Comme chaque cause doit être instruite et jugée séparément, c'est aux parties et à leurs défenseurs à faire, dans chaque cause, tous les actes nécessaires à l'instruction et au jugement.

J'ai pourtant cru qu'il était essentiel de rappeler les maximes qui veillent, pendant le litige, à la sûreté des effets litigieux: maximes aussi anciennes que la matière des prises, maximes vraies sous tous les régimes et dans tous les tems.

72*] *Dans ces circonstances, je conclus à ce qu'il soit dit n'y avoir lieu de prononcer sur la demande du commissaire général des relations commerciales du Danemark, sauf à lui de fournir aux commissaires du gouvernement près le conseil, telles notes ou tels mémoires qu'il jugera utiles à l'intérêt des négocians de sa nation, et sauf aux parties ou à leurs défenseurs qui justifieront de leurs droits et de leurs pouvoirs, d'intenter telles actions, et de former, dans les affaires les concernant, telles demandes qu'elles aviseront; et néanmoins, pour prévenir les dangers ou les abus contre lesquels on pourrait vouloir être rassuré, je requiers, en mon nom (pour l'intérêt du gouvernement et pour celui des armateurs ou négocians Français et étrangers, dont les propriétés et les gages doivent être garantis par la foi publique), qu'il soit décidé que dans les contestations antérieures au 4 nivose, et dans celles postérieures à cette époque qui n'ont point encore été jugées définitivement, ou dont les jugemens définitifs, mais soumis au recours en cassation, n'ont point encore été exécutés, aucune vente, aucune main-levée, aucune décharge de cautionnement, ne puissent être accordées, autrement que dans les cas marqués par l'arrêté des consuls du 6 germinal dernier, et par les réglemens auquel cet arrêté ne déroge pas.

Délibéré à Paris, le 3 prairial, an 8.

Signé, PORTALIS.

Le conseil, après en avoir délibéré, décide n'y Wheat. 6.

avoir lieu de prononcer sur la demande du commissaire-général des relations commerciales du Danemark, sauf à lui de fournir au commissaire du gouvernement près le conseil, telles notes ou tels mémoires qu'il jugera utiles à l'intérêt des négocians de sa nation, et sauf aux parties ou à leurs défenseurs qui justifieront de leurs droits et de leurs pouvoirs, d'intenter telles actions, et de former dans les affaires les concernant, telles demandes qu'elles aviseront; et sur les fins prises d'office par le commissaire du gouvernement, décide que dans les contestations antérieures au 4 nivôse, et dans celles postérieures à cette époque, qui n'ont point encore été jugées définitivement, ou dont les jugemens définitifs, mais soumis au recours en cassation, n'ont point encore été exécutés, aucune vente, aucune *main-levée, aucune [*73 décharge de cautionnement ne pourront être accordées autrement que dans les cas marqués par l'arrêté des consuls, du 6 germinal dernier, et par les réglemens auxquels cet arrêté ne déroge pas.

Fait à Paris, le 3 prairial, an 8, maison de l'Oratoire, lieu des séances du conseil. Présens les citoyens REDON, président; NIOU, LACOSTE, MOREAU, MONTIGNY-MONTPLAISIR, BARENES, DUFAUT, PARCEVAL-GRANDMAISON et TOURNACHON, membres du conseil.

En foi de quoi, la présente décision a été signée par le président.

Signé, REDON, président.

Par le conseil,

Le secrétaire-général; signé, CALMELET.

NOTE.

The Extra Annotation here following is arranged in the order of the cases in the original reporter's volume which precede it. At the upper outside corner of the page is given the volume and pages of the cases to which the Annotation refers. After the official reporter's volume and page in the heading of each case is given book and page of the present edition, the abbreviation L being used for Lawyers' Edition, or Law. Ed. for brevity, as it is throughout in the duplicate citations of cases from the Supreme Court.

ABBREVIATIONS.

F. C. appended to a citation from the regular reports of the U. S. Circuit and District Courts refers to the series of reprints called the Federal Cases and gives, as its publishers do and recommend, the number of the case in that series.

Fed. Cas. is used when the case is contained in the series of Federal Cases but is not reported in the regular series of U. S. Circuit and District Court Reports, and the citation of such cases is to the volume and page of Fed. Cas., not to the number of the case.

Fed. or Fed. Rep. refers to the well known series Federal Reporter, containing reports of the Circuit and District Court decisions since 1880.

L. R. A. will be readily recognized as the abbreviation for the Lawyers' Reports Annotated, and particular attention should be given to these citations, as in a large proportion of cases the citing case will be found accompanied by a note on its principal point absolutely exhaustive of the authorities thereon.

Am. Dec., Am. Rep. and Am. St. Rep. will be readily recognized as the abbreviations for the well known trinity of selected case reports, The American Decisions, American Reports and American State Reports.

Pennsylvania State Reports (Pa. St.) The New Jersey Law Reports (N. J. L.) and Equity Reports (N. J. Eq.) are distinguished by the number of the series, not by the name of the reporter, while the North and South Carolina Reports, Law and Equity, are cited by the name of the reporter where the reports are so titled and it has been the universal custom.

Duplicate citations are given to the National Reporter System where cases are therein contained, and to the Reporter System alone of cases not, at the date of the preparation of the annotation, officially reported. The usual abbreviations are used, as follows:

Atl. Atlantic Reporter,	So. Southern Reporter,
Pac. Pacific Reporter,	S. E. Southeastern Reporter,
N. E. Northeastern Reporter,	S. W. Southwestern Reporter,
N. W. Northwestern Reporter,	S. Ct. Supreme Court Reporter.

We think that in all other respects the abbreviations used are clear and familiar to all who are accustomed to the use of legal reports and text books.

EDITOR.

VI WHEATON.

---

6 Wheat. 1-101, 5 L. 191, THE AMIABLE ISABELLA.

Prize.— Seizure by noncommissioned privateer, if decreed good prize, passes the property to the government, p. 60.

Cited and applied in Carrington v. Insurance Co., 8 Pet. 522, 8 L. 1031, holding that a noncommissioned cruiser may seize for the benefit of the government; The Tropic Wind, Blatchf. Pr. 65, F. C. 14,186, holding any person may take possession of property seizable as a prize; The Ouachita, Blatchf. Pr. 309, F. C. 10,620, holding if vessel arrested as prize was violating law, she is liable to condemnation, though party making seizure was without authority.

Prize.— If the capture be by a noncommissioned privateer the government may contest the right of the captor after condemnation, but the claimant may not raise the point, p. 66.

Treaty.— Form of passport by which freedom of ship was to be established, never having been annexed to treaty of 1795 with Spain, that part of treaty purporting to give effect to passports is inoperative, p. 69.

Cited in The Springbok, Blatchf. Pr. 457, F. C. 13,264, holding absence of invoices from on board vessel in time of war casts suspicion on the honesty of her commerce; The Peterhoff, Blatchf. Pr. 539, F. C. 11,024, where there were no invoices for contraband articles; United States v. Packages, 27 Fed. Cas. 286, holding use of fraudulent invoices to procure permit shows fraudulent intent. Cited approvingly but without special application in United States v. Amistad, 15 Pet. 595, 10 L. 854.

Construction of treaty should be according to the intention of the parties; courts cannot interpolate terms, p. 71.

Cited in Ex parte McCabe, 46 Fed. 373, 12 L. R. A. 595, refusing extradition under Mexican treaty.

Prize.— Onus probandi of a neutral interest is on claimant, p. 77.

Cited in United States v. The Wren, 28 Fed. Cas. 788, denying restitution where claimant failed to establish neutrality of the vessel; The Adula, 89 Fed. 353, condemning neutral vessel chartered to enemy.

Distinguished in Cushing v. Laird, 107 U. S. 79, 27 L. 395, 2 S. Ct. 204, holding final decree in prize cause merely determines the question of prize or no prize.

Prize.—Evidence to acquit or condemn must first come from the ship's papers and examination of captured persons, p. 77.

Cited and affirmed in United States v. Arcola, 24 Fed. Cas. 850, determining citizenship of owner of captured vessel; The Adula, 89 Fed. 353, condemning neutral vessel chartered to enemy.

Prize.—The assertion of a claim wholly or partly false by an agent or in connivance with the real owner, is substantive cause of condemnation, p. 78.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in The Clinton Bridge, Woolw. 156, F. C. 2,900, apparently to no point decided by main case; Daggett v. Willey, 6 Fla. 506, evidently an error; Lewis v. State, 4 Ohio, 397, not in point.

6 Wheat. 102, 103, 5 L. 215, BUSSARD v. LEVERING.

Bills and notes.—Notice of nonpayment of bill can be given by mail, p. 103.

Cited and applied in Shed v. Brett, 1 Pick. 409, 11 Am. Dec. 313, holding putting notice in post-office is sufficient where indorser lives in another town; Globe Printing Co. v. Stahl, 23 Mo. App. 456, admitting evidence of answer received by telephone; Insurance Co. v. Wilson, 29 W. Va. 557, 2 S. E. 903, where indorser lives in another place, notice must be sent by first mail after day of dishonor; Brewster v. Arnold, 1 Wis. 282, holding notice of dishonor sent by mail sufficient.

Distinguished in Provident Sav. L. A. S. v. Nixon, 73 Fed. 148, 44 U. S. App. 316, considering whether "mailed" implies prepayment of postage; Todd v. Neal, 49 Ala. 274, if notice is sent through any but United States mails it must be affirmatively shown to have been received.

Days of grace.—If third day or, falls on Sunday bill is due on Saturday, p. 103.

Rule applied, Wood v. Corl, 4 Met. 205, holding legal presumption is that three days' grace is allowed in every State; Cuyler v. Stevens, 4 Wend. 567, where holder was excused from giving notice of nonpayment to indorser on Fourth of July. Cited in note, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 83, on this topic. Affirmed in Doremus v. Burton, 5 Biss. 58, F. C. 4,002.

Notice of nonpayment given on last day of grace will charge drawer, p. 103.

Rule applied in McFarland v. Pico, 8 Cal. 634, holding notice may be given immediately after refusal to pay; Staples v. Franklin Bank, 1 Met. 55, 35 Am. Dec. 353, holding maker of promissory note may be sued on last day of grace if he refuses to pay. Cited in Manches- ter Bank v. Fellows, 28 N. H. 310, deciding that holder of promissory note may forward notice on day of dishonor.

Distinguished in Dennie v. Walker, 7 N. H. 201, holding notice of nonpayment given prior to demand is void.

6 Wheat. 104-106, 5 L. 216, LINDENBERGER v. BEALL.

Negotiable paper.—Notice given after demand on third day of grace is sufficient, p. 106.

Rule applied in Beeding v. Pic, 2 Cr. C. C. 152, F. C. 1,227, holding demand of payment after last day of grace is too late; McFarland v. Pico, 8 Cal. 634, holding notice may be given immediately after refusal to pay; Wood v. Corl, 4 Met. 205, holding legal presumption is that three days' grace is allowed in every State; Carter v. Burley, 9 N. H. 571, holding holder may forward notice on day of dishonor; Remington v. Harrington, 8 Ohio, 511, holding there should be positive proof of certain facts, from which notice might be reasonably inferred.

Distinguished in Dennie v. Walker, 7 N. H. 201, holding notice of nonpayment prior to demand is void.

Negotiable paper.—Evidence of a letter containing notice having been put in post-office, directed to the indorser at his place of residence, is sufficient proof of the notice to be left to the jury, and admissible without previously notifying defendant to produce the letter, p. 106.

Rule applied in Dickens v. Beal, 10 Pet. 580, 9 L. 541, holding testimony by a notary that he send notice is admissible without producing a copy of the notice; Henderson v. Carbondale Coal Co., 140 U. S. 36, 35 L. 337, 11 S. Ct. 695, holding presumption that a letter mailed reaches its destination is one of fact; Brooks v. Blaney, 62 Me. 458, allowing notary to testify to contents of notice, though no notice has been given indorser to produce such notice at trial; Shed v. Brett, 1 Pick. 409, 11 Am. Dec. 213, holding putting notice in post-office is sufficient where indorser lives in another town; Pierce v. Pendar, 5 Met. 356, where both indorser and holder reside in place where note is dishonored, notice must be given personally; Offit v. Vick, Walk. (Miss.) 102, holding notice of protest may be proved without producing the written notice; Ellis v. Bank, 7 How. (Miss.) 299, if holder places notice in proper post-office in due time, he is not responsible for irregularities of the mail; Globe Printing Co. v. Stahl, 23 Mo. App. 456, admitting evidence of answer received by telephone; Faribault v. Ely, 2 Dev. 69, 72, holding contents of letter giving indorser notice may be proved by parol without notice to produce the original; Arnold v. Brewster, 1 Wis. 282, holding notice of dishonor sent by mail sufficient. See also note to 13 Am. Dec. 316, to the point that secondary evidence may be given of notice of protest.

Distinguished in Prov. S. L. A. S. v. Nixon, 73 Fed. 148, 44 U. S. App. 316, considering whether "mailed" implies prepayment of postage.

6 Wheat. 106-109, 5 L. 217, MECHANICS' BANK OF ALEXANDRIA v. WITHERS.

Practice.—Circuit Court of District of Columbia may adjourn to a distant day, and the adjourned session is considered as the same term, p. 108.

The following citing cases affirm this ruling and variously apply the principle on which it rests: Gonzales v. Cunningham, 164 U. S. 627, 41 L. 577, 17 S. Ct. 188, holding judge may continue Special Term to a day beyond that fixed for the regular term; Ex parte Casey, 18 Fed. 87, holding court can modify its judgment on an adjourned day of the same term; Florida v. Charlotte H. P. Co., 70 Fed. 885, 30 U. S. App. 535, holding term of Circuit Court may be adjourned to a distant day and this is one term, though another term of the court has been held at another place during adjournment; Williams v. Moseley, 2 Fla. 332, holding court may be adjourned beyond the term in another county; dissenting opinion, Conkling v. Ridgeley, 112 Ill. 47, majority holding where court adjourned for thirty-two days, the intervening period is a vacation; Smurr v. State, 105 Ind. 128, 4 N. E. 447, where court had statutory authority to appoint adjourned term, proceedings at a term appointed when another court might have been in session are not void; Sawyer v. Bryson, 10 Kan. 201, holding an adjourned term is not an independent term; State v. Weaver, 11 Neb. 165, 8 N. W. 386, construing "rising of the court" to be equivalent to "the last day of the term;" In re Dossett, 2 Okl. 381, 382, 37 Pac. 1070, 1071, holding proceedings at an adjourned session are not void, though regular term in another county in the same district intervened; Stirling v. Wagner, 4 Wyo. 31, 32, 33, 31 Pac. 1040, holding, in absence of statutory regulation, a term may be adjourned to a day succeeding an intervening term in another county of the same district.

Distinguished in Dunn v. State, 2 Ark. 250, 35 Am. Dec. 64, holding proceedings before Special Term, held without proper order being entered, are void; Graham v. Parham, 32 Ark. 689, holding County Court cannot convene again before time fixed for next regular term; Grimmett v. Askew, 48 Ark. 154, 2 S. W. 708, holding where act limited session to six days, board of supervisors could not adjourn to another day; Garner v. Carrol, 7 Yerğ. 366, holding a Special Term is not part of the regular term.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Irwin v. Askew, 74 Ga. 586, not to point decided by principal case.

6 Wheat. 109-118, 5 L. 218, HOPKINS v. LEE.

Res judicata.— Judgment or decree of court of competent jurisdiction conclusive as to matters directly decided, but not as to collateral points, or such as are only argumentatively decided, pp. 113, 114.

The citations collect a large number of cases on this topic, and showing the following various applications of the rule here laid down; Ex parte Sibbald v. United States, 12 Pet. 492, 9 L. 1169, holding Superior Courts cannot reverse their own decrees; Bank of United States v. Beverly, 1 How. 148, 149, 11 L. 81, holding court could not revise the evidence on which the decree was rendered; Washington Bridge Co. v. Stewart, 3 How. 426, 11 L. 664, holding court could not revise its decision after expiration of term; Smith v. Kernochen, 7 How. 217, 218, 12 L. 674, holding decree in chancery declaring instrument void is a bar to future action on it; Pennington v. Gibson, 16 How. 77, 14 L. 852, holding a decree of equity is as binding as a judgment of law; Aurora City v. West, 7 Wall. 101, 19 L. 49, holding plea of res judicata applies to every objection urged in second suit which might have been urged in first suit; Johnson, etc., Co. v. Wharton, 152 U. S. 257, 38 L. 432, 14 S. Ct. 609, where judgment was for royalties on sale of patented articles; Dowell v. Applegate, 152 U. S. 344, 38 L. 469, 14 S. Ct. 618, holding same issue cannot be retried in an independent suit based upon a title which might have been set up in the first suit; Last Chance Min. Co. v. Tyler Min. Co., 157 U. S. 687, 39 L. 862, 15 S. Ct. 735, holding judgment was conclusive as to the particular ground in controversy; New Orleans v. Citizens' Bank, 167 U. S. 397, 42 L. 211, 17 S. Ct. 914, holding two judgments holding exemption from taxes continued during extension of charter are res judicata; Southern Pac. R. R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 49, 42 L. 377, 18 S. Ct. 27, holding a right or fact directly determined by a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusively established; Vogler v. Spaugh, 4 Biss. 293, F. C. 16,988, refusing to admit parol evidence contradicting record; Putnam v. New Albany, 4 Biss. 383, F. C. 11,481, holding for an adjudication to be an estoppel it must have been distinctly put in issue; Baring v. Fanning, 1 Paine, 556, F. C. 982, holding judgment can be used as evidence in another suit only as against parties and privies; as also in Society for P. of G. v. Hartland, 2 Paine, 542, F. C. 13,155, ruling similarly; Radford v. Folsom, 3 Fed. 202, holding fact that in one suit might have been determined, does not prevent its being raised in a suit upon a different cause of action; Flanagin v. Thompson, 9 Fed. 183, where in foreclosing one mortgage validity of assignment was decided, it could not be raised in foreclosing second mortgage given for same note; The Tubal Cain, 9 Fed. 836, 838, holding where the issue in two actions is substantially the same, each is a bar, though the causes of action be different; B. & O. Ry. Co. v. Pittsburg, etc., R. R. Co., 55 Fed. 703, holding one having obtained benefit of contract in suit was estopped to deny its validity in second suit for different claim; Bissell Carpet Sweeper Co. v. Goshen Sweeper Co., 72 Fed. 552, 43 U. S. App. 47, holding decision of Circuit Court of Appeals finally settles the matter and lower court must carry it into effect; Newton Mfg. Co. v. Wilgus, 90 Fed. 488, holding judgment in patent case conclusive against the parties in a subsequent suit; Poole v. Nixon, 19 Fed. Cas. 1000, 1004, 9 Pet. Appx. 770, 8 L. 309, 312, holding court of equity cannot order rehearing of a cause after the close of a term; Warner v. Brinton, 29 Fed. Cas. 235, doubting as to whether minutes of Register's Court are competent evidence in an ejectment to try title of land.

In the State courts the citing cases affirm and apply the syllabus doctrine as follows: Phillips v. Thompson, 3 Stew. & P. 379, holding decree is as conclusive as a judgment; Wyman v. Campbell, 6 Port. 237, 31 Am. Dec. 686, holding judgment of court having jurisdiction of the parties is conclusive, notwithstanding irregularities that would authorize reversal; Mills v. Stewart, 12 Ala. 95, holding where record of court of one State, properly authenticated, is offered in evidence, presumption is that the court had jurisdiction; Davidson v. Dallas, 15 Cal. 83, holding decision of Supreme Court cannot be reviewed when case comes up on second appeal; Caperton v. Schmidt, 26 Cal. 494, 85 Am. Dec. 191, holding judgment is conclusive between parties and privies as to all matters put in issue and passed on; McCreery v. Fuller, 63 Cal. 32, holding same as to judgment entered upon a stipulation; Lillis v. Emigrant Ditch Co., 95 Cal. 559, 30 Pac. 1110, holding judgment is conclusive as to facts in issue, not as to matters coming collaterally; Betts v. Starr, 5 Conn. 553, 554, 13 Am. Dec. 97, 98, holding former judgment is conclusive, although cause of action and object of were different; Denison v. Hyde, 6 Conn. 517, holding decree of District Court in another case deciding title between same parties is conclusive; Coit v. Tracy, 8 Conn. 276, 20 Am. Dec. 112, holding former judgment is conclusive evidence as to facts directly decided; Holcomb v. Phelps, 16 Conn. 131, holding judgment of court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive as to title claimed under it; Davis v. Millaudon, 17 La. Ann. 104, 87 Am. Dec. 518, holding opinion of court does not have the force of the thing adjudged unless disposed of by a decree of the court; McKim v. Odom, 12 Me. 101, holding action of debt will lie as well on a decree of a court of chancery in another State as on a judgment; Russ v. Wilson, 22 Me. 211, holding whenever a party could have defended himself, in an action at law, and has not, he cannot be relieved by injunction; dissenting opinion, People v. Dawell, 25 Mich. 271, holding State court judgment divorcing parties domiciled elsewhere is a nullity; Lank v. Keirn, 52 Miss. 347, holding judgment is conclusive as to facts directly in issue; Ridgley v. Stillwell, 27 Mo. 132, holding judgment is not conclusive as to matters collaterally considered; Kittredge v. Emerson, 15 N. H. 263, holding Federal courts cannot treat judgment of State court with jurisdiction as a nullity even if founded on an erroneous construction of bankrupt act; Divall v. Atwood, 41 N. H. 445, holding judgment was conclusive as to fact of usury, incidentally coming up in another cause; Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Newton, 50 N. J. L. 577, 14 Atl. 759, holding defense that decree for deficiency had been made in foreclosure suit respecting the same debt, is good plea to action upon the bond; McFadden v. Geddis, 17 S. & R. 339, holding decree of Orphans' Court settling account of executor is conclusive as to all matters therein in any collateral suit; Viles v. Moulton, 13 Vt. 517, query whether a decree in chancery is more than prima facie evidence of facts found; Gray v. Pingry, 17 Vt. 424, 44 Am. Dec. 347, holding last requisite of estoppel by matter of record is that the particular fact was in issue and found; Tilson v. Davis, 32 Gratt. 104, holding party to creditor's suit not setting up a claim is concluded from setting it up thereafter; Shenandoah V. R. R. Co. v. Griffith, 76 Va. 925, holding judgment of court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive between same parties upon same matter directly in question in subsequent action; Blackwell v. Bragg, 78 Va. 539, holding decree of administrator's account cannot be reopened save as provided by statute as to parties under disabilities; McCullough v. Dashiell, 85 Va. 41, 6 S. E. 612, holding all questions involved in an appeal are finally adjudicated, whether distinctly raised and passed on below and here or not; Fishburne v. Ferguson, 85 Va. 325, 7 S. E. 363, holding when one set up a judgment as a bar, he must show the matter was actually litigated or might have been; Western M. & M. Co. v. Virginia Cannel Co., 10 W. Va. 281, holding a fact directly decided by a court of competent jurisdiction is res judicata; Coville v. Gilman, 13 W. Va. 328, holding judgment is conclusive only as to matters directly involved; Oakley v. Hibbard, 2 Pinn. 22, 52 Am. Dec. 140, holding when court of last resort has entered its final judgment or decree, it has no power to rehear the cause; Pierce v. Kneeland, 9 Wis. 38, holding final decision of Supreme Court upon an order of the court below is conclusive; Akerly v. Vilas, 24 Wis. 174, 1 Am. Rep. 173, construing words "final hearing or trial" in act providing for transfer of causes from State to Federal courts. See note to 21 Am. Dec. 119, on power of Supreme Court after remittitur. Cited in Jackson v. Astor, 1 Pinn. 158, 159, 39 Am. Dec. 291, 292, without special application. Cited, arguendo, in dissenting opinion, Harrison v. Nixon, 9 Pet. 534, 9 L. 220.

Distinguished in Gaines v. Hennen, 24 How. 579, 16 L. 779, holding where parties and object of two suits are dissimilar, one is not a bar to the other; Badger v. Badger, 1 Cliff. 245, F. C. 717, holding record of former suit where complainant moved to dismiss bill is not a bar; The Sloop Davis, Crabbe, 191, F. C. 12,357, holding dismissal of bill, to be a bar, must have been ordered upon a hearing of the parties or on the merits; Allen v. Blunt, 2 Wood. & M. 133, F. C.

217, holding where there was no judgment on the verdict, but bill was dismissed it is not a bar; Woodland v. Newhall, 31 Fed. 437, holding where suit for legacy is dismissed on general demurrer, it is no bar to action for same sum claimed under a trust; Rodgers v. Russell, 11 Ala. 457, holding judgment is not evidence against one not a party; Fairman v. Bacon, 8 Conn. 425, holding former judgment is not an estoppel as to facts not directly in issue in that case; Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 183, 40 L. 115, 16 S. Ct. 151, declaring this a dictum so far as foreign judgments are concerned, and holding judgment of court of France is prima facie evidence only, since this is the effect of our judgments in France.

Measure of damages for not delivering thing sold is price of article sold at time of the breach, and the rule applies to both realty and personalty, p. 118.

Cited and principle applied in Patrick v. Leach, 1 McCrary, 252, 2 Fed. 121, holding in action for breach of covenant of warranty, damages is the consideration money, with interest; Missouri Furnace Co. v. Cochran, 8 Fed. 464, holding measure of damages is difference between contract price and market price at place of delivery; Snodgrass v. Reynolds, 79 Ala. 461, 58 Am. Rep. 606, where measure of damages between lessor and lessee was declared to be the value of the lease; Logan v. Moulder, 1 Ark. 324, 33 Am. Dec. 345, holding vendor is liable for purchase money and interest; Kempner v. Cohn, 47 Ark. 528, 1 S. W. 872, holding damages for breach of contract to convey is difference between contract price and value of land at time of breach, with interest; McAlpin v. Lee, 12 Conn. 133, 30 Am. Dec. 610, allowing difference between contract price and value of property sold, as damages; Biggers v. Pace, 5 Ga. 176, allowing difference between contract price and market price at place of delivery; Green v. Williams, 45 Ill. 209, allowing difference between rent in covenant and actual value of premises at time of breach; Plummer v. Rigdon, 78 Ill. 226, 20 Am. Rep. 264, allowing value of land at time conveyance was to be made; Reese v. McQuilkin, 7 Ind. 452, giving purchase money and interest, in suit upon covenant of warranty; Galting v. Newell, 12 Ind. 125, rejecting evidence as to what price patent rights sold several years before had brought; Case v. Wolcott, 33 Ind. 23, allowing vendee difference between unpaid purchase money and actual value of land at time of breach; Wood v. Bibbins, 58 Ind. 397, allowing for breach of warranty, purchase money and interest; Puterbaugh v. Puterbaugh, 7 Ind. App. 296, 33 N. E. 813, allowing vendee value of land at time of breach, less contract price; dissenting opinion, Stone v. Morgan, 13 Ind. App. 59, 41 N. E. 83, majority allowing, in claim based on contract unenforceable because of statute of frauds, the value of services rendered; Foley v. McKeegan, 4 Iowa, 11, 66 Am. Dec. 114, holding if vendor is in fault, vendee should recover the increased value of the land; Sweem v. Steele, 5 Iowa, 356, holding damages to be value of land when it should have been conveyed; Hill v. Hobart, 16 Me. 169, allowing value of land at time conveyance should have been made; Doherty v. Dolan, 65 Me. 90, 20 Am. Rep. 679, holding vendee could recover value of land at date of breach, minus what he owed for it; Marshall v. Haney, 9 Gill, 260, giving value of land at time of breach; Alexander v. Macauley, 6 Md. 369, allowing actual value of stock at time it should have been transferred; Hammond v. Hannin, 21 Mich. 388, 4 Am. Rep. 495, holding, where vendor acts in bad faith, value of land at time of breach is the damage; Gridley v. Tucker, 1 Freem. Ch. 213, holding measure of damages in executory contract is value of land at time of breach; Kirkpatrick v. Downing, 58 Mo. 41, 17 Am. Rep. 685, allowing vendee value of land at time of breach; Hartzell v. Crumb, 90 Mo. 637, 3 S. W. 61, holding damages is difference between contract price and value of property at time of breach; Taylor v. Holter, 1 Mont. 701, holding measure of damages for breach of warranty is value of property at time of conveyance, with interest; Carver v. Taylor, 35 Neb. 434, 53 N. W. 388, allowing for breach of an executory contract, value of land at time contract should have been performed, less contract price; Violet v. Rose, 39 Neb. 676, 58 N. W. 221, holding, where vendor delays performance, measure of damages is difference between value at time conveyance should have been made and when it was made; Pinkerton v. Railroad Co., 42 N. H. 461, holding, in suit for certificate of stock, damages is value at time of demand, with interest; Pumpelly v. Phelps, 40 N. Y. 65, 67, 100 Am. Dec. 466, 467, holding, where vendor contracts to sell land, knowing he has not title, he is liable to vendee, even though he believed he would be able to procure title; Jack v. McKee, 9 Pa. St. 242, holding damages for breach of contract to give land for services is the value of the land; McDowell v. Oyer, 21 Pa. St. 426, allowing value of the land which party had promised to convey; Phillips v. Herndon, 78 Tex. 382, 22 Am. St. Rep. 63, 14 S. W. 858, holding damages where vendor sold to another is value of land at time of such sale; Dunshee v. Geoghegan, 7 Utah, 117, collecting cases and applying rule to breach of contract to convey land; Park v. Bates, 12 Vt. 388, 36 Am. Dec. 350, allowing value of land at time decision was made against title of warrantor; Combs v. Scott, 76 Wis. 669, 45 N. W. 534, allowing for breach of contract to convey, value of land at time conveyance should have been made; Johnson v. McMullin, 3 Wyo. 239, 21 Pac. 702, holding damages were market value of land at time deed ought to have been delivered. Cited in Whiteside v. Jennings, 19 Ala. 791, but unnecessary to the decision; Blanchard v. Ely, 21 Wend. 347, 34 Am. Dec. 253, considering general doctrine of damages; Dunshee v. Geoghegan, 7 Utah, 117, 25 Pac. 732, where one contracts to convey real estate, knowing he has no right to sell, measure of damages is difference between contract price and price at time of the purchase.

Distinguished in Orange, etc., R. R. Co. v. Placide, 35 Md. 320, holding, in absence of proof as to the market value of the bonds, measure of damages was difference between contract value of work and materials of contractors and amount paid to them; Drake v. Baker, 34 N. J. L. 362, holding, where one is prevented from conveying by latent flaw in title, vendee cannot recover for loss of bargain; Baldwin v. Munn, 2 Wend. 407, 20 Am. Dec. 631, holding, if vendor acts in good faith, but discovers defect in his title, he is not liable for damages; Cox v. Henry, 32 Pa. 19, holding, where vendee has been evicted by paramount title, damages is the consideration paid; Morgan v. Bell, 3 Wash. 579, 28 Pac. 933, 16 L. R. A. 623, and n., holding one contracting to convey land not his own is liable for amount paid him, with interest. Denied in Wallace v. Long, 105 Ind. 530, 55 Am. Rep. 228, 5 N. E. 671, holding, where one performed services in consideration of property to be conveyed, and contract is unenforceable because of statute of frauds, measure of damages is value of services and not of the property; Hertzog v. Hertzog, 34 Pa. St. 429, 433, holding, in action for breach of contract, where land was to be conveyed for services rendered, damages are value of consideration and not the value of the land.

6 Wheat. 119-127, 5 L. 221, THATCHER v. POWELL.

Tax sale.—Execution by public officer of power to sell land for taxes must be in strict pursuance of the statute, p. 127.

The citations collect a large number of cases upon this point, which affirm and apply this doctrine as follows: Mason v. Fearson, 9 How. 260, 13 L. 130, construing strictly a statute empowering a municipality to sell a lot to pay taxes; Early v. Doe, 16 How. 618, 619, 14 L. 1083, holding statute providing for duration of time of publication must be exactly complied with; Ransom v. Williams, 2 Wall. 319, 17 L. 805, holding burden of proving compliance with statute authorizing execution to issue against land of deceased debtor is on purchaser; note to Gray v. Larrimore, 2 Abb. (U. S.) 549, F. C. 5,721, holding statute authorizing suit to be commenced against a nonresident by means of service by publication, must be strictly pursued; Cowdrey v. Caneadea, 21 Blatchf. 352, 16 Fed. 533, construing statute providing for issuing bonds of a town in aid of a railroad; United States v. Brown, Gilp. 182, F. C. 14,663, holding bond taken under a statute must conform to it; United States v. Pacific R. R. Co., 1 McCrary, 7, 1 Fed. 102, holding, in order to establish a lien for taxes, all prerequisites must be complied with; Dunin v. Games, 1 McLean, 328, F. C. 4,176, holding person claiming under a tax deed must show that all legal requisites have been complied with; Hilliard v. Brevoort, 4 McLean, 25, F. C. 6,505, holding unless averment of citizenship be contradicted, it need not be proved on trial; Mayhew v. Davis, 4 McLean, 221, F. C. 9,347, holding collector of taxes must make a demand before judgment can be properly rendered against land; Arrowsmith v. Burlingim, 4 McLean, 499, F. C. 563, holding to render an auditor's deed evidence of title to land sold for taxes, it must be first shown that all legal requisites have been complied with; Tolmie v. Thompson, 3 Cr. C. C. 135, F. C. 14,080, holding everything necessary to proceedings for partition or sale of land of an intestate must be proved; United States v. Allen, 14 Fed. 265, holding sale under revenue tax law is void unless statute is literally followed; Lackett v. Rumbaugh, 45 Fed. 30, holding provision of code authorizing attachment of nonresident's property upon service of summons by publication cannot be recognized in case commenced in a Federal court; Cook v. Lasher, 73 Fed. 707, 42 U. S. App. 42, holding tax deed is invalid unless every prerequisite prescribed by statute has been performed; Turner v. Thrower, 5 Port. 53, holding party setting up title to fugitive slave sold under statute, must prove that all requisitions have been complied with; Wyman v. Campbell, 6 Port. 244, 31 Am. Dec. 691, holding proceedings of Orphans' Court are invalid, unless facts necessary to jurisdiction appear on the record; Lyon v. Hunt, 11 Ala. 313, 46 Am. Dec. 223, holding purchaser at tax sale must affirmatively show the fulfillment of every substantial requisite; Wightman v. Korsner, 20 Ala. 455, holding orders made at unauthorized Special Term of court of limited jurisdiction are void; Eslava v. Lepretre, 21 Ala. 522, 56 Am. Dec. 272, holding proceedings in Orphans' Court to declare party non compos mentis, if made without notice, are void; Foster v. Glazener, 27 Ala. 397, holding judgment of sister State, summary in character, void unless record shows statute authorizing the proceedings; Gunn v. Howell, 27 Ala. 675, 62 Am. Dec. 789, holding summary proceedings must pursue statute; Moody v. Bibb, 50 Ala. 248, holding appointment of guardian of supposed lunatic by Probate Court, without an inquisition of lunacy, is void; Driggers v. Cassady, 71 Ala. 533, holding jurisdiction of Probate Court to order sale of land for taxes, appearing on record, its judgment cannot be collaterally attacked; Carlisle v. State, 78 Ala. 488, holding sale of land for unpaid taxes invalid where notice was not given as prescribed by statute; Wartensleben v. Haithcock, 80 Ala. 570, 1 So. 42, holding the affidavit which the tax collector is required to file in office of probate judge, as to his inability to find personal property, is a jurisdictional fact without which order of sale is void; Gibney v. Crawford, 51 Ark. 40, 9 S. W. 311, holding, in proceeding for calling in county warrants, statute must be strictly pursued; dissenting opinion, People v. Holladay, 25 Cal. 309, to effect that no intendment is to be made in favor of regularity of proceedings of courts of special jurisdiction; Sears v. Terry, 26 Conn. 286, holding Probate Court in appointing conservators must conform strictly to the statutes; Dorrance v. Raynsford, 67 Conn. 6, 7, 52 Am. St. Rep. 268, 34 Atl. 707, holding purchaser under administrator's deed must prove that proper notice was given; Swepson v. Call, 13 Fla. 359, holding requirements of statute authorizing transfer of case from one court to another must be strictly followed; Dickerson v. Acosta, 15 Fla. 620, holding same as to forfeiture of land for nonpayment of taxes; D'Antignac v. City Council of Augusta, 31 Ga. 710, as to proceedings under statute whereby man may be deprived of his property; Fitch v. Pinckard, 4 Scam. 79, holding purchaser at tax sale must prove that every prerequisite has been complied with; as also in Graves v. Bruen, 11 Ill. 438, ruling similarly; Haywood v. Collins, 60 Ill. 336, holding, in summary proceedings, jurisdictional facts ought to appear in record; Dentler v. State, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 260, holding motion to vest title of land in State for nonpayment of taxes will not be granted unless notice has been published as prescribed by statute; Wilson v. Poole, 33 Ind. 447, holding where precept was void, the treasurer of city could not pass title; McEwen v. Gilker, 38 Ind. 246, sustaining demurrer to complaint where transcript on appeal from assessment for street work fails to show advertisement for bids; Doctor v. Hartman, 74 Ind. 231, holding where court is without jurisdiction of subject-matter, parties cannot confer it by waiver; Goring v. McTaggart, 92 Ind. 204, granting injunction to restrain sale of real estate upon a void precept issued for street work.

Other citing cases also follow and apply the proposition syllabused above: Scott v. Babcock, 3 G. Greene, 140, 142, holding tax sale not legal unless all requirements of statute have been fully complied with; Laraby v. Reid, 3 G. Greene, 421, holding same as to sale under revenue law; Cooper v. Sunderland, 3 Iowa, 123, 129, 66 Am. Dec. 56, 61, holding if sufficient appears on face of record in special proceeding to give jurisdiction, presumption is in favor of the proceedings; Bradley v. Jamison, 46 Iowa, 73, holding to acquire jurisdiction where service is by publication, statute must be strictly followed; Stafford v. Twitchell, 33 La. Ann. 528, holding where property was not legally assessed and notice was not properly given, sale for taxes was inoperative; Campbell v. Webb, 11 Md. 481, holding officer responsible who executes process of court of limited jurisdiction which shows the court is without jurisdiction; Steuart v. Meyer, 54 Md. 466, holding, under statute, onus of showing illegality of tax sale is on party resisting sale; Coward v. Dillinger, 56 Md. 61, holding objection to attachment that it does not show affirmatively upon its face that statutory requisites have been complied with may be availed of on motion to quash, in arrest of judgment or on appeal; Friedenwald v. Shipley, 74 Md. 230, 24 Atl. 156, holding examiner, in condemning streets, must conform strictly to statute; Folger v. Insurance Co., 99 Mass. 273, 96 Am. Dec. 751, refusing to recognize decree of New York in excess of the jurisdiction of that court; Wight v. Warner, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 388, holding jurisdictional facts must affirmatively appear in statutory proceeding;

Sibley v. Smith, 2 Mich. 496, holding, under statute, tax deed is prima facie evidence of regularity of proceedings; Platt v. Stewart, 10 Mich. 265, holding all jurisdictional facts ought affirmatively to appear on record in partition proceedings; Chauncey v. Wass, 35 Minn. 21, 30 N. W. 834, holding, in proceedings to enforce payment of taxes, jurisdiction of court is not affected by fact that taxes have been previously paid; Vick v. Mayor of Vicksburg, 1 How. (Miss.) 440, 445, 31 Am. Dec. 180, 185, holding partition not binding unless proper notice was given; Marks v. McElroy, 67 Miss. 547, 7 So. 408, holding no presumption of jurisdiction arises from decree removing disability of minor; Morton v. Reeds, 6 Mo. 73, holding strict proof of compliance with requisites is necessary in summary proceedings; dissenting opinion, State v. Woodson, 41 Mo. 238, majority holding same as to power to relieve parties from disabilities; Johnson v. Hahn, 4 Neb. 148, enjoining sale of realty where owner has personalty; Morrill v. Taylor, 6 Neb. 242, holding valid assessment a prerequisite to exercise of taking power; Cahoon v. Coe, 57 N. H. 569, 596, holding purchaser of tax title must show all requirements have been performed; Barrow v. Bispham, 11 N. J. L. 114, holding sale for taxes void where statute was not strictly pursued; State v. Mayor of Jersey City, 36 N. J. L. 192, holding illegality of assessment will avoid sale; State v. Mayor of Newark, 36 N. J. L. 290, as to publication of notice to taxpayers; Bloom v. Burdick, 1 Hill, 141, 37 Am. Dec. 307, holding statutory authority depriving one of his estate must be strictly pursued; Sharp v. Speir, 4 Hill, 86, and Hubbell v. Weldon, Lalor's Sup. to Hill & D. 145, ruling similarly as to sale for taxes; Striker v. Kelly, 7 Hill, 25, holding purchaser must prove sale was regular; Sherwood v. Reade, 7 Hill, 434, holding statute authorizing sale under mortgage must be strictly followed; Cruger v. Dougherty, 43 N. Y. 122, holding same as to tax sale; Merritt v. Port Chester, 71 N. Y. 312, 27 Am. Rep. 48, as to statute charging property with local improvements; Lafferty v. Byers, 5 Ohio, 458, holding misdescription of quantity in notice invalidated tax sale; Adams v. Jeffries, 12 Ohio, 272, 40 Am. Dec. 478, holding administrator's sale void where order failed to show heirs were parties; Spice v. Steinruck, 14 Ohio St. 218, as to statutory civil arrest; as also in Norman v. Zieber, 3 Or. 203; Waln v. Shearman, 8 S. & R. 369, holding five years' limit for institution of suit to recover land sold for taxes runs from time purchaser enters into possession; dissenting opinion, Stewart v. Shoenfelt, 13 S. & R. 375, majority holding sale valid under statute, though land was assessed by assessor from another township; In re College Street, 11 R. I. 474, holding assessment by commissioners without authority void; Baker v. Chisholm, 3 Tex. 158, holding court established by law cannot transcend the jurisdiction given by that law; Hadley v. Tankersley, 8 Tex. 20, holding purchaser at tax sale must show performance of all prerequisites; Mitchell v. Runkle, 25 Tex. Sup. 137, holding in summary proceedings, jurisdictional facts must appear; Solon v. State, 5 Tex. App. 305, holding courts cannot transcend the authority of the law of their creation; Boon v. Simmons, 88 Va. 265, 13 S. E. 441, holding every statutory provision in which the owner can possibly have an interest, must be strictly obeyed, else tax title will be void; McCullough v. Hunter, 90 Va. 701, 19 S. E. 776, holding sale by ex-collector void; McAllister v. Guggenheimer, 91 Va. 320, 21 S. E. 476, holding attachment void, statutory requirements not appearing on its face; Whitney v. Brunette, 15 Wis. 68, holding attachment not in statutory form void. See also valuable notes, 13 Am. Dec. 180, 17 Am. Dec. 507. And see 1 Blackf. 120, note; also note to State Tax Law Cases, 54 Mich. 447, collecting a great number of cases to illustrate the frequency of the intervention of the judiciary in tax proceedings.

Distinguished in Hunt v. Ellison, 32 Ala. 198, considering the effect of recitals of appearance in record; Minor v. Pres. of Natchez, 4 S. & M. 626, 43 Am. Dec. 494, holding departure of officer from statutory mode of advertising will not vitiate sale; Freeman v. Thompson, 53 Mo. 198, holding jurisdiction is acquired, when attachment is levied; Werz v. Werz, 11 Mo. App. 35, holding suit for divorce not within the rule; Liddel v. McVickar, 11 N. J. L. 52, 19 Am. Dec. 377, holding Orphans' Court may make a second order of sale to pay debts; Bulow v. Witte, 3 S. C. 325, holding sale by master in equity valid, though he accepted Confederate currency; Guilford v. Love, 49 Tex. 743, holding partition in Probate Court not a special proceeding; Williams v. Ball, 52 Tex. 609, 36 Am. Rep. 732, holding judgment of justice of peace cannot be collaterally attacked, because it does not show jurisdiction of facts; Keystone B. Co. v. Summers, 13 W. Va. 504, where there was no irregularity; Davis v. Pt. Pleasant, 32 W. Va. 294, 9 S. E. 230, holding city may tax agricultural lands incorporated into its limits, though not laid out into streets; Potts v. Cooley, 51 Wis. 355, 8 N. W. 154, holding tax deed valid where notice stated it was given by the holder of the certificate instead of by the owner.

Statutory construction.—In construing local statutes respecting real property, Supreme Court is governed by the decisions of the State tribunals, p. 127.

Rule applied in Jackson v. Chew, 12 Wheat. 168, 6 L. 589, adopting local law of real property as ascertained by State courts; Green v. Neal, 6 Pet. 297, 8 L. 405, following construction of State courts, of statute of limitations; McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 391, 28 L. 1031, 5 S. Ct. 667, following State court's construction of statute that decree setting aside a will is void as to all persons in interest not made parties; Ridings v. Johnson, 128 U. S. 224, 32 L. 405, 9 S. Ct. 76, followed decisions of State courts on registry laws; Thompson v. Phillips, 1 Bald. 284, F. C. 13,974, following settled construction of State law by the highest court of that State; Derby v. Jacques, 1 Cliff. 439, F. C. 3,817, holding as to writ of right in Circuit Court, the State having abolished the writ; Boyle v. Arledge, Hemp. 623, F. C. 1,758, holding exposition of State statutes by local tribunals are considered as a part of the law, and become a rule of property; Mitchell v. Lippincott, 2 Woods, 472, 473, F. C. 9,665, refusing to enforce a mortgage which, at time when made, was valid according to decisions of State courts, but according to subsequent decisions, invalid; Hiller v. Shattuck, 1 Flipp. 274, F. C. 6,504, following State ejectment law; New Hampshire v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 3 Fed. 888, following State construction of local laws; Hempstead v. Reed, 6 Conn. 487, holding it is not improper condescension for State court to yield to United States court construction of the Constitution; McClure v. Owen, 26 Iowa, 254, holding Federal courts will follow latest construction of State statute and Constitution by State courts; Levy v. Mentz, 23 La. Ann. 262, refusing to follow Federal interpretation of State statute adverse to construction of State courts.

Distinguished in Beals v. Hale, 4 How. 54, 11 L. 873, holding court not bound by State decision not in the court of last resort; Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 34, 27 L. 365, 2 S. Ct. 22, holding where State law has not been settled, Federal courts may exercise their own judgment; Vaughan v. Phebe, 1 Mart. & Yerg. 24, 17 Am. Dec. 779, holding judgment of another State as to freedom of slave not binding.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Blanchard v. Sprague, 1 Cliff. 290, F. C. 1,516, to point that in trials at law, laws of State furnish rules of evidence in Federal tribunals; Low v. Commissioners of Pilotage, Charl. (Ga.) 311, apparently not in point.

6 Wheat. 128, 5 L. 223, RANDOLPH v. BARBOUR.

Appeal in equity will be dismissed upon certificate from court below that it has not been prosecuted, p. 128.

Cited in note to 41 Am. St. Rep. 640, that failure to comply with rules prescribing time within which certain acts must be done, may deprive appellant of his right to judgment.

6 Wheat. 129, 130, 5 L. 223, MAYHEW v. THATCHER.

Interest on judgment.—As in Louisiana, questions of fact in civil cases are tried by the court, unless either of the parties demands a jury, in action of debt on a judgment, interest on original judgment may be computed without a writ of inquiry, p. 130.

Cited in Farrelly v. Cross, 10 Ark. 410, holding issue of nuli tiel record can be tried alone by the court; Tannehill v. Thomas, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 145, n., holding in action on note damages may be assessed by the court.

Appearance of party cures any objection to proceedings in attachment, p. 130.

Cited in State v. Richmond, 26 N. H. 242, holding, where selectmen had jurisdiction of subject-matter, irregularity in proceedings could be waived by parties; Campbell v. Wilson, 6 Tex. 393, holding non-resident appearing in attachment suit waives right to object to jurisdiction.

Record of a judgment in one State is conclusive evidence in another, although suit was commenced by attachment of property, defendant afterwards having appeared, p. 130.

Cited to this point and rule applied in Insurance Co. v. Harris, 97 U. S. 336, 24 L. 962, under similar facts; Taylor v. Carpenter, 2 Wood. & M. 4, F. C. 13,785, holding an "exemplified copy" is competent evidence of a judgment; Mills v. Stewart, 12 Ala. 95, holding if form of record of court does not indicate a limited jurisdiction, presumption favors its jurisdiction; Mitchell v. Ferris, 5 Houst. 40, holding jurisdiction of court rendering judgment may be inquired into; Whiting v. Burger, 78 Me. 294, 4 Atl. 696, holding judgment in New York is bar to action in Maine commenced first; Pepin v. Lachenmeyer, 45 N. Y. 29, holding certified copy of judgment is prima facie evidence of acts of the court therein; Carter v. Wilson, 1 Dev. & B. 365, holding only proper plea to record of one State pleaded in bar in another is nul tiel record; Bennett v. Morley, 10 Ohio, 103, holding under plea of nul tiel record to judgment of sister State, evidence is not admissible to show one of the defendants was not in fact served; Miller v. Miller, 1 Bailey L. 249, holding jurisdiction of court rendering judgment may be inquired into; Hoxie v. Wright, 2 Vt. 268, under facts similar to principal case; Black v. Smith, 13 W. Va. 793, holding validity of judgment rendered in another State by court with jurisdiction cannot be inquired into here. Cited in note, 3 McCrary, 613, 11 Fed. 384, on this subject, collecting authorities.

Distinguished in Hill v. Bowman, 14 La. 446, holding, under code, proceedings by attachment are in rem and in personam also; Choppin v. Harmon, 46 Miss. 307, refusing to enforce foreign judgment against married woman, where no separate property was pointed out from which to satisfy it; Judkins v. Insurance Co., 37 N. H. 477, holding nil debet is a good plea in action of debt upon a judgment rendered in another State; Price v. Hickok, 39 Vt. 301, holding judgment in another State against nonresident, not served in that State nor appearing, cannot be enforced here.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Sumner v. Marcy, 3 Wood. & M. 115, F. C. 13,609, apparently not in point.

6 Wheat. 131-135, 5 L. 224, FARMERS & MECHANICS' BANK v. SMITH.

State insolvent law discharging debtor from pre-existing contract is unconstitutional; and it makes no difference that suit was brought in court of State of which both parties were citizens, where contract was made and the discharge obtained, p. 134.

Rule applied in dissenting opinion, Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 333, 6 L. 647, majority holding State insolvent law discharging debtor's person and future debts, valid; Cook v. Moffat, 5 How. 308, 316, 12 L. 166, 169, holding debt in New York not discharged by insolvent laws of Maryland, though passed prior to its contraction; Planters' Bank v. Sharp, 6 How. 328, 330, 12 L. 459, holding law forbidding banks to transfer notes by indorsement or otherwise is unconstitutional; Woodhull v. Wagner, 1 Bald. 298, 301, F. C. 17,975, holding discharge under insolvent law of one State does not protect debtor from arrest for debt in another State; Byrd v. Badger, McAll. 265, F. C. 2,265, holding discharge under insolvent law of a State cannot be pleaded in bar of action on foreign contract; Newton v. Hagerman, 10 Sawy. 462, 22 Fed. 526, holding a discharge under a State insolvent law is no bar to an action by a citizen of another State, who did not appear or take part in the insolvency proceedings; as also in Towne v. Smith, 1 Wood. & M. 128, 130, F. C. 14,115; In re Klein, 14 Fed. Cas. 723 (reversed, 1 How. 278, n.), holding act of congress discharging debtor from pre-existing debts unconstitutional; Woodbridge v. Wright, 3 Conn. 527, holding discharge in one State does not operate against creditor in another; Deering v. Boyle, 8 Kan. 535, 12 Am. Rep. 489, holding statute exempting married woman's separate estate does not apply to note previously given; dissenting opinion, Doughty v. Sheriff, 27 La. Ann. 360, majority holding homestead law exempting from pre-existing debts, valid; Orr v. Lisso, 33 La. Ann. 477, holding foreign creditors subject to insolvency law; Savoye v. Marsh, 10 Met. 596, 43 Am. Dec. 453, holding discharge of makers and indorsers under our laws no bar to action by foreign indorsees; Marsh v. Putnam, 3 Gray, 556, holding certificate of discharge is a bar to an action on contract between citizens of this State to be performed elsewhere; Stevens v. Bowen, 49 Miss. 599, holding State may pass insolvent laws operating on future contracts; Hicks v. Hotchkiss, 7 Johns. Ch. 313, 11 Am. Dec. 483, holding insolvent act not a bar to foreign debt; Hoyt v. Thompson, 5 N. Y. 349, holding action may be maintained on chose in action assigned by a foreign insolvent corporation; Herring v. Selding, 2 Aikens, 17, holding insolvent laws attempting to discharge contracts void, though contracts be subsequent; Elton v. O'Connor, 6 N. Dak. 6, 33 L. R. A. 526, statute unconstitutional as to prior creditors, and the acceptance of a dividend by them no waiver. Cited in Merrill v. Bowler, 38 Atl. 116, affirming power of States to establish insolvency laws in absence of Federal act.

Distinguished in Hundley v. Chaney, 65 Cal. 363, 4 Pac. 238, where subsequent act was an amendment favoring creditor; Boardman v. De Forest, 5 Conn. 12, holding certificate of discharge could not be granted on judgment after petition on previously existing debt; Hardeman v. Downer, 39 Ga. 428, holding homestead law constitutional; Pugh v. Bussel, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 399, holding foreign creditor may sue debtor discharged here, but cannot imprison him.

6 Wheat. 135-146, 5 L. 225, UNITED STATES v. WILKINS.

Treasury department — Set-offs.— Under act of 1797, defendant is entitled to the benefit of any credit in his favor arising out of the same or of distinct transactions, and constituting a legal or equitable set-off against the United States, p. 143.

Rule applied in United States v. Ripley, 7 Pet. 25, 8 L. 596, holding allowance should be made for disbursements and services not ordinarily attached to the office; as also in United States v. Fillebrown, 7 Pet. 48, 8 L. 603; United States v. Hawkins, 10 Pet. 133, 9 L. 372, holding defendant may have his credits submitted to a jury at the trial if they have been refused by treasury officers; Gratiot v. United States, 15 Pet. 370, 10 L. 771, allowing commissions for disbursing public moneys, and extra services to be set off; United States v. Buchanan, 8 How. 105, 12 L. 1006, refusing to allow pursuer to set up losses arising from wrongs or torts done; Watkins v. United States, 9 Wall. 765, 19 L. 822, holding claims cannot be set off except in certain cases, unless they have been disallowed; United States v. Flanders, 112 U. S. 93, 28 L. 632, 5 S. Ct. 70, allowing revenue collector to set off money paid for advertising; United States v. Collier, 3 Blatchf. 350, F. C. 14,833, holding officer sued by United States can set off all equitable demands disallowed by proper officials; United States v. Mann, 2 Brock. 12, F. C. 15,716, holding officer of United States who has levied on money on an execution in favor of the government may retain it by way of set-off; United States v. Buchanan, Crabbe, 577, F. C. 14,678, allowing unliquidated damages arising from torts to be set off against a government claim; Yates v. United States, 90 Fed. 62, collecting authorities and applying rule, holding mere suspension of action on a claim not a disallowance; Andrews v. United States, 2 Story, 208, F. C. 381, holding collector entitled to compensation for rent, clerk, etc., though he did not transmit yearly account for same; United States v. Patrick, 73 Fed. 807, 36 U. S. App. 645, holding government agent not liable for property which careless clerk omits from a return; United States v. North American Com. Co., 74 Fed. 153, holding claims not presented to secretary of treasury cannot be set off; so also in United States v. Wade, 75 Fed. 266; Powers v. Central Bank, 18 Ga. 661, holding attorney may retain money sufficient to satisfy his claim; State v. Dennison, 84 N. Y. 281, holding State by coming into court does not subject itself to an affirmative judgment upon a set-off.

Distinguished in Gratiot v. United States, 4 How. 112, 11 L. 899, refusing to allow commission where officer received money and held same until it could be paid to agent; Browne v. United States, 1 Curt. 21, F. C. 2,036, holding extra compensation cannot be allowed to an officer because he has disbursed public money outside of his official duties; United States v. Hall, 2 Dill. 427, F. C. 15,284, holding courts cannot make allowance for items which secretary of the treasury has rejected; United States v. Smith, 1 Wood. & M. 194,

F. C. 16,346, holding a marshal is not entitled to commissions on money paid to deputies, it being part of his official duty; Raymond v. State, 54 Miss. 565, 28 Am. Rep. 384, holding defenses growing out of recoupment cannot be set up in suit against State; State v. Corbin, 16 S. C. 542, and Moore v. Tate, 87 Tenn. 740, 10 Am. St. Rep. 721, 11 S. W. 938, holding individual cannot interpose a set-off in action against him by State; as also in Borden v. Houston, 2 Tex. 610, 611, where action brought by Republic of Texas.

Contract.—Price not being settled in contract, a reasonable compensation is allowed, p. 143.

Cited and applied in dissenting opinion, Sun Mut. Ins. Co. v. Wright, 23 How. 420, 16 L. 532, majority holding policy was not binding where insured had not paid the additional premium to be fixed by the underwriter; Humaston v. Telegraph Co., 20 Wall. 28, 22 L. 281, holding if person breaks agreement to submit to arbitrators, value may be ascertained by a jury.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Smedes v. Utica Bank, 20 Johns. 384, apparently not in point.

6 Wheat. 146-152, 5 L. 228, YOUNG v. BRYAN.

Circuit Court has jurisdiction of suit brought by indorsee, a citizen of one State, against indorser, citizen of another, whether or not suit could have been brought in that court by indorser against maker, p. 151.

Rule applied in Evans v. Gee, 11 Pet. 83, 9 L. 641, under similar facts; Phillips v. Preston, 5 How. 291, 12 L. 157, holding this court has jurisdiction of suit brought by first indorser against second indorser, on independent contract to divide loss, though second indorsee and defendant be citizens of same State; Coffee v. Planters' Bank, 13 How. 187, 14 L. 106, holding this court has jurisdiction of action by corporation of one State, indorsee, against immediate indorser, citizen of another State; Superior City v. Ripley, 138 U. S. 96, 34 L. 916, 11 S. Ct. 289, applying same rule to acceptor and payee; Campbell v. Jordan, Hemp. 535, F. C. 2,362, holding indorsee, a citizen of another State, may sue his immediate indorser in this State, whether maker is suable in such court or not; Towne v. Smith, 1 Wood. & M. 119, 120, F. C. 14,115, holding Circuit Court has jurisdiction of action by holder against maker, where note was payable to bearer and passed by delivery; Varner v. West, 1 Woods, 495, F. C. 16,885, holding same where note payable to bearer was indorsed by payee; Brown v. Hull, 33 Gratt. 29, holding indorsement of overdue note is an independent contract.

Distinguished in Mollan v. Torrance, 9 Wheat. 538, 6 L. 154, holding where suit is against remote indorser, plaintiff must show intermediate indorser could have maintained the action there; Keary v. Bank, 16 Pet. 95, 10 L. 899, where maker, a citizen of same State as payee, was joined, the action could not be maintained; Parker v. Ormsby, 141 U. S. 85, 35 L. 656, 11 S. Ct. 913, holding Circuit Court has no jurisdiction of suit by assignee against maker, unless payee could have maintained it there; Shuford v. Cain, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 307, F. C. 12,823, holding where payee could not maintain action in Circuit Court against maker, his indorsee cannot; Hill v. Winne, 1 Biss. 277, F. C. 6,503, holding court had no jurisdiction of bill by assignee of mortgage, where mortgagor and mortgagee are citizens of the same State; Noell v. Mitchell, 4 Biss. 348, F. C. 10,287, holding court had no jurisdiction where it did not appear by averment that indorser and plaintiff were citizens of a different State than defendant; Milledollar v. Bell, 2 Wall., Jr., 337, F. C. 9,549, holding court had jurisdiction of suit by remote indorser if mortgagee could have maintained it.

Bills and notes.—Protest is not required by the common law on promissory note, p. 152.

Rule applied in Burke v. McKay, 2 How. 71, 11 L. 183; Bay v. Church, 15 Conn. 17, 18, protest is not necessary to charge indorser of promissory note made in one State and payable in another; Johnson v. Bank, 29 Ga. 260, not allowing notarial expenses, where protest was not required; Kaskaskia Bridge Co. v. Shannon, 1 Gilm. (Ill.) 24, holding notarial protest is not evidence, in case of inland bill, of demand of payment; Carter v. Burley, 9 N. H. 565, holding that a protest is not competent evidence of the dishonor of an inland bill of exchange; Coddington v. Davis, 3 Den. 22, holding indorser may make a valid agreement to waive presentment and notice; Ashe v. Beasley, 6 N. Dak. 193, holding protest not evidence of dishonor of a note; Brown v. Wilson, 45 S. C. 530, 55 Am. St. Rep. 782, 23 S. E. 633, holding protest is not necessary to promissory notes; as also in Corbin v. Planters' Nat. Bank, 87 Va. 664, 24 Am. St. Rep. 675, 13 S. E. 99. See also note to 43 Am. Dec. 219, on this subject, and note to 96 Am. Dec. 603, on protest as evidence, authorities being collected.

Distinguished in Simpon v. White, 40 N. H. 543, holding under statute protest is evidence in all cases.

6 Wheat. 152-176, 5 L. 229, THE BELLO CORRUNES.

Foreign consul may intervene in prize cases where property of individuals of his nation is involved, p. 168.

Rule applied in The Elizabeth, Blatchf. Pr. 253, F. C. 4,350, under similar facts; The Ship Adolph, 1 Curt. 89, F. C. 86, holding foreign consul could petition court to have proceeds of property libelled paid into the registry; The Conserva, 38 Fed. Rep. 434, allowing consul to file claim for vessel libelled, which belonged to his government.

Distinguished in dissenting opinion. De Lacy v. Antoine, 7 Leigh (Va.), 449, majority holding insufficient the claim of vice-consul that applicants are slaves, supported by affidavit that he believes them to be.

Foreign consul not specifically authorized, may not receive the proceeds of property libelled, p. 169.

Fraud.—A citizen of this country who has violated its laws by engaging in marine hostilities against Spain cannot claim as a captor in our courts, p. 169.

Rules applied in United States v. Packages, 27 Fed. Cas. 286, holding party fraudulently mixing prohibited and nonprohibited goods forfeits all; United States v. Barrels of Cement, 27 Fed. Cas. 297, holding license obtained by fraud will not prevent forfeiture.

Admiralty.—Property is not forfeited because of breach of revenue laws by captors or rescuers from captors, but only by those intrusted with vessel and cargo by the owners, p. 172.

Rule applied in the Waterloo, Blatchf. & H. 120, F. C. 17,257, holding same as to entry by salvors; Merritt v. Package of Mdse., 30 Fed. 197, deciding between claims for salvage, and of government for duties.

Salvage is forfeited by misconduct of salvors, spoliation or gross neglect, p. 173.

Rule applied in dissenting opinion in The Clandeboye, 70 Fed. 639, 25 U. S. App. 453, majority allowing salvage though salvor was guilty of unfair dealing; The Mulhouse, 17 Fed. Cas. 965, holding embezzlement of part of goods forfeits salvage; Roberts v. The St. James, 20 Fed. Cas. 926, holding failure to report saved property, forfeits salvage.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Hubbard v. Express Co., 10 R. I. 249, as to definition of "war."

6 Wheat. 176-187, 5 L. 235, SMITH v. UNIVERSAL INS. CO.

Marine insurance.—If any peril begins to act, but subject is removed before loss, and voyage is resumed, insured cannot abandon, p. 185.

Rule applied in Bradlie v. Insurance Co., 12 Pet. 402, 9 L. 1134, under similar facts; Greene v. Insurance Co. 9 Allen, 225, holding there was a total loss where vessel was barratrously taken, possession regained, but voyage was wholly broken up.

Distinguished in Andrews v. Marine Ins. Co., 3 Mason, 21, F. C. 374, holding insurance did not warrant a right of entry into the port for inquiry.

To constitute a technical total loss, it is not sufficient that the voyage has been lost, but loss must be occasioned by some peril actually insured against, p. 185.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Taylor v. Benham, 5 How. 276, 12 L. 151, apparently not in point.

6 Wheat. 187-192, 5 L. 238, THE ROBERT EDWARDS.

Circumstantial evidence is sometimes the most satisfactory and convincing, p. 190.

Cited in note to 62 Am. Dec. 181, on advantages and disadvantages of circumstantial evidence where authorities are collected.

Evidence.—Where the res gestæ in a revenue case are incapable of explanation consistent with innocence of the party, condemnation follows, although there be no positive testimony of the offense having been committed, p. 190.

Rule applied in The Meteor, 17 Fed. Cas. 197, holding failure of claimants to explain suspicious circumstances must lead to condemnation.

6 Wheat. 193, 194, 5 L. 239, NUEVA ANNA & LIEBRE.

Admiralty.—Condemnation in courts under an alleged republic not recognized by the United States will not be respected in courts of United States, p. 193.

Cited in dissenting opinion in Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 47, 8 L. 41, majority holding Cherokee Nation is not a "foreign State;" The Three Friends, 166 U. S. 58, 41 L. 916, 17 S. Ct. 590, holding "people" in statute includes any insurrectionary body conducting hostilities, although its belligerency has not been recognized; The Ambrose Light, 25 Fed. 429, holding recognition of belligerency to be a political act.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Lincoln v. Towne, 2 McLean, 477, F. C. 8,355, not in point.

6 Wheat. 194-203, 5 L. 239, THE COLLECTOR.

Appeal.—In proceedings in rem, on an appeal, the property follows the cause into the Circuit Court, but never to the Supreme Court, p. 203.

Rule applied in The William Bagaley, 5 Wall. 412, 18 L. 591, holding those not parties in lower court and who are neither appellants nor appellees cannot be heard as intervenors; The Lottawanna, 20 Wall. 225, 22 L. 264, under facts similar to main case; The "Wanata", 95 U. S. 617, 24 L. 466, holding appeal in admiralty carries up the whole fund; Davis v. The Seneca, Gilp. 40, F. C. 3,651, holding, after appeal, District Court no longer has control of prize; The Phebe, 1 Ware, 361, F. C. 11,065, holding when vessel is in custody of the law wharfinger cannot enforce his lien by detaining vessels; Folger v. The Robert G. Shaw, 2 Wood. & M. 540, F. C. 1,899, holding after appeal to Circuit Court no order about the property can be made in District Court; Braithwaite v. Jordan, 5 N. Dak. 252, 65 N. W. 720, 31 L. R. A. 259, holding action on appeal bond, not being integral of original action, would lie in lower court.

Distinguished in The Peterhoff, Blatchf. Pr. 622, F. C. 11,025, holding appeal to Supreme Court places the property under the control of that court.

It is a great irregularity for marshal to keep property or proceeds, or to distribute same, without a special order from the court, but such irregularity may be waived, pp. 201, 202.

6 Wheat. 204-235, 5 L. 242, ANDERSON v. DUNN.

Constitutional law.— Many powers are necessarily implied under the express grants of power in the Constitution. It would be utopian to suppose that government can exist without leaving the exercise of discretion somewhere, pp. 225, 226.

Cited in Ex parte Henderson, 6 Fla. 294, holding Circuit Courts are not confined to cases of original jurisdiction; Opinion by the Chief Justice, 8 Fla. 511, holding Supreme Court can act through a majority of its members; dissenting opinion, Griswold v. Hepburn, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 61, majority holding congress and the States are forbidden to make currency a legal tender; Metropolitan Bank v. Van Dyck, 27 N. Y. 430, holding contra to preceding case; Casey v. State, 25 Tex. 386, holding contempts are not criminal cases, though of a criminal nature.

Courts have power to impose decorum in their presence, and submission to their lawful mandates, p. 227.

Rule applied in Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 303, 32 L. 408, 9 S. Ct. 70, also reported in 13 Sawy. 460, holding Circuit Courts can punish contempts of their authority, as incidental to their general powers; Eilenbecker v. Plymouth Co., 134 U. S. 36, 33 L. 803, 10 S. Ct. 426, holding District Court can punish disobedience of injunction restraining one from selling liquor; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 489, 38 L. 1061, 14 S. Ct. 1138, holding, in matter of contempt, a jury is not required; dissenting opinion of same case, 155 U. S. 5, 39 L. 50, 15 S. Ct. 20; In re Debs, 158 U. S. 596, 39 L. 1106, 15 S. Ct. 916, holding Circuit Court can punish disobedience of injunction to remove obstructions from highways, for passage of interstate commerce and mails; United States v. New Bedford Bridge, 1 Wood. & M. 440, F. C. 15,867, holding the authority to punish for contempt is granted as a necessary incident in establishing a court; In re Lyman, 55 Fed. 42, holding unlawful ousting of District Court from its rooms to be contempt; Ex parte Burr, 2 Cr. C. C. 391, F. C. 2,186, holding court may inquire in a summary manner as to charges of malpractice; Towns v. Springer, 9 Ga. 132, holding superior court cannot punish disobedience to process of inferior court; Hawkins v. State, 125 Ind. 573, 25 N. E. 819, holding Circuit Court has inherent power to punish contempt; State v. Markuson, 5 N. Dak. 160, 64 N. W. 938, holding, since statute prescribing minimum punishment for contempt, does not impair the inherent power of courts to punish for contempts, it is valid; State v. Tugwell, 19 Wash. 252, 43 L. R. A. 723, affirming court's power to punish summarily a contempt in publishing article derogatory to member of the court. See also note on this subject, 12 Am. Dec. 179.

Contempt.—House of representatives has power to punish for contempt, p. 229.

The citations collect a number of cases on this point, which affirm and apply the doctrine as follows: Ex parte Nugent, 18 Fed. Cas. 472, 473, holding senate has power to punish for contempt, and is the sole judge of its own contempts; Ex parte McCarthy, 29 Cal. 405, holding State senate may punish witness for refusing to testify; Smith v. Myers, 109 Ind. 7, 58 Am. Rep. 380, 9 N. E. 697, holding courts cannot enjoin secretary of state from delivering sealed returns to speaker of house; Langenberg v. Decker, 131 Ind. 482, 31 N. E. 194, 16 L. R. A. 113, power to punish for contempt may not be conferred on State board of tax commissioners; dissenting opinion, Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 675, 15 N. W. 644, majority holding determination of assembly of the regularity of preliminary proceedings is not conclusive upon the courts; In re Gunn, 50 Kan. 211, 32 Pac. 486, 19 L. R. A. 535, house of representatives may imprison a contumacious witness; In re Davis, 58 Kan. 379, 380, 49 Pac. 163, holding legislative committee has no power to imprison witness; Lowe v. Summers, 60 Mo. App. 649, holding assembly can punish for contempt; State v. Matthews, 37 N. H. 453, holding all legislative and judicial bodies have an inherent right to punish contempt; People v. Keeler, 99 N. Y. 475, 476, 478, 52 Am. Rep. 53, 54, 55, 2 N. E. 620, 621, 622, holding power of legislature to punish for contempt, not abrogated by penal code, declaring such contempts shall be punished according to its provisions and not otherwise; Ex parte Dalton, 44 Ohio St. 150, 151, 153, 58 Am. Rep. 801, 802, 804, 5 N. E. 138, 139, holding legislature can imprison for contempt. See note to 22 Am. St. Rep. 425; also 7 Wheat. 45, note, 5 L. 393.

Criticised and some of the reasoning of the opinion overruled in Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 197, 198, 199, 200, 26 L. 389, 390, holding congress could not compel a witness to testify in an investigation, the subject-matter of which was judicial, not legislative; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 485, 38 L. 1060, 14 S. Ct. 1136, holding (with few exceptions), power to compel performance of a legal duty can only be exercised by a competent judicial tribunal; Sanborn v. Carleton, 15 Gray, 402, holding warrant of arrest issued by senate of United States and addressed to the sergeant-at-arms, cannot be served in Massachusetts by a deputy; Whitcomb's Case, 120 Mass. 122, 123, 21 Am. Rep. 505, holding city council cannot punish for contempt; F. & F. P. R. R. Co. v. Woodhull, 25 Mich. 104, 12 Am. Rep. 236, holding legislature, except in a few cases, cannot exercise judicial authority. Referred to in People v. Keeler, 99 N. Y. 477, 483, 52 Am. Rep. 55, 60, as overruled by Kilbourn v. Thompson, supra, in so far as asserting a general power in the house to punish for contempt and the conclusiveness of its judgment.

Imprisonment for contempt by legislative body terminates with the adjournment, p. 231.

Rule applied in Whittem v. State, 36 Ind. 216, holding imprisonment for contempt must be for a definite time; In re Davis, 58 Kan. 380, 49 Pac. 163, holding legislative committee cannot imprison witness; Hovey v. Elliott, 145 N. Y. 137, 39 N.E. 843, 39 L.R.A. 460, holding statute limits modes of punishment for, to modes there specified.

Miscellaneous citations.—Cited in note to In re Barry, 136 U. S. 608, 34 L. 507, 42 Fed. 121, F. C. 1,059, and in the opinion of Betts, J., In the Matter of Barry, that where Federal courts have been given jurisdiction by statute, the remedies are to be according to the common law. Miscited Jones v. Cullen, 100 Tenn. 19.

6 Wheat. 235-239, 4 L. 249, LA CONCEPTION.

Admiralty.—New proofs taken in an admiralty case on appeal, p. 238.

Cited to this point in Folger v. The Robert G. Shaw, 2 Wood. & M. 540, 541, F. C. 4,899, holding after case is entered in appellate court, and appellant declines to prosecute, court should give judgment on the merits.

Prize.—Capture of Spanish property by vessel built, armed, equipped, and owned in the United States, there being no satisfactory proof of her transfer to a citizen of a belligerent State, is illegal, p. 239.

Admiralty.—Transfer of ownership of vessel, is best evidenced by bill of sale, p. 239.

6 Wheat. 240-260, 5 L. 251, WILLINKS v. HOLLINGSWORTH.

Agency.—Consignor of a cargo taken and sold by consignee, who in turn consigns a cargo to the consignor, who, although objecting to the purchase, receives and sells it, is liable to such consignee in action for money had and received and may not recoup damages for breach of his orders, p. 259.

Rule applied in Bryne v. Doughty, 13 Ga. 53, holding an adoption of a transaction by principal may arise by implication; Newton v. Bronson, 13 N. Y. 594, 67 Am. Dec. 93, holding that executor may ratify contract executed by agent.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Jameson's Appeal, 1 Mich. 103, apparently not in point; State v. Crocker, 5 Wyo. 398, 40 Pac. 684, as an illustration that certificate of division does not remove the original cause to higher court.

6 Wheat. 260-264, 5 L. 256, GREEN v. WATKINS.

Abatement.—At common law, death of party before judgment abates the suit, p. 262.

Cited to this point in Macker v. Thomas, 7 Wheat. 531, 532, 5 L. 515, 516, where deceased party never appeared; Martin v. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co., 151 U. S. 697, 702, 38 L. 320, 322, 14 S. Ct. 542, 544, holding, as under West Virginia code personal tort does not survive, death of party pending writ of error abates the action; Currell v. Villars, 72 Fed. 332, holding real action in equity abated at party's death; Gould v. Carr, 33 Fla. 537, 15 So. 264, 24 L. R. A. 136, and n., so does a real action in law; as also in Hoffman v. St. Clair Judge, 40 Mich. 352.

Distinguished in Mellus v. Thompson, 1 Cliff. 129, F. C. 9,405, because death of party to a bill in equity does not extinguish the right of further prosecution.

Abatement.—Death of party pending writ of error, and whether before or after assignment of error, does not abate suit, respecting either realty or personalty, pp. 263, 264.

Rule applied in Marck v. A Lodge, 29 Fed. 896, holding death of party did not abate appeal; United States M. A. A. v. Weller, 30 Fla. 215, 11 So. 787, holding subsequent marriage of female defendant did not abate writ of error; Carroll v. Bowie, 7 Gill, 38, death after rule for reargument was entered did not abate cause; Coombs v. Jordan, 3 Bland Ch. 328, 22 Am. Dec. 275, holding lien was continued during appeal, though party had died; Long v. Thompson, 55 Pac. 979, affirming and following the rule; Tunstall v. Walker, 2 S. & M. 686, refusing petition for reargument, where party died after case was taken under advisement; Philhower v. Voorhees, 12 N. J. L. 69, holding appeal is not abated by marriage of appellee; Bemus v. Beekman, 3 Wend. 673, holding on death of party to writ of error, judgment is entered nunc pro tunc; Gibbs v. Belcher, 30 Tex. 85, holding death does not abate a writ of error. See also valuable note to 50 Am. St. Rep. 742, on substitution, and revivor.

Distinguished in Martin v. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co., 151 U. S. 697, 38 L. 320, 14 S. Ct. 542, holding under law of West Virginia, death of party pending writ of error abates action for personal tort, see dissenting opinion, p. 710, 38 L. 324, 14 S. Ct. 544; Harryman v. Harryman, 49 Md. 70, holding where party dies before appeal is taken, action abates.

Appeal.—Death of party produces no change in the condition of the cause or the rights of the parties, pp. 263, 264.

Cited to this point in Hatfield v. Bushnell, 1 Blatchf. 395, F. C. 6,211, 22 Vt. 661, holding death of party will not divest court of jurisdiction.

Writ of error does not abate by death of party, at common law, and his personal representatives not only may become parties, but may be required to, p. 263.

Cited in Poole v. Nixon, 19 Fed. Cas. 1001, 9 Pet. App. 770, 9 L. 310, holding a bill of review lies only in favor of a party or privy to the original suit; Townsend v. Davis, 1 Ga. 496, 44 Am. Dec. 676, holding no person can bring writ of error to reverse judgment, who was not a party or a privy to the record, or prejudiced by the party; New Orleans, etc., R. R. Co. v. Rollins, 36 Miss. 387, holding writ of error lies against administrator without revivor; Foresman v. Haag, 37 Ohio St. 145, holding proceedings in error may be revived against representatives of deceased defendant; Wood v. Yarbrough, 41 Tex. 542, holding writ of error will only issue at instance of party, his legal representative, or privy.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Planters' Bank v. Bass, 2 La. Ann. 434, as an instance of where a court exercised inherent power; Dorman v. Richard, 1 Fla. 296, defining nature of a writ of error.

6 Wheat. 264-448, 5 L. 257, COHEN v. VIRGINIA.

	PAGE.
Federal judicial power in suits between States.....	76
Meaning of Constitution to be collected from words.....	77
Federal courts have jurisdiction of Federal questions even when State a party,	77
Affirmative words often imply a negative, but not when fully operative without,	80
Supreme courts original jurisdiction may not be enlarged.....	81
Dicta out not to control .....	81
Supreme court must take jurisdiction, if it should.....	82
A suit, defined .....	83
Writ of error, its effect.....	83
Writ of error is not a suit.....	85
United States is not suable.....	85
United States is in many respects a nation and supreme.....	85
Contemporaneous exposition of Constitution relied upon.....	86
District of Columbia, power of congress over.....	87
Power of congress over ceded territory.....	87
Act of congress should not unnecessarily interfere with State penal laws.....	88
Charter of Washington as to lottery sales.....	88
Miscellaneous.....	88

Jurisdiction.—Judicial power of the United States extends to controversies between States, pp. 378, 383.

Cited and applied in Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 720, 727, 9 L. 1259, 1261, holding Supreme Court has jurisdiction of controversy, as to boundaries between States; Texas v. Lewis, 14 Fed. 66, holding congress may confer upon Circuit Court jurisdiction of case by State against an alien.

Distinguished in State ex rel. v. Doyle, 40 Wis. 200, 203, 215, holding a Circuit Court has no jurisdiction of suit by foreign corporation to prevent a State officer from revoking a license.

Constitutional law.— Spirit and meaning of the Constitution must be collected from the words, p. 380.

Rule applied in The Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 42, 8 L. 40, holding Cherokee Nation is not a "foreign State" within the meaning of that term in the Constitution; Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 722, 723, 748, 9 L. 1260, 1270, holding where no exception is made in terms none will be by implication; Ames v. Kansas, 111 U. S. 471, 28 L. 490, 4 S. Ct. 448, holding suits not required to be brought originally in Supreme Court, may be removed from State to Circuit Courts; United States v. Kendall, 5 Cr. C. C. 247, F. C. 15,517, holding Circuit Court of the District of Columbia has jurisdiction of cases arising under Federal law or Constitution if either party resides or is found therein; Gittings v. Crawford, Taney, 3, 9, F. C. 5,465, holding grant of jurisdiction to one court does not imply that it is exclusive; Lafayette, etc., R. R. Co. v. Geiger, 34 Ind. 212, declaring that Constitutions are to be construed strictly.

Constitutional law.— The people made the Constitution and can unmake it; but this power to unmake resides in the whole body of the people not in any subdivision of them, p. 389.

Cited upon this point in Noble v. Cullom, 44 Ala. 565, holding since Constitution of 1865 was never submitted to the vote of the people, it was never the Constitution of Alabama; Mayor, etc., of Mobile v. Dargan, 45 Ala. 317, holding municipal charter may be altered by legislature, and by the Constitution; Ex parte Selma R. R., 45 Ala. 726, 6 Am. Rep. 726, holding legislature has power to authorize a county to subscribe for stock in a railroad company; Ex parte Reid, 50 Ala. 443, holding right to office is determined by number of votes cast, and not by the certificate of election; Opinion of Randall, 12 Fla. 683, holding resignation of senators or their expulsion cannot have the effect of creating a quorum composed of less than the majority elected; Wanser v. Hoos, 60 N. J. L. 525, 64 Am. St. Rep. 602, 38 Atl. 450, holding construction of Constitution is a judicial question. Cited, arguendo, in dissenting opinion, Eakin v. Raub, 12 S. & R. 358.

Federal courts have jurisdiction of cases arising under the laws and Constitution of the United States whoever may be parties, and even when a State is a party and the proceeding a writ of error to the State court, p. 392.

The importance of Cohen v. Virginia as authority for this principle is well illustrated by the large number of citations. They make the following applications of this doctrine, for which the principal case is a leading authority; Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 744, 9 L. 1268, holding court has jurisdiction to determine boundary between States; Mayor v. Cooper, 6 Wall. 253,

18 L. 853, holding Circuit Court has jurisdiction of a case whose correct decisions depend upon the construction of Federal law or Constitution; Gold-Washing, etc., Co. v. Keyes, 96 U. S. 201, 24 L. 658, holding case not removable to Federal court, because a construction of Federal law or Constitution may be necessary; Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 264, 270, 25 L. 650, 652, holding this includes both civil and criminal cases; see dissenting opinion of same case, p. 286, ff, 25 L. 658; Railroad Co. v. Mississippi, 102 U. S. 140, 26 L. 98, holding a petition for mandamus to remove bridge authorized by act of congress was removable; Ames v. Kansas, 111 U. S. 462, 467, 468, 470, 28 L. 487, 489, 490, 4 S. Ct. 443, 445, 446, 447, holding suit in the nature of quo warranto against a State corporation, consolidated under a law of the United States, arises under the laws of the United States; Kansas-Pacific v. Atchison R. R. Co., 112 U. S. 416, 28 L. 795, 5 S. Ct. 209, where both corporations claimed title to same land under different acts of congress; dissenting opinion, In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 94, 34 L. 82, 10 S. Ct. 679, majority holding habeas corpus lies where person is in custody for doing act in pursuance of a Federal law; United States v. Texas, 143 U. S. 643, 36 L. 292, 12 S. Ct. 492, holding Supreme Court has original jurisdiction of suit involving boundary between a territory and a State; United States v. Old Settlers, 148 U. S. 468, 37 L. 524, 13 S. Ct. 667, holding that a claim which could only be asserted by disregarding a treaty is not one arising from or growing out of it; Whitten v. Tomlinson, 160 U. S. 238, 40 L. 411, 16 S. Ct. 300, holding United States courts can by habeas corpus inquire into person detained under State authority in violation of the Constitution, or of a law or treaty of the United States; Stanley v. Board of Supervisors, 19 Blatchf. 147, 6 Fed. 561, holding Circuit Court has jurisdiction of suit to enforce right conferred by Federal statute regarding taxation of national bank shares; The Wave, Blatchf. & H. 251, F. C. 17,297, holding admiralty courts have jurisdiction of actions for pilot fees; United States v. Williams, 4 Cr. C. C. 392, 393, F. C. 16,712, holding all cases arising in the District of Columbia arise under the Constitution and laws of the United States; Connor v. Scott, 4 Dill. 246, F. C. 3,119, holding case involving construction of bankrupt law removable; North Carolina v. Trustees of University, 1 Hughes, 135, 136, F. C. 10,318, 7 Bank. Reg. 468, holding Circuit Courts have not jurisdiction of a case by a State against its own citizens; Van Allen v. Railroad Co., 1 McCrary, 600, 3 Fed. 546, 547, holding that a case arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States, whenever it involves their construction; Magee v. Railroad Co., 2 Sawy. 449, F. C. 8,945, holding fact that a corporation is organized under a Federal law, is not sufficient to give Circuit Court jurisdiction; Dowell v. Griswold, 5 Sawy. 43, F. C. 4,041, holding that an averment that an action arises on a Federal law is not enough to confer jurisdiction; The State Lottery Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 3 Woods, 240, 266, F. C. 8,541, holding Circuit Court had jurisdiction, where bill charged that law repealing charter impaired the obligation of the contract; Virginia Coupon Cases, 25 Fed. 659, 660, holding Federal courts have jurisdiction of cases arising thus, though a State be a party; Kansas v. Bradley, 26 Fed. 289, deciding that a point once decided by Supreme Court is no longer a Federal question; Woodfin v. Phœbus, 30 Fed. 294, holding Federal courts have jurisdiction of fort on Federal territory; Illinois v. Illinois C. R. R. Co., 33 Fed. 725, holding averment that repealing act impairs the obligation of a contract is sufficient to make cause removable; Briscoe v. South Kansas Ry. Co., 40 Fed. 277, holding that a Federal question is involved when a right depends on the construction of a Federal law; Jones v. Florida, C. & P. R. R. Co., 41 Fed. 71, holding dispute as to pre-emptor's title to land under land laws is such a question; Dunton v. Muth, 45 Fed. 395, holding case removable, where parties claimed under Federal statute; Pacific Gas Co. v. Ellert, 64 Fed. 429, holding statement by plaintiff that defendant will claim his acts violate the Constitution will not give jurisdiction; Wood v. Drake, 70 Fed. 883, holding suit against Federal officer for false imprisonment for executing process of Federal court is removable; King v. Lawson, 84 Fed. 210, where defendant's claim had been rejected by secretary of the interior; Nashville, etc., Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 86 Fed. 172, 173, 179, 181, holding question involving right of equalization is removable.

In the State courts the following citing cases affirm and apply the syllabus doctrine: Pollard v. State, 65 Ala. 630, holding State courts bound by decisions of Supreme Court of United States construing act organizing national banks; Rison v. Powell, 28 Ark. 435, holding State courts have concurrent jurisdiction of bill to set aside conveyance fraudulently made by bankrupt; Mims v. Wimberly, 33 Ga. 595, holding judges of Confederate States have the right to adjudicate cases arising under the enrolling acts of the Confederate congress; Lord v. Cannon, 75 Ga. 308, holding a Federal question was involved, where shortly before adjudication of bankruptcy exempt land was sold under execution from Circuit Court; dissenting opinion, State v. Kolsem, 130 Ind. 454, 29 N. E. 601, 14 L. R. A. 574, and n., legislature is exclusive judge of necessity for special law; Municipality No. One v. Wheeler, 10 La. Ann. 747, holding that power to decide constitutionality of a law lies with the judiciary; Johnson v. The N. O. Nat. B. Assn., 33 La. Ann. 480, holding suit involving Federal question is removable by State to Circuit Court; dissenting opinion of Hathway in 44 Me. 521, majority holding free colored male person could vote; Opinion of Appleton, p. 559, of same case; Delafield v. Illinois, 2 Hill, 168, holding State court may take jurisdiction where another State is a party; State v. Hoskins, 77 N. C. 541, 543, 544, holding case removable where revenue officer of the United States was indicted; Setzer v. Douglass, 91 N. C. 429, holding action for breach of contract by United States marshal against his deputy not removable; dissenting opinion. Piqua Bank v. Knoup, 6 Ohio St. 380, 382, majority holding the Supreme Court of the United States has appellate jurisdiction over State courts; Tod ex rel. v. Fairfield Com. Pleas, 15 Ohio St. 387, holding Federal law providing for removal of suits for acts done under the authority of the president during the rebellion is constitutional; State v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co., 23 Or. 431, 31 Pac. 962, holding no cause for removal where defendant was a foreign corporation and question was settling of freight rates; State v. Bowen, 8 S. C. 387, holding action in nature of quo warranto to determine title to office of presidential elector not removable; State v. Davis, 12 S. C. 553, holding jurisdiction of State court over soldier discharged with crime not removable by writ of habeas corpus to Federal court; State v. Insurance Co., 97 Tenn. 99, 36 S. W. 724, holding State court will follow decision of Federal court as to Federal question; Stone v. Edwards, 35 Tex. 558, holding State court cannot enjoin the infringement of a patent; Ableman v. Booth, 11 Wis. 508, 520, court dividing as to the appellate jurisdiction of Supreme Court of the United States over State courts. Cited, arguendo, on this point in dissenting opinion, Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 585, 9 L. 839. Cited approvingly, but without special application, in McCormick v. Humphrey, 27 Ind. 152.

Distinguished in Starin v. New York, 115 U. S. 257, 29 L. 390, 6 S. Ct. 31, holding question whether city of New York has exclusive right to ferries over public waters, is not one arising under Federal laws and Constitution; Jones v. The Oceanic S. N. Co., 11 Blatchf. 410, F. C. 7,485, holding suit against corporation chartered by Great Britain not removable from State court; Celluloid Manuf. Co. v. Goodyear D. V. Co., 13 Blatchf. 388, F. C. 2,543, where the question was not one of Federal jurisdiction, but whether the facts were sufficient to sustain the bill; Wise v. Nixon, 76 Fed. 5, where construction of Federal statute was not involved; Fleming v. Clark, 12 Allen, 195, 198, refusing to discharge prisoner on writ of habeas corpus issued by justice of Supreme Court, if no question of law were brought up; State v. Trustees, 65 N. C. 716, 717, holding Circuit Court has no jurisdiction of suit by a State against its own citizens; Applegate v. Dowell, 15 Or. 527, 16 Pac. 658, holding an averment of fraud upon revenue laws of United States is not sufficient to show a Federal question; Texas, etc., Ry. Co. v. McAllister, 59 Tex. 359, holding case not removable, where petition states it to be a Federal question, without giving facts.

Constitutional law — Construction.—Affirmative words are often negative of other objects than those affirmed, but not where they have full operation without giving them this negative meaning, pp. 395, 398.

Cited and applied in Lyon v. Kent, 45 Ala. 665, holding a charge will be presumed to be oral, when record does not show it was moved for in writing; Territory v. Ortiz, 1 N. Mex. 13, holding an affirmative grant of original jurisdiction in particular cases implies a negative in all other cases.

Distinguished in Ex parte Henderson, 6 Fla. 295, 296, holding grant of one power by Constitution is not necessarily exclusive of another.

Original jurisdiction of Supreme Court is defined by the Constitution, and cannot be enlarged by congress, pp. 396, 399, 400.

Cited and applied in dissenting opinion, Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 202, 205, 8 L. 97, 98, majority holding this court has jurisdiction to issue writ of mandamus to Circuit Court commanding it to review its settlement of proposed bill of exceptions; Ex parte Vallandigham, 1 Wall. 252, 17 L. 593, holding Supreme Court cannot review proceedings of a military commission by certiorari; Böes v. Preston, 111 U. S. 258, 28 L. 421, 4 S. Ct. 410, holding constitutional grant of original jurisdiction to Supreme Court of cases affecting consuls, does not make it exclusive; Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 298, 299, 32 L. 246, 8 S. Ct. 1378, holding Supreme Court has not original jurisdiction of an action by a State upon a judgment in its own courts against a corporation of another State; California v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co., 157 U. S. 258, 39 L. 694, 15 S. Ct. 602, holding Supreme Court has no original jurisdiction of suit between a State and its citizens, and citizens of another State; Baker v. Biddle, 1 Bald. 403, 406, F. C. 764, holding jurisdiction of Federal courts is defined and limited by the Constitution and the law; Territory v. Ortiz, 1 N. Mex. 13, holding legislature cannot extend original jurisdiction of Supreme Court.

Dicta ought not to control judgment in a subsequent suit, pp. 399-402.

Rule applied in Carroll v. Carroll, 16 How. 287, 14 L. 941, and Matz v. Chicago, etc., R. R. Co., 85 Fed. 183, refusing to follow decision of State court, construing State statute, where such construction was not necessary to decide the case; Northern Bank v. Porter Township, 110 U. S. 615, 28 L. 261, 4 S. Ct. 257, holding Supreme Court has never intended to adjudge that recitals by officers in municipal bonds are conclusive as to legislative authority to issue them. The following citing cases refuse to be bound by dicta: Pollock v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 157 U. S. 574, 39 L. 817, 15 S. Ct. 687, see dissenting opinion, p. 647, 39 L. 842, 15 S. Ct. 715; United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 679, 42 L. 901, 18 S. Ct. 468; United States v. Kendall, 5 Cr. C. C. 260, F. C. 15,517; Fidelity Trust Co. v. Gill Car Co., 25 Fed. 748; Northern Pac. R. R. Co. v. Sanders, 46 Fed. 244; dissenting opinion, Northern Pac. R. R. Co. v. Barden, 46 Fed. 617; King v. McLean Asylum, 64

Fed. 340, 21 U. S. App. 481, 26 L. R. A. 786; U. S. v. Addyston, etc., Co., 85 Fed. 299; Hovey v. Insurance Co., 10 Bank. Reg. 229, 12 Fed. Cas. 606; dissenting opinion, Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 135, 34 L. 141, 10 S. Ct. 693; Hudson v. Schwab, 18 N. B. R. 480, 12 Fed. Cas. 816; Uhlfielder v. Levy, 9 Cal. 615; Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 598; Ex parte Young Ah Gow, 73 Cal. 448, 15 Pac. 81; Norris v. Moody, 84 Cal. 149, 24 Pac. 38; In re Johnson, 98 Cal. 542, 33 Pac. 463, 21 L. R. A. 383; Wadsworth v. Ry. Co., 18 Colo. 610, 36 Am. St. Rep. 317, 33 Pac. 519; dissenting opinion, Rupert v. People, 20 Colo. 431, 38 Pac. 705; Mayer v. Erhardt, 88 Ill. 457; Lake Shore, etc., R. R. v. Wilson, 11 Ind. App. 493, 38 N. E. 345; Express Co. v. Foley, 46 Kan. 464, 26 Am. St. Rep. 112, 26 Pac. 668; De Ende v. Moore, 2 Mart. (La.) (N. S.) 351; Decoster v. Wing, 76 Me. 455; Haines v. Lewiston, 84 Me. 25, 24 Atl. 432; Alexander v. Worthington, 5 Md. 489; Jameson's Appeal, 1 Mich. 103; Robinson v. Rice, 3 Mich. 244; St. Louis, etc., Co. v. Gas, etc., Co., 16 Mo. App. 60; King v. Amy, etc., Co., 9 Mont. 574, 24 Pac. 205; Coler v. Commissioners, 6 N. Mex. 150, 27 Pac. 635; Southard v. Curley, 134 N. Y. 155, 30 Am. St. Rep. 648; dissenting opinion, Coler v. Commissioners, 6 N. Mex. 150, 27 Pac. 635; Warren v. Wallis, 42 Tex. 475; State v. Doyle, 40 Wis. 190, 22 Am. Rep. 695; Olin v. Denver & R. G. R. R. Co., 53 Pac. 457. Cited in note, 27 Am. Dec. 632, 633, on this subject, collecting authorities.

Distinguished in Hawes v. Contra Costa Water Co., 5 Sawy. 297, 298, F. C. 6,235, holding where the court determines two points upon either of which the decision might turn, the judgment is authoritative; Clarke v. Figgins, 27 W. Va. 671, following previous decisions without inquiring into the grounds for them.

Jurisdiction.—The Supreme Court must take jurisdiction, if it should; it can no more decline jurisdiction which is given than usurp it if not given, p. 404.

Cited in Chicago v. Dey Co., 35 Fed. 872, 1 L. R. A. 749, holding law defining duties of railroad commissioners in order to prevent unjust discrimination, is constitutional; Capital City G. Co. v. Des Moines, 72 Fed. 838, taking jurisdiction; dissenting opinion, Marks v. State, 45 Ala. 43, majority holding the association was not authorized to award money by lot; Mayor, etc., of Mobile v. Dargan, 45 Ala. 318, holding provision in municipal charter in conflict with Constitution adopted afterwards is void; Bailey v. Railroad Co., 4 Harr. (Del.) 403, 44 Am. Dec. 605, holding Supreme Court of State must decide on the constitutionality of its laws; as also in Bank of St. Marys v. State, 12 Ga. 499, ruling similarly; In re Gunn, 50 Kan. 187, 32 Pac. 478, 19 L. R. A. 527, Supreme Court may review action of house of representatives; Davis, ex parte, 41 Me. 50, holding judiciary must pronounce on the constitutionality of acts; Rhodes v. Walsh, 55 Minn. 548, 57 N. W. 213, 23 L. R. A. 635, on meaning of constitutional provision. Cited to this point in United States v. Kendall, 5 Cr. C. C. 277, F. C. 15,517, with no special application.

Statutory construction.—The phraseology of the eleventh amendment to the Constitution, providing that judicial power “shall not be construed” to extend to suits against a State, imports an absolute prohibition, p. 405.

Cited to this point and similar phraseology of an act similarly construed in Ex parte Poulson, 19 Fed. Cas. 1207; and dissenting opinion, Livingston v. Story, 11 Pet. 397, 9 L. 764.

A suit is the prosecution of some demand in a court of justice, p. 407.

The following citing cases affirm and variously apply this definition: Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 624, 10 L. 624, court dividing as to whether writ of habeas corpus is a suit, in a sense to justify removal from State to Federal court; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 113, 18 L. 293, holding proceeding for writ of habeas corpus is a “suit;” King v. McLean A., etc., 64 Fed. 336, 21 U. S. App. 481, 26 L. R. A. 789, petition for habeas corpus, is a suit; United States v. Inlots, 26 Fed. Cas. 487, holding proceeding by United States to condemn land, is a “suit;” Appleton v. Turnbull, 84 Me. 76, 24 Atl. 593, construing “suit” in statute to include any action or bill brought by a judgment creditor against a corporation, or by any trustee, receiver, etc.; State v. Newell, 13 Mont. 305, 34 Pac. 29, holding that a habeas corpus proceeding is a special proceeding in the nature of an action; Callen v. Ellison, 13 Ohio St. 453, 82 Am. Dec. 449, holding trial court is judge of whether suit was properly commenced; State v. Davis, 12 S. C. 538, deciding that a defense interposed to an indictment, depending for its force upon the Constitution and laws of the United States, is not a case arising under them; In re Jenckes, 6 R. I. 22, holding application to be admitted to the poor debtor’s oath, is a civil suit; Ex parte Towles, 48 Tex. 433, holding that an ex parte proceeding is not a suit; In re Booth, 3 Wis. 39, holding prosecution claim to a fugitive from labor is a “suit;” Porter v. Rich, 70 Conn. 259, 39 Atl. 177, 39 L. R. A. 360, an inquest of insanity is not an “action.” Cited in In re Kaine, 14 How. 119, 14 L. 351, without special application.

Writ of error brings up the record and submits the judgment below to a re-examination, pp. 409, 410.

This holding is affirmed and applied by the following citing cases: Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 433, 437, 15 L. 980, 982, holding paper certified after the writ was issued to be no part of the record; Nations v. Johnson, 24 How. 205, 16 L. 632, holding writ of error is a continuation of the original litigation; Pomeroy v. Bank of Indiana, 1 Wall. 600, 17 L. 641, affirming judgment where case was brought upon writ of error but neither bill of exceptions, agreed statement, nor special verdict was brought up; Rogers v. Burlington, 3 Wall. 661, 18 L. 82, holding bill of exceptions is unnecessary, where error is apparent on face of the record; New Orleans R. Co. v. Morgan, 10 Wall. 261, 19 L. 893, allowing writ of error where it was called a judgment in the record and treated as such by the court and the parties; Slaughter-House Cases, 10 Wall. 291, 19 L. 920, holding writ of error removes the record, and suspends jurisdiction of lower court; Insurance Co. v. Piaggio, 16 Wall. 386, 21 L. 359, holding where all the facts are apparent on the record, court could modify the judgment; Atherton v. Fowler, 91 U. S. 146, 23 L. 266, holding a writ of error acts on the court having the record, not the parties; as also in Kitchen v. Randolph, 93 U. S. 87, 23 L. 810; dissenting opinion, Underwood v. McVeigh, 131 U. S. 120, 122, App., 21 L. 953, 954, court dismissing writ of error because it should have been directed to the Court of Appeals of the State; Dower v. Richards, 151 U. S. 663, 666, 38 L. 307, 308, 14 S. Ct. 454, 455, holding Supreme Court upon a writ of error cannot review judgment of State court on question of fact; Hudson v. Parker, 156 U. S. 286, 39 L. 427, 15 S. Ct. 453, holding bail may be taken pending writ of error; In re Chetwood, 165 U. S. 461, 41 L. 788, 17 S. Ct. 392, holding Circuit Court cannot prevent parties applying for, or Supreme Court from granting a writ of error; Ricks v. Hall, 4 Port. 180, holding writ of error does not lie from decision of court of commissioners of revenue and roads; Ex parte Knight, 61 Ala. 484, holding writ of error may be granted for error of law apparent of record, and when granted suspends judgment; Chipman v. City of Waterbury, 59 Conn. 497, 22 Atl. 289, holding writ of error cannot be brought to the Supreme Court of a district, other than that in which the case was decided; State v. Costello, 61 Conn. 501, holding an appeal is not in itself a criminal proceeding; Carter v. Bennett, 5 Fla. 94, holding writ of error to State court operates as a supersedeas; Ex parte Henderson, 6 Fla. 289, distinguishing between an appeal and a writ of error; Townsend v. Davis, 1 Ga. 496, 44 Am. Dec. 676, holding no one but a party or privy can bring a writ of error to reverse a judgment; State v. Jones, 7 Ga. 423, holding a writ of error does not lie in a criminal case at the instance of the State; Bryan v. Bates, 12 Allen, 209, 210, holding writ of error from justice of United States Supreme Court operates as a supersedeas in a criminal case in which final judgment and sentence have been given; McLean v. Isbell, 44 Mich. 132, 134, holding certiorari to a justice is in the nature of an appeal; dissenting opinion, Day v. Holland, 15 Or. 470, 15 Pac. 858, as to the effect of an appeal; Fitzsimmons v. Johnson, 90 Tenn. 426, 17 S. W. 103, holding that a writ of error is not an original suit; dissenting opinion, Shorey v. Wyckoff, 1 Wash. Ter. 352, majority denying motion to amend precipe by assignment of errors, where none were assigned in lower court; Peck v. Truesdell, 51 Pac. 798, where suit is pending to reverse a judgment declaring a tax deed void, statute would not run against the claim for taxes. Cited in Sedgwick v. Dawkins, 16 Fla. 201, but not necessary to the decision.

Distinguished in Nadenbousch v. Sharer, 2 W. Va. 293, holding a supersedeas is in the sense of the statute a new suit; Hughes v. The Dundee, etc., Co., 11 Sawy. 559, 560, 28 Fed. Rep. 44, 45, holding a writ of error is in the nature of a new suit, and does not suspend the judgment.

Writ of error from Supreme Court is not a suit and its issuance against a State does not violate the eleventh amendment, prohibiting suit against States, pp. 405-412.

Criticised in Padelford v. Mayor, etc., 14 Ga. 499, as misconstruing the eleventh amendment.

Constitutional law.—No suit can be commenced or prosecuted against the United States, pp. 411, 412.

Cited and applied in United States v. Eckford, 6 Wall. 488, 18 L. 921, holding that defendant pleading a set-off against the United States cannot have affirmative judgment; Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 19, 33 L. 848, 10 S. Ct. 508, holding State cannot be sued in Circuit Court by one of its own citizens without its consent; Lee v. Kaufman, 3 Hughes, 126, F. C. 8,191, holding courts have cognizance of an action in ejectment against an officer or agent of the United States, though the government intervenes to assist such officer; Hans v. Louisiana, 24 Fed. 68, holding a citizen cannot sue his own State; Virginia Coupon Cases, 25 Fed. 657, holding State may withdraw offer to compromise any time before acceptance by the creditor; Briggs v. Light-Boats, 11 Allen, 176, holding lien cannot be enforced against boat belonging to the United States.

Distinguished in United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 207, 27 L. 177, 1 S. Ct. 249, holding officers and agents of the United States may be sued, and in deciding the lawfulness of their possession of the property, the title of the United States may be adjudged; see dissenting opinion, 226, 27 L. 184, 1 S. Ct. 266; St. Luke's Hospital v. Barclay, 3 Blatchf. 264, F. C. 12,241, holding bill in equity to stay pending suit may be maintained, though court may not have jurisdiction over the parties for other relief.

Powers of United States.—The United States is for many purposes a nation and for all these objects it is supreme, pp. 413, 414.

The following citing cases affirm this doctrine, making various applications of it: Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. 533, 20 L. 306, holding legal tender laws constitutional and applicable to contracts made before and after their passage; Claffin v. Houseman, 93 U. S. 142, 23 L. 840, holding under the bankrupt act assignee might sue in State courts to recover assets, exclusive jurisdiction not having been given to Federal courts; The Chinese Exclusion Case, 130 U. S. 604, 32 L. 1075, 9 S. Ct. 629, holding that in relation to foreign governments the United States is a nation; dissenting opinion, United States v. E. C. Knight, 156 U. S. 20, 39 L. 332, 15

S. Ct. 257, majority holding that the creation of a monopoly bears no direct relation to interstate or foreign commerce, and cannot, be suppressed; In re Debs, 158 U. S. 579, 39 L. 1101, 15 S. Ct. 904, holding United States has full power over interstate commerce, and the transmission of mails; Nashville, etc., Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 86 Fed. 171, holding case involving right of equalization removable; French v. Tumlin, 9 Fed. Cas. 800, holding void a provision in State Constitution that courts cannot enforce a debt the consideration of which was a slave; The Parkhill, 18 Fed. Cas. 1188, holding when, because of war, its courts are closed, a government may enforce its authority in such modes as are lawful in foreign wars; Warner v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 9 Cal. 714, 718, holding that the United States are supreme within constitutional limits; Lick v. Faulkner, 25 Cal. 431, holding valid an act making treasury notes legal tender; In re Pearson, 8 Fla. 502, holding a court can enforce the attendance of its own members; Padelford v. Mayor, etc., of Savannah, 14 Ga. 510, as having laid down the rule that a State can be sued; dissenting opinion, Ex parte Holman, 28 Iowa, 137, majority holding State court cannot release, by writ of habeas corpus, one held under process of Federal courts; Legal Tender Cases, 52 Pa. St. 60, holding congress can make treasury note legal tender; Commonwealth v. Railroad Co., 62 Pa. St. 292, 1 Am. Rep. 403, holding tonage tax law constitutional; Calhoun v. Calhoun, 2 S. C. 300, holding section of State Constitution declaring contracts for slaves void unconstitutional.

Contemporaneous exposition of Constitution relied on, in construing its provisions, p. 420.

The following citing cases rely upon this precedent: Cooley v. Board of Wardens, etc., 12 How. 315, 13 L. 1003, holding State law constitutional, providing for forfeiture of half-pilot fees by vessel neglecting to take a pilot; dissenting opinion of Curtis, J., in Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 616, 15 L. 788, majority holding act forbidding master from taking slaves to a territory unconstitutional; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 733, 28 L. 1138, 5 S. Ct. 741, holding act passed by the first legislature, in executing a constitutional power, is a contemporary exposition, entitled to much weight; The Laura, 114 U. S. 416, 29 L. 148, 5 S. Ct. 883, holding that the granting of remissions of penalties by officers other than president, is not an invasion of the pardoning power; Auffmordt v. Hedden, 137 U. S. 329, 34 L. 680, 11 S. Ct. 109, determining the conclusive effect of appraisal of dutiable goods; McElvain v. Mudd, 44 Ala. 54, 4 Am. Rep. 110, holding act relating to fugitives from labor constitutional; Warner v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 9 Cal. 722, 723, holding Supreme Court of United States has appellate jurisdiction over State courts; People v. Lowenthal, 93 Ill. 200, construing State Constitution; People v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 485, 40 N. E.

317, sustaining validity of statute; Board of Comrs. v. Bunting, 111 Ind. 145, 12 N. E. 151, holding practical construction of statute equivalent to positive law; as also in State v. Harrison, 116 Ind. 308, 19 N. E. 150, and Bd. of Comrs. v. Gwin, 136 Ind. 572, 36 N. E. 241, 22 L. R. A. 409, holding same; Hovey v. State, 119 Ind. 388, 21 N. E. 890, holding practical exposition of Constitution of controlling force; dissenting opinion, Griswold v. Hepburn, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 55, majority holding congress cannot make treasury notes legal tender; Harrison v. Commonwealth, 83 Ky. 171, holding practical construction of a statute controlling; as also in Trustees of C. C. C. etc. v. Manning, 72 Md. 130, 19 Atl. 603, to same effect; Winchester v. Glazier, 152 Mass. 323, construing partnership articles; Detroit Ry. Co. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 647, 48 N. W. 1009, following practical construction of a statute; likewise in Franklin v. Kelley, 2 Neb. 88; State v. Holcomb, 46 Neb. 94, 64 N. W. 439, holding that contemporaneous exposition in doubtful cases is conclusive; Metropolitan Bank v. Van Dyck, 27 N. Y. 427, holding congress can make treasury notes legal tender; People v. Carr, 100 N. Y. 243, 3 N. E. 85, 53 Am. Rep. 165, holding that legislative action, so closely following the adoption of constitutional provision, is entitled to great weight in construing such provision; Tillman v. Cocke, 9 Baxt. 451, construing legislative powers; dissenting opinion, Trout, etc., Club v. Mather, 68 Vt. 354, 35 Atl. 329, 33 L. R. A. 574, as to "boat-able waters;" Bridges v. Shallcross, 6 W. Va. 576, and France v. Connor, 3 Wyo. 463, 27 Pac. 576, construing statutes. See also note on this point in 13 Am. St. Rep. 145. Cited, arguendo, in Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 621, 10 L. 1091; Ex parte Gist, 26 Ala. 164.

Distinguished in State v. Wrightson, 56 N. J. L. 209, 210, 28 Atl. 65, 22 L. R. A. 559, holding contemporaneous construction will not abrogate the plain letter of a law.

District of Columbia.—Congress has power to exercise exclusive legislation over District of Columbia, p. 424.

Cited to this point in Mattingly v. District of Columbia, 97 U. S. 690, 24 L. 1099, holding congress may confirm the proceedings of a board in the District.

Congress has power to legislate exclusively over territory ceded to United States, p. 428.

Rule applied in United States v. Amcs, 1 Wood & M. 85, F. C. 14,441, holding State laws cannot be permitted to embarrass the object of the cession; United States v. Baum, 74 Fed. 45, holding Federal courts can punish crime committed in a territory since admitted as a State; Grether v. Wright, 75 Fed. 757, 758, 43 U. S. App. 770, holding congress has power to exempt bonds of District of Columbia from State or municipal taxes; United States v. Greiner, 26 Fed. Cas. 39, 40, holding the taking of a fort in Georgia, which had been ceded to the United States, to be treason.

Act of congress should not be so construed as to interfere with the penal laws of a State, unless its language renders such construction inevitable, p. 443.

Cited and applied in Commonwealth v. Holbrook, 10 Allen, 203, holding payment of license fee to United States, does not authorize sale of liquor in a State, in violation of its domestic laws; Lacey v. Palmer, 93 Va. 169, 57 Am. St. Rep. 802, 24 S. E. 932, 31 L. R. A. 826, holding State can pass law forbidding betting, though race is to be in another State.

Charter of city of Washington did not authorize the corporation to force the sale of lottery tickets in States whose laws prohibit such sales, p. 443-446.

Miscellaneous citations.—Citation in Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 206, 8 L. 98, and Commonwealth v. Casey, 12 Allen, 220, as to argument of counsel. Cited but apparently to no particular point decided, in Bains v. The Schooner James, 1 Bald. 561, F. C. 756; Perry Mfg. Co. v. Brown, 2 Wood. & M. 455, F. C. 11,015; Poole v. Nixon, 9 Pet. App. 771, 19 Fed. Cas. 993, 9 L. 305; Tilton v. Railroad Co., 35 La. Ann. 1068; Bledsoe v. Railroad Co., 40 Tex. 564, 569; Horner v. United States, 147 U. S. 462, 37 L. 242, 13 S. Ct. 414; Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh (Va.), 634; Texas v. Lewis, 12 Fed. 5; In re Brinkman, 7 Bank. Reg. 426, 4 Fed. Cas. 147; Ex parte Andrews, 40 Ala. 657; Delafield v. Illinois, 2 Hill, 169, 171; Arapahoe Co. v. Railroad Co., 4 Dill. 280, F. C. 502, and Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 222, 8 L. 104. Cited erroneously in Connoley v. Cheesborough, 21 Ala. 168, and Broadwell v. Swigert, 7 B. Mon. 42. Cited in Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 566, 8 L. 503, as an instance of where records of State courts were certified by the court; Trust Co. v. Maquillan, 3 Dill. 380, F. C. 4,668, as illustrating tendency of State courts to cripple Federal jurisdiction; People v. Taylor, 3 Dcn. 94, as to what is a sufficient description in indictment for selling lottery tickets; Wheeling v. Mayor, 1 Hughes, 98, F. C. 17,502, to point that corporations have the powers expressly granted, and those necessary to carry these into effect; Talcott v. Pine Grove, 1 Flipp. 156, F. C. 13,735, to point that citizen has a right to rely upon the action of the sovereignty.

6 Wheat. 448-450, 5 L. 302, GIBBONS v. OGDEN.

Final decree.—A decree of highest State court, affirming order refusing to dissolve an injunction, is not a final decree from which an appeal lies to Supreme Court, p. 449.

Cited and applied in The Palmyra, 10 Wheat. 504, 6 L. 376, holding decree of restitution is not final, when damages are uncertain; Verden v. Coleman, 18 How. 86, 15 L. 272, under facts similar to main case; The Nacoohee, etc., Co. v. Davis, 40 Ga. 318, holding that granting or refusing injunction in pending cause, is not a final judgment; Ringgold's Case, 1 Bland Ch. 17, holding there can only be an appeal from a final decree. See also note to Williams v. Field, 60 Am. Dec. 433, that an injunction pendente lite is not a final decree.

Distinguished in Poole v. Nixon, 9 Pet. Appx. 770, 19 Fed. Cas. 1000, holding Circuit Court has cognizance of a bill of review, after an appeal to the Supreme Court, if it is brought on newly-discovered evidence.

Miscellaneous.—Erroneously cited in Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 150, 32 L. 640, 9 S. Ct. 258.

6 Wheat. 450-452, 5 L. 302, SULLIVAN v. FULTON STEAMBOAT CO.

Jurisdiction.—Jurisdictional facts must appear on the record, p. 451.

Cited and applied in dissenting opinion, Marshall v. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co., 16 How. 340, 348, 350, 14 L. 964, 968, 969, majority holding that an averment that defendants are a Maryland corporation, will give jurisdiction; dissenting opinion, Dodge v. Woolsey, 18 How. 364, 15 L. 415, majority holding stockholder, being resident of another State, may file his bill against bank in Federal court; dissenting opinion, Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 473, 15 L. 728, majority holding Circuit Court has not jurisdiction of suit brought by a free negro, since he is not a citizen; Special opinion of Daniel, J., in Philadelphia, etc., R. R. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How. 216, 16 L. 78, deciding that under general issue, no question could be raised as to the capacity of parties to sue; Hornthail v. The Collector, 9 Wall. 565, 19 L. 562, holding suit could not be maintained where jurisdictional facts were not averred; Mail Co. v. Flanders, 12 Wall. 135, 20 L. 251, dismissing bill where both parties were citizens of same State; Grace v. Insurance Co., 109 U. S. 283, 284, 27 L. 934, 935, 3 S. Ct. 210, 211, holding an averment that parties reside in, or that a firm does business in, or is "of" a particular State, is insufficient to show citizenship; Chapman v. Barney, 129 U. S. 681, 32 L. 801, 9 S. Ct. 427, holding jurisdictional facts must clearly appear in the record; Shaw v. Mining Co., 145 U. S. 451, 36 L. 772, 12 S. Ct. 938, holding a corporation incorporated in one State cannot be compelled to answer in a Circuit Court held in another State; The Fideliter, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 579, 1 Sawy. 156, F. C. 4,755, holding District Court had no jurisdiction, where it did not appear that seizure was prior to the commencement of the action; Speigle v. Meredith, 4 Biss. 126, F. C. 13,227, holding bill must allege jurisdictional facts; as also in Donaldson v. Hazen, Hemp. 424, F. C. 3,984; United States v. Woolsey, 28 Fed. Cas. 767, and Blair v. Manufacturing Co. 7 Neb. 154, all to same effect; Merrill v. Jones, 8 Port. 557, holding consent of parties cannot confer jurisdiction not possessed. Cited, arguendo, in Parkhurst v. Kinsman, 3 Wood. & M. 174, F. C. 10,761.

6 Wheat. 452, 453, 5 L. 303, THE JONQUILLE.

Admiralty suit will be dismissed, where appeal has not been prosecuted, upon certificate to that effect from court below, p. 452.

No citations.

6 Wheat. 453-475, 5 L. 303, HUGHES v. BLAKE.

Equity pleading.—Positive denial in answer of matter in bill must be overcome by more testimony than that of one witness, and this applies to answer in support of a plea, p. 468.

Rule applied in Tobey v. Leonards, 2 Wall. 430, 17 L. 845, holding evidence sufficient to overcome answer; Voorhees v. Bonesteel, 16 Wall. 30, 21 L. 271, where evidence was insufficient; as also in Godden v. Kimmell, 99 U. S. 206, 25 L. 433; Monroe C. Co. v. Becker, 147 U. S. 54, 37 L. 76, 13 S. Ct. 220; Clark v. Hackett, 1 Cliff. 278, F. C. 2,823; Delano v. Winsor, 1 Cliff. 506, F. C. 3,754; Tobey v. Leonard, 2 Cliff. 51, F. C. 14,067, all holding evidence insufficient; Parker v. Phetteplace, 2 Cliff. 79, F. C. 10,746; Hayward v. Bank, 4 Cliff. 296, F. C. 6,273, and Gilman v. Libbey, 4 Cliff. 459, F. C. 5,445, holding evidence insufficient to overcome answer; as also in Miles v. Miles, 32 N. H. 166, 64 Am. Dec. 367; Bellows v. Stone, 18 N. H. 472, holding matter in answer, whether affirmative or negative, if responsive to the bill, must be so overcome. Cited approvingly in Scammon v. Cole, 3 Cliff. 479, F. C. 12,432, put decision on other grounds. Cited in the following cases to the point that answer is not evidence as to matter not set up in the bill: Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 209, 211, 9 L. 399, refusing to admit deed not referred to in answer; Tilghman v. Tilghman, Bald. 491, 495; F. C. 14,045, holding a party must rely on case stated in his bill or answer; Byers v. Fowler, 12 Ark. 286, 288, 54 Am. Dec. 287, 289, holding, where answer failed to aver want of notice of fraud, he could not sustain his title; Brown v. Welch, 18 Ill. 346, 68 Am. Dec. 550, holding one defending against a previous unrecorded equitable title must prove payment of purchase money; Heatherly v. Hadley, 4 Or. 19, holding proof cannot aid an allegation of service.

Distinguished in Hutson v. Jordan, 1 Ware, 388, F. C. 6,959, holding there is no such rule in admiralty; Barraque v. Siter, 9 Ark. 550, holding, where answer gives a circumstantial account inconsistent with its denial, testimony of a single witness is sufficient; Wright v. Cornelius, 10 Mo. 186, holding declarations of one not a proper party is not evidence against the other defendant; Busby v. Littlefield, 33 N. H. 85, where answer set up affirmative allegations.

Equity pleading.—A replication to a plea admits its sufficiency in point of law, p. 472.

Cited in Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 14 Pet. 257, 10 L. 445, applying the rule to similar facts; also Myers v. Dorr, 13 Blatchf.

26, F. C. 9,988, and Cottle v. Krementy, 25 Fed. 495, ruling similarly; National, etc., Co. v. Beam Co., 83 Fed. 29, holding proper office of plea is to interpose some conclusive defense so suit may be determined without a hearing on the merits; Reissner v. Anness, 20 Fed. Cas. 513, holding if replication is found true in fact, bill is dismissed as a matter of course; Denver v. Lobenstein, 3 Colo. 219, holding same where plea was res adjudicata; Rouskulp v. Kerschner, 49 Md. 522, but plaintiff may controvert its truth; Bassett v. Company, 43 N. H. 253, discussing rules applicable to pleas in equity; Hartman v. Evans, 38 W. Va. 672, 18 S. E. 811, holding, after replication is filed, exceptions to answer are treated as abandoned; Ely v. Wilcox, 20 Wis. 528, 91 Am. Dec. 438, dismissing bill, though plea replied to was bad, on proof of facts as pleaded.

Distinguished in Farley v. Kittson, 120 U. S. 314, 30 L. 688, 7 S. Ct. 539, holding at the hearing upon plea and replication no fact is in issue but the truth of the matter pleaded; also Pearce v. Rice, 142 U. S. 41, 35 L. 930, 12 S. Ct. 135; Horn v. Detroit, etc., Co., 150 U. S. 625, 37 L. 1203, 14 S. Ct. 218; United States v. Land Co., 148 U. S. 40, 37 L. 359, 13 S. Ct. 461, holding defendant may set up some special matter by plea and thus defeat recovery; Green v. Bogue, 158 U. S. 500, 39 L. 1069, 15 S. Ct. 983, holding plaintiff may properly ask court to review decree of court below, sustaining the sufficiency of defendant's pleas; Matthews v. Manufacturing Co., 18 Blatchf. 85, 87, 2 Fed. 233, 234, overruling plea where it merely denied an averment in the bill; Seebold v. Lockner, 30 Md. 137, holding upon record as amended it was necessary for appellate court to decide whether the pendency of prior suit was a bar; Swayze v. Swayze, 37 N. J. Eq. 186, holding rule not applicable to negative pleas; Greene v. Harris, 9 R. I. 409, allowing party to withdraw replication, in order to question the sufficiency of the plea. See also Greene v. Harris, 11 R. I. 33.

6 Wheat. 475-481, 5 L. 309, BARTLE v. COLEMAN.

Bail.—By Virginia law defendant may enter special bail and defend the suit, at any time before final judgment, but if he appears and pleads, or confesses, without giving special bail, the appearance bail is discharged, p. 478.

Cited in Gilliam v. Allen, 4 Rand. 502, holding clerk cannot, of his own motion, receive special bail.

Joint judgment.—If erroneous as to one, must be reversed as to the other, p. 481.

Cited to this point and applied in Hamilton v. Knight, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 26, holding, if affidavit against two joint debtors be insufficient as to one, it will not authorize an attachment of the property of both.

6 Wheat. 481-514, 5 L. 311, PREVOST v. GRATZ.

Trusts.—To establish existence of trust onus probandi is on one alleging it, p. 494.

Cited and applied in Hopkins v. Grimshaw, 165 U. S. 352, 41 L. 742, 17 S. Ct. 404, and Troll v. Carter, 15 W. Va. 583, holding evidence insufficient to establish a trust; Walker v. Carrington, 74 Ill. 453, holding, after lapse of time, the most clear and satisfactory proof is required to prove fraud; Rochester v. Levering, 104 Ind. 570, 4 N. E. 208, holding that defendant need only make it certain to a common intent that price was fair, since so many years had elapsed; Harris v. Bratton, 34 S. C. 267, 13 S. E. 450, holding lapse of time should be considered in determining existence of a trust.

Agent acquiring property through defect in title of principal holds as trustee for him, p. 496.

Rule applied in Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. 555, 11 L. 1099, holding agent or trustee cannot purchase at his own sale; White v. Ward, 26 Ark. 447, holding any benefit derived from such a purchase inures to the benefit of the cestui que trust; Arnold v. Cord, 16 Ind. 178, holding if one verbally agreeing to bid in land for another at a sheriff's sale, takes title in his own name, he will be decreed a trustee; MacGregor v. Gardner, 14 Iowa, 337, treating as void conveyance by agent without consideration so he might acquire title himself; Sypher v. McHenry, 18 Iowa, 239, setting aside sale where trustee was interested in the purchase; Coffee v. Ruffin, 4 Cold. 512, upholding purchase by trustee of trust property where transaction was shown to be fair; Lamar v. Hale, 79 Va. 158, holding partners can acquire partnership property only for benefit of the firm.

Limitation of suit.—Where fraud is concealed, lapse of time is no bar to enforcement of a trust, p. 497.

Cited approvingly in Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. 561, 11 L. 1102, holding that within what time a constructive trust will be barred depends upon the circumstances of the case; McIntire v. Pryor, 173 U. S. 55, holding gross fraud did away with defense of laches; Philippi v. Philippe, 115 U. S. 157, 29 L. 340, 5 S. Ct. 1184; Kirby v. Railroad Co., 120 U. S. 136, 30 L. 572, 7 S. Ct. 433, and Dugan v. O'Donnell, 68 Fed. 989, all holding time runs from when fraud was or should have been discovered; Baker v. Whiting, 3 Sumn. 486, F. C. 787, applying rule where trust was not repudiated; Naddo v. Bardon, 47 Fed. 789 (see 51 Fed. 498, 4 U. S. App. 642); Merrill v. Monticello, 66 Fed. 166, and Hayden v. Thompson, 71 Fed. 69, 36 U. S. App. 361, holding implied trust barred by lapse of time unless there had been a concealment of the cause of action; Snyder v. McComb, 39 Fed. 298, holding express trust not barred by lapse of time; Kelley v. Boettcher, 85 Fed. 63, 56 U. S. App. 376, holding no time runs as long as a fraud is concealed; Bunuel v. Stoddard, 4 Fed. Cas. 683, holding time not a bar to fraud of trustee; McKneely v. Terry, 61 Ark. 543, 33 S. W. 957, holding action not barred, where defendant was guilty of fraud; Farwell v. Telegraph Co., 161 Ill. 596, 44 N. E. 914, holding time does not run until discovery of fraud; Pratt v. Thornton, 28 Me. 362, 48 Am. Dec. 496, holding the trust could not be barred; McDowell v. Goldsmith, 2 Md. Ch. 390, holding statute of limitations runs from time of discovery of fraud or mistake; Manaudas v. Mann, 22 Or. 531, 30 Pac. 424, holding statute of limitations has no application to an express trust; Wood v. Fox, 8 Utah, 401, 32 Pac. 52, holding time started to run from disavowal of trust. Approved in Johnston v. Smith, 21 Tex. 730, putting decision on other grounds. Cited in valuable notes, 12 Am. Dec. 373, 99 Am. Dec. 389, 2 Am. St. Rep. 799, 801, on this subject, authorities being collected. Cited approvingly in Robinson v. Hook, 4 Mason, 153, F. C. 11,956, placing decision on other grounds.

Distinguished in Badger v. Badger, 2 Wall. 92, 17 L. 838, refusing to give relief where the trust was not clearly established, nor the facts shown to have been fraudulently concealed; Clarke v. Boorman, 18 Wall. 506, 21 L. 907, where there was no intentional fraud on part of trustee; Speidel v. Henrici, 120 U. S. 386, 30 L. 719, 7 S. Ct. 611, and Bruner v. Finley, 187 Pa. St. 406, 41 Atl. 340, holding this rule not applicable where trust had been openly disavowed; De Mares v. Gilpin, 15 Colo. 83, 24 Pac. 570, holding time runs in resulting trust from when fraud should have been discovered; Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. 617, holding fraud is no excuse for negligence in bringing action.

Limitation of suit in equity.—By analogy to rule of law, lapse of time raises presumption of extinguishment of a trust, payment of debt or surrender of deed, p. 504.

Cited to this point and applied by the following cases: Piatt v. Vattier, 9 Pet. 417, 9 L. 178; Bowman v. Wathen, 1 How. 194, 11 L. 99, and Badger v. Badger, 2 Cliff. 155, F. C. 718, holding various actions barred on this ground; Fisher v. Boody, 1 Curt. 219, F. C. 4,814, refusing to rescind a deed, where plaintiff was guilty of laches; Bowman v. Wathen, 2 McLean, 396, F. C. 1,740, holding claim barred; Ferson v. Sanger, 1 Wood. & M. 148, F. C. 4,752, holding long occupation, without complaint, should bar relief for mistake; Hinchman v. Kelley, 54 Fed. 66, 7 U. S. App. 481, refusing to enforce a trust because of laches; Duncan v. Williams, 89 Ala. 349, 7 So. 418, holding, after lapse of time, court will presume almost any fact to sustain decree; James v. James, 41 Ark. 305, refusing to enforce resulting trust; Perkins v. Cartmell, 4 Harr. 280, 42 Am. Dec. 761, holding trust extinguished; Akins v. Hill, 7 Ga. 579, holding bill barred; Carpenter v. Carpenter, 70 Ill. 465, refusing to enforce a State claim; McDearmon v. Burnham, 158 Ill. 63, 41 N. E. 1097, holding right to redeem from foreclosure sale barred by laches; Reynolds v. Sumner, 126 Ill. 71, 9 Am. St. Rep. 528, 18 N. E. 337, 1 L. R. A. 330, lapse of time only one of many circumstances from which conclusion of laches may be drawn; Valentine v. Wysor, 123 Ind. 59, 23 N. E. 1080, 7 L. R. A. 796, and n., refusing to open up account, though there was irregularity; Salmon v. Clagett, 3 Bland Ch. 142, holding defendant may have the benefit of the presumption arising from lapse of time, though not mentioned in his pleading; Steiger v. Hillen, 5 Gill & J. 130, rejecting claim of widow for damages against alienee of husband; Gregg v. Gregg, 15 N. H. 198, refusing to make guardian account; Starkey v. Fox, 52 N. J. Eq. 768, 29 Atl. 215, refusing to grant relief; Jackson v. Schaubert, 7 Cow. 199 (reversed, 2 Wend. 47), holding mortgage on which no interest has been paid for years, will not bar ejectment by mortgagor; Clark v. Potter, 32 Ohio St. 59, and Bargamin v. Clarke, 20 Gratt. 551, holding equity of redemption barred; White v. Loring, 24 Pick. 322, and Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 206, holding grant may be presumed from long possession; Houston v. Matthews, 1 Yerg. 121, presuming location of boundary. Cited in Beard v. Smith, 6 T. B. Mon. 491, discussing reason for and universality of laws of limitations. Approved in Ambler v. Warwick, 1 Leigh (Va.), 194, but not necessary to decision. Cited notes in 11 Wheat. 318, 6 L. 485, 54 Am. Dec. 130, 99 Am. Dec. 389, 393, on this subject, collecting authorities.

Distinguished in James v. Atlantic D. Co., 3 Cliff. 621, F. C. 7,177, refusing to apply rule in case of trust; Blake v. Ward, 20 Ohio, 242, holding that no conveyances could be presumed in that case; Paschall v. Hinderer, 28 Ohio St. 578, 579, 581, holding claim not a stale one.

Miscellaneous.—Cited erroneously in Kennedy v. Kennedy, 2 Ala. 588. Cited in Pipes v. Hardesty, 9 La. Ann. 153, 61 Am. Dec. 203, and 37 Am. Rep. 263, to point that alterations are presumed to have been made after the execution and delivery of a deed; in Magill v. Brown, 16 Fed. Cas. 420, to point that a known usage forms the law of the case and controls statutes and common law.

6 Wheat. 514-519, 5 L. 319, BOWIE v. HENDERSON.

Bankruptcy.—Under District of Columbia bankruptcy act of 1803, an insolvent is not a trustee for creditors in respect to his future property, p. 518.

Distinguished in In re Eldridge, 2 Hughes, 262, F. C. 4,331, 12 Bank. Reg. 546, holding assignee as to property in his hands is a trustee for creditors.

Statute of limitations.—Recording a demand in an insolvent's schedule of debts, is sufficient acknowledgment of the debt to take it out of the statute, p. 519.

Cited and rule applied in In re Eldridge, 2 Hughes, 258, F. C. 4,331, 12 Bank. Reg. 342, holding filing of petition by bankrupt will bar statute; Denny v. Henderson, 2 Cr. C. C. 121, F. C. 3,806, holding discharge of insolvent does not stop statute.

6 Wheat. 519, 520, 5 L. 320, SPRING v. SOUTH CAROLINA INS. CO.

Equity practice.—The res in litigation may be sold by order of the court and proceeds invested, notwithstanding pendency of appeal, p. 520.

Cited and applied in May v. Printup, 59 Ga. 135, holding, where the proceeding is against property, court may preserve it by interlocutory orders, during and after appeal; Latimer v. Hanson, 1 Bland Ch. 56, holding court may order trustee to invest proceeds of a sale, and, if he falls or refuses, may hold him for compound interest; Williams' Case, 3 Bland Ch. 217, holding trustee could be ordered to rent estate; Moran v. Johnston, 26 Gratt. 110, holding pending appeal, receiver may be appointed to rent property; likewise in Beard v. Arbuckle, 19 W. Va. 148, notwithstanding case is pending upon a supersedeas.

6 Wheat. 520-528, 5 L. 321, UNITED STATES v. SIX PACKAGES OF GOODS.

Customs duties.—Making correct post entry does not bar forfeiture for prior fraudulent entry under act of 1799, p. 523.

Cited erroneously in Our House v. State, 4 G. Greene, 175.

6 Wheat. 528-541, 5 L. 322, BRASHIER v. GRATZ.

Equity.—Time is not generally of the essence of the contract of sale in equity, but court may, where equitable, refuse specific performance on that ground, p. 533.

The following citing cases affirm and apply this doctrine: Taylor v. Longworth, 14 Pet. 175, 10 L. 406, giving specific performance, where party made out a case free from all doubt; Davisou v. Davis, 125 U. S. 95, 31 L. 637, 8 S. Ct. 827, refusing specific performance where party waited several years before filing bill; Garnett v. Macon, 2 Brock, 247, 249, F. C. 5,245; S. C., 6 Call (Va.), 347, 349, holding, where time is material, specific performance may depend on it; Prentice v. Betteley, 2 Low. 295, F. C. 11,381, refusing specific performance; as also in Mundy v. Davis, 20 Fed. 355, ruling similarly; Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 329, 70 Am. Dec. 735, where value of land had increased, and Durant v. Comegys, 2 Idaho, 944, 28 Pac. 428, where plaintiff did not make out a case free from doubt; Hunter v. Marlboro, 2 Wood. & M. 203, F. C. 6,908, and Bishop v. Newton, 20 Ill. 180, giving specific performance, though there had been delay; Avery v. Kellogg, 11 Conn. 571, holding, time waived by conduct of defendant; Steele v. Branch, 40 Cal. 11, 13, holding time would not work a forfeiture; Longworth v. Taylor, 1 McLean, 401, F. C. 8,490, not considering time essential; Steele v. Biggs, 22 Ill. 654, holding, where time is of the essence, part payment of purchase money will not excuse nonperformance; Emmons v. Kiger, 23 Ind. 488, holding conduct of defendant waived time; in Mathews v. Gilliss, 1 Iowa, 254; Young v. Daniels, 2 Iowa, 130, 63 Am. Dec. 480, and Kercheval v. Clift, 6 T. B. Mon. 366, 368, holding time not of the essence of the contract and decreeing specific performance; Lacey v. McMillen, 9 B. Mon. 526, refusing rescission, where party with full knowledge of facts acquiesces for a long time; Getchell v. Jewett, 4 Me. 362, decreeing specific performance; Rogers v. Saunders, 16 Me. 99, 33 Am. Dec. 641, refusing specific performance where party delayed, dissenting opinion of same case, p. 110; Jones v. Robbins, 29 Me. 353, 50 Am. Dec. 595, and Barnard v. Lee, 97 Mass. 94, decreeing specific performance; Bomier v. Caldwell, 8 Mich. 471, holding variance between bill and proof as to time of payment not material; Davidson v. Moss, 5 How. (Miss.) 686, refusing rescission, where vendor removed incumbrance on land at time of sale; Lake v. Lewis, 16 Nev. 97, holding acceptance of money a waiver of default in payment, and purchaser entitled to a deed; Ewing v. Gordon, 49 N. H. 462, decreeing specific performance; Seymour v. Delancy, 3 Cow. 519, 15 Am. Dec. 284, holding lapse of time, together with inadequacy of consideration, justify court in refusing specific performance; Attorney-General v. Purmort, 5 Paige Ch. 629, to the effect that neglect to pay at specified times was not a forfeiture of his rights; Edgerton v. Peckham, 11 Paige Ch. 360, and Wilson v. Tappan, 6 Ohio, 174, holding time not of the essence of the contract and decreeing specific performance; Wiswall v. McGowan, 1 Hoff. Ch. 134, holding time for performance may be extended orally; Smith v. Christmas, 7 Yerg. 605, refusing specific performance; Abbott v. L'Hommedieu, 10 W. Va. 712, holding time is not generally of the essence of a contract for the sale of land; Johnson v. Burdett T. Co., 53 Pac. 88, refusing specific performance, where time was expressly made the essence of the contract, and there was a long delay. See also note to 50 Am. Dec. 678, and 54 Am. Dec. 133, on this subject, where authorities are collected; note to 74 Am. Dec. 660, as to within what time rescission must be exercised. Approved in Tufts v. Tufts, 3 Wood. & M. 474, F. C. 14,233, but not necessary to decision. Cited, arguendo, in Eakin v. Raub, 12 S. & R. 376.

Distinguished in Sneed v. Wiggins, 3 Ga. 99, holding time of the essence because of the nature of the contract; Falls v. Carpenter, 1

Dev. & B. Eq. 281, 28 Am. Dec. 612, decreeing specific performance, where party neglected to pay purchase money, but continued in possession.

Specific performance.—Mutuality of obligation is essential to, p. 539.

Cited and principle applied in Almy v. Wilbur, 2 Wood. & M. 384, F. C. 256, holding the transaction a debt in equity, though one party was "at liberty" to pay the money; Rogers v. Saunders, 16 Me. 100, refusing specific performance. Cited approvingly in Tufts v. Tufts, 3 Wood. & M. 472, F. C. 14,233, but without application of the rule.

Specific performance of contract of sale of land will be refused after great lapse of time, and change in value and title, to one who has totally failed to perform, pp. 539-541.

Miscellaneous citations.—Cited in Manning v. Brown, 8 Bush (Ky.), 699, apparently not in point; also in Potter v. Titcomb, 10 Me. 52; Finucane v. Kearney, 1 Freem. Ch. 68, holding part payment of purchase money and entering into possession take contract out of the statute of frauds.

6 Wheat. 542-549, 5 L. 326, UNITED STATES v. DANIELL.

Certificate of division.—Division of Circuit Court, on motion for new trial, cannot be certified to Supreme Court, under act of 1802, p. 548.

Cited and applied in dissenting opinion, Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 206, 8 L. 98, majority holding Supreme Court has power to issue mandamus commanding Circuit Court to sign a bill of exceptions; Davis v. Braden, 10 Pet. 289, 9 L. 429, holding division on motion to rescind order to revive suit could not be brought up on certificate of division; approving the rule; Daniels v. Railroad Co., 3 Wall. 255, 18 L. 225, dismissing case, where certificate of division presented questions of fact and law; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 111, 18 L. 292, holding allowance or refusal of writ of habeas corpus may be certified to Supreme Court; United States v. Rosenburgh, 7 Wall. 581, 19 L. 263, holding court without jurisdiction of certificate of division of opinion, upon a motion to quash an indictment; United States v. Sanges, 144 U. S. 321, 36 L. 449, 12 S. Ct. 613, giving history of manner of bringing up criminal cases upon certificate of division of opinion; United States v. Rider, 163 U. S. 135, 136, 41 L. 102, 103, 16 S. Ct. 984, holding certificates under new statute are governed by same general rules as were formerly applied to certificates of division; Lanning v. London, 4 Wash. 333, F. C. 8,075, applying rule and holding division of opinion on motion for new trial cannot be certified to the Supreme Court; Taylor v. Carpenter, 2 Wood. & M. 3, F. C. 13,785; Ayres v. Bensley, 32 Cal. 633, holding division on question of granting a rehearing is a denial of it; Bagg v. Detroit, 5 Mich. 69, holding Supreme Court has jurisdiction of questions of law reserved in equity causes; State v. Crocker, 5 Wyo. 398, 40 Pac. 684, holding questions reserved before judgment may come within the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Cited approvingly in Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. 15, 11 L. 835, but not specially applied.

Distinguished in Life, etc., Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 8 Pet. 303, 8 L. 954, issuing mandamus directing district judge to sign judgment; Jones v. Van Zaudt, 5 How. 224, 12 L. 126, where none of the points certified embraced things, urged merely as reasons for a new trial; United States v. Chicago, 7 How. 191, 12 L. 663, where the question occurred before a final decision, and involved the right of the debtor, even though one of discretion; United States v. Gilbert, 2 Sumn. 61, F. C. 15,204, holding Supreme Court cannot grant a new trial in a capital case, after a verdict regularly rendered on a sufficient indictment; Goddard v. Coffin, 2 Ware (Day.), 386, F. C. 5,490, holding rendering of judgment is a judicial act and must be done by the court.

Miscellaneous citations.—Cited in Baker v. Biddle, 1 Bald. 406, F. C. 764, to point that jurisdiction of Federal courts must be exercised in prescribed mode.

6 Wheat. 550-565, 5 L. 328, KERR v. WATTS.

Equity pleading — Parties.—No one need be made a party whose rights will not be affected, p. 559.

Cited and applied in Carueal v. Banks, 10 Wheat. 188, 6 L. 299, holding joinder of improper parties will not affect the jurisdiction of Circuit Courts in equity, as between proper parties; Bouaparte v. Railroad Co., 1 Bald. 217, F. C. 1,617, holding agents of a corporation may be sued in this court, though corporation not suable here; Society for F. of G. v. Hartland, 2 Paine, 541, F. C. 13,155, holding decree cannot affect those not parties to action; Hickok v. Elliott, 10 Sawy. 427, 22 Fed. 21, holding in suit to set aside an assignment or conveyance, if grantor of assignor has parted with all his interest he is not a necessary party; New Chester W. Co. v. Manufacturing Co., 53 Fed. 26, 3 U. S. App. 264, holding joinder of unnecessary parties will not oust jurisdiction; Elliott v. Armstrong, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 207, holding in bill by grantee of cestui que trust against trustee, grantor need not be made a party; Haggerty v. Wagner, 148 Ind. 639, 48 N. E. 371, 39 L. R. A. 389, cotenant's wife not necessary party to partition suit; Wright v. Min. Assn., 12 Md. 449, holding one without interest not a necessary party; as also in Bourne v. Hall, 10 R. I. 152, and Burrill v. Garst, 19 R. I. 39, 31 Atl. 436.

Rule of equity as to bona fide purchaser, without notice, is not applicable to purchasers of military land warrants, under laws of Virginia; they are considered as affected with notice by the record of the entry, p. 560.

Rule applied in Sherett v. Presb. Soc., 41 Ohio St. 630, holding person making first entry has the superior equity, although other party was a purchaser without notice.

Distinguished in Brush v. Ware, 15 Pet. 109, 10 L. 679, holding doctrine of constructive notice is applicable to military titles, except where a notorious entry is required or where entry is not specific as to the land.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in So. Life Ins., etc. v. Cole, 4 Fla. 363, not in point.

6 Wheat. 565-572, 5 L. 332, LEEDS v. MARINE INS. CO.

Equity will compel one obtaining judgment to deduct therefrom an amount which should have been allowed as set-off in the action at law in which the judgment was obtained, pp. 566-572.

Cited and applied in North Chicago Rolling Mill Co. v. St. Louis, Ore., etc., Co., 152 U. S. 615, 616, 38 L. 572, 14 S. Ct. 715, 716, holding insolvency of person against whom set-off is claimed is a sufficient ground for equitable interference; Hulbert v. Insurance Co., 2 Summ. 479, F. C. 6,919, holding underwriters cannot set off debts due from agent against loss claimed by him for his principal, except the premium on the policy. Cited, arguendo, Davis v. Davis, 72 Fed. 84, 30 U. S. App. 723, holding equitable defenses may not be pleaded in Federal courts in actions at law, although State statute sanctions it.

6 Wheat. 572-576, 5 L. 333, UNION BANK v. HYDE.

Negotiable paper.—Protest of inland bill or of promissory note is not necessary, nor is it evidence of the facts stated in it, p. 575.

Cited and principle applied in dissenting opinion, Musson v. Lake, 4 How. 282, 11 L. 975, majority holding if notarial protest does not set forth fact of presentation, it is not competent evidence; Bay v. Church, 15 Conn. 17, 18, holding notarial protest of promissory note not necessary, though note be indorsed to an inhabitant of another State; Johnson v. Bank, 29 Ga. 260, holding notarial fees cannot be recovered, whenever protest is not required; Kaskaskia B. Co. v. Shannon, 1 Gil. (Ill.) 24, holding notarial protest of inland bill not evidence of demand of payment, as also in Taylor v. Bank, 7 T. B. Mon. 580; Carter v. Burley, 9 N. H. 564, 565, 566, holding protest not competent evidence of the dishonor of an inland bill; Burk v. Shreve, 39 N. J. L. 216, construing strictly a statute making certificate of notary competent evidence of presentment of bill; Smedes v. Bank, 20 Johns. 384, holding notice to indorser insufficient; Case v. Heffner, 10 Ohio, 183, where bill was drawn in one State and indorsed to a citizen of another, a protest was necessary; dissenting opinion, Hall v. Bank, 6 Whart. 613, majority allowing notarial fees in action against bank on notes; Corbin v. Bank, 87 Va. 664, 24 Am. St. Rep. 675, 13 S. E. 99, applying rule and holding notarial certificate is not evidence of dishonor of inland bill. See also notes, 43 Am. Dec. 219, and 96 Am. Dec. 603, 604, on this subject. Cited also in note, Turner v. Rogers, 8 Ind. 142.

Distinguished in Doughty v. Hildt, 1 McLean, 334, F. C. 4,027, holding payees entitled to recover costs of protest, the note being of that character which makes a protest evidence of demand of payment; Simpson v. White, 40 N. H. 543, holding, under statute, protests are evidence of facts stated therein.

Negotiable paper.—Undertaking of indorser held a waiver of demand and notice, p. 576.

Cited and principle applied in Freeman v. O'Brien, 38 Iowa, 409, holding agreement was not a waiver; Baker v. Scott, 29 Kan. 137, 44 Am. Rep. 629, holding words "protest waived" amounted to a waiver; Wall v. Bry, 1 La. Ann. 314; Bird v. Le Blanc, 6 La. Ann. 470, and Wilkins v. Gillis, 20 La. Ann. 539, 96 Am. Dec. 425, construing agreement strictly and holding waiver of protest did not waive notice; Stone v. Bradbury, 14 Me. 193, admitting parol testimony to show "bond" in contract included any instrument in writing; Lane v. Steward, 20 Me. 103, admitting parol evidence to prove waiver of demand; Shove v. Wiley, 18 Pick. 562, holding where clerk produces a printed form and testified to his belief that notices in question were in that form, the paper was admissible; Taunton Bank v. Richardson, 5 Pick. 447, holding jury from acts of indorser could infer a waiver; Farwell v. Trust Co., 45 Minn. 498, 22 Am. St. Rep. 745, 48 N. W. 327, rejecting evidence of verbal agreement to waive demand and notice at time of indorsement; Coddington v. Davis, 3 Den. 22, 23, holding notice and protest waived; Bell v. Martin, 18 N. J. L. 169, admitting parol evidence to identify note declared upon; Windham Co. Bk. v. Kendall, 7 R. I. 85, holding firm bound by waiver of partner to person without notice; Walker v. Popper, 2 Utah, 98, holding a waiver of notice and protest is also a waiver of demand; Broun v. Hull, 33 Gratt. 32, holding though protest is waived, party must use due diligence. See note, 57 Am. Dec. 665, on this subject.

6 Wheat. 577-580, 5 L. 334, CLARK v. GRAHAM.

Conflict of laws.—A title to land can only be acquired and lost according to the laws of the State where situated, p. 579.

Cited and rule applied in dissenting opinion, Burbank v. Conrad, 96 U. S. 298, 24 L. 726, majority holding conveyance of land in Louisiana valid without registration; Brine v. Insurance Co., 96 U. S. 635, 24 L. 861, holding State statute as to redemption from foreclosure sale obligatory on Federal courts; Schley v. Pullman Co., 120 U. S. 580, 30 L. 791, 7 S. Ct. 732, holding deed of feme covert to have been sufficiently acknowledged; Langdon v. Sherwood, 124 U. S. 82, 31 L. 346, 8 S. Ct. 431, holding under code of Nebraska, a decree of Circuit Court is evidence of a transfer of title; De Vaughn v. Hutchinson, 165 U. S. 570, 41 L. 829, 17 S. Ct. 462, applying rules of descent and alienation of land of Maryland as they were before the District of Columbia was separated from it; Berry v. Seawall, 65 Fed. 747, 31 U. S. App. 30, as to parol partition followed by acquiescence; Summers v. White, 71 Fed. 108, 36 U. S. App. 395, holding invalid an assignment not properly witnessed according to State statute; Missouri, etc., T. Co. v. Krumseig, 77 Fed. 40, 40 U. S. App. 620, holding State statute as to usury binding on Federal courts; Magill v. Brown, 16 Fed. Cas. 447, holding decree could not authorize sale of lands situate in another State; In re Zug, 10 N. B. R. 280, 30 Fed. Cas. 948, holding Federal courts are bound by local laws and local decisions of State where land is; Hendon v. White, 52 Ala. 605, where acknowledgment was insufficient; Neal v. Gregory, 19 Fla. 368, holding deed not under seal void; Key v. Harlan, 52 Ga. 477, refusing to admit to probate a will sufficiently witnessed in another State, but not under our statute; Doyle v. McGuire, 38 Iowa, 412, holding transfer valid; Sneed v. Ewing, 5 J. J. Marsh. 465, 22 Am. Dec. 47, holding that foreign will to pass title must be executed according to our laws; Galpin v. Abbott, 6 Mich. 37, holding deeds not acknowledged according to our statute were not entitled to be recorded; Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 61, 4 Am. Rep. 434, holding deed invalid; as also in Dodge v. Hollinshead, 6 Minn. 12 (25), 80 Am. Dec. 439, and Roode v. State, 5 Neb. 176, 25 Am. Rep. 476; Bentley v. Whittemore, 18 N. J. Eq. 373, holding preferential assignment in another State void as to lands here; Tarpey v. Salt Co., 5 Utah, 212, 14 Pac. 340, holding deed void as to stranger without notice. Cited in Hoadley v. Stephens, 4 Neb. 436, holding deed properly excluded, there being no evidence of its acknowledgment according to laws of State where executed; dissenting opinion, Shell v. Duncan, 31 S. C. 573, 10 S. E. 339, 5 L. R. A. 831.

Distinguished in Storman v. Cravens, 29 Ark. 558, holding unacknowledged deed confers an equitable interest; Ross v. Ross, 129 Mass. 245, 37 Am. Rep. 322, holding status of one to inherit is to be ascertained according to the law of the domicile; Moore v. Thomas, 1 Or. 202, declaring mortgage attested by one witness will be upheld in chancery; Wood, etc., Co. v. Lee, 4 S. D. 501, 57 N. W. 240, holding personal property mortgage valid, though not witnessed; Linton v. Cooper, 53 Neb. 408, where statute was different.

Power to convey lands must possess the same requisites and observe the same solemnities as a deed, p. 578.

Cited and principle applied in Williams v. Paine, 169 U. S. 65, 42 L. 663, 18 S. Ct. 283, holding power properly executed; Connell

v. Galligher, 36 Neb. 762, 55 N. W. 233, holding description in power sufficient; Gage v. Gage, 30 N. H. 424, holding power invalid; as also in Gee v. Bolton, 17 Wis. 612. Cited in note, 81 Am. Dec. 776, on this subject, collecting authorities.

A parol exchange of lands, or parol evidence that a conveyance was intended so to operate, will not convey any estate, p. 580.

6 Wheat. 580-583, 5 L. 336, PRESTON'S HEIRS v. BOWMAR.

Boundaries.— Courses and distances yield to natural and ascertained objects, but where these are wanting, courses or distances yield according to the circumstances, p. 382.

Cited and applied in Doe v. Mobile, 9 How. 469, 13 L. 219, holding distance must yield to the other boundary line; as also in Higuera v. United States, 5 Wall. 836, 18 L. 471, holding arroyo, etc., controlling; County of St. Clair v. Lovington, 23 Wall. 62, 23 L. 62, reprinted in 16 Am. Rep. 524, note, holding birch tree controlling; Koons v. Brysons, 69 Fed. 300, 25 U. S. App. 368, holding courses or distances must yield to a certain ascertained tree; Garrard v. Mines, 82 Fed. 585, holding a certain post controlled; Belden v. Seymour, 8 Conn. 25; Gaveney v. Hinton, 2 G. Greene, 349, and Campbell v. Clark, 8 Mo. 558, holding fixed monuments will control courses and distances; Cleveland v. Smith, 2 Story, 291, F. C. 2,874, where birch tree controlled; Higley v. Bidwell, 9 Conn. 452, holding white oak tree controlling; Benedict v. Gaylord, 11 Conn. 336, 29 Am. Dec. 301, holding courses and distances being of more certainty, controlled; Riley v. Griffin, 16 Ga. 149, 60 Am. Dec. 730, holding marked trees controlling; Evans v. Temple, 35 Mo. 498; White v. Gray, 9 N. H. 131, holding metes and bounds will control the call for quantity; Rix v. Johnson, 5 N. H. 524, 22 Am. Dec. 474, declaring a river the boundary; Jackson v. Camp, 1 Cow. 612, holding river, etc., controlling; likewise in Jackson v. Moore, 6 Cow. 717; Jackson v. Wendell, 5 Wend. 147, holding courses and distances must be respected as far as possible; Lewis v. Lewis, 4 Or. 180, holding measurements must yield to the "stake;" Hunter v. Hume, 88 Va. 30, 13 S. E. 307, holding quantity must yield to description by boundaries. Cited, arguendo, in Wells v. Compton, 3 Rob. (La.) 188; Ruffner v. Hill, 31 W. Va. 436, 7 S. E. 18, allowing courses to control in part, and distances in part. See also note, 40 Am. Dec. 110, on descriptions.

Distinguished in Doe v. Cullum, 4 Ala. 581, holding whether a monument referred to in a conveyance is identical with that found on the ground is a question for the jury; Bowman v. Farmer, 8 N. H. 403, where the brook was not designated with sufficient certainty to control.

Statutory construction.—Federal courts follow State courts' construction of State law, where not unreasonable or founded in clear mistake, p. 583.

Distinguished in Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 34, 27 L. 365, 2 S. Ct. 22, collecting authorities and refusing to follow State construction of State statute where decision was rendered subsequently to and contrary to Circuit Court construction.

Ejectment.—In case of doubt claim of party in possession ought to be maintained, p. 582.

Cited and rule applied in McKinney v. Daniel, 90 Va. 704, 19 S. E. 881, and Bradley v. Ewart, 18 W. Va. 606, holding plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title, not on the weakness of the defendant's.

6 Wheat. 583-592, 5 L. 336, OTIS v. WALTER.

Under embargo act of 1808, if a vessel not actually arriving at port of original destination excites an honest suspicion that her demand of a permit to land was merely colorable, this is not a termination of the voyage so as to preclude the right of detention, pp. 590-592.

Landing of cargo is not necessarily a conversion, if collector thinks cargo can thus be best preserved, p. 592.

No citations.

6 Wheat. 593-598, 5 L. 339, GOSZLER v. GEORGETOWN.

Corporation can make only such contracts as are allowed by its charter, p. 597.

Cited and applied in dissenting opinion, Southern, etc., Co. v. Lanier, 5 Fla. 171, majority holding where charter authorized sale of stock for cash to be invested in bonds and mortgages, that a sale for bond and mortgage could not be avoided by purchaser; Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway, 8 Wend. 484, 24 Am. Dec. 55, holding one entering into a contract with a corporation is not estopped from denying it to be a body corporate; Dow v. Northern R. R. Co., 36 Atl. 534, holding where corporation, chartered to operate a railroad, leased it, this lease is invalid against dissenting stockholders.

Municipal corporations.—Power to grade streets given to municipality of Georgetown by act of Maryland, 1797, is a continuing power and corporation may, from time to time, alter the gradation so made, pp. 596-598.

This holding has been applied in the following citing cases and in making the following holdings: East Hartford v. Hartford B. Co., 10 How. 535, 13 L. 528, holding act discontinuing a ferry constitutional; Wabash R. R. Co. v. Defiance, 167 U. S. 98, 42 L. 92, 17 S.

Ot. 752, holding common council could change grade of streets; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 569, 9 L. 832, holding valid a grant of a second franchise, rendering first valueless; dissenting opinion, Baltimore T., etc., Co. v. Baltimore, 64 Fed. 163, majority holding ordinance giving leave to construct tracks on certain streets constituted a contract and was irrepealable; Winter v. Montgomery, 83 Ala. 594, 3 So. 238, holding municipal authorities can tear down and remove obstructions on sidewalks built under license of former council without giving compensation; Shaw v. Crocker, 42 Cal. 438, and Quincy v. Jones, 76 Ill. 243, 20 Am. Rep. 250, holding city has right to raise the grade of a street without being responsible for damages, if contractor does the work with proper skill; Reardon v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. 500, 56 Am. Rep. 111, 6 Pac. 321, holding municipality liable for such special consequential damage above the common injury to the other abutters on the street; Fellowes v. New Haven, 44 Conn. 251, 26 Am. Rep. 450, dismissing injunction to restrain city from working on street; Markham v. Atlanta, 23 Ga. 406, holding remedy for injury by re-grading of street is not by injunction; Wright v. Nagle, 48 Ga. 391, holding inferior County Court could not grant exclusive right to build a bridge; Bloomington v. Pollock, 141 Ill. 350, 31 N. E. 147, holding ordinances fixing grade of streets are not in the nature of contracts; Macy v. Indianapolis, 17 Ind. 269, holding consequential damage, resulting from change of grade of street, cannot be recovered from city; Kokomo v. Mahan, 100 Ind. 244, allowing city to collect assessment for a subsequent improvement of a street; Welch v. Bowen, 103 Ind. 257, 2 N. E. 725, holding power to regulate the running at large of animals, not exhausted by being exercised once; Commissioners v. Fullen, 111 Ind. 413, 12 N. E. 299, holding commissioners can levy an additional assessment to pay for road, if necessary; Creal v. Keokuk, 4 G. Greene, 53, and Church v. Wyandotte, 31 Kan. 724, 3 Pac. 529, holding city not liable for prudent exercise of the power to change grade of street; Reynolds v. Shreveport, 13 La. Ann. 428, holding presumption is that a municipality executed a lawful power with propriety and good faith; Binney's Case, 2 Bland Ch. 128, holding power of condemnation given to company, not being a continuing one, was exhausted by being once exercised; Peddicord v. Railroad Co., 34 Md. 474, 483, holding railroad company not liable for change in grade of road; Mayor v. Willison, 50 Md. 148, 33 Am. Rep. 308, holding city not liable for injuries caused by obstructions to mill-race by acts done to improve streets; Green v. Railway Co., 78 Md. 302, 44 Am. St. Rep. 292, 28 Atl. 628; Pontiac v. Carter, 32 Mich. 167, and Hoffman v. St. Louis, 15 Mo. 654, holding established grade could be changed; St. Louis v. Gurno, 12 Mo. 424, holding corporation not liable for damages consequential upon the grading and paving of a street; Thurston v. St. Joseph, 51 Mo. 514, 11 Am. Rep. 466, overruling St. Louis v. Gurno, 12 Mo. 424, and holding city liable for damages arising from negligent construction of sewer; dissenting opinion, Rychlicki v. St. Louis, 98 Mo. 508, 11 S. W. 1004, 4 L. R. A. 597, majority denying city's right to discharge accumulated water in a body upon adjacent lands; Radcliff v. Mayor, 4 N. Y. 204, 53 Am. Dec. 363, holding municipality not liable for change of grade of street not negligently done; Crawford v. Delaware, 7 Ohio St. 465, holding if erections are made on a lot in accordance with an established grade, city is liable for injury caused by change of grade; Gas, etc., Co. v. Columbus, 50 Ohio St. 71, 40 Am. St. Rep. 652, 33 N. E. 294, 19 L. R. A. 513, municipality not liable to gas company for damages for injury caused by change of grade; dissenting opinion, Parke v. Seattle, 5 Wash. St. 20, 32 Pac. 86, 34 Am. St. Rep. 848, n., 20 L. R. A. 74, municipality held liable for damages to abutting lands in grading street. See also valuable note, 66 Am. Dec. 438, on this subject; also, 26 Am. Rep. 457. Cited, arguendo, in dissenting opinion, Piqua Branch, etc. v. Knoup, 16 How. 403, 14 L. 991.

Municipal corporation cannot abridge its future legislative power, p. 598.

Principle applied in Illinois, etc., Co. v. St. Louis, 2 Dill. 89, F. C. 7,007, holding ordinance giving persons right to occupy a wharf for fifty years, void; State v. Graves, 19 Md. 354, 373, 81 Am. Dec. 646, holding city council could not pass an irrevocable ordinance; Lake, etc., Ry. v. Mayor, 77 Md. 375, 26 Atl. 514, 20 L. R. A. 132, ordinance authorizing laying of double tracks, may be repealed and company restricted to one track; State v. Murphy, 134 Mo. 575, 56 Am. St. Rep. 531, holding St. Louis has no power to grant privilege of constructing electrical subways for private gain of its grantee; State v. Hayes, 61 N. H. 332, holding provision that the sense of the voters shall be taken on a law, and if their decision is favorable it shall become a law, was a delegation of legislative power, and void; Milhau v. Sharp, 27 N. Y. 622, 84 Am. Dec. 318, holding municipal authorities could not give a franchise for an indefinite period to operate a railroad in the public streets; Johnson v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. St. 452, holding a bond given to comply with existing regulations, cannot be construed to be binding engagement on part of the city to make no other regulations; Burroughs v. Peyton, 16 Gratt. 489, holding congress could not enter into a contract to exempt from subsequent calls to military service all those providing substitutes; Roanoke G. Co. v. Roanoke, 88 Va. 813, 814, 14 S. E. 666, 667, holding power to grade streets cannot be delegated by a municipality. Cited in Selma v. Muller, 46 Ala. 414, to point that a corporation can enter into a contract.

Distinguished in Armstrong v. St. Louis, 3 Mo. App. 158, holding a city may be enjoined from establishing a grade, where it would not be beneficial to the public and would render the street impassable; Goodall v. Milwaukee, 5 Wis. 50, holding city liable for changing grade of street, when ordinance had been passed declaring grade would not be changed without compensating owners.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 568, 587, 42 L. 280, 287, 17 S. Ct. 974, 981, as an instance where the act of 1809 had been brought into court without a doubt of its constitutionality being expressed; In re Brinkman, 7 N. B. R. 426, 4 Fed. Cas. 146, apparently not in point.

6 Wheat. 598-605, 5 L. 840, McCLUNG v. SILLIMAN.

Mandamus.—State courts have no authority to issue a writ of mandamus to an officer of the United States, p. 604.

Cited and applied in dissenting opinion, Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 206, 207, 210, 8 L. 98, 99, 100, majority holding Supreme Court can issue writ of mandamus to judge of Circuit Court, commanding him to sign a bill of exceptions; dissenting opinion, Kendall v. United States, 12 Pet. 633, 646, 647, 649, 652, 9 L. 1224, 1229, 1230, 1231; 1232, 13 Pet. 608, App., 10 L. 317, majority holding Circuit Court of District of Columbia could issue a writ of mandamus to the postmaster-general, compelling him to do a ministerial act; Territory v. Lockwood, 3 Wall. 239, 18 L. 49, holding proceeding in the nature of quo warranto to test the right of a judge of the Supreme Court of a territory to exercise the power, must be in the name of the United States, and not in the name of the territory; Rigg v. Johnson County, 6 Wall. 189, 198, 18 L. 774, 777, holding writ of mandamus from Circuit Court will lie against the county officers to levy a tax; Bath Co. v. Amy, 13 Wall. 249, 20 L. 541, holding mandamus does not lie from Circuit Court in favor of a holder of county bonds to make the county levy a tax; Rosenbaum v. Bauer, 120 U. S. 454, 30 L. 745, 7 S. Ct. 634, holding Circuit Court cannot acquire jurisdiction by removal from a State court of original proceedings to obtain a mandamus; Ex parte Van Orden, 3 Blatchf. 169, F. C. 16,870, holding District Court has no power to issue a writ of certiorari to court commissioner to review proceedings before him; Van Antwerp v. Hulburd, 7 Blatchf. 433, F. C. 16,826, holding this court has no jurisdiction of a suit in equity to control the administration of the duties of the comptroller of currency of the United States; United States v. Pearson, 24 Blatchf. 454, 32 Fed. 310, holding District Court cannot, by mandamus, compel a postmaster to transmit through mails a certain publication as second-class matter; The Celestine, 1 Biss. 12, F. C. 2,541, holding when jurisdiction of State court has attached, creditors cannot in Federal court obtain any control of the property; United States v. Plumer, 3 Cliff. 61, F. C. 16,056, holding Circuit Court has no authority to re-examine by writ of error rulings of District Court in criminal cases; Wheeling v. Baltimore, 1 Hughes, 94, F. C. 17,502, and Smith v. Jackson, 1 Paine, 456, F. C. 13,064, holding power of Circuit Courts to issue mandamus is confined to cases in which it is necessary to the exercise of their jurisdiction; Ladd v. Tudor, 3 Wood. & M. 332, F. C. 7,975, query, whether mandamus lies from Federal courts to judges of State courts; Litchfield v. The Register, Woolw. 312, F. C. 8,388, refusing to interfere by injunction with executive officers in the exercise of discretionary power; In re Forsyth, 78 Fed. 301, holding District Court has no power to issue mandamus in an original proceeding; United States v. Judges, 85 Fed. 179, 56 U. S. App. 35, 36, collecting authorities and holding mandamus may not be invoked to direct a court or officer to reverse a judicial decision; Ex parte Hill, In re Willis v. Confederate States, 38 Ala. 438, holding State courts cannot, on writ of habeas corpus, discharge enrolled conscript from custody of Confederate officer; Ex parte Hill, In re Armistead v. Confederate States, 38 Ala. 461, 462, 464, 471, holding State court has jurisdiction to determine, whether placing a substitute in his stead exempted petitioner from liability to service; dissenting opinion of same case, p. 485; State v. Curtis, 35 Conn. 383, 95 Am. Dec. 268, holding an information in the nature of quo warranto will not lie in State court to try right to the office of director of a national bank; dissenting opinion, Swift v. Richardson, 7 Houst. (Del.) 365, 32 Atl. 148, majority holding that a stockholder of a private corporation may procure an inspection of the books by mandamus; Commissioner v. Smith, 5 Tex. 478, and Meyer v. Carolan, 9 Tex. 253, declaring mandamus will not issue to an officer to perform a discretionary duty; Bledsoe v. Railroad Co., 40 Tex. 556, holding court had no power to compel an officer of the government to perform an official duty; dissenting opinion, Kuechler v. Wright, 40 Tex. 665, majority holding mandamus will lie to compel commissioner of land office to perform a ministerial duty; State v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 503, 51 N. W. 736, 15 L. R. A. 574, same as to ministerial acts of secretary of State. Cited in Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 601, 606, 10 L. 610, 613, and In re Brinkman, 7 N. B. R. 426, 4 Fed. Cas. 147; Baker v. Biddle, Bald. 403, 406, F. C. 764, but without special application of the rule.

Distinguished in Kendall v. United States, 12 Pet. 615, 617, 624, 9 L. 1217, 1218, 1221, holding Circuit Court of District of Columbia could issue a writ of mandamus to the postmaster-general, compelling him to do a ministerial act; Heine v. Commissioners, 19 Wall. 660, 22 L. 226, holding mandamus may be issued after judgment to compel levy of tax to pay bonds; United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 393, 26 L. 170, holding Supreme Court of District of Columbia can issue mandamus as an original process, where at common law the petitioner would be entitled to it; dissenting opinion, Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 762, 763, 27 L. 466, 2 S. Ct. 170, 171, maintaining under act of 1875 that Circuit Court can by mandamus compel the performance of a purely ministerial act; United States v. Kendall, 5 Cr. C. C. 172, 243, 245, 246, 247, 250, 255, F. C. 15,517, holding

Circuit Court of District of Columbia could issue a writ of mandamus to the postmaster-general, compelling him to do a ministerial act; affirmed in 12 Pet. 615, 9 L. 1217, supra.

Appeal.—The question before the appellate court is whether the judgment was correct, not the ground on which it was given, p. 603.

Cited and applied in dissenting opinion, Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 204, 8 L. 98, majority holding writ of mandamus can be issued by Supreme Court to circuit judge; Davis v. Packard, 6 Pet. 48, 8 L. 315, holding Supreme Court can notice nothing unless it appears on the record of lower court; Ladd v. Tudor, 3 Wood. & M. 328, 332, F. C. 7,975, holding action may be removed to Circuit Court though the diverse citizenship does not appear on the face of the writ; Polhemus v. Bank, 27 Mich. 50, holding that the real subject of complaint is the final result and not the reason which led to it; State v. Bowen, 8 S. C. 408, holding court is not restricted to the grounds urged by the defendants, but may give weight to any insuperable objection to its jurisdiction; Shrewsbury v. Miller, 10 W. Va. 122, holding the question in the appellate court is whether the judgment to be reviewed is correct. Cited, arguendo, in Poole v. Nixon, 9 Pet. App. 771, 9 L. 305, 19 Fed. Cas. 994.

Jurisdiction.—Legislation is necessary to vest in the inferior Federal courts their judicial power, p. 604.

Cited in dissenting opinion, Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 202, 8 L. 97, majority holding Supreme Court could issue writ of mandamus to circuit judge; In the Matter of Barry, 136 U. S. 609, 610, 34 L. 508, note, 42 Fed. 122, F. C. 1,059, refusing to grant writ of habeas corpus, in order to determine as between parents living apart the right to the custody of a child; In re Heath, 144 U. S. 95, 36 L. 360, 12 S. Ct. 616, holding Supreme Court has no jurisdiction over judgments of Supreme Court of District of Columbia in criminal cases.

Miscellaneous.—Cited generally in Davis v. Seneca, Gilp. 39, F. C. 3,651, Boatner v. Ventress, 8 Mart. (N. S.) 651, 20 Am. Dec. 269.

6 Wheat. 606-608, MUTUAL ASSURANCE SOCIETY v. FAXON.

Insurance.—Virginia law respecting the Mutual Assurance Society construed.

No citations.

REPORTS

OF

CASES

ARGUED AND ADJUDGED IN

THE

Supreme Court of The United States,

IN FEBRUARY TERM, 1822.

---

BY HENRY WHEATON,

Counselor at Law.

---

VOLUME VII.

JUDGES
OF THE
SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
DURING THE TIME OF THESE REPORTS.

---

The Hon. JOHN MARSHALL, Chief-Justice.
The Hon. BUSHROD WASHINGTON, Associate Justice.
The Hon. WILLIAM JOHNSON, Associate Justice.
The Hon. BROCKHOLST LIVINGSTON, Associate Justice.
The Hon. THOMAS TODD, Associate Justice.
The Hon. GABRIEL DUVAL, Associate Justice.
The Hon. JOSEPH STORY, Associate Justice.
WILLIAM WIRT, Esq., Attorney-General.

RULES OF PRACTICE

FOR THE

COURTS OF EQUITY OF THE UNITED STATES.

UNDER the authority given to this court, by the act of May 8th, 1792, c. 137, s. 2, the following rules were ordered by the court, at the present term, to be the Rules of Practice for the Courts of Equity of the United States:

RULE I. Rules shall be held monthly in the clerk's office on the first Monday in every month, for the purpose of entering all proceedings and orders which may be entered at the rules, and which are not taken or made in open court. The rules shall be held under the direction of the clerk; but either of the judges of the court may make or allow any special orders in any cause, not inconsistent with the regulations herein prescribed, which shall be entered in the rule book, and take effect accordingly.

RULE II. All process shall be made returnable to the next succeeding term, or to any intermediate rule day, at the election of the party praying the same, and the return of the said process "executed" shall be effectual whereon to ground any subsequent proceedings. If the party be not found, a copy served by the person leaving the same shall be left with his wife, or any free white person who is a member of his or her family, at his or her dwelling-house or usual place of abode, and the truth of the case shall be returned; and where such process shall not be executed, the clerk is directed to issue other similar process, if the same be required by the party at whose instance the original process was sued out; and if upon such second process the party be not found, a copy shall be again left in like manner as is hereinbefore directed, and upon a second return that the party is not found, and that a copy has been left as herein directed, the same proceedings may be had as on process returned executed.

RULE III. Where any person, either plaintiff or defendant, in any suit, shall be dead, it shall be lawful for the clerk, during the recess of the court, upon application, to issue process to bring into court the representative of such deceased person.

RULE IV. The plaintiff shall file his bill before or at the time of taking out the subpoena.

RULE V. The plaintiff may amend his bill before the defendant or his attorney or solicitor hath taken out a copy thereof, or in a small matter afterwards, without paying costs; but if he amend in a material point after such copy obtained, he shall pay the defendant all costs occasioned thereby.
Wheat. 7.

RULE VI. The day of appearance shall be the rule day after the process is returned executed, or after the second return of a copy left if the process shall not be executed, when the process is returnable to the rules, or the rule day next succeeding the term, where the process shall be returnable to a term of the court; and if the defendant shall not appear and file his answer within three months after the day of appearance, and after the bill shall have been filed, the plaintiff may proceed to take his bill for confessed, and the matter thereof shall be decreed accordingly; which decree shall be absolute, unless cause be shown at the term next succeeding that to which the process shall be returned executed.

RULE VII. If the defendant cannot be found, it shall be sufficient service of any decree nisi, to leave a copy thereof with his wife, or any free white person who is a member of his or her family; and if no such person be found, then it shall be sufficient service to publish the same in such paper of the district as may be designated by the court for such time, as the court shall direct.

RULE VIII. All process shall be executed by a sworn officer, or affidavit must be made of the service thereof, when executed by any other person.

RULE IX. Every defendant may swear to his answer before any justice or judge of the United States, or a commissioner or master, or other person appointed by the court, or judge of any court of a state or territory, or a justice of the peace, or notary public of any state or territory.

RULE X. If the defendant does not file his answer within three months after the subpoena be returned executed, or after a second return of a copy left having been made at least three months, the plaintiff may either proceed on his bill as confessed, or have a general commission to take depositions, or he may move the court for an attachment to bring in the defendant to answer interrogatories, at his election, and may proceed to a hearing in the two last cases as if the answer had been filed and the cause was at issue. Provided that the court may, on cause shown, allow the answer to be filed, and grant a further day for such hearing. And when a party is in custody on such writ of attachment, he shall be detained in custody until he shall file his answer, or be discharged by order of the court or one of the judges thereof.

RULE XI. No special replication to an answer shall be filed but by leave of the court, or one of the judges thereof, for cause shown; and if any matter alleged in the answer shall make it necessary for the plaintiff to amend his bill, he may have leave to amend the same with or without costs at the discretion of the court.

RULE XII. When a cross bill shall be exhibited, the defendant or defendants to the first bill shall answer thereto, before the defendant or defendants to the cross bill shall be compelled to answer such cross bill.

RULE XIII. The complainant shall put in the general replication, or file exceptions within two calendar months after the answer shall have been put in. If he fails so to do, the defendant may leave a rule to reply with the clerk of the court, which being expired, and no replication or exceptions filed, the suit may be dismissed with costs; but the court may, for cause, order the same to be retained on payment of costs.

RULE XIV. If the plaintiff's attorney or solicitor shall except against any answer as insufficient, he may file his exceptions, and leave a rule with the clerk to make a better answer within two calendar months; and if within that time the defendant shall put in a sufficient answer, the same shall be received without costs; but if any defendant insists on the sufficiency of his answer, or neglects or refuses to put in a sufficient answer, or shall put in another insufficient answer, the plaintiff may set down his exceptions to be argued at the next term; and after the expiration of that rule, or any second insufficient answer put in, no farther or other answer shall be received but on payment of costs.

RULE XV. If upon argument the plaintiff's exceptions shall be overruled, or the defendant's answer adjudged insufficient, the plaintiff shall pay to the defendant, or the defendant to the plaintiff, such costs as shall be allowed by the court.

RULE XVI. Upon a second answer being adjudged insufficient, costs shall be doubled by the court, and the defendant may be examined upon interrogatories, and committed until he or she answer them; or the plaintiff may move the court to take so much of his bill as is not answered for confessed, and may file his replication, obtain commissions, and proceed to hearing in the usual manner.

RULE XVII. Rules to plead, answer, reply, rejoin, or other proceedings not before particularly mentioned, when necessary, shall be given from month to month with the clerk in his office, and shall be entered in a rule book for the information of all parties, attorneys, or solicitors concerned therein, and shall be considered as sufficient notice thereof.

RULE XVIII. The defendant may at any time before the bill is taken for confessed, or afterwards with the leave of the court, demur or plead to the whole bill, or part of it, and he may demur to part, plead to part, and answer as to the residue; but in any case in which the bill charges fraud or combination, a plea to such part must be accompanied with an answer fortifying the plea, and explicitly denying the fraud and combination, and the fact on which the charge is founded.

RULE XIX. The plaintiff may set down the demurrer or plea to be argued, or he may take issue on the plea. If upon an issue, the facts stated in the plea be determined for the defendant, they shall avail him as far as in law and equity they ought to avail him.

RULE XX. If a plea or demurrer be overruled, no other plea or demurrer shall be thereafter received, but the defendant shall proceed to answer the plaintiff's bill; and if he fail to do so within two calendar months, the same, or so much thereof as was covered by the plea or demurrer, may be taken for confessed, and the matter thereof be decreed accordingly.

RULE XXI. If the plaintiff shall not reply to, or set for hearing any plea or demurrer, before the second term of the court after filing the same, the bill may be dismissed with costs.

RULE XXII. Upon a plea or demurrer being argued and overruled, costs shall be paid as where an answer is adjudged insufficient; but if adjudged good, the defendant shall have his costs.

RULE XXIII. The defendant, instead of filing a formal demurrer or plea, may insist on any special matter in his answer, and have the same benefit thereof, as if he had pleaded the same matter, or had demurred to the bill.

RULE XXIV. After any bill filed, and before the defendant hath answered, upon oath made that any of the plaintiff's witnesses are aged, infirm, or going out of the country, or that any one of them is a single witness to a material fact, the clerk may issue a commission for taking the examination of such witness or witnesses de bene esse, the party praying such commission giving reasonable notice to the adverse party of the time and place of taking such deposition.

RULE XXV. Testimony may be taken according to the acts of Congress, or under a commission. Whenever a general commission shall be issued for taking depositions upon answer and replication, six months from the time of the replication shall be allowed the parties for taking their depositions; and either party at the expiration of the said six months may set the cause for hearing, and no deposition taken after that time shall be read as evidence on the hearing, unless the same was taken by consent of parties, by special order of the court, or out of the district.

RULE XXVI. Commissions to take depositions may be executed by any person qualified to take testimony according to the laws of the state, or by any person or persons, not exceeding three, appointed or named in the commission by order of the court, or by any judge thereof in vacation. All testimony taken under a commission shall be taken on interrogatories and cross-interrogatories filed in the cause, unless the parties shall dispense therewith, which interrogatories shall be filed in the clerk's office ten days previous to a rule day, after which the defendant shall be allowed five days to file his cross-interrogatories, unless he waives his right.

RULE XXVII. Orders for the admission of a guardian ad litem, to defend a suit, may be made either by the court or one of the judges thereof.

RULE XXVIII. Witnesses who live within the district may, upon due notice of the opposite party, be summoned to appear before the commissioners appointed to take testimony, or before a master or examiner appointed in any cause by subpoena in the usual form, which may be issued by the clerk in blank, and filled up by the party praying the same, or by the commissioners, master, or examiner, requiring the attendance of the witnesses at the time and place specified, who shall be allowed for attendance the same compensation as for attendance in court; and if any witness shall refuse to appear, or to give evidence, it shall be deemed a contempt of the court, which being certified to the clerk's office by the commissioners, master, or examiner, an attachment may issue thereupon by order of the court, or of any judge thereof, in the same manner as if the contempt were for not attending, or for refusing to give testimony in the court. But nothing herein contained shall prevent the examination of witnesses viva voce when produced in open court.

RULE XXIX. When a matter is referred to a master to examine and report thereon, he shall assign a day and place therefor, and give reasonable notice thereof to the parties, or to the attorney or solicitor of such party as may not reside within the district, and if either party shall fail to attend at the time and place, the master may adjourn the examination of the matter to some future day, and give notice thereof to the parties, in which notice it shall be expressed that if the party fail again to appear, the master will proceed ex-parte; and if after receiving such notice the party shall again fail to appear, the master may proceed to examine the matter to him referred, and to report the same to the court, that such proceedings may be had thereon as to the court shall seem equitable and right.

Wheat. 6.

RULE XXX. The courts in their sittings may regulate all proceedings in the office, and may set aside any dismissals, and re-instate the suits on such terms as may appear equitable.

RULE XXXI. Every petition for a rehearing shall contain the special matter or cause on which such rehearing is applied for, shall be signed by counsel, and the facts therein stated, if not apparent on the record, shall be verified by the oath of the party or some other person. No rehearing shall be granted after the term at which the final decree of the court shall have been entered and recorded, if an appeal lies to the Supreme Court. But if no appeal lies, it may be admitted at any time before the end of the next term of the court.

RULE XXXII. The circuit courts may make further rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the rules hereby prescribed, in their discretion.

RULE XXXIII. In all cases where the rules prescribed by this court, or by the Circuit Court, do not apply, the practice of the circuit courts shall be regulated by the practice of the High Court of Chancery in England.

Ordered by the court, that the foregoing rules be the rules of practice for the courts of equity of the United States, from and after the first day of July next, and the clerk of the court is directed to have the same printed, and to transmit a printed copy thereof, duly certified, to the clerks of the several courts of the United States, and to each of the judges thereof.

MEMORANDUM.

DIED, on Monday, the 25th of February, in the city of Washington, William Pinkney, in the fifty-eighth year of his age. He was one of the board of commissioners for settling the claims under the British treaty of 1794, and had represented the government of this country, as its minister plenipotentiary, successively, at the courts of London, Naples, and St. Petersburg, with dignity and ability; he had held, with the highest reputation, the office of Attorney-General of the United States; and at the time of his death was a senator in Congress from his native state of Maryland, and a distinguished ornament of this bar. His funeral took place on the ensuing Wednesday, in the forenoon, under the direction of the senate, and was attended with all those public solemnities and that reverential sorrow due to his exalted talents and station.

To extraordinary natural endowments, Mr. Pinkney added deep and various knowledge in his profession. A long course of study and practice had familiarized his mind with the science of the law, in every department; and his attainments in the auxiliary branches of learning, essential to the jurist and advocate, were of the most profound and elegant character. For many years he was the acknowledged leader at the head of the bar of his native state; and during the last ten years of his life—the principal period of his attendance in this court—he enjoyed the reputation of having been rarely equalled, and perhaps never excelled, in eloquence and the power of reasoning upon legal subjects. His mind was acute and subtle; rapid in its conceptions, and singularly felicitous in the exposition of the truths it was employed in investigating. Mr. Pinkney had the command of the greatest variety of the most beautiful and peculiarly appropriate diction, and the faculty of adorning and illustrating the driest and most intricate discussions. His favorite mode of reasoning was from the analogies of the law; and whilst he delighted his auditory by his powers of amplification and rhetorical ornament, he instructed the court by tracing up the technical rules and positive institutions of jurisprudence to their historical source and first principles. He was profoundly versed in the ancient learning of the common law; its technical peculiarities and feudal origin, its subtle distinction and artificial logic, were familiar to his early studies, and enabled him to expound, with admirable force and perspicuity, the rules of real property. To this, and his other legal attainments, he superadded, at a later period of life, an extensive acquaintance with the theory and administration of public law.

In the various questions of constitutional law which have been recently discussed in this high tribunal, it may be said, it is hoped, without irreverence, that Mr. Pinkney's learning and powers of investigation have very much contributed to enlighten and fix its judgments. In the discussion of that class of causes especially, which, to use his own expressions, "presented "the proud spectacle of a peaceful judicial review of the conflicting sovereign claims of "the government of the Union and of the "particular states, by this more than Amphictyonic council," his arguments were characterized by a fervor, earnestness, gravity, eloquence, and force of reasoning, which convinced all who heard him that he delivered his own sentiments as a statesman and a citizen, and was not merely solicitous to discharge his duty as an advocate. He exerted an intellectual vigor proportioned to the magnitude of the occasion. He saw in it "a pledge of the "immortality of the Union; of a perpetuity of "national strength and glory, increasing and "brightening with age; of concord at home, "and reputation abroad." And in his argument on the constitutionality of the charter of the Bank of the United States, he stated, that "the consideration which the question involved "imparted to it a peculiar character of importance; and this tribunal, distinguished as it is "for all that can give to judicature a title to "reverence, is in deliberating and adjudicating "upon it, in the exercise of its most exalted, "its most awful functions. The legislative faculties of the government of the Union, for "the prosperity of the Union, are in the lists "against the imputed sovereignty of a particular state; and you are the judges of the lists; "not, indeed, upon the romantic and chivalrous principles of tilts and tournaments, but "upon the sacred principles of the constitution. "In whatever direction you look, you cannot "but perceive the solemnity, the majesty of "such an occasion. In whatever quarter you "approach the subject you cannot but feel that it "demands from you the firm and steady exertions of all those high qualities which the "universal voice ascribes to those who have "devoted themselves to the ministry of this "holy sanctuary."

That intense application to his professional and public labors, for which Mr. Pinkney was so remarkably distinguished, continued to animate his exertions to the last moments of his life; and as he held up a high standard of excellence in this honorable career, he pursued it with unabated diligence and ardor, and still continued to speak as from the impulse of youthful ambition. His example was therefore of the greatest utility in exciting the emulation of the profession. But it is as an enlightened defender of the national constitution against the attacks which have been made upon it under the pretext of asserting the claims of state sovereignty, that his loss is most to be lamented by the public. It is known to his friends that he was, a short time before his death, engaged in the investigations preparatory to making a great effort in the senate upon this interesting subject. The loss of such a commentary upon the constitution, by one who had so profoundly meditated its principles, may be regarded as a public calamity. It is also to be regretted that the great fame of his eloquence must rest mainly in tradition; as it is believed that no perfect memorials of his most splendid efforts in the senate or at the bar have been preserved, and it is obviously impossible to form any adequate notions of the powers of an advocate from the sketches of the arguments of counsel contained in the books of reports.

The following proceedings of the court and bar took place upon the occasion of Mr. Pinkney's decease:

Feb. 26.—On the meeting of the court, this morning, Mr. Harper rose, and addressed the judges thus:

"On the part of the bar, may it please your Honors, I am about to address a request to the court, which I am sure will accord with its feelings, and I hope will not be considered as inconsistent with its duty.

"A great man has fallen in Israel.' The bar has lost one of its brightest ornaments; the court one of its ablest and most enlightened advisers.

"When such men fall, it seems fit that some expression of public regret should attend them to the tomb. It cannot be useful or pleasing to them, but it tends to increase the effect of their example to those who survive, and to soothe the sorrow of their afflicted relatives.

"Nowhere can such a tribute more properly be paid to the memory of our departed brother than here; where the pre-eminent talents and acquirements by which he adorned our profession have been so often displayed; and he has taken so large a part in fixing those great legal and constitutional landmarks by the establishment of which this court has conferred the most solid and extensive benefits on the nation.

"To express our deep sense of this great public and private loss, and as the most appropriate tribute now in our power to offer to the memory of the deceased, I request the court to allow this day for the uninterrupted indulgence of our feelings, and for that purpose now to adjourn."

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL replied in the following words:

"I am very confident that I may say in the name of all my brethern, that we participate sincerely in the sentiments expressed at the bar. We all lament the death of Mr. Pinkney, as a loss to the profession generally, and especially to that part of it which is assembled in this room. We lament it, too, as a loss to our country. We most readily assent to the motion which has been made, and shall direct an adjournment till to-morrow at twelve."

The following entry was directed to be made on the minutes of the court:

"The court being informed that Mr. Pinkney, a gentleman of this bar, highly distinguished for his learning and talents, departed this life last night in this city, the judges have determined, as a mark of their profound respect for his character, and sincere grief for his loss, to wear crape on the left arm for the residue of the term; and to adjourn for the purpose of paying the last tribute to his remains, by attending them from the place of his death."

After the adjournment of the court, the members of the bar assembled in the court-room; Mr. Clay was called to the chair, and Mr. Winder appointed secretary.

On motion of Mr. Harper, seconded by Mr. Webster, it was unanimously resolved, that the members of this bar, as a mark of their regret for the memory of their deceased brother, the Hon. William Pinkney, and of their deep sense of the loss which the public and the profession have sustained in his death, will attend his funeral in a body, and wear a crape on the left arm during the present term.

On motion of Mr. Wheaton, seconded by Mr. D. B. Ogden, it was unanimously resolved, that the proceedings of this meeting be signed by the chairman and secretary, and published in the National Intelligencer.

The meeting then adjourned.

H. CLAY, Chairman.

W. H. WINDER, Secretary.

Wheat. 7.

REPORTS OF THE DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of the United States.

FEBRUARY TERM, 1822.

1*] [*LOCAL LAW. CHANCERY.]

MILLER ET AL. v. KERR ET AL.

A warrant and survey authorize the proprietor of them to demand the legal title, but do not, in themselves, constitute illegal title; until the consummation of the title by a grant, the person who acquires an equity holds a right, subject to examination.

Where the register of the land-office of Virginia, had, by mistake, given a warrant for military services in the continental line, on a certificate authorizing a warrant for services in the state line, and in recording it, pursued the certificate, and not the warrant, it was held that this court could not support a prior entry and survey, on a warrant thus issued by mistake, against a senior patent.

Where the plaintiffs seek to set aside the legal title, because they have the superior equity, it is consistent with the principles of the court to rebut this equity by any circumstances which may impair it; and the legal title cannot be made to yield to an equity founded on the mistake of a ministerial officer.

THIS cause was argued and determined at the last term, but omitted to be reported.

2*] *Mr. Justice TODD delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 29th of May, 1783, Seymour Powell, heir of Thomas Powell, obtained a military land warrant from the register's office in Virginia, No. 679, for 2,663½ acres of land "due in consideration of services for three years, as a lieutenant of the Virginia continental line, agreeable to a certificate from the governor and council, received into the land-office." A part of this warrant was entered in the military district reserved for the officers and soldiers of the Virginia continental line, on the 16th of June, 1795; and, on the 30th of October, 1796, 789 acres, part thereof was surveyed in the name of the said Seymour Powell, which survey was on the 1st of March, 1797, recorded in the office of the surveyor-general. On the 10th of July, 1800, Justus Miller purchased this land, and took an assignment of the entry and survey, and obtained a patent therefor in February, 1808.

John Neville made an entry on the same land in May, 1806, on a military land warrant, for services in the Virginia continental line; and his heirs, the respondents, obtained a patent therefor on the 30th of April, 1807.

They have brought an ejectment against the heirs of Justus Miller, who having, as they say, the elder equitable, though the junior legal title, have filed this bill to enjoin proceedings at law, and compel Neville's heirs to convey the legal title to them.

In their answer, Neville's heirs assert that Thomas Powell never served in the Virginia continental line, but that his service was [*3 performed in the state line, and that the certificate of the governor and council, on which the warrant was issued, was expressed to be given for services in the state line, so that the warrant issued fraudulently, or by mistake. They further insist, that as the officers of the state line could not enter their warrants in the district reserved for the continental line, the plaintiffs ought not to be permitted to avail themselves of a title founded in mistake, to defeat their legal title.

The testimony taken in the cause, shows that the records of the office of the executive council of Virginia have been examined, and that no certificate has ever been granted to Seymour Powell, as the heir of Thomas Powell, for services in the Virginia continental line, but that a certificate was granted to him for military services for three years in the state line.

In the land-office, too, records are to be preserved of all the warrants which issue, and of the certificates on which they issue. This office also has been searched, and no certificate is found of any military service rendered by Thomas Powell, in the Virginia continental line, nor is there on record any warrant for such service; but there is a certificate given to Seymour Powell, for his military service as a NOTE.—Letters patent for conveying real estate may be set aside in equity, if obtained by fraud. Atty.-Gen. v. Vernon, 1 Vern. 277; Jackson v. Lawton, 10 John. R. 25, 26; Jackson v. Hart, 12 John. R. 77; 2 Bl. Com. 348.

Where a patent for lands is granted by the general government, the court may go behind the patent, on allegations of fraud in the patentee in obtaining the patent, and may examine into the equities of other persons entitled or claiming to be entitled to the patent, and may set aside the same if fraudulently obtained. Brush v. Ware, 15 Pet. 93; Boldly v. Taylor, 5 Cranch, 196; Polk v. Wendell, 5 Cranch, 93; 5 Wheat. 293; Hoffnagle v. Anderson, post, 213; 2 N. Y. Rev. St. 578, s. 12; The People v. Clark, 10 Barb. 120; N. Y. Code of Prac. s. 1957.

lieutenant in the state line; and a warrant on record for those services, bearing the same date and number with that on which the land now in controversy was entered.

There is no proof, and no reason to believe, that Thomas Powell ever performed any military service *in the Virginia line on continental establishment.

It is, then, apparent that the register of the land-office has, by mistake, given a warrant for military services in the continental line, on a certificate authorizing a warrant for service in the state line; and that, in recording it, he has pursued the certificate, and not the warrant.

The question is, can this court support a prior entry and survey, on a warrant thus issued by mistake, against a senior patent?

It has been urged, on the part of the appellants, that the title of Thomas Powell, for services in the state line, is precisely to the same quantity of land as if those services had been rendered in the continental line; his claim on the state of Virginia is the same. That, had the warrant been properly issued, it might have been satisfied in the district set apart for the officers and soldiers of the state line, which district is in the state of Kentucky, and can no longer be appropriated by the holders of warrants for military services in the Virginia state line. Thus the rights under Powell are sacrificed, without any fault of his, in consequence of a mistake committed by the register of the land-office. They say that they are purchasers, without notice, of a title apparently good, and ought not to be affected by the mistake of a public officer. They insist that in the hands of a purchaser, a warrant ought to be liable to no objection founded on circumstances anterior to its date.

5*] *There is great force in these arguments; and, if the military district had remained a part of Virginia until Mr. Powell's warrant was entered, they would, perhaps, be unanswerable. But, in 1784, this district, with all the territory claimed by Virginia north-west of the Ohio, was ceded to the United States, with a reservation in favor of the legal bounties of the Virginia troops on continental establishment only. There is no reservation whatever in favor of the bounties in land, to the state troops. Provision for them was made elsewhere.

After this cession, no title could be acquired under Virginia, which was not included within the reservations. The same principle was asserted by this court in the case of Polk's Lessee v. Wendell,<sup>1</sup> and is, we think, too clear to be controverted. The great difficulty in this case consists in the admission of any testimony whatever, which calls into question the validity of a warrant issued by the officer to whom that duty is assigned by law. In examining this question, the distinction between an act which is judicial, and one which is merely ministerial, must be regarded. The register of the land-office is not at liberty to examine testimony, and to exercise his own judgment respecting the right of an applicant for a military land warrant. He was originally directed to grant warrants to the officers or soldiers "producing to him a certificate of their claims respectively from the Commissioner of War, and not otherwise." When the office of Commissioner of War was put *down, this duty devolved [*6 on the executive department, whose certificate was as obligatory on the register, as that of the Commissioner of War had been. The question of right, then, was tried before the executive council, and the register is a mere ministerial officer carrying the judgment of the executive into execution by issuing his warrant in pursuance of their certificate. This certificate is filed and preserved in the office as the document on which the warrant issued. It is as much a part of the record as the warrant itself.

A warrant and survey authorize the proprietor of them to demand the legal title, but do not, in themselves, constitute a legal title. Until the consummation of the title by a grant, the person who acquires an equity holds a right subject to examination. The validity of every document is then open to examination, whatever the law may be after the emanation of a patent.

If this be correct, and the objection to the warrant delivered to Mr. Powell can be considered, he is shown, by the clearest testimony, to be the holder of a warrant issued by mistake. As an officer in the state line, he was not entitled to a warrant which could appropriate lands lying in the military district north-west of the Ohio."

As the plaintiffs are endeavoring to set aside the legal title, because they have the superior equity, we think it consistent with the principles of the court to rebut this equity by any circumstance which may impair it.

*The case is a hard one on the part of [*7 the plaintiffs; and they may have strong claims on the liberality and justice of the United States, or of Virginia; but we do not think the legal title can be made to yield to an equity founded in the mistake of a ministerial officer.

Decree affirmed, each party paying his own costs.

Cited—7 Wheat. 218; 6 Pet. 676; 12 Pet. 299; 15 Pet. 106; 3 How. 665; 1 McLean, 535.

[LOCAL LAW.]

NEWSOM v. PRYOR'S LESSEE.

Where plats are returned and grants made, without an actual survey, the rule of construction which has been adopted, in order to settle the conflicting claims of different parties, is, that the most material, and most certain calls shall control those which are less material and less certain.

A call for a natural object, as a river, a known stream, a spring, or even a marked line, shall control both course and distance.

There is no distinction between a call to stop at a river, and a call to cross a river.

Where a grant was made for 5,000 acres of land "lying on both sides of the two main forks of Duck River, beginning, &c., and running thence west 894 poles, to a white oak, thence south 894 poles, to a stake crossing the river, thence east 894 poles to a stake, thence north 894 poles to the beginning, crossing the south fork:" it was held, that it must be surveyed so as to extend the second line of the grant such a distance on the course called for as would cross Duck River to the opposite bank.

1.—5 Wheat. Rep. 293.

8*] THIS cause was argued by Mr. Law<sup>1</sup> for *plaintiff in error, and by Mr. White<sup>2</sup> for the defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court;

This is a writ of error to a judgment given in the Circuit Court for the District of West Tennessee, in an ejectment brought by the defendants in error against the present plaintiff. The plaintiffs in the court below claimed under the elder patent, to the validity of which there was no objection. Of consequence, the only question in the cause was, whether the lines of their grant comprehended the land in contest. The grant was made for 5,000 acres of land, "lying on both sides of the two main forks of Duck River, beginning, &c., and running thence west 894 poles, to a white oak tree; south, 894 poles, to a stake crossing the river; thence east, 894 poles to a stake; thence north, 894 poles, to the beginning, crossing the south fork."

It is apparent that a survey was not made in fact, but that, after marking a beginning corner, the surveyor made out and returned a plat, which he supposed would comprehend the land intended to be acquired. It is now too late to question the validity of grants made on such plats and certificates of survey. From the extraordinary circumstances of the country, they were frequent, and, in consequence of those circumstances, have received the sanction of *courts. An immense number of titles, believed to be perfectly secure, depend upon the maintenance of such grants. The extent of the mischief which would result from unsettling the principle, cannot be perceived; and is certainly too great now to be encountered. The patent, therefore, must be considered as if the survey had been actually made.

In consequence of returning plats where no actual surveys had been made, and where the country had been very imperfectly explored, the description contained in the patent often varies materially from the actual appearances of the land intended to be acquired. Natural objects are called for in places where they are not to be found; and the same objects are found where the surveyor did not suppose them to be. In a country of a tolerably regular surface, no considerable inconvenience will result from this circumstance. The course and distance of the patent will satisfy the person claiming under it, and seldom interfere with the rights of others. But in a country where we find considerable water-courses and mountains there must be more difficulty. The surveyor calls for some known object, but totally miscalculates its courses, distances, or both, from some given point which he has made the beginning of his survey; and there is a variance in the different calls of his survey, and of the patent founded on it. As in this case, the second line is to run south 894 poles, to a stake, crossing the river. This distance will not reach the river; and must be continued to 1,222 poles to cross the river. The distance must be disregarded, and this line so extended *as to [*10 cross the river, or the distance must control the call for crossing the river. These difficulties have occurred frequently, and must be expected to occur frequently where grants are made without an actual survey. Some general rule of construction must be adopted; and that rule must be observed, or the conflicting claims of individuals must remain forever uncertain.

The courts of Tennessee, and all other courts by whom causes of this description have been decided, have adopted the same principle, and have adhered to it. It is, that the most material and most certain calls shall control those which are less material and less certain. A call for a natural object, as a river, a known stream, a spring, or even a marked tree, shall control both course and distance. These decisions are founded on two considerations. Generally speaking, it is the particular intention of the purchaser to acquire the land lying on the stream called for, as being more valuable than other land; and, in every case where a natural object is mentioned, it designates the land surveyed had there been an actual survey, much more certainly than course and distance can designate it. In this case, for example, the surveyor says that he has run south 894 poles, to a stake crossing the river. Now, it is much more probable that he should err in the distance, than in the fact of crossing the river. The conclusion, therefore, had an actual survey been made, would be, that the line did cross the river.

The general effect of this principle undoubtedly is, that the purchaser acquires more land than is expressed *in his grant, and more [*11 than he has paid for. Where this has been thought an object worthy of legislative attention, provision has been made for it. Courts cannot now shake a principle so long settled, and so generally acknowledged.

1.—He cited 1 Cooke's Tenn. Rep. 146; 1 Heyw. Rep. 253; 2 Heyw. Rep. 75, 138, 179; 4 Wheat. Rep. 448.

2.—Who cited 5 Cranch, 234; 2 Binney, 520; 1 Cooke's Tenn. Rep. 462; 2 Tenn. Rep. 154, 200, 302; 2 Heyw. Rep. 237, 238, 258, 253, 496; 1 Hen. & Munf. 125; 3 Call. 252.

NOTE.—See note to McIver's Lessee v. Walker, 9 Cranch, 173.

Course and distance yield to monuments, or natural objects, in determining boundaries of land. McIvor v. Walker, 4 Wheat. 444; Cleveland v. Smith, 2 Story, C. C. 278; Chinoweth v. Haskell, 3 Pet. 92; Barclay v. Howell, 6 Pet. 198; Wakefield v. Ross, 5 Mas. 16; Robinson v. Moore, 4 McLean, 279; McPherson v. Foster, 4 Wash. C. C. 45; Cleveland v. Smith, 2 Story, C. C. 278; Granger v. Swart, 1 Woolf. 88; White v. Williams, 48 N. Y. 344; Belden v. Seymour, 8 Conn. 19; 8 Conn. 304; Chatham v. Branard, 11 Conn. 60; Higley v. Bidwell, 9 Conn. 447; Howe v. Bass, 2 Mass. 380; Pernam v. Wead, 6 Mass. 131; Gerrish v. Bearce, 11 Mass. 193; Aiken v. Sanford, 5 Mass. 494; Davis v. Rainsford, 17 Mass. 207; Mayhew Wheat, 7.

v. Norton, 17 Pick. 357; Frost v. Spaulding, 19 Pick. 445; Dawes v. Prentice, 16 Pick. 435; Flagg v. Thurston, 13 Pick. 145.

If there be nothing to control the course and distance, the line is run by the needle.

Jackson v. Staats, 2 John. Cas. 350; Trammell v. Nelson, 2 Harr. & McH. 4; Penam v. Wead, 6 Mass. 131; Howe v. Bass, 2 Mass. 380; 4 Kent's Comm. 466; Higley v. Bidwell, 9 Conn. 447; Benedict v. Gaylord, 11 Mass. 335; Doe v. Porter, 3 Atk. 18, 57; White v. Gay, 9 N. H. R. 126; McIvor v. Walker, 9 Cranch, 173; Preston v. Bawmar, 6 Wheat. 580; Colclough v. Richardson, 1 McCord, 167; Welch v. Philips, 1 McCord, 215; Brooks v. Tyler, 2 Vt. 318; Clark v. Wethey, 19 Wend. 320; Wyckoff v. Stephenson, 14 Ohio, 13, 15, 17; Schultz v. Young, 3 Ired. N. C. 385.

In this case, the counsel for the defendant in the court below seems to have admitted the rule, but to deny its application to this case. He founds his application to the court on a supposed distinction between a call to stop at a river, and a call to cross a river. After stating the testimony, "he required the judges to instruct the jury, that if they believed there was no testimony to prove the making of any other corner than the beginning corner, the correct mode of running the said grant would be to go the course and distance from the beginning corner, which would form the termination of the first line, and run from thence the course and distance called for in the second line; and if the course and distance will not reach across the river that the call in the grant for crossing the river ought to be considered as a mistake in the surveyor, and be rejected; and the second line should terminate at the end of the distance, and from thence run the third line according to the course and distance, and from thence to the beginning. And the said counsel requested the judges to instruct the jury that such call as is in this grant, for a line to pass a river or other object, will be different in principle from what it would be if said call had been for said river, at the termination of the line or boundary; and although, in the latter case the law is, that such natural object shall be the 12*] *boundary, disregarding distance, yet in the present case, the distance shall be the criterion of boundary, disregarding the call for crossing the river."

The judges refused to give this instruction, and charged the jury "that the second line of the said grant must be extended such a distance on the course called for as will cross Duck River to the opposite bank.

To this opinion an exception was taken; and the jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff in ejectment, the defendant, in the Circuit Court, has brought the cause into this court by writ of error.

We can perceive no sound reason for the distinction between a call for a river at the end of a line, and for a river in the course of a line. There is as much reason in the one case for supposing the surveyor intended the line should cross the river, or, in case of actual survey, for supposing he did cross the river, as in the other, for supposing an intention to stop at the river, or an actual termination of the line at the river.

Whether the motives for the call were that the acquisition of the land on the river was an object with the purchaser, or that the call for the river conducted more certainly to the designation of the land intended to be acquired, the motives for considering it as the controlling call in the patent, to which distance must be subordinate, seems to be precisely the same whether the call be to cross the river, or to terminate at it.

It has been urged as an objection to the mode of surveying the land directed by the court, that 13*] the *last line will not cross the south fork, and that the land will not be "on both sides of the two main forks of Duck River."

But this objection will not be removed or diminished by the instruction required by the plaintiff in error. Nor can the land be so surveyed as that the last line shall cross the south fork. From the termination of the third line, it is necessary to proceed to the beginning, and the plat shows us that the south fork does not run between the two points. It cannot be brought between them, if at all, without extending the third line an immense distance, and changing the whole figure of the plat, or entirely disregarding the act of Assembly which directs lands to be taken up by lines running with the cardinal points, except in particular cases, of which this is not one.

Judgment affirmed with costs.

Cited.—11 Pet. 413; 21 How. 321; 5 Wall. 836; 23 Wall. 62; 2 Story, 290.

[COMMON LAW.]

TAYLOE v. T. & S. SANDIFORD.

In general, a sum of money in gross, to be paid for the non-performance of an agreement, is considered as a penalty, and not as liquidated damages. A fortiori, when it is expressly reserved as a penalty.

Thus, where in a building contract, the following covenant was contained: "The said houses to be completely finished on or before the *24th of [*14 December next, under a penalty of $1,000, in case of failure;" it was held, that this was not intended as liquidated damages for the breach of that single covenant only, but applied to all covenants made by the same party in that agreement; that it was in the nature of a penalty, and could not be set-off in an action brought by the party to recover the price of the work.

An agreement to perform certain work within a limited time, under a certain penalty, is not to be construed as liquidating the damages which the party is to pay for the breach of his covenant.

The case of Fletcher v. Dycke (2 Term Rep., 32), commented on, and distinguished from the present.

A person owing money under distinct contracts, has a right to apply his payments to whichever debt he may choose, and this power may be exercised without any express direction given at the time.

A direction may be evidenced by circumstances, as well as by words; and a positive refusal to pay one debt and an acknowledgement of another, with a delivery of the sum due upon it, would be such a circumstance.

THIS cause was argued by Mr. Jones and Mr. Hay<sup>1</sup> for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. Key<sup>2</sup> for the defendants in error.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

1.—They cited 2 Comyn on Contracts, 528-539, and the cases there collected. Fletcher v. Dycke, 2 T. R. 32.

2.—He cited 4 Cranch, 317; 6 Cranch, 9; Dennis v. Cummins, 3 Johns. Cas. 297; Smith v. Dickinson, 3 Bos. & Pull. 630; Bank of Columbia v. Patterson, 7 Cranch, 299.

NOTE.—As to application of payments, see note to Field v. Holland, 6 Cranch, 9.

Liquidated Damages.—As to whether a sum agreed to be paid as damages for the violation of an agreement shall be considered as liquidated damages, or only a penalty, is held to depend upon the meaning and intent of the parties as gathered from a full view of the provisions of the contract, the terms used to express the intent, and the peculiar circumstances of the subject-matter of the agreement. Dakins v. Williams, 17 Wend. 447; S. C. affirmed, 22 Wend. 201; Shute v. Hamilton, 3 Daly, N. Y. 462; Perkins v. Lyman, 11 Mass. 76; Streep v. Williams, 48 Penn. St. 450; Chase v. Allen, 13 Gray,

Wheat. 7.

This is a writ of error to a judgment of the Circuit Court of the County of Alexandria, rendered in an action of assumpsit, brought by T. & S. Sandiford against John Tayloe. It appeared on the trial of the cause, that on the 13th of May, 1816, the parties entered into a written <sup>15*</sup> contract, by which the defendants in error undertook to build for the plaintiff three houses on the Pennsylvania avenue in the city of Washington. On the 18th day of the same month, the parties entered into a contract, under seal, for the building of three additional houses, at a stipulated price. This contract contains the following covenant: "The said houses to be completely finished on or before the 24th day of December next, under a penalty of $1,000, in case of failure."

The parties entered into a third verbal contract for some additional work, to be measured, and paid for according to measurement.

These three houses were not completed by the day, and the plaintiff in error claimed the sum of $1,000, as stipulated damages, and retained it out of the money due to the defendants in error. This suit was thereupon brought; and, on the trial of the cause, the defendant in the Circuit Court claimed to set off in this action $1,000, as in the nature of stipulated damages; but the court overruled this claim, and decided that the said sum of $1,000 had been received in the nature of a penalty, and could not be set off in this action.

The defendant then moved the court to instruct the jury, that "upon the evidence offered, if believed, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover in this action the said sum of $1,000, inasmuch as the same, if due at all, was due under a contract under seal, and that the declarations of the defendant, and the understanding between the parties as to the reservation of <sup>16*</sup> the said $1,000, given in evidence *as aforesaid, was competent and sufficient evidence of the defendant's intention to apply his payment to the extinguishment, in the first instance, of such parts of the said moneys as were due by simple contract, and to reserve the $1,000 out of the money due under the said original contract." This instruction the court refused to give; and did instruct the jury "that it was competent to the plaintiffs to recover the said $1,000 in this action, unless they should be satisfied by the evidence that the defendant, at the time of paying the money, had expressly directed the same, or a sufficient part thereof, to the payment of the $1,500 due on the simple contract."

To both these opinions the defendant excepted; and the jury having given a verdict for the plaintiff in the Circuit Court, this writ of error was brought to the judgment rendered thereon.

It is contended, by the plaintiff in error, that the Circuit Court erred.

1st. In overruling the claim to offset the $1,000 mentioned in the agreement.

2d. In declaring that the plaintiff in that court might so apply the payments made, as to discharge the contract under seal, and leave the sum retained by the defendant in that court, to be demanded under the simple contract.

1. Is the sum of $1,000 mentioned in the agreement of the 13th of May, to be considered as a penalty, or as stipulated damages?

The words of the reservation are: "The said house to be completely finished on or before the 24th day *of December next, under the [*<sup>17</sup> penalty of $1,000, in case of failure."

In general, a sum of money in gross, to be paid for the non-performance of an agreement, is considered as a penalty, the legal operation of which is, to cover the damages which the party, in whose favor the stipulation is made, may have sustained from the breach of contract by the opposite party. It will not, of course, be considered as liquidated damages; and it will be incumbent on the party who claims them as such, to show that they were so considered by the contracting parties. Much stronger is the inference in favor of its being a penalty, when it is expressly reserved as one. The parties themselves denominate it a penalty; and it would require very strong evidence to authorize the court to say that their own words do not express their 42; Dennis v. Cummins, 3 John. Cas. 297; Knapp v. Waltby, 13 Wend. 587; Pearson v. Williams, 26 Wend. 630; S. C. 24 Wend. 244; Hasbrouck v. Tappan, 15 John. 200; Gray v. Crosby, 13 John. 219; Ayers v. Pease, 12 Wend. 393.

The contract is to govern; and the true question is, what was the contract? Whether it was folly or wisdom for the contracting parties thus to bind themselves, is of no consequence, if the intention is clear. If there be no fraud, circumvention, or illegality in the case, the court is bound to enforce the agreement. Kemble v. Farren, 6 Bingh. 141; Slosson v. Beadle, 7 John. 72; Spence v. Tilden, 5 Cow. 144, and note; Noble v. Bates, 7 Cow. 307; Hosmer v. True, 19 Barb. 106; Cushing v. Drew, 97 Mass. 445; Bagley v. Peddie, 16 N. Y. 469; Astley v. Welton, 2 Bos. & Pull. 346; Barton v. Glover, Holt's N. P. R. 43, and note; Reilly v. Jones, 1 Bing. 302; Davies v. Penton, 6 Barn. & C. 216; Crisdee v. Bolton, 3 Car. & P. 240; Randall v. Everest, 2 Car. & P. 577.

The mere use of the term "penalty," or the term "liquidated damages," does not determine this intention, if on the whole the instrument discloses a different intention. Dimech v. Corlett, 12 Moore, P. C. 199; Chamberlain v. Bagley, 11 N. H. 284; Davies v. Penton, 6 B. & C. 216, 224; Davis v. Freeman, 10 Mich. 188.

It is the tendency and preference of the law to regard a sum stated to be payable if a contract is not fulfilled, as a penalty, and not as liquidated damages; for by treating such sum as a penalty, Wheat. 7. U. S., Book 5.

the recovery can be apportioned to the actual damages, or loss actually sustained. Cheddie v. Marsh, 21 N. J. (Law), 463; Wallis v. Carpenter, 13 Allen, 19; Baird v. Tolliver, 6 Humph. Tenn. 186; Hoag v. McGinness, 22 Wend. 163, 164; Cowen v. Gerrish, 3 Shep. 273; Watts v. Shepherd, 2 Ala. 425; Owen v. Hodges, 1 McMull 106; Moore v. Platte County, 8 Misso. 467; Bright v. Rowland, 3 How. Miss. 398; Hamilton v. Overton, 6 Blaekt. 206; Hodges v. King, 7 Met. 583; Gammon v. Howe, 2 Shep. 250; Brown v. Bellows, 4 Pick. 179; Richards v. Edick, 17 Barb. 260; Leggett v. Mut. L. Ins. Co., 53 N. Y. 394.

Where the damages would be wholly uncertain and incapable of being ascertained except by conjecture, independently of the stipulation, they will be considered as liquidated, if they are so denominated in the instrument. Williams v. Dakin, 22 Wend. 201; Holmes v. Holmes, 12 Barb. 137; Sedg. on Dam. 422; Bayley v. Peddie, 16 N. Y. 427; Lange v. Week, 2 Ohio St. 519; Esmond v. VanBenschoten, 12 Barb. 366; Bright v. Rowland, 4 Miss. 398; Leighton v. Wales, 3 M. & W. 545; Pierce v. Fuller, 8 Mass. 223; Streeter v. Rush, 25 Cal. 67; Cushing v. Drew, 97 Mass. 445; Crisdee v. Bolton, 3 C. & P. 240; Noble v. Bates, 6 Cow. 309; Smith v. Smith, 4 Wend. 468; Pierce v. Jung, 10 Wis. 30; Townsend v. Fisher, 2 Hilt. N. Y. 47; Morse v. Rathburn, 42 Mo. 594; Hodges v. King, 7 Met. Mass. 583; Gobble v. Linder, 76 Ill. 157; Williams v. Green, 14 Ark. 315.

If the instrument provide that a larger sum shall own intention. These writings appear to have been drawn on great deliberation; and no slight conjecture would justify the court in saying that the parties were mistaken in the import of the terms they have employed.

The counsel for the plaintiff in error supposes that the contract furnishes clear evidence that the parties intended this sum as liquidated damages. The circumstance, that it is annexed to the single covenant, stipulating the time when the work shall be completed, is considered as showing that it was intended to fix the damages, for the breach of that covenant.

Without deciding on the weight to which this argument would be entitled, if supported by the fact, the court cannot admit that it is so supported. The engagement, that the said 18* houses shall be completely *finished on or before the 24th day of December next, is as much an engagement for the manner, as for the time of finishing the work, and covers, we think, all the covenants made by the defendants in error in that agreement. The case, therefore, presents the single question, whether an agreement to perform certain work by a limited time, under a certain penalty, is to be construed as liquidating the damages which the party is to pay for a breach of his covenant. This question seems to have been decided in the case of Smith v. Dickenson, reported in 3 Bos. & Pull., 630.

The plaintiff in error relies on the case of Fletcher v. Dycke, reported in 2 T. R., 32, in which an agreement was entered into to do certain work within a certain time, and if the work should not be done within the time specified, "to forfeit and pay the sum of £10 for every week," until it should be completed.

But the words "to forfeit and pay," are not so strongly indicative of a stipulation in the nature of a penalty, as the word "penalty" itself; and the agreement to pay a specified sum weekly during the failure of the party to perform the work, partakes much more of the character of liquidated damages than the reservation of a sum in gross.

The court is well satisfied that this stipulation is in the nature of a penalty, and, consequently, that there was no error in rejecting it as a set-off in this case.<sup>1</sup>

*The second objection goes entirely to [*19 the form of the action. The declaration is in assumpsit; and the plaintiff contends that the money claimed was due on a sealed instrument. It is admitted that all the money for the whole work performed by the defendants in error was paid, except the sum of $1,000, which was retained by the plaintiff in error, expressly on account of that sum which he supposed himself entitled to under the contract of the 18th of May, on account of the failure to complete the buildings by the 24th of December. If this money was due on the simple contract, then this action was clearly sustainable; if it was due under the sealed instrument, then it could be recovered only by an action on that instrument. Its being due on the one or the other depends on the application of the payments made by the plaintiff to the defendants in error. The court instructed the jury, that it was competent to the plaintiff to recover the said $1,000 *in this action, "unless they [*20 should be satisfied by the evidence that the defendant, at the time of paying the money had expressly directed the same, or a sufficient part thereof, should be applied to the extinguishment of the $1,500 due on the simple contract."

This instruction of the court is given in

1.—This subject is discussed, with his usual ability and acuteness, by Mr. Evans, in the Appendix to his Translation of Pothier on Obligations (Vol. II., p. 93-98). He thinks that the penalty ought, in general, to be regarded as stated damages; and his observations are calculated to excite doubts as to the correctness of some of the decisions on this subject. In addition to the cases collected by him, and those cited in the argument of the above case, in the text (Talloe v. Sandford), the following cases may be referred to: Ponsonby v. Adams, 6 Bro. Parl. Cas. 418; Harrison v. Wright, 13 East, 343; Rolfe v. Peterson, 6 Bro. Parl. Cas. 470; Sloman v. Walter, 1 Bro. Ch. Rep. 418; Hardy v. Martin, Ib. 419; Love v. Peers, 4 Burr. 2229; Cotterel v. Hook, Doug. 101; Wilbeam v. Ashton, 1 Campb. N. P. Rep. 78; Barton v. Glover, 1 Holt's N. P. Rep. 43. The learned reader will also find the supposed result of all the English cases summed up by Mr. Holt, in a note to the last-mentioned case. 1 Holt's N. P. Rep. 45.

be paid, on the failure of the party to pay a less sum, the larger sum is a penalty. Haldemann v. Jennings, 14 Ark. 329; Bagley v. Peddie, 5 Sandf. N. Y. 192. So, where the agreement imposes several distinct duties or obligations of different degrees of importance, and the same sum is named as damages for a breach of either indifferently, the sum is to be regarded as a penalty. Carpenter v. Lockhart, 1 Ind. 434; Thoroughgood v. Walker, 2 Jones, N. C. Law, 15; Kemble v. Farren, 6 Bing. 141; Sedgwick Lead. Cas. on Dam. 432; Astley v. Weldon, 2 Bos. & Pull. 346; Shreve v. Brereton, 51 Penn. St. 175; Berry v. Wisdom, 3 Ohio St. 241; Boys v. Ansell, 5 Bing. N. C. 390; Lampman v. Cochran, 16 N. Y. 275; Hoagland v. Segur, 38 N. J. 230.

Where the agreement is made for the attainment of another object or purpose, to which the stipulated sum is wholly collateral, such sum will be treated as a penalty. Bearden v. Smith, 11 Rich. S. C. L. 554; Laubenheimer v. Mann, 19 Wis. 519; Long v. Towl, 42 Mo. 545; Merrill v. Merrill, 15 Mass. 488; Perkins v. Lyman, 11 Mass. 76; Moore v. Platte County, 8 Mo. 467; Sloman v. Walter, 1 Bro. Ch. R. 418; Jaquith v. Hudson, 5 Mich. 123; Ricketson v. Richardson, 19 Cal. 330; Fisk v. Gray, 11 Allen, 132.

Where the damages are capable of being known and estimated, the sum fixed upon as damages will be treated as a penalty, though declared to be intended as liquidated damages. Graham v. Bickham, 4 Dall. 150; Spencer v. Tilden, 5 Cow. 144, 150, note; Davies v. Penton, 6 B. & C. 216; Pinkerton v. Caslon, 2 B. & Ald. 704; Colwell v. Laurence, 38 Barb. 643; Affirmed, 38 N. Y. 71; Goldsbrough v. Baker, 3 Cranch, C. C. 48.

Where the parties have agreed on the amount of damages, ascertained by fair calculation and adjustment, and have expressed this agreement in clear and explicit terms, the amount so fixed will be treated as the true damages, and not as a penalty. Mott v. Mott, 11 Barb. 127; Gammon v. Howe, 14 Me. 250; Fisk v. Fowler, 10 Cal. 512; Leland v. Stone, 10 Mass. 459; Westerman v. Means, 2 Penn. St. 97; Springdale Ass. v. Smith, 24 Ill. 480; Hardee v. Howard, 33 Ga. 533; Leggett v. Mut. Ins. Co., 53 N. Y. 394; Slosson v. Readle, 7 John. 72; Farrant v. Olmins, 3 B. & Ald. 692; O'Donnell v. Rosenberg, 11 Abb. N. S., N. Y. 59; Pettis v. Bloomer, 21 How. Pr. N. Y. 317; Brahan v. Pope, 1 Stew. Ala. 135; Brooks v. Hubbard, 3 Conn. 58; Tingley v. Cutler, 7 Conn. 291.

But if the agreement be unconscionable, the court will not be bound by its terms, as the rule of damages. Cutler v. Howe, 8 Mass. 257; Baxter v. Wales, 12 Mass. 365; 53 N. Y. 894.

See also the following cases:

Ponsonby v. Adams, 6 Bro. Parl. Cas. 418; Harrison v. Wright, 13 East, 343; Rolfe v. Peterson, 6 Bro. Parl. Cas. 470; Love v. Peers, 4 Burr. 2229; Milbeam v. Ashton, 1 Camp. N. P. R. 78; Burton v. Glover, 1 Holt's N. P. R. 43.

terms, the correctness of which cannot be entirely admitted. It would exclude an application of the money made by the creditor himself, with the assent of the debtor to the simple contract debt; for, in such case, it would not appear that the debtor had "expressly directed" the application.

Thus, among the accounts exhibited at the trial, is a receipt for the whole sum due for extra work performed under a verbal contract. It was not proved that the application of this money to the discharge of the verbal contract was "expressly directed." Yet no person will say that the creditor was at liberty to controvert this application, or to change it.

A person owing money under distinct contracts has undoubtedly a right to apply his payments to whichever debt he may choose; and, although prudence might suggest an express direction of the application of his payments at the time of their being made; yet there may be cases in which this power would be completely exercised without any express direction given at the time. A direction may be evidenced by circumstances as well as by words. A payment may be attended by circumstances which demonstrate its application as completely as words could demonstrate it. 21*] A positive refusal to pay one *debt, and an acknowledgment of another, with a delivery of the sum due upon it would, we think, be such a circumstance. The inquiry, then, in this case, will be, whether the payments made by the plaintiff, to the defendants in error, were accompanied with circumstances which amount to an exercise of his power to apply them.

A circumstance of no light import was given in evidence by the creditor himself. It was that, at the time of discharging the account for the extra work, the debtor confessed "that he had retained in his hands $1,000, as the forfeiture under the original contract for not finishing the houses in the time stipulated by contract, and that he would hold it, unless compelled by law to pay it." This $1,000 was the penalty stipulated in the agreement under seal; and when all the residue of the money was paid, the inference is very strong that this sum was reserved out of the money stipulated by the same agreement, and that the payments were made in discharge of the sums acknowledged to be due for other work.

The final payment was made by Tayloe, through the hands of a third person. His original purpose seems to have been, to insist on a receipt in full before he would pay the sum, which remained due, independent of the sum in contest. But on a representation of the peculiar pressure under which the Sandifords labored, they having a note in bank, which had become due, he agreed to pay the whole money due, under all the contracts, except the sum of $1,000 which he claimed a right to retain, 22*] *under the stipulation of the sealed instrument. There existed no objection to the payment of the money due, under the simple contract. The whole objection was to the payment of that under the sealed instrument, out of which he claimed a right to deduct $1,000, on account of a failure in the performance of that contract. Under these circumstances, we think that the money retained must be considered as reserved out of the sum due on that contract, and that the simple contract was discharged.

The court erred, then, in this direction to the jury, and the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

CERTIFICATE.—This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record of the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia, in the county of Washington, and was argued by counsel. On consideration whereof, it is the opinion of this court, that the said Circuit Court erred in instructing the jury, "that it was competent to the plaintiff to recover the said $1,000 in this action, unless they should be satisfied by the evidence, that the defendant, at the time of paying the money, had expressly directed the same, or a sufficient part thereof, to be applied to the extinguishment of the $1,500, due on simple contract."

It is therefore adjudged and ordered that the judgment of the said Circuit Court, in this case be, and the same is hereby reversed and annulled, and it is further ordered, that the said cause be remanded to the said Circuit Court with directions to issue a venire facias de novo.

Cited—5 Pet. 310; 1 Wood. 304; Deady, 80; 1 Paine, 345; 1 Bond, 325.

[*LOCAL LAW.]

[*23

TAYLOR'S LESSEE v. MYERS.

The owner of a survey made in conformity with his entry, and not interfering with any other person's right, may abandon his survey after it has been recorded.

The proviso in the act of March 2, 1807, c. 76, s. 1, which annuls all locations made on lands previously surveyed, applies to subsisting surveys, to those in which an interest is claimed; not to those which have been abandoned, and in which no person has an interest.

THIS cause was argued at the last term, by Mr. Doddridge and Mr. Scott for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. Brush for the defendant.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes on upon two questions, certified by the Circuit Court for the District of Ohio, in which the judges of that court were divided in opinion. The following is stated as the case on which the question arose:

"The plaintiff's claim is founded on an entry dated the 17th of February, 1817, surveyed the 19th of February, 1817, and on a patent founded thereon, dated the 18th of July, 1818, covering the premises in question.

"The defendant showed that the plaintiff, on the 27th of February, 1797, made an entry on the premises in question on another warrant, surveyed the *same the 15th of [24 April, 1797, and recorded the plat on the 20th of June of the same year.

"That before making the entry on which his patent is founded, he had withdrawn his said first entry and survey, by a marginal note on the record thereof, made on the surveyor's book (if a survey so circumstanced could be so withdrawn), and located the warrant elsewhere.

"The parties further agreed, that such withdrawals were customary ever since the year 1799."

The questions are:

1. Can the owner of a survey, made in conformity with his entry, and not interfering with any other person's right, abandon his survey after it has been recorded?

2. Can the defendant, upon these facts, protect himself, at law, under the act of Congress, passed on the 2nd of March, 1807, entitled, "An act to extend the time for locating Virginia military warrants, for returning surveys thereon to the office of the secretary of the department of war, and appropriating lands, for the use of schools in the Virginia military reservation, in lieu of those heretofore appropriated;" and the several subsequent acts on the same subject?

The military warrants, to which these questions refer, originate in the land law of Virginia. The question, whether a warrant completely executed by survey, can be withdrawn and so revived by the withdrawal as to be located in another place, has never, so far as is known, been decided in the courts of that state. In 25* Kentucky, where the same law governs, it has been recently determined, that a warrant once carried into survey with the consent of the owner, cannot be re-entered and surveyed in any other place. In Ohio, it is not understood that the question has been decided.

The first question, however, does not involve the right of the owner of a warrant, which has been surveyed, to enter and survey it elsewhere; but his right to abandon it entirely.

It draws into doubt the right of an individual, to refuse to consummate a title once begun.

In this respect no coercive principle is to be found in the act. An entry is forfeited, if not surveyed within a limited time. A survey is forfeited if not returned to the land-office by a specified time. In these cases, the right of abandonment is recognized. An individual may abandon his survey, by not returning it to the land-office within the time prescribed by law. Why may he not abandon it by any other unequivocal act? This is not prescribed as a single mode by which a right is to be exercised; but is annexed as a penalty for not proceeding to complete a title. The legislature determined, that no man should be allowed to lock up land from others, without such an appropriation as would subject it to the common burdens of society. He was at liberty to perfect his title, or to lose it; but was required to do the one or the other.

It seems to be an ingredient in the character of property, that a person who has made some advances towards acquiring it, may relinquish it, provided the rights of others be not affected 26* by such relinquishment. *This general principle derives great strength from usage which has prevailed among these military surveys. The case states, that it has been customary, ever since the year 1799, to withdraw surveys after they have been recorded. The place surveyed has, of course, been considered as having again become vacant, and has been appropriated by other warrants, which have been surveyed and carried into grant. It would be a serious mischief, the extent of which cannot be calculated, to declare these grants void. No subject requires to be treated with more delicacy than the land titles of a country, where a law has been explained by usage. Upon the general principle, which has been stated, and upon the custom of the country in this respect, the court is of opinion, that the owner of a survey, under the circumstances stated in the first question, may abandon it; but by doing so he will not cancel the rights of others.

If the plaintiff was at liberty to withdraw his survey, the defendant could not protect himself, under the act of Congress, to which the second question refers. The proviso of that act, which annuls all locations made on lands previously surveyed, applies to subsisting surveys, to those in which an interest is claimed; not to those which have been abandoned, and in which no person has an interest. A certificate is to be given in conformity with these principles.

CERTIFICATE.—This cause came on to be heard on the facts agreed by the parties, and on the question on which the judges of the Circuit Court were *divided, and was [*27 argued by counsel; on consideration whereof this court doth order, that it be certified to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Ohio:

1. That the owner of a survey, made in conformity with his entry, and not interfering with any other person's right, may abandon his survey after it has been recorded.

2. That the defendant, on the facts stated in the case, cannot protect himself at law, under the act of Congress, passed the 2d of March, 1807, entitled, "An act to extend the time for locating Virginia military warrants, for returning surveys thereon to the office of the secretary of the department of war, and appropriating lands for the use of schools in the Virginia military reservation, in lieu of those heretofore appropriated," and the several subsequent acts on the same subject.

Cited—1 Pet. 631, 637; 4 Pet. 337; 6 Pet. 678; 7 How. 264, 269; 1 McLean, 34.

[COMMON LAW.]

GREEN v. WATKINS.

In a writ of right, the tenant cannot give in evidence the title of a third person, with which he has no privity, unless it be for the purpose of disproving the demandant's seisin.

Therefore, where the demandant proves an actual seisin, by a pedis positio, the tenant cannot be permitted to prove a superior outstanding title since it does not disprove the demandant's seisin.

But where the demandant relies for proof of seisin, solely upon a constructive *actual [*28 seisin, in virtue of a patent from the state, of vacant lands, the tenant may show that the land has been previously granted by the state, for that divests the title of the state, and disproves the demandant's constructive seisin.

A writ of right brings into controversy only the titles of the parties to the suit, and is a comparison of those titles; and either party may therefore prove any fact which defeats the title of the other, or shows it never had a legal existence, or has been parted with.

Whcat. 7.

The case of Green v. Litter, 8 Cranch, 229, commented on, and explained.

THIS cause was argued by Mr. Montgomery for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. B. Hardin for the defendant.

Mr. Justice Story delivered the opinion of the court:

The record in this case presents a great variety of facts, out of which several important questions have arisen; but as the merits of the cause may, in the opinion of the court, be completely disposed of by the decision of a single point, the facts which illustrate that point will alone be mentioned.

This is a writ of right, originally brought by the plaintiff in error, against the defendant in error, to recover a certain tract of land in Kentucky, described in the writ. Issue being joined on the mere right between the parties, the demandant, to sustain his suit, gave in evidence a patent of the land in question, granted to him by the commonwealth of Virginia, and dated the 28th day of January, 1784, and offered proof of the boundary. But he offered no proof, other than his patent, that he was ever seized of the land in question. According [*29*] to the decision of this court, in Green v. Litter (8 Cranch, 229), a patent of vacant lands of the state conveys to the grantee a constructive actual seisin, sufficient to maintain a writ of right; and therefore the demandant in this case entitled himself prima facie, upon this evidence, to a recovery. To rebut this conclusion, the tenants offered in evidence, as well for the purpose of proving title in themselves, as to show that the demandant was never seized of the premises, certain patents from the commonwealth of Virginia, which included the premises, to wit, a patent to John Lewis and Richard May, dated the first of June, 1782; a patent to Edmund Eggleston, dated the same day and year; and a patent to John Gratton, dated the same day and year; and a patent to Isham Watkins of the same date; under which patents the tenants endeavored to derive by mesne conveyances a good title to themselves in severalty. To the regularity of the title of the tenants so derived, the demandant took several objections, which were overruled by the court, and the conveyances were admitted in evidence; and if, in point of law, the patents so offered in evidence by the tenants were admissible, for the purpose of showing that the demandant never had any constructive actual seisin in the premises, which was the only seisin on which he relied, the regularity of these mesne conveyances to the tenant becomes wholly immaterial, since, if these patents were still outstanding in strangers, they would, if admissible, all establish the same defect of seisin in the demandant. The question, then, which meets us at the threshold of this cause [*30*] is, whether it be competent for the tenants, in a writ of right, where the demandant shows no seisin by a pedis positio, but relies wholly on a constructive actual seisin, in virtue of a patent of the land, as vacant land, to disprove that constructive seisin, by showing that the state had previously granted the same land to other persons, with whom the tenants claim no privity. In other words, whether the tenants can set up title and seisin in a stranger, to disprove the seisin of the demandant; and, upon the fullest consideration, we are all of opinion that they may. The reasoning on which our opinion is founded, is this: The mise joined in a writ of right, necessarily involves the titles of both parties to the suit, and institutes a comparison between them. It is consequently the right of each party to give any fact in evidence which destroys the title of the other; for the question in controversy is, which hath the better mere right to hold the demanded premises. It has been already decided by this court, and is indeed among the best established doctrines of the common law, that seisin in deed either by possession of the land, and perception of profits, or by construction of law, is indispensable to enable the demandant to maintain his suit. The tenant may therefore show, in his defense, that the demandant had no such actual seisin; for the seisin of the freehold by the tenant, which is admitted by the bringing of the suit against him, is a sufficient title for the tenant, until the demandant can show a better title. The tenant may thus defeat the demandant, by proving that he never had any such seisin in deed, or if he once had it, that he has parted with his whole estate, by [*31] a conveyance competent to convey, and actually conveying it.

To apply this doctrine to the present case. The demandant here relies, not on a seisin in deed, by a pedis positio, but on a seisin in deed by construction of law, in virtue of his patent. If the land included in the grant belonged, at the time of the conveyance, to the state, and was vacant, upon the principles already asserted by this court, it conveyed, by operation of law, a seisin in deed to the demandant. But if the state had already granted the land by a prior patent, it was already, upon the same principles, in the adverse seisin of another grantee, and, consequently, the patent to the demandant could not convey either title or seisin. It is, therefore, manifest, that for this purpose, to disprove the seisin of the demandant, the tenants in this case were entitled to introduce the four patents above stated (even if they failed to establish a privity of estate in themselves), since these patents were all prior to that of the demandant, included the land, and, if admitted, would show that the seisin in deed, by mere construction of law upon the grant of his patent, never had a real existence.

It has been supposed, however, at the bar, that the case of Green v. Litter establishes a different doctrine on this point. In our opinion, that case does not justify any such conclusion; and certainly was not understood by the court to require it. It will be recollected, that the case of Green v. Litter came before this court upon a division of opinion of the judges of the Circuit Court upon certain questions of law, stated in the record. To those [*32] questions, in the form in which they were stated, and to those questions only, could the opinion of this court properly extend. In answer to the fifth question, which involved the inquiry, whether actual seisin, or, as it is commonly expressed, seisin in deed, is necessary to maintain a writ of right, and whether a patent from the state, of its vacant lands, conferred, by construction of law, a seisin in deed to the grantee, this court expressed an unhesitating opinion in the affirmative on both points. It follows, therefore, by necessary inference from this doctrine, that the tenant may disprove the demandant's seisin in deed by any evidence competent for this purpose; and if he succeeds in establishing the fact, the demandant must fail in his suit. That the proof of a prior patent of the same lands to another person would be sufficient for this purpose, in a case where the demandant relied exclusively upon a constructive seisin in deed, in virtue of the grant of his patent, has been already asserted. The eighth question propounded to the court, in Green v. Lister, is that, however, upon which the difficulty at the bar has arisen. It is in these words: "Can the defendant defend himself by an older and better existing title than the demandants in a third person?" Now, it is material to consider, that this question does not purport to inquire whether the tenant may disprove the defendant's seisin in a writ of right; nor does it purport to inquire whether the tenant may not show that the demandant has no title, or a title defective in point of legal operation. It supposes that the demandant has 33* a title per se, sufficient for a recovery, and then asks if a better title may be shown in a third person to defeat such recovery. The answer of the court is in the following words: "We are of opinion that a better subsisting adverse title in a third person is no defense in a writ of right. That writ brings into controversy only the mere rights of the parties to the suit." It is most manifest, that in this answer the court proceed upon the supposition that the demandant has, prima facie, a good title, upon which he may maintain his suit; and that he has established a seisin sufficient, in point of law, to entitle him to a recovery. And the point then is, whether a superior adverse title and seisin in a stranger can be given in evidence to dispute such recovery. The very reason assigned against the admission of such evidence shows the understanding of the court to be precisely what we now assert. It cannot be admitted, because a writ of right does not bring into controversy the right of the demandant as against all the world, but the mere right of the parties to the suit. But it does bring into controversy the mere right between these parties; and if so, it, by consequence, authorizes either party to establish, by evidence, that the other has no right whatsoever in the demanded premises, or that his mere right is inferior to that set up against him.

If, in the case at bar, the demandant had established an actual seisin by occupation of the land, and taking the esplees, the case would then have presented precisely the point which was understood to be presented in Green v. Lister; and from the opinion 34* given in that case, on that point, there is not the slightest inclination in this court to depart. We think that the decision in the present case may well be made upon the principles which have been already expounded, without, in any degree, breaking in upon the doctrines of that case.

If we are right in this view of the subject, it is unnecessary to enter into a minute examination of the points made in the court below, since the evidence which was objected to, was, under the circumstances of the case, clearly admissible, for the purpose of disproving the seisin of the demandant.

As to the instructions prayed for by the demandant, in the close of the evidence, and refused by the court and as to the instructions actually given by the court to the jury, it does seem necessary to pass them in minute review. Several of them turn altogether upon the deduction of title by the tenant, from the original patentee, whose patents they set up in defense. And as to the others, they may be disposed of by the single remark, that no error has been shown by them, in the argument here, and no error is perceived by the court.

Judgment affirmed.

Cited—3 Pet. 133, 172; 1 McLean, 482.

[*COMMON LAW.]

[*35

PAGE'S ADMINISTRATOR'S

v.

THE BANK OF ALEXANDRIA.

A bill, or note, is prima facie evidence, under a count for money had and received, against the drawer or indorser.

But the presumption, that the contents of the bill or note have been received by the party sued, and for the use of the plaintiff, may be rebutted by circumstances; and a recovery cannot be had, in such a case, where it is proved that the money was actually received by another party.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia, for the County of Alexandria. This was an action of assumpsit, brought by the defendants in error, the Bank of Alexandria, against the plaintiffs in error, the administrators of William Byrd Page, deceased. The declaration contained two counts. The first was on a promissory note, which was set forth, as made by William Hodgson, and payable on demand to the intestate, Page, who indorsed it to the Bank of Alexandria, where it was discounted, and the money paid to Hodgson. In support of this count, a note was given in evidence, drawn by Hodgson, in favor of, and indorsed by Page, payable fifty-four days after date.

The other counts were for money lent and advanced by the plaintiffs below to the intestate, Page, and for money had and received by him for their use. Evidence was also given to show that the bank had 36* used due diligence in demanding payment of the maker, and in giving notice of non-payment to the indorser; and that Page, in his life-time, frequently promised the bank payment of the note, after it became due. Judgment was given for the plaintiffs below, on a demurrer to the evidence, and the cause was brought to this court by writ of error.

This cause was argued by Mr. Swann and Wheat. 7.

Mr. Lee<sup>1</sup> for the plaintiffs in error, and by Mr. Taylor<sup>2</sup> for the defendants in error.

Mr. Justice LIVINGSTON delivered the opinion of the court, and after stating the case, proceeded as follows:

Whether due diligence were used by the holder of the note, is immaterial now to inquire, as this court is of the opinion, that a note payable any number of days after date, could not be applied to a count describing it as one payable on demand.

The only remaining question is, whether this note were sufficient proof of the count for money lent and advanced, and for money had and received. There are certainly cases in which a promissory note or an indorsement of 37* such note, may be offered in evidence, against the maker or indorser, under a count of this nature, and if unconnected with other circumstances, may be sufficient proof, in itself to charge the defendant. This proceeds on the ground that such note warrants a fair presumption or inference that the maker or indorser has received the contents of such note. But the court is not satisfied that, in this case, the mere production of this note was sufficient proof of Page's having borrowed money of the bank, or of his having received moneys for their use. Although a note or an indorsement be prima facie evidence of a receipt of money from the holders, by the maker, or indorser, yet, when all the other testimony in the cause produced by the plaintiffs themselves, shows unequivocally that the money for which the note was made was paid, not to the indorser, but to the maker himself, and for his sole use, the presumption arising from the mere act of indorsement is destroyed, and the party, in such case, ought not to be permitted to abandon his count on the written contract of the party, and apply it to the general money counts. It is admitted or proved, that this was a note made and indorsed for the accommodation of Hodgson, and that this fact was known to the directors of the bank, who received and discounted it as such, and for his sole use, and that he, and not Page, received the avails thereof. What pretense, then, is there, that this money was lent to Page, or that he received it for the use of the bank?

There was also proof in the cause that "Page, in his life-time, frequently promised the bank payment of the said note, after it be 38* came due. This promise *must be regarded as applying exclusively to the note which was offered in evidence, and was payable in fifty-four days after date; and if that note had been declared on, its influence on the cause would deserve serious consideration; but it cannot be used in support of the other count, for the testimony, in terms, confines this promise to payment of the note, and says not a word of his undertaking to repay the money which the bank had loaned to him or which he had received for their use.

The opinion of the court, then, is, that the bank can only recover from the administrators of Page, if at all, on his indorsement; but that, having set forth the note incorrectly, and there not being sufficient evidence to support the second count, the present action cannot be sustained. The judgment of the Circuit Court is therefore reversed, and judgment is to be entered for the defendants below.

Cited—6 How. 37; 2 Wood. & M. 78; 4 Cranch, C. 12; 2 McLean, 237.

[CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.]

Ex-parte KEARNEY.

This court has authority to issue a habeas corpus, where a person is imprisoned under the warrant or order of any other court of the United States.

But this court has no appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases, confided to it by the laws of the United States, and cannot revise the judgments of the circuit courts, by writ of error, in any case where a party has been convicted of a public offense.

*Hence the court will not grant a habeas [*39 corpus where a party has been committed for a contempt adjudged by a court of competent jurisdiction.

In such a case, this court will not inquire into the sufficiency of the cause of commitment.

The case of Crosby, Lord Mayor of London (3 Wils. 188), commented on, and its authority confirmed.

MR. JONES moved for a habeas corpus to bring up the body of John T. Kearney, now in jail, in the custody of the marshal, under a commitment of the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia, for an alleged contempt. The petition stated, that on the trial of an indictment in that court, the petitioner was examined as a witness, and refused to answer a certain question which was put to him, because he conceived it tended materially to implicate him, and to criminate him as a particeps criminis. The objection was overruled by the court, and he having persisted in refusing to answer the question, was committed to jail for the supposed contempt; and for no other cause.

Mr. Jones, for the petitioner, now argued, 1. That this court has power to issue the writ of habeas corpus in every case where the personal liberty of the citizen is restrained under the judicial authority of the Union. The jurisdiction is settled by a uniform series of decisions. It had been exercised in a case of treason;<sup>3</sup> in a case where the warrant of commitment was defective, in not showing a good cause certain, on *oath or affirmation;<sup>4</sup> and, at last the [*40 case of Bollman and Swartwout<sup>5</sup> settled the power of the court to be universal, and co-extensive with the general judicial power of the Union. 2. He insisted that a fit case was made out to justify the exercise of the jurisdiction upon the present application. The jurisdiction of this court cannot depend upon the nature of the commitment by the other court. The writ of

1.—They cited Sheehy v. Mandeville, 7 Cranch, 209; 1 H. Bl. 602; French's Adm. v. the Bank of Alex., 4 Cranch, 141; 2 H. Bl. 609; Macky v. Davis, 2 Wash. Rep. 219; Goodhall v. Stewart, 2 Hen. & Munf. 105.

2.—He cited Tatlock v. Harris, 3 T. R. 174; 3 Wheat. 7.

Burr. 1516; 2 Wash. Rep. 233, 265; 6 Munf. 392; 5 Cranch, 144; 5 Cranch, 49; 1 Cranch, 290.

3.—The United States v. Hamilton, 3 Dall. 17.

4.—Ex-parte Burford, 3 Cranch, 448.

5.—4 Cranch, 75.

habeas corpus is a writ of right, and the nature and grounds of the commitment are to be looked into on the return. This court must have power to issue the writ where an inferior court commit even for a contempt; because if the process of contempt be a branch of criminal judicature, considered as a punishment for an offense, this court has authority to control all inferior courts and magistrates. In England, the court of common pleas, although a tribunal of original and civil jurisdiction only, has, from the earliest times, exercised the authority of issuing the writ of habeas corpus to inquire into the cause of commitments by other jurisdictions.<sup>1</sup>

Mr. Swann (District-Attorney), contra, admitted that this court had a general power of issuing the writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum to all the other courts and officers of the United States, but insisted that this was not a case in which the court could exercise the authority. Because the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia was an inferior tribunal, it did not therefore follow that an appeal lies to this court from its judgment in criminal cases. This court has no appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases. It can only revise the decisions of the Circuit Court in such cases where there is a certificate of a division of opinion of the judges below. Here there was no doubt the court had jurisdiction of the case in which the party was committed for refusing to answer a question put to him, and which the court had determined he was bound to answer. This court cannot revise the principal case by an appellate process, neither can it revise that which has incidentally arisen out of it. Every court of justice must have a discretionary power of punishing contempts; and if an appeal were allowed upon every interlocutory judgment of this sort, there would be the greatest possible embarrassment and confusion.

Mr. Justice STORY delivered the opinion of the court, and after stating the case, proceeded as follows :

Upon the argument of this motion, two questions have been made: First, whether this court has authority to issue a habeas corpus, where a person is in jail, under the warrant or order of any other court of the United States; secondly, if it have, whether, upon the facts stated, a fit case is made out to justify the exercise of such an authority.

42* As to the first question, it is unnecessary to say more than that the point has already passed in rem judicatam in this court. In the case of Bollman and Swartwout (4 Cranch, 75) it was expressly decided, upon full argument, that this court possessed such an authority, and the question has ever since been considered at rest.

The second point is of much more importance. It is to be considered, that this court has no appellate jurisdiction confided to it in criminal cases, by the laws of the United States. It cannot entertain a writ of error, to revise the judgment of the Circuit Court, in any case where a party has been convicted of a public offense. And undoubtedly the denial of this authority proceeded upon great principles of public policy and convenience. If every party had a right to bring before this court every case, in which judgment had passed against him, for a crime or misdemeanor or felony, the course of justice might be materially delayed and obstructed, and, in some cases, totally frustrated. If, then, this court cannot directly revise a judgment of the Circuit Court in a criminal case, what reason is there to suppose that it was intended to vest it with the authority to do it indirectly?

It is also to be observed, that there is no question here, but that this commitment was made by a court of competent jurisdiction, and in the exercise of an unquestionable authority. The only objection is, not that the court acted beyond its jurisdiction, but that it erred in its judgment of the law applicable to the case. If, then, we are to give any relief in this case, it is by a revision of the opinion of the court, 43 given in the course of a criminal trial, and thus asserting a right to control its proceedings, and take from them the conclusive effect which the law intended to give them. If this were an application for a habeas corpus, after judgment on an indictment for an offense within the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court, it could hardly be maintained that this court could revise such a judgment, or the proceedings which led to it, or set it aside, and discharge the prisoner. There is, in principle, no distinction between that case and the present; for when a court commits a party for a contempt, their adjudication is a conviction, and their commitment, in consequence, is execution; and so the law was settled upon full deliberation, in the case of Brass Crosby, Lord Mayor of London (3 Wilson, 188).

Indeed, in that case the same point was before the court as in this. It was an application to the Court of Common Pleas for a habeas corpus to bring up the body of the Lord Mayor, who was committed for contempt by the House of Commons. The habeas corpus was granted, and upon the return, the causes of contempt for which the party was committed, were set forth. It was argued, that the House of Commons had no authority to commit for a contempt; and if they had, that they had not used it rightly and properly, and that the causes assigned were insufficient. But the whole court were of opinion that the House of Commons had a right to commit for a contempt, and that the court could not revise its adjudication. Lord Chief Justice De Grey, on that occasion said: 44 "When the House of Commons adjudged anything to be a contempt, or a breach of privilege, their adjudication is a conviction, and their commitment, in consequence, is execution; and no court can discharge, on bail, a person that is in execution by the judgment of any other court. The House of Commons, therefore, having an authority to commit, and that commitment being an execution, what can this court do? It can do nothing, when a person is in execution by the judgment of a court having a competent jurisdiction. In such a case this court is not a court of appeal." Again: "The courts of K. B. or C. B. never discharged any person committed for a contempt, in not answering in the Court of Chancery, if the return was for a contempt. If the admiralty commits for a contempt, or one be taken up on excommunicato capiendo, this court never discharges the persons committed." Mr. Justice Blackstone said. "All courts, by which I mean to include the two Houses of Parliament, and the courts of Westminster Hall, can have no control in matters of contempt. The sole adjudication of contempt, and the punishment thereof, belongs exclusively, and without interfering, to each respective court. Infinite confusion and disorder would follow if courts could, by writs of habeas corpus, examine and determine the contempt of others."

Wheat. 7.

1.—Wood's case, 3 Wils. 173; Scroggs v. Coleshill, Dyer, 175; 4 Inst. 290; Bushell's Case, Sir T. Jones's Rep. 12; 2 W. Bl. 745; 2 Hale's P. C. 144; Moor, 838; 1 Hale P. C. 399, 406, 446.

So that it is most manifest from the whole reasoning of the court in this case, that a writ of habeas corpus was not deemed a proper remedy, where a party was committed for a contempt by a court of competent jurisdiction; *and that, if granted, the court could not inquire into the sufficiency of the cause of commitment. If, therefore, we were to grant the writ in this case, it would be applying it in a manner not justified by principle or usage; and we should be bound to remand the party, unless we were prepared to abandon the whole doctrine, so reasonable, just, and convenient, which has hitherto regulated this important subject. We are entirely satisfied to administer the law as we find it, and are all of opinion, that upon the facts of this case, the motion ought to be denied.

The argument of inconvenience has been pressed upon us with great earnestness. But where the law is clear, this argument can be of no avail; and it will probably be found, that there are also serious inconveniences on the other side. Wherever power is lodged, it may be abused. But this forms no solid objection against its exercise. Confidence must be reposed somewhere; and if there should be an abuse, it will be a public grievance, for which a remedy may be applied by the legislature, and is not to be devised by courts of justice. This argument was also used in the case already cited, and the answer of the court to it is so satisfactory that it would be useless to attempt any farther refutation.

Upon the whole, it is the opinion of the court that the motion be overruled.

Writ denied.<sup>1</sup>

Cited—3 Pet. 208; 5 Pet. 210; 7 Pet. 572, 581; 14 Pet. 600, 603, 604, 623, 626, 628; 5 How. 190; 14 How. 119, 129, 130, 132; 18 How. 317; 18 Wall. 185, 187, 206; 20 Wall. 392; 3 Otto, 23; 10 Otto, 23, 283; 12 Otto, 122; 1 Wood. & M. 440; 4 Biss. 499; 2 Sawy. 409; 7 Blatchf. 25; 8 Blatchf. 94; 2 Cranch, C. C. 248, 392.

1.—Vide Ante, Vol. VI., p. 204, Anderson v. Dunn, where it was determined, that an action could not be maintained against the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives for imprisoning the plaintiff on a warrant for a contempt adjudged by the House. See also the case of J. V. N. Yates, 4 Johns. Rep. 317; Yates v. Lansing, 9 Johns. Rep. 395; Yates v. The People, 6 Johns. Rep. 337; Burdett v. Abbott, 14 East's Rep. 1, S. C.; 5 Dow. Parl. Rep. 165.

Wheat. 7.

[*CHANCERY.]

[*46

BAYLEY v. GREENLEAF AND OTHERS.

The vendor of real property, who has not taken a separate security for the purchase money, has a lien, for it, on the land as against the vendee and his heirs.

This lien is defeated by an alienation to a bona fide purchaser without notice.

Nor can it be asserted against creditors holding under a bona fide conveyance from the vendee.

Quære, Whether the lien can be asserted against the assignees of a bankrupt, or other creditors coming in under the purchaser by act of law.

The dictum of Sugden in his Law of Vendors, 364, examined and questioned.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia.

This suit was brought by the appellant in the Circuit Court for the county of Washington, for the purpose of subjecting a tract of land, lying within that county, which was sold by the plaintiff, Bayley, to the defendant, Greenleaf, to the payment of so much of the purchase money as still remains due. It appeared by the proceedings in the cause that in the year 1792 William Bayley purchased from William B. Worman *the land which is [*47 the subject of this suit, which he afterwards sold to James Greenleaf, to whom the title was made by Worman. A bond was given by Greenleaf to Bayley for the purchase money, which, in March, 1796, was surrendered to Greenleaf on his accepting bills drawn in favor of Clement Biddle for its amount. Some of these bills were alleged to be unpaid, and were produced by the plaintiffs.

On the 30th day of September, 1796, James Greenleaf, being then greatly indebted, conveyed sundry estates, and among others, the land in controversy, to George Simpson, in trust for the security of Edward Fox, who had entered into engagements for the said Greenleaf, to a very large amount. The deed was also made to secure the said Fox for any further advances he might make to, or engagements he might enter into, on account of the said Greenleaf.

On the 23d of March, 1797, George Simpson conveyed this land to the defendants, Pratt, Francis and others, as trustees for the uses and purposes mentioned in the deed from Greenleaf to Simpson. On the 26th of June 1797, a NOTE—Lien for purchase money. The vendor of real estate who has not taken a separate security for the purchase money, has a lien for it on the land, as against the purchaser and his heirs, and privies in estate. This lien is, in some respects, analogous to an equitable mortgage. Randall v. Jaques, 4 Quart. Law J. 218; Chilton v. Braiden, 2 Black, 458; Nairn v. Prouse, 6 Ves. 752, 760; Hughes v. Kearney, 1 Sch. and Lefr. 132; English v. Russell, Hempst. 35; 4 Kent's Comm. 151, 154; Burgess v. Wheat, 1 W. Bl. 150; S. C. 1 Eden, 210; Champion v. Brown, 6 John. Ch. 402; Daniels v. Davison, 16 Ves. 249; S. C. 17 Ves. 433; 1 Fonbl. Eq. B. 1, ch. 3, s. 3, note (c); 2 Madd. Ch. 105, 106; McLean v. McLelland, 10 Pet. 625; Sugden on Vendors, Vol. III., p. 182; 6 Am. ed. p. 117; Irvine v. Campbell, 6 Binn. 118; Williams v. Price, 5 Munf. 507; Stouffers Les. v. Coleman, 1 Yeates, 393; White v. Casanave, 1 Har. & J. 106; Ridgley v. Curey, 4 Har. & McH. 167; Hatcher v. Hatcher, 1 Rand. 53; Cox v. Fenwick, 3 Bibb, 183; Kennedy v. Woolfolk, 3 Hayw. 197; Wragg v. Compt. Gen. 2 Des. 509; Reeves v. Kimbal, 40 N. Y. 299; Phyfe v. Wardwell, 5 Paige, 268; 2 Edw. 47; Crafts v. Aspinwall, 2 N. Y. 289; Ross v. Whitson, 6 Yerg.

general deed was made to the same persons by Robert Morris, John Nicholson, and the said James Greenleaf, conveying to them the property mentioned in the deeds of the 30th of September, 1796, and of the 23d of March, 1797, with an immense mass of other property, for the payment of debts to a very great amount due from the said M. N. and G., which were enumerated in the said deed.

Some doubts having been entertained respecting the recording of these deeds, an attachment was sued out by the trustees against the said Greenleaf, in the county in which the said lands then lay, on which judgment was obtained on the 8th of February, 1798; and on the 28th day of the same month the land was sold under the judgment, purchased in for the trustees, and afterwards conveyed to them to the same uses and trusts as had been expressed in the original conveyance by deed dated in 1803.

In March, 1798, James Greenleaf took the benefit of the insolvent law of the state of Pennsylvania; and in November of the same year, he was also discharged under the insolvent law of the state of Maryland. In November, 1803, he was declared a bankrupt under the laws of the United States. The plaintiff, William Bayley, also became a bankrupt under the laws of the United States in July, 1802.

The trustees alleged they had contracted to sell the land in controversy to James Greenleaf; but that he had not paid the purchase money, in consequence of which they retained the legal title.

This suit was brought in this year 1812, by William Bayley, and by James S. Morrell, as trustee for the creditors of the said Bayley, and executor of the original assignee of the bankrupt, who is dead.

Mr. Law and Mr. Key, for the appellants, insisted that they had an equitable, subsisting, unwaived lien upon the land sold to the defendant, Greenleaf, for the amount of the purchase money. The law on the subject has been settled by a long and uniform current of decisions. The lien exists between vendor and vendee, and against subsequent purchasers from the vendee with notice that the money remains unpaid, unless the parties, by some unequivocal act, waive the lien.<sup>1</sup> It may also be asserted against purchasers, coming in by act of law, as assignees of a bankrupt, and against creditors claiming under a conveyance for their benefit; they are considered as volunteers.<sup>2</sup> Nor has the lien, in this case, been waived. Taking a covenant, bond, or note, is no waiver of the lien, if taken as a mode of payment, and not as a distinct security.<sup>3</sup>

1.—Brown v. Gilman, 4 Wheat. Rep. 255, and cases collected in note a.; Ib. 292, 297.

2.—Sugd. Vend. 364, and the cases there cited; 2 Madd. Ch. 105; Chapman v. Tanner, 1 Vern. 267.

3.—Sugd. Vend. 353; 1 Sch. and Lefr. 105.

50; Outcon v. Mitchell, 4 Bibb. 329; Enbank v. Poston, 5 Mon. 287; Graves v. McCall, 1 Call. Va. 414; Galloway v. Hamilton, 1 Dana. 576; Hundley v. Lyons, 5 Munf. 342; Wynne v. Alston, 1 Dev. Eq. 163; Henderson v. Strong, 1 Bibb. 590; Meek v. Ealy, 2 J. J. Marsh. 330; Voorhies v. Instone, 4 Bibb. 354; Clark v. Hunt, 3 J. J. Marsh. 557; Roberts v. Salisbury, 3 Gill. & J. 425; Blight v. Bank, 6 Mon. 193; Warner v. VanAlstyne, 3 Paige, 513; Pierce v. Gates, 7 Blackf. 162.

The assignee of a bond for the purchase money has a lien where the assignor had. Kennedy v. Collins, 4 Litt. 289; Enbank v. Poston, 5 Mon. 287; Eskridge v. McClure, 2 Yerg. 84; Edwards v. Bohannon, 2 Dana. 99. But the assignee of a promissory note given for purchase money has no lien. Brush v. Kinsley, 14 Ohio. 20; Contra White v. Stevor, 10 Ala. 441; Roper v. McCook, 7 Ala. 318; sed vide Hall v. Click, 5 Ala. 363.

Prima facie the unpaid purchase money is a lien on the land, and the burden of proof is on the vendee to show that the vendor agreed to rest on other security, and to waive the lien, notwithstanding the conveyance recites that the consideration has been paid. The death of the vendee does not alter the claim. Cood v. Pollard, 9 Price, 544; Cood v. Cood, 10 Price, 109; Garson v. Green, 1 John. Ch. 309; Clark v. Hall, 7 Paige, 383; Tierman v. Beam, 1 Ham. R. 465; 2 Wash. R. 142. The taking of the note of the vendee is not a discharge of the claim; and if part of the purchase money be paid the lien is good as to the residue, and the vendee becomes a trustee as to that which is unpaid. Garson v. Green, 1 John. Ch. 308; Hallock v. Smith, 3 Barb. 276; Clark v. Hunt, 3 J. J. Marsh. 553; Fish v. Howland, 1 Paige, 20; Blackburn v. Grayson, 1 Bro. C. C. 420; Johnson v. Thompson, 4 J. J. Marsh. 382; Eskridge v. McClure, 2 Yerg. 85; Cox v. Fenwick, 3 Bibb. 183; White v. Cassanave, 1 Har. & J. 106; Kennedy v. Woolfolk, 3 Hayw. 197; 4 Hen. & Munf. 113; 1 Yeates, 393; Gibbons v. Baddell, 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 682, n. (b); Ex-parte Peake, 1 Madd. 346.

But if security be taken for the purchase money upon the land or in any way, the lien is waived unless there be an express agreement retaining it. So the lien is waived when a note or bond is taken of the vendee for the purchase money, on which a third person is security, or indorser. Parrot v. Sweetland, 3 Myl. & K. 653; Fish v. Howland, 1 Paige, 20; Strider v. King, 3 Cranch, C. C. 67; Brown v. Gilman, 4 Wheat. 255; S. C. 1 Mas. 19.

This lien prevails against subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers, when they advance no new consideration, or had notice of the lien at or before their purchase, but not against bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, without notice or assignees under an assignment to specific creditors. It is superior to the lien of a prior judgment against the vendee. It exists against assignees by a general assignment, against a claim of dower by the wife of the vendee. Hallock v. Smith, 3 Barb. 267; Fish v. Howland, 1 Paige, 20; Arnold v. Patrick, 6 Paige, 310; Story's Eq. Jur. secs. 1218 to 1233; Champion v. Brown, 6 John. Ch. 398; Schwarz v. Stein, 29 Md. 112; Hagaen v. Cochrane, 51 Ill. 302; S. C. 2 Am. Rep. 303; Cocke v. Bailey, 42 Miss. 81; Green v. Demoss, 10 Humph. Tenn. 371; Lamberton v. Van Voorhies, 15 Hun. 336.

The lien for purchase money is enforceable in equity. The party holding the lien is not bound to exhaust his remedy at law, but may come into equity in the first instance. Bradley v. Bosley, 1 Barb. Ch. R. 152.

Where part of the purchase money is paid in a worthless promissory note or worthless bills of a broken bank, representing them to be good and collectable, the vendor has an equitable lien on the land for the amount thus paid. Shelton v. Tiffins, 6 How. 163; Bradley v. Bosley, 1 Barb. Ch. R. 152.

(See further McKay v. Green, 3 John. Ch. R. 58, as to lien of indorser of note used in payment of purchase money.)

This lien arises whether the estate be conveyed or only contracted to be conveyed, and may be enforced by the vendor's personal representatives, and also in favor of legatees and creditors when the vendor seeks payment out of the personal assets of the vendee. Chapman v. Turner, 1 Vern. 267; Pollexen v. Moore, 3 Atk. 272; Mackreth v. Symons, 15 Ves. 339; Cheesebrough v. Millard, 1 John. Ch. 409; McLearn v. McLellan, 10 Pet. 625; 12 Ad. & Ell. 632; 1 Bro. C. C. 302, 424; 6 Ves. 483; Smith v. Hibbard, 2 Dick. 730; Charles v. Andrews, 9 Mod. 152; Topham v. Constantine, Toml. 135; Evans v. Tweedy, 1 Beav. 55; Winter v. Ld. Anson, 3 Russ. 488.

In some of the states the vendor's lien is not recognized. Bisp. Eq. sec. 353; 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 4th Am. Ed. 481, et seq.

When the vendor of land is unable to make title, the vendee has a lien on it for the purchase money paid by him. Wythors v. Lee, 3 Drew, 396; Rose v.

Wheat. 7.

Mr. Jones, contra, contended, that under the circumstances of the present case, the lien could not be asserted against creditors taking a bona fide conveyance from the vendee. This is not a case where the party comes in by operation of law. A creditor, who takes a conveyance for the security of his debt, stands in equal equity with one who pays his money, and is equally a purchaser. The dictum of Sugden on this subject is not supported by the adjudged cases in England, or in this country. Besides, the alleged debt due from Greenleaf to Bayley never attached any equitable lien to the land; Worman, and not Bayley, standing in the relation of vendor, and the true vendor being satisfied with the purchase money.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court, and after stating the facts, proceeded as follows:

50* In opposition to the claim of the plaintiffs, it is alleged by the defendants, that the debt of Bayley has been discharged. As they have not succeeded in supporting this allegation, it will be necessary to inquire whether, in such a case as this, the plaintiffs can assert a lien on the land sold by Bayley to Greenleaf, for so much of the purchase money as remains due.

It is contended for the defendants, that as the legal title to the estate was never in Bayley, he never had a lien upon it for the purchase money.

Upon this point, some difference of opinion exists in the court; and we pass it over without positively deciding it, for the purpose of inquiring, whether Bayley, supposing him entitled to the same rights as a vendor of the legal title, has now a lien on the estate for the purchase money.

That a vendor, who has taken no other security for the purchase money, retains a lien for it on the land as against the vendee, or his heirs, seems to be well settled by the English decisions. It is equally well settled, that this lien is defeated by an alienation to a purchaser without notice. How far it may be asserted against creditors, seems not so well settled, and constitutes the subject of inquiry in this case.

The lien asserted by the vendor is not disclosed by any information given by a record. In Chapman v. Tanner (1 Vern., 267), the Lord Keeper said: "In this case there is a natural equity that the land should stand charged with so much of the purchase money as was not paid, and that without any special agreement for that purpose." In the case cited from 1 Bro. Ch. Ca., 420, the Chancellor says: "A bargain and sale must be for money [*51 paid, otherwise it is in trust for the bargainor. If an estate is sold, and no part of the money paid, the vendee is a trustee; then if part be paid, it is not the same as to that which is unpaid?"

But whether the lien of the vendor be estab-

Watson, 10 H. L. Cas. 672; Tompkins v. Seely, 29 Barb. 212; Lacon v. Mertins, 3 Atk. 1; Oxenham v. Esdalle, 3 You. & Jerv. 493; 3 You. & Jerv. 262; Griffith v. Depew, 3 Marsh. 179; Gibert v. Peteler, 38 N. Y. 165; 6 Trans. App. N. Y. 329; S. C. 38 Barb. 488.

Where the deed shows on its face that the purchase money is yet to be paid, any purchaser of the land from the grantee is chargeable with notice of the vendor's lien to which he may be entitled for purchase money remaining unpaid. Cordova v. Hood, 17 Wall. 1; Elliott v. Edwards, 3 Bos. & Pull. 181.

Whether the vendor has waived his lien is a question of intention. Taking a note with security, for purchase money, raises a presumption of a waiver. But if the attendant circumstances, or positive testimony of the vendor, shows that such was not his intent, the presumption is rebutted. Cordova v. Wood, 17 Wall. 1; Coit v. Fongera, 36 Barb. 195.

In Texas the reservation of a vendor's lien in the conveyance is equivalent to a mortgage for the purchase money taken contemporaneously with the deed. King v. Young Men's Association, 1 Wood, 386.

A bill to enforce a vendor's lien for purchase money can only be filed after judgment at law for the amount due, or when the bill avers such facts as show that full and adequate remedy at law cannot be had. Ford v. Smith, 1 McArthur, 592.

A purchaser or one claiming under him cannot defend the vendor's suit to enforce a lien for purchase money, by impeaching the vendor's title to the land, unless fraud or eviction, actual or constructive, can be shown. Adverse title in a third person cannot be alleged in defense. For indemnity against such title the purchaser, and those claiming under him, must rely upon the covenants of title in the deed. If there are no such covenants, the purchaser, in the absence of fraud, can have no redress. Peters v. Bowman, 8 Otto, 56.

This lien may be waived by parol agreement (3 Sug on Vend. 122; 1 Sm. & Stu. 438, 445; Ex-parte Parkes, 1 Glyn. & Jan. 228); or, by taking a distinct and independent security for the purchase money. Gaylord v. Knapp, 15 Hun. 87; 3 Sugd. 123; 6 Ves. 483; 15 Ves. 348, 349; Taylor v. Adams, Gilmer, 329; Brown v. Gilmer, 4 Wheat. 255, 291; Cox v. Fenwick, 3 Bibb, 183; Frances v. Huzlerig, Hardin, 488; Hatcher v. Hatcher, 1 Rand. 53; Cole v. Scott, 2 Wash. 142; Wilson v. Graham, 5 Munf. 297; 9 Cow. 316; Brown v. Gilman, 1 John. Ch. 308; Hare v. Van Deusen, 32 Wheat. 7.

Barb. 92; Garson v. Green, 1 John. Ch. 308; Lupin v. Marie, 6 Wend. 77; Conklin v. Merwin, 12 N. Y. Week. Dig. 5; Hallock v. Smith, 3 Barb. 267; Capper v. Shottiswoode, Tam. 21. But see 15 Ves. 341; Cowell v. Simpson, 16 Ves. 278, 280.

Taking a bond or note for the purchase money, or the mere personal security of the purchaser only, no discharge of the lien. Fish v. Howland, 1 Paige, 20; Warner v. VanAlstyne, 3 Paige, 513; Shirley v. Congress, Ref. 2 Edw. 505; Vail v. Foster, 4 N. Y. 312; Warner v. Fenn, 23 Barb. 333; Blackburn v. Gryson, 1 Cox. 90; 1 Bro. C. C. 420; Hatcher v. Hatcher, 1 Rand. 53; Tardiff v. Scrugham, cited 1 Bro. C. C. 423; 15 Ves. 329, 336, 337; 1 John. Ch. 309; Mears v. Kearney, 1 Abb. N. C. N. Y. 303; 6 Ves. 752; Hughes v. Kearney, 1 Scho. & Lef. 132, 136; Lynn v. Charters, 2 Kee. 521; Grant v. Shills, 2 Ves. & Bea. 306; contra, Blight v. Banks, 6 Mon. 199; Ducker v. Gray, 3 J. J. Marsh. 163; not even if note be negotiated. Ex-parte Loaring, 2 Rose, 79; contra Hallock v. Smith, 3 Barb. 267. But where a receipt was indorsed on the deed for the purchase money, and a bond taken, the lien was held discharged. Fawell v. Heelis, Amb. 724; 1 Bro. C. C. 421, n.; 2 Dick. 485; contra, Blackburn v. Gregson, 1 Cox. 90; 1 Bro. C. C. 420, 423; 15 Ves. 336, 337.

Where the consideration is the future maintenance of the grantor, or the purchaser's covenant for the benefit of a third person, the lien is waived. Camp v. Gifford, 67 Barb. 324; McKilip v. McKilip, 8 Barb. 552.

The lien may be assigned with the debt to which it is security, if so expressly stated. Smith v. Smith, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. N. Y. 420.

A third party furnishing the money does not thereby acquire a lien. Marquat v. Marquat, 7 How. Pr. 417.

The lien exists against subsequent grantees or incumbrancers without consideration, and without any liability in respect thereto or against a purchaser with notice. Burlingame v. Robbins, 21 Barb. 327; Warren v. Fenn, 23 Barb. 333; Shearatz v. Nicodorus, 7 Yerg. 1.

But not against a subsequent mortgagee and purchasers for value and without notice. Shirley v. Cong. Ref. 2 Edw. 505; Fisk v. Potter, 2 Keyes, N. Y. 64.

Where vendor contracts to sell the land, and subsequently conveys the same, subject to the contract, to a third person, the lien enures to the latter. Sanders v. Aldrich, 25 Barb. 63.

lished as "a natural equity," or from analogy to the principle that in a bargain and sale, the bargainor stands seized in trust for the bargainee unless the money be paid, still it is a secret, invisible trust, known only to the vendor and vendee, and to those to whom it may be communicated in fact. To the world the vendee appears to hold the estate, divested of any trust whatever; and credit is given to him, in the confidence that the property is his own in equity, as well as law. A vendor relying upon this lien, ought to reduce it to a mortgage, so as to give notice of it to the world. If he does not, he is, in some degree, accessory to the fraud committed on the public, by an act which exhibits the vendee as the complete owner of an estate on which he claims a secret lien. It would seem inconsistent with the principles of equity, and with the general spirit of our laws, that such a lien should be set up in a court of chancery, to the exclusion of bona fide creditors. The court would require cases in which this principle is expressly decided, before its correctness can be admitted.

The counsel for the plaintiffs say there are such cases; and cite the dictum of Sugden in his Law of Vendors, and the cases he quotes in support of the position.

Mr. Sugden does indeed say, that persons 52* coming *in under the purchaser by act of law, are bound by an equitable lien, although they had no notice of its existence; and he adds, that "creditors claiming under a conveyance from the purchaser, are bound in like manner as assignees, because they stand in the same situation as creditors under a commission."

Mr. Maddock, who also recites the cases on this subject, says that the vendor has a lien on the estate sold "as against the vendee and his heir, and all persons claiming as volunteers, or purchasers for a valuable consideration, with notice." He adds, "nor does the bankruptcy of the vendee affect the lien of the vendor." But he does not say, with Sugden, that "creditors, claiming under a conveyance from the purchaser, are bound in like manner as assignees."

This lien has not, we believe, been extensively recognized in the courts of this country. In the case of Garson v. Green and others (1 Johns. Ch. Rep., 308), Mr. Chancellor Kent said: "The vendor has a lien on the estate for the purchase money while the estate is in the hands of the vendee; and when there is no contract that the lien, by implication, was not intended to be reserved."

If the lien has, in any of the states, or in any court of the United States, been sustained against creditors, the decision is unknown to us.

This is the first case in which the question, so far as respects creditors, has been made in this court, and may form a precedent on a subject of great interest to the public. We have looked into the English authorities for the purpose of inquiring how far the principle has been firmly established in that country.

53* *In Chapman v. Tanner (1 Vern., 267), the lien of the vendor was maintained against the assignees of a bankrupt. But in Farwell v. Heelis (Anbl., 724), the Lord Chancellor, speaking of that case, says: "It appears by the register's book, that the seller was to keep the title papers till he was paid. The court said, that a natural equity arose from his having the deeds in his custody."

This explanation of the case of Chapman v. Tanner lessens the weight of that case in support of the lien, not only as against the assignees of a bankrupt, but as against the vendor himself, since the retaining of the title deeds by the vendor is considered as equivalent to an agreement for the preservation of the lien.

Farwell v. Heelis and others, reported in Ambler, was a suit to establish the lien of the vendor against the trustees of an insolvent debtor. The Chancellor determined against the lien, because a receipt for the purchase money was indorsed on the deed, and a bond taken for it from the vendee. "If," said the court, "the vendor parts with the estate, and takes a security for the consideration money, there is no reason for a court of equity to assist him against the creditors of the purchaser."

A doctrine ascribed to Lord Apsley, that "creditors claiming under such a deed (a deed of an insolvent debtor to trustees for his creditors), stand in the same situation as creditors under a commission," has been supposed to apply to the case now before the court, and is cited by Mr. Sugden to support his general proposition, that "creditors claiming under *a [54 conveyance from the purchaser are bound in like manner as assignees, because they stand in the same situation as creditors under a commission."

It is uncertain whether this was said by the Chancellor, as from himself, or with reference to the arguments of counsel; but if it be his dictum, it will not, we think, aid the plaintiffs in the cause under consideration; nor does it justify the broad and general terms used by Sugden; terms which have been probably understood in a more extensive sense than he intended. A declaration that creditors under a conveyance, and under a commission, are in the same situation as regards the lien of the vendor, made in a case in which the decree was against that lien, is not entitled to the respect which the same declaration would claim had the decree been made in favor of the lien. The Chancellor was against the lien, whether set up against assignees or trustees, and might not, therefore, examine very accurately the sameness or the discrepancy of the principles on which the two cases stood. Had he considered Chapman v. Tanner, as decided on the general principle, and not on its particular circumstances, it would have been necessary to inquire whether the same principle applied to the case of Farwell v. Heelis and others; but not being of that opinion, and being opposed to the lien, the inquiry became less necessary.

Another consideration, entitled to great attention, is, that this dictum of the Chancellor, if it be one, is confined in terms to "such a deed" as was then under his consideration. That was a deed made by an insolvent, after his insolvency, to trustees for his creditors. *This [55 was, we suppose, a deed made in pursuance of the statute; and between a deed assigning the estate of an insolvent under the insolvent law, and a deed assigning the estate of a bankrupt under the bankrupt law, there is not, perhaps, much difference. But it does not follow that the same rule would be applied to a conveyance made by the mere act of the party, for the security of one or more creditors, or of creditors generally.

The case of Blackburn v. Gregson (1 Bro. Ch. Rep., 420), was also an attempt to set up the lien of the vendor against the assignees of a bankrupt.

In that case, the general question of the existence of such a lien was argued at bar as one not yet finally settled; and, although the inclination of the Chancellor's mind seemed in favor of the lien, he made no decision on that point. An issue was directed to try whether the conveyance was made to defeat creditors under the 13th of Eliz., ch. 5, and the jury having found that it was so made, the conveyance was set aside.

The question of lien appears to have remained still open; and in the case of Nairn v. Prowse (6 Ves., Jur., 752), it was still doubted whether a vendor who had taken the bond or note of the vendee for the purchase money, retained his lien on the land. That case was between a creditor who claimed under an equitable mortgage created by the deposit of a deed, and the vendor who had taken a deposit of stock to secure the payment of the purchase money. The court determined, that by taking the deposit of 56* stock he had *waived his lien; and, consequently, the question between the creditor and vendor was not decided.

It does not appear ever to have been decided. We find no case in which the naked question has been determined against the creditor. Could the case of Chapman v. Tanner even be stripped of the circumstance that the vendor retained the title papers in his hands, still the assignees of a bankrupt are not understood, in England, to stand in the same situation with a creditor who is secured by a mortgage. In the case of Mitford v. Mitford (9 Ves., Jur.,) the master of the rolls says, "between a particular assignment for valuable consideration, and an assignment by operation of law, such a distinction has always been made, that the effect of the one is not necessarily to be inferred from that produced by the other." In the same case he says: "I have always understood the assignment from the commissioners, like any other assignment by operation of law, passed his rights precisely in the same plight and condition as he possessed them. Even where a complete legal title vests in them, and there is no notice of any equity affecting it; they take subject to whatever equity the bankrupt was liable to. This shows they are not considered purchasers for a valuable consideration, in the proper sense of the words. Indeed, a distinction has been constantly taken between them and a particular assignee, for a specific consideration; and the former are placed in the same class as voluntary assignees and personal representatives."

Were it, then, completely settled that the vendor retains his lien against the assignees of a 57* bankrupt, it *would not follow that he would retain it against creditors holding under a bona fide conveyance from the vendee. To establish this principle on the authority of adjudged cases, the court would require cases in which the very point is decided. We have seen no such cases. We have seen no case in which this lien has been supported against a judgment creditor, against a mortgagee, or even against a creditor charging an heir on the bond of his ancestor in which he was bound.

The weight of authority is, we think, the other way. The lien of the vendor, if in the nature of a trust, is a secret trust; and, although to be preferred to any other subsequent equal equity, unconnected with a legal advantage, or equitable advantage which gives a superior claim to the legal estate, will be postponed to a subsequent equal equity connected with such advantage. This principle is laid down in Hargrave & Butler's notes to Co. Lytt. 290, b; and the case of Stanhope v. Earl Verney, decided in chancery in 1761, is quoted in support of it. That was the case of an equitable mortgage, founded on the deposit of a deed for a term of years to attend the inheritance, with a declaration of the trust. This is a much stronger case. It is an actual conveyance of the legal estate.

In the United States the claims of creditors stand on high ground. There is not, perhaps, a state in the Union, the laws of which do not make all conveyances not recorded, and all secret trusts, void as to creditors as well as subsequent purchasers without notice. To support the secret lien of the vendor *against a [58 creditor who is a mortgagee, would be to counteract the spirit of these laws.

Decree affirmed with costs.

[PRACTICE.]

BROWDER v. M'ARTHUR.

This court will not grant a rehearing in an equity cause, after it has been remitted to the court below to carry into effect the decree of this court, according to its mandate.

MR. DODDRIDGE, for the appellant, Browder, moved for a rehearing in this cause, which is the same case that was determined at the last term, and remitted to the court below to carry into effect the decree of this court.<sup>1</sup> It was now again brought before this court, upon an appeal from the decree of the court below, entered according to the mandate from this court. The appellant's counsel now moved for a rehearing upon the merits.<sup>2</sup>

The court denied the motion, being of opinion that it was too late to grant a rehearing in a cause after it had been remitted to the court below, to carry into effect the decree of this court, according to its mandate; and that a subsequent appeal from the Circuit Court, for supposed error in carrying into *effect such man- [59 date, brought up only the proceedings subsequent to the mandate, and did not authorize an inquiry into the merits of the original decree.

Motion denied.

Cited—3 How. 426; 16 How. 103; 18 How. 42; 12 Wall. 129; 17 Wall. 283.

1.—S. C. 6 Wheat. Rep.

2.—He cited 2 Madd. Chan. 390; 3 P. Wms. 8; 2 Atk. 439.

[COMMON LAW. LOCAL LAW.]

RICARD v. WILLIAMS AND OTHERS.

Possession of land by a party, claiming it as his own in fee, is prima facie evidence of his ownership and seisin of the inheritance.

But possession alone, unexplained by collateral circumstances, which show the quality and extent of the interest claimed, evidences no more than the mere fact of present occupation by right.

But if the party be in under title, and by mistake of law supposes himself possessed of a less estate than really belongs to him, the law will remit him to his full right and title.

It is a general rule that a disseisor cannot qualify his own wrong, but must be considered as a disseisor in fee.

But this rule is introduced only for the benefit of the disseisee, for the sake of electing his remedy.

And it must also appear that the party found in possession entered without right; for if his entry were congeable, or his possession lawful, his entry and possession will be considered as limited by his right.

Presumptions of a grant, arising from the lapse of time, are applied to corporeal, as well as incorporeal hereditaments.

They may be encountered and rebutted by contrary presumptions, and can never arise where all the circumstances are perfectly consistent with the non-existence of a grant.

A fortiori, they cannot arise where the claim is of such a nature as is at variance with the supposition of a grant.

In general, the presumption of a grant is limited to periods analogous to those of the statute of limitations, in cases where the statute does not apply.

Where the statute applies, the presumption is not <sup>60</sup>generally resorted to; *but if the circumstances of the case are very cogent, and require it, a grant may be presumed within a period short of the statute.

Under the laws of Massachusetts and Connecticut, the power of an administrator to sell the real estate of his intestate, under an order of the Court of Probates, must be exercised within a reasonable time after the death of the intestate.

The case of such a power to sell is not within the purview of the statute of limitations of Connecticut, which limits all rights of entry and action to fifteen years after the title accrues; but the reasonable time, within which the power must be exercised, is to be fixed by analogy to that statute.

One heir, notwithstanding his entry as heir, may afterwards, by disseisin of his co-heirs, acquire an exclusive possession, upon which the statute will run both against his co-heirs and against creditors.

An heir may claim an estate by title distinct or paramount to that of his ancestor; and if his possession is exclusive under such claim, against all other persons, until the statute period has run, he is entitled to the protection of the bar.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of Connecticut.

This was a suit instituted by the defendants in error against the plaintiff in error, in the court below. The original action is commonly known in Connecticut by the name of an action of disseisin, and is a real action, final upon the rights of the parties, and in the nature of a real action at the common law. The cause was tried upon the general issue, nul tort, nul disseisin, and a verdict being found for the demandants, a bill of exceptions was taken to the opinion of the court upon matters of law at the trial.

The history of the case, as it stands upon the record, is in substance as follows: The demandants claimed the estate in controversy, by purchase from the administrator of William Dudley, at a sale made by him for the payment of the debts of his intestate, pursuant to the laws of Connecticut, which authorize *a sale of the real estate of any person [*61 deceased, for the payment of his debts, when the personal assets are insufficient for that purpose. In order to establish the title of William Dudley in the premises, the demandants proved that Thomas Dudley, the father of William, was, in his life-time, possessed of the premises, as parcel of what were called the Dudley lands, and died possessed of the same in 1769, leaving seven children, of whom William was eldest, being of about the age of fourteen years, and Joseph Gerriel, the youngest, being about four years of age. Upon the death of his father, Joseph Mayhew, the

NOTE.—Adverse possession.

Claim or color of title is necessary. Harvey v. Tyler, 2 Wall. 323; Stillman v. White R., Co. 3. Woodb. & M. 538; Gardner v. Sharp, 4 Wash. C. C. 609; Jackson v. Porter, 1 Paine, 457; Peyton v. Stith, 5 Pet. 485; Waldon v. Gratz, 1 Wheat. 292; Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 177; Blight v. Rochester, post, 548; Watkins v. Holman, 16 Pet. 25; Gregg v. Sayre, 8 Pet. 244; Wright v. Mattison, 18 How. 50; Bradstreet v. Huntington, 5 Pet. 402; Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. 472; Roberts v. Pillow, Hempst. 624; Arrowsmith v. Burlingame, 4 McLean, 489; Moore v. Brown, 11 How. 414; Walker v. Turner, 9 Wheat. 541; Bunce v. Gallagher, 5 Blatchf. 481; Stark v. Starr, 1 Sawyer, 15; Lamb v. Burbank, 1 Sawyer, 227; Hedges v. Lessees, 5 Biss. 177; Pike v. Evans, 94 U. S., 4 Otto, 6; Abeel v. Harris, 11 Gill & J. 371; Cooper v. Smith, 9 Serg. & R. 26; Jackson v. Porter, 1 Paine, C. C. 457; Harvey v. Tyler, 2 Wall. 323; Kinchelow v. Treadwells, 11 Gratt. 605; Ewing v. Bennett, 11 Pet. 41; LaFrombois v. Jackson, 8 Cow. 589; Gittens v. Lowry, 15 Ga. 336; Markley v. Amos, 2 Bailey, 603; Ray v. Barker, 1 B. Mon. 364; Moore v. Moore, 8 Shep. 350; Lamb v. Foss, 8 Shep. 240; Millay v. Millay, 6 Shep. 387; Hamilton v. Paine, 5 Shep. 210; Read v. Thompson, 5 Barr, 103; Dikeman v. Parrish, 6 Burr, 210; Hall v. Stephens, 9 Mete. 418; Moore v. Johnston, 2 Spear, 288; Rogers v. Hillhouse, 3 Conn. 403; Borretts v. Turner, 2 Hayw. 114; Armour v. White, 2 Hayw. 69; Grant v. Winborne, 2 Hayw. 57; Tasker's Lessee v. Whittington, 1 Harr. & McH. 151.

Not necessary that there should be a rightful title; only necessary that possession be taken under color or claim of title, and continued for the requisite period to bar an action, under the statute of limitations. It is immaterial whether the title be defective, or whether the occupant makes color under a written or parol contract, or even any contract at all. Jackson v. Wheat, 18 John. 44; Jackson v. Newton, 18 John. 355; Smith v. Lorillard, 10 John. 356; Smith v. Burtis, 9 John. 180; Jackson v. Woodruff, 1 Cow. 276; Jackson v. Camp, 1 Cow. 605; Northrup v. Wright, 7 Hill. N. Y. 476; Burkhalter v. Edwards, 16 Ga. 593; Den v. Putney, 3 Murph. 562; Bradstreet v. Huntington, 5 Pet. 401; Monro v. Merchant, 28 N. Y. 9; La Frombois v. Jackson, 8 Cow. 589; McCall v. Neely, 3 Watts. 72; Gregg v. Lessee of Sayre, 8 Pet. 244; Tyler on Eject. 861; Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. 587; Bogardus v. Trinity Church, 4 Sand. Ch. 663; Burbans v. VanZandt, 7 Barb. 91; Crary v. Goodman, 22 N. Y. 170; Overfield v. Christie, 7 Serg. & R. 177; Munshorn v. Patton, 10 Serg. & R. 334; Den v. Alpough, 2 Penn. 452; Payne v. Skinner, 8 Ohio, 159; Lessee of Abram v. Will, 6 Ohio, 164; Bauman v. Grubbs, 26 Ind. 419; Doe v. Herrick, 14 Ind. 242.

If the claim is under a conveyance, the conveyance must have a grantor and grantee, a description of the lands, and apt words of conveyance, and be properly executed to convey the title. Dufour v. Campana, 11 Martin, 715; Frigue v. Hopkins, 4 Martin, N. S. 224; Bowne v. Powers, 3 Martin, N. S. 462; Tyler on Eject. 870; Brooks v. Bruyn, 35 Ill. 392; Childs v. Showers, 18 Iowa, 261.

The possession must be hostile in its inception. Brandt v. Ogden, 1 John. 156; Jackson v. Sharp, 9 John. 163; Jackson v. Parker, 3 John. Cas. 124; Guy v. Moffitt, 2 Bibb. 507; McGee v. Morgan, 1 Marsh. 62; Kirk v. Smith, 9 Wheat. 241; 12 John. 365; Jackson v. Thomas, 16 John. 292; Floyd v. Mintsey, 7 Rich. 181; Vrooman v. Shepherd, 14 Barb. 441. And exclusive. Parker v. Hotchkiss, 25 Conn. 321; Huntington v. Whaley, 29 Conn. 391; Rosseel v. Wikham, 36 Barb. 386; Tyler on Eject. 883-885.

Wheat. 7.

guardian of William, entered into possession of the Dudley lands, and of the demanded premises as parcel, taking the rents and profits in his behalf during his minority; and upon his arrival of age, William entered and occupied the same, taking the rents and profits to his own use, until his death, which happened in the year 1786; all his brothers and sisters being then living. During the life of William, no other person claimed any right to enter or occupy the premises, except that his mother used to receive one-third of the rents and profits, until she died in the year 1783. During his life, and while in possession of the premises, William always declared that he held the same only for life, and therefore would not allow any improvements on them at his expense; no leases were made by him except for short periods; and no attempt was made by him to sell or convey the premises; and he declared that he had no right to sell them, and that upon his death they would descend to his son, Joseph Dudley, under whom 62* the tenant derived his title, in the manner hereafter stated. No administration was ever taken in Connecticut upon the estate of William Dudley, until 1814, and his estate was then declared insolvent; and, in 1817, the lands in controversy were sold by the administrator, by order of the Court of Probates, for the payment of the debts found due under the commission of insolvency.

To rebut the title of the demandants, and to establish his own, the tenant proved that William Dudley died intestate, leaving seven children, the eldest of whom was Joseph Dudley. Upon the death of his father, the guardian of Joseph (the latter being within age) entered into possession of the Dudley lands, and the demanded premises as parcel, and used and occupied the same, receiving the rents and profits in behalf of Joseph, until his arrival of age, when Joseph himself entered into possession, claiming them as his own, and taking the rents and profits to his own use, and holding all other persons out of possession, until the year 1811 and 1812, when he sold the demanded premises, and the tenant, either by direct or mesne conveyances under Joseph, came into possession, and has ever since held the premises in his own right. In the year 1811, Samuel Dudley, the brother of Joseph, claimed title to some of the Dudley lands possessed by Joseph, and brought an action of ejectment for the recovery of them, but the suit was compromised by Joseph's paying him about $2,000; and about the same time Joseph settled with another of his brothers, but did not pay him anything. But Joseph 63* never admitted that his brothers or sister had any interest in the lands; and said he could hold them, and did hold them in the same manner as he held the lands in Massachusetts.

The will of Governor Dudley, which was admitted to probate in Massachusetts in 1720, was also in evidence, but neither party established any privity or derivation of title under it.

Upon these facts, the tenant prayed the court to instruct the jury, that the demandants had not made out a title in themselves, nor in William Dudley. Not in themselves, because the sale by the administrator to the demandant was void, by force of the statute regarding the sale of disputed titles, the tenant being in possession of the property at the time of the sale, claiming it as his own, and that William Dudley had acquired no title to the property in question by possession, as he claimed to hold the same only during his life, and could therefore acquire no title, except for life, by any length of possession, and that if he could acquire title by possession, if this estate descended from Thomas Dudley, said William could not, in seventeen years, acquire a title against his brothers and sisters, or at least against those of them who had not been of full age for five years before the death of said William; and if the demandants could recover at all, it could only be for that proportion of the estate which descended from William as one of the heirs of Thomas Dudley.

The tenant further prayed the court to instruct the jury, that if they found that Joseph Dudley had, for more than fifteen years before he sold the land in controversy, been in possession of the same, exclusively claiming [*64] them as his own, and holding out all others, he had gained a complete title to the property.

The tenant further claimed that the court ought to have instructed the jury, that under the circumstances attending the possession of said lands by William Dudley, the father, and by Joseph Dudley, and the length of time which had elapsed since the death of said William, without any claim on the part of the creditors of said William, the jury might presume a grant from some owner of the land to William for life, with remainder to his eldest son. But the court did charge and instruct the jury that the sale by the administrator under an order of court was not within the statute regarding disputed titles, and was not, therefore, void. That William Dudley, by mistaken constructions of the will of Governor Dudley, might have claimed an estate for life in the premises, and that such mistake would not operate to defeat his title by possession. That the length of time in which this estate had been occupied by William and Joseph Dudley, would bar any claims by the other children of Thomas Dudley, deceased, and that the jury were authorized to presume a grant by said children to their brother, William Dudley, deceased, and, therefore, if the demandants recovered, they must recover the whole of the premises.

The court also charged the jury that, as against the creditors of William Dudley, neither Joseph Dudley nor the tenant had gained title to the lands in controversy by possession, and that the jury were not authorized to presume a grant to Joseph.

*To which several opinions of the [*65] court, the tenant by his counsel excepted.

Mr. D. B. Ogden, for the plaintiff in error, argued, 1. That this being a writ of entry, in which the demandants or plaintiffs counted on their own seisin, and could count in no other way; and as they were unconnected with any other seisin than their own, it was necessary for them to have shown upon the trial an actual entry. Without such actual entry there never could have been any seisin or possession in them; and without such seisin or possession in them there never could have been any disseisin or forcing them out of possession. In an action of ejectment, which is a mere legal fiction, the execution of the lease, the entry under it, and the ouster are all stated in the declaration, and they must be proved upon the trial. Unless the defendant will afford the means of that proof by his confession, the plaintiffs cannot obtain a verdict. So here the entry and ouster must be proved, or the plaintiffs never can recover; because the entry and ouster are the very foundation of the whole action. Actual seisin is as necessary in a writ of entry as a writ of right.<sup>1</sup> The actual seisin and ouster are expressly stated in the declaration. They are material and necessary allegations. It is a universal rule, that whatever is a material and necessary allegation in the declaration, is a material and necessary part of the proof upon the trial, unless that necessity be dispensed with by 66* the pleadings. Now, in this case, there is no pretense that any actual entry was ever made in the premises in question by the plaintiffs. None was proved upon the trial; the demandants were, thereupon, not entitled to a verdict.

By the local law of Massachusetts and Connecticut an administrator has no seisin of the lands of his intestate. They descend to his heir at law, subject to a naked power in the administrator, in case of an insufficiency of the personal property to pay the debts of his intestate, to sell the lands for the payment of those debts. The administrator or executor may lawfully sell them, whether they be in the possession of a devisee, or an heir, or their heirs or assigns, or of a disseisor of a devisee or heir; for, say the cases, the naked authority of an administrator to sell on license cannot be defeated by the seisin of a devisee, or heir, or by their alienation or disseisin.<sup>2</sup> By the law of Connecticut, which in this respect is precisely similar to that of Massachusetts, the administrator may sell the lands of his intestate for the payment of debts, and his conveyance vests in the grantee, not the possession or seisin of the land, because that was never in the administrator; but a right to the property, and a right of entry into it; a right to the possession of it, but not the possession itself. Upon this right of possession, the grantee might at once bring an ejectment, in which he need prove no actual 67* entry and ouster, but they must be *confessed by the defendant, or he might make an actual entry, and found upon it this remedy of a writ of entry. He has not thought proper to bring an ejectment, but has brought a writ of entry; and he must, therefore, prove an actual entry and ouster.<sup>3</sup>

2. Independent of this objection, the demandants are not entitled, upon the evidence set forth in the bill of exceptions, to the judgment which they have obtained. They claimed under a deed from the administrator of William Dudley, deceased. It became, therefore, necessary for them, in order to entitle themselves to recover, to prove, that William Dudley in his life-time, and at the time of his death, was seized of an estate in the premises, which descended to his heirs; because, unless William Dudley was seized of such an estate in the premises, it is manifest that his administrator could grant no title to the property.

Did the demandants prove such a seisin in William Dudley? They proved that Thomas Dudley, the father of William, was in possession of the premises at the time of his death, in 1766; that upon the death of Thomas, the guardian of William, then an infant of fourteen years of age, in right of his ward, entered into possession of the premises, receiving the rents and profits thereof, and continued in possession until William came of age, in 1776; that William then took possession, and continued in the exclusive possession thereof, until he died, in 1786. This was all the evidence of title in William offered by the plaintiff upon the trial. Was this evidence of title sufficient?

*Thomas, the father, died in possession, [68 in 1769. What estate he had in the premises does not appear; but the subsequent acts of William afford strong evidence that his father had not an estate in fee in the premises, but that his estate, whatever it was, terminated with his life. If Thomas, the father of William, had had an estate in fee in the premises, it would, upon his death, have either descended to his heirs at law, or vested in his devisees if he had devised it by will. It is not pretended that he made any devise of it, and of course it would have descended to his heirs at law. The record states, that he left seven children, all of whom, by the law of Connecticut and Massachusetts, were at that time his heirs at law. The exclusive possession of the premises by William, taken after the death of his father, is therefore conclusive evidence that William did not consider his father as having been possessed of the fee of this land; and the rest of the children of Thomas never having claimed any right to enter and occupy the premises, or any part thereof, after they came of age, affords strong evidence that they also knew and believed that Thomas, their father, had no estate in the premises, which could descend to his heirs at law. At the time Thomas died, William, his son, was fourteen years of age, and his guardian, immediately upon his death, takes possession of the land, as the property exclusively of his ward William,—thus affording his testimony, also, by his acts, that he knew that Thomas had no estate in the premises which could descend to his heirs at law. What was the estate which Thomas had in the premises does not appear, but it is *manifest, [69 from the acts of all the parties at the time, that it is not an estate in fee-simple. William, then, did not enter as heir at law of Thomas, his father. He can therefore claim nothing from the possession of his father, as showing any title to the fee of this property; because, if his father was seized of the fee by right, it would have descended to his heirs at law, and if seized of it by wrong as disseisor, the descent would still have been cast upon his heirs at law.

Under what claim of title, then, did William enter? As he did not enter as heir at law, his entry must have been either adverse to his

Wheat. 7

1.—Green v. Litter, 8 Cranch, 229, 244.

2.—Drinkwater v. Drinkwater, 4 Mass. Rep. 354; Willard v. Nelson, 5 Mass. Rep. 240; Hays v. Jackson, 6 Mass. Rep. 143.

3.—Drinkwater v. Drinkwater, 4 Mass. Rep. 354.

father's title, and of course to his heirs at law, in which case his possession has no connection with his father's; or, he must have entered, considering his father as a mere tenant for life or for years with remainder to him and his heirs, or that the father was tenant in tail, and the estate limited to William, his eldest son, and so on to the eldest male heir. If the father was tenant for life, or for years, with remainder to William, then William's right of possession commenced when his father's ended, in 1769; and under that right William possessed the premises from 1769, down to his death, in 1786, which would, under the laws of Connecticut, taking away the right of entry after fifteen years, give him, or those claiming under him, a right to recover the premises in question, if out of possession, or to hold them against all the world, if in possession, provided he claimed to hold the possession as the owner in fee. And why? Because William, in that case, would 70* have been in possession seventeen years, and not because his father had been in possession before him.

But that William did not enter, claiming that his father had been tenant for life, or for years, with remainder to him in fee, is manifest.

First. Because William, when in possession, declared that he held the premises only for life; and that upon his death, they belonged to his eldest son; and,

Second. Because, after his entry he suffered his mother, the widow of the father, to receive one-third of the rents and profits of these lands as her dower. She could be entitled to no dower if her husband had been either a tenant for life or for years of the premises.

As, then, Thomas, the father of William, was not the owner in fee of this property, nor the tenant of it for life or for years, under what right did he claim it?

The answer to this question is, that it is most probable he claimed it as a tenant in tail, limited to the eldest son.

First. Because, if Thomas was tenant in tail of these lands, his wife would have been entitled to her dower in them, which, it has already been stated, she took; and,

Second. Because William frequently declared, that they were his for life only, and that after his death they belonged to his eldest son.

Now, if Thomas claimed these lands as tenant in tail, and if William also claimed them as 71* tenant in tail, and was really entitled to them as such, then, upon his death, the estate in tail would vest in his eldest son, Joseph; and the creditors of William could have no lien upon the property for his debts, nor the administrator no right to convey the property for the payment of any such debts; and, of course, the demandants, the grantees of the administrator, have no right to recover in this case.

But it may be said that William had an estate in fee-simple in these lands under the will of Governor Dudley, set forth in the record, which gave to his devisees an estate in fee-simple, and not in fee-tail. But it is a point of no importance whether that will gave the devisees a fee-simple or a fee-tail. How, if at all, William Dudley, or his father, were connected with the testator, nowhere appears on the record.

There appears no connection of blood, and no privity of estate between them. His will, therefore, must be put entirely out of the question.

Again, it may be said, that by the laws of Connecticut, there can be no grant of an estate in tail to continue longer than the life of the first donee; and that all such estates given in tail remain in absolute estate in fee-simple to the issue of the first donee in tail.

What operation has this law upon the rights of these parties? The argument is, that Thomas, the father of William, was not a tenant in tail, but in fee, of the premises in question, because, he being the issue of the first donee, became, by the local law, vested with an absolute estate in fee-simple. Let it for a moment be admitted, what then? William, his *eldest son, [*72] upon his death, entered into possession of the lands. I have already shown that he did not enter into possession as devisee of Thomas, his father, because the latter died intestate; nor as heir at law of his father, for he was not so; but he entered, claiming that the estate, subject to his mother's right of dower, was his for life, and upon his death, would descend to his eldest son. This is the claim under which William's entry was made, and under which the property has been possessed from 1769 down to the present hour; a possession of 53 years; a possession, in favor of which any presumption would be justifiable; a possession, in favor of which, to use the strong language of Lord Kenyon, the court ought to presume not only one, but one hundred grants.

If, then, Thomas, the father of William, was seized in fee of the premises in question, as he made no devise of them to William, and as William did not enter as heir at law, we are certainly to presume that he entered with right, and that his claim to enter was a good one. We are then to presume a grant, consistent with his entry and possession, and with the acts of all parties at the time. We have a right to presume that his father, being the tenant in fee, made a grant of the premises to his son William, in tail, limiting the estate to his (William's) eldest son. Such a grant is not inconsistent with the laws of Connecticut, and is perfectly consistent with his claim, as always declared by him, that he was only entitled to the estate during his life, and that after his death it would go to his eldest son. It is also consistent with his mother's claim of dower, to which she would *have been entitled, the grant of his [*73] father notwithstanding; and consistent with the possession taken at William's death, by his son Joseph, under whom we claim. This presumption would support and confirm a title under a possession of fifty-three years. Any other would shake and unsettle titles which have, for half a century, been considered as good and valid.

If this grant be presumed from Thomas to William, then, according to the law of Connecticut referred to, Joseph, being the issue of William, the first donee, was the tenant in fee of the premises; and the plaintiff in error, being his grantee, is also the tenant in fee of them.

It was stated by the learned judge, in his charge to the jury, that as William had been so long in possession, the jury might presume a grant to him from his co-heir, in order to support that possession. But the nature of William's possession, the claim under which he must be presumed to have taken that possession, must be judged of according to the state of things at the time when he took the possession. He must be presumed to have continued in possession by the same right under which he originally claimed to enter into it, until it be shown that he acquired another right. Now, when William entered, upon the death of his father, in 1769, I have already shown that he entered under some claim of right, distinct and different from that of heir at law. He cannot be presumed to have entered as grantee of his co-heirs at law, because such grant could not be made; he was not only an infant himself, 74*] but his brothers and *sisters were all infants still younger than he was. As, then, when he entered, claiming the whole of this property as his own, William could have had no grant from his co-heirs; and as his possession must be presumed to have continued under the same claim of title under which he originally entered, it seems to be a presumption against all law that he ever had a grant from his co-heirs.

It is a well-established rule that the declarations of a person in possession of land as to his title are evidence against him and all persons claiming under him. In this case we have the declarations of William Dudley, under whom the demandants claim, made while in possession of the land, that he held it for life only, and that after his death it would descend to his eldest son. If, then, declarations are evidence against all claiming under William, they, of course, are evidence against the demandants, and show that William never had anything but an estate for life in the premises in question, which expired with him; and there was no interest left which the administrator could sell after his death. In this view of the case, it is immaterial how long William's possession continued. It was a possession under a claim of an estate for life, and the possession was commensurate with the claim. As I have already shown that the plaintiff's title rests wholly on William's possession, and as William never pretended to any possession but for life, there can be now no title in the demandant. Presumptions are often made to support old claims of title accompanied by a long possession, but it 75*] is *new doctrine that a possession under a claim of an estate for life gives a fee.

It appears by the record, that immediately after the death of William Dudley, in 1786, Joseph, his eldest son, entered into possession of the premises by his guardian, and, afterwards, by himself, taking the whole rents and profits, and claiming the lands as his own, and continued in the exclusive possession thereof, holding all others out, until he sold the land in 1811 and 1812, when his grantees entered as owners, and continued to hold until this action in 1819. If, then, a possession of seventeen years in William gave him a title which is a sufficient ground of recovery for the demandant, why is it that a possession of thirty-three years in Joseph, and those claiming under him, does not give a good title to the defendants? The reason assigned by the demandants why this possession should not avail the defendants is, that William died in possession, and the possession of Joseph was but the continuance of William's possession, a part of the same title, and that title is subject to be sold for the payment of William's debts. But if the possession taken by Joseph was a possession taken under a claim adverse to the claim of a fee in William, then it would seem to follow, as an inevitable consequence that the possession of Joseph, and those claiming under him, would give them a good title. William died intestate, and left seven children. Joseph, the eldest, then being an infant, all these children, by the law of Connecticut, were his *heirs at law. [*76 Joseph, however, entered into the exclusive possession of the whole of the premises, "keeping all others out." He did not, then, enter as heir at law, but he entered denying the rights of the heirs at law; he entered, therefore, under a claim of title adverse to them, and, of course, adverse to the claim of a fee now set up in William, his father. There can, in this case, be no presumption of a grant from his co-heirs when he entered, because they were infants of very tender years when he entered.

But not only can no grant be presumed from them to Joseph, but the record contains upon its face evidence that no such grant was ever made by them. The plaintiffs proved, that in 1811, two of the brothers claimed to be entitled to a portion of the property, which, at all events, shows that they had never granted it to Joseph. Inasmuch, then, as Joseph entered and continued in possession, claiming title, which title was adverse to any claim in the heirs at law of William, to any claim of the fee in William; and as this possession continued for thirty years, uninterrupted and undisturbed, it gave to Joseph, and to those claiming under him, a full and complete right to retain the possession against all the world.

We have, in this possession of Joseph, exclusively taken and held by him, and so long acquiesced in by others, not only evidence of the opinion of his guardian, founded doubtless upon a knowledge of the title at the time, and of his own opinion of the title, but we have, by their acquiescence, and by the admission of *his co-heirs that they had no right, and [*77 the admission of the creditors, for the payment of whose debts these lands have now been sold to the demandants, evidence that William, their debtor, had no estate of inheritance in the premises which could descend to his heirs, or be liable for his debts. How else are we to account for their conduct in relation to these lands? That William possessed them was notorious. The demandants, upon the trial, proved that they had always been known by the name of the Dudley lands, which consisted of a large tract, situate in Connecticut and Massachusetts. If, then, the creditors of William Dudley had believed that he had been seized in fee of the lands, and that they were, therefore, liable for his debts, how is their conduct to be accounted for in suffering their lands to go into possession of Joseph, as his own, and continue there twenty-eight years before they took a single step to enforce the lien which they had upon the lands? When William died these creditors knew their rights, and no doubt knew his title papers might at that time have been produced to show what were the respective estates of William and Joseph in the premises. If, then, the creditors had not been conscious that William did not own the fee of the lands, they never would have remained so long quiet, seeing another enjoy the lands, and taking the rents and profits.

3. By the statute of Connecticut, no person has a right of entry into lands, but within fifteen years next after his right or title shall first descend or accrue, with the usual savings. It is 78*] contended, that *the right of entry of the demandants is not taken away in this case, because their right did not accrue until the conveyance to them, by the administrator, in 1817.

But the demandants claim a fee in these premises, under William Dudley. The fee held by William was the entire estate in the premises. If that estate has become extinct; if the fee which was in him has been extinguished, either by those who had a right to extinguish it, or by the operation of law, operating through an adverse possession, then no person can any longer claim under it. If William had been living, and there had been an adverse possession against him, his right of entry would have been gone. His heirs, by the adverse possession, have lost their right of entry; and every other person claiming under the same title is in the same situation. If the right of William and his heirs be gone, and taken away, can the act of an administrator resuscitate it? Land is one thing, an estate in it is another. The lien of the creditor is upon William's estate in the land, and not upon the land. The lien is no inherent part of the soil always accompanying it. It is here a claim upon William's estate in it, which was a fee. Now, a fee is but one estate. Whether in the hands of William, or his heirs, or his grantees, or the grantees of his administrator, it is still but the same one estate. So long as that estate in the lands continue, the lien may possibly continue; but when the estate is gone, the lien is gone.

It may possibly be denied, that the heirs at law of William could maintain an action for the recovery of these lands, as they were tenants 79*] in common with *Joseph; and it may be said, that the possession of one tenant in common is the possession of all. This, as a general principle, is admitted. But if one tenant in common enters into actual and exclusive possession of the land, taking the rents and profits to his own use, and openly assert his own exclusive property in the lands, and deny the title of any other, it will be considered as an adverse possession by him, and those claiming under him, and an ouster of the other claimants.<sup>1</sup> In this case the record states that Joseph did enter into the exclusive and actual possession of the premises, taking the rents and profits, denying the title of his brothers and sisters, and keeping all others out of possession for 30 years. The heirs at law, therefore, of William, could not have entered; William, if alive, could not enter; and by what principle is it that the grantee of an administrator, who can have no greater right than William, or his heirs at law, is to be held to have a right which they would not have?

In answer to this obvious question, it is said that William's estate was liable for his debts, and to be sold by his administrator for payment of them; there is no limitation to the time in which letters of administration may be granted; that the sale of the administrator was in pursuance of the provisions of the law of Connecticut, and therefore his grantee is entitled to the property. But let this argument be examined.

By the common law, where a man bound himself and his heirs, the obligee might sue the heir, and have *execution of the land descended to the heir; but if the heir aliened the land before action brought, the alienee held the land free from any lien for the debt of the ancestor.<sup>2</sup> But by the law of Connecticut and the construction which has been repeatedly given to it, the creditor may follow the lands into the hands of the grantee of the heir at law, or devisee. But he can follow them only when the right of entry is not tolled. There are, besides, particular circumstances in this case, which show that the demandants cannot claim to be bona fide purchasers without notice of the facts of the case, but that they had full notice, and were actors in the transaction.

Lastly. The deed is void in itself, under the statute of Connecticut, of 1747, against the sale of disputed titles.

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Pinkney, contra, (1) answered the objection made by the plaintiff in error, that in the present action, being a writ of entry, the demandants must show a seisin in deed; by which (he supposed) was meant either an actual or constructive seisin. The writ in this case sets forth a plea, that the tenant render to the demandants "the quiet and peaceable seisin and possession of two certain tracts of land," &c. The count is, that "on or about the 20th day of December, 1817, they were well seized and possessed in their own right, as joint tenants in fee-simple;" and "that the tenant thereunto entered, and ejected and deforced the demandants, and ever since has continued to deforce and hold the demandants out of *the [81 possession," &c. And it is now contended, that they are bound to prove their seisin and possession as they have laid it; and not having done so, cannot recover.

The first answer to this objection is, that the bill of exceptions does not cover it. The first prayer is, that the court should instruct the jury, that the demandants had not made out a title in themselves, nor in William Dudley. The second prayer is, for an instruction, that if the jury found that Joseph Dudley had been in possession of the lands for fifteen years, &c., that he had gained a complete title to the property. The third instruction asked for, is, that under the circumstances, &c., the jury might presume a grant from some owner of the land to William, &c. But the court charged the jury, 1st. That the sale by the administrator, under an order of court, was not within the statute regarding disputed titles, and was not therefore void. 2d. That William Dudley, by mistaken constructions of the title of Governor Dudley, might have claimed an estate for life in the premises, and that such mistake would not operate to defeat his title by possession. 3d. That the length of time in which the estate had been occupied by William and Joseph

1.—Cummings v. Weyman, 10 Mass. Rep. 464.
Wheat. 7.

2.—Co. Litt. 102.

Dudley, would bar any claims by the other children of Thomas Dudley, deceased; and that the jury were authorized to presume a grant, by them to their brother William; and, therefore, if the demandants recovered, they must recover the whole of the premises. And, lastly, that as against the creditors of William Dudley, neither Joseph Dudley nor the plaintiff in error had gained title by possession, *and that the jury were not authorized to presume a grant to Joseph. It is obvious, then, that neither the prayers nor instructions cover this objection, which was not made in the court below, and therefore no opinion was given upon it. The bill of exceptions does not profess to do more than deal with the title. It did not mean to state more than was sufficient to raise the questions which were raised in respect to that title.

The second answer to this objection is, that in Connecticut, the writ of entry is constantly used as an action of ejectment. The forms of actions, concerning real property, depend, in all the states, upon local usage, and no positive enactments of the legislature have been thought necessary to authorize a deviation, in this respect, from the rules of the common law. The writ of entry, in the present case, is not like an English writ of entry. If tried by the rules of English law, it could not stand a moment's examination. It does not regard and set forth the different degrees, as is required at common law; nor is it a writ of entry in the post, under the statute of Marlbridge, 52 Hen. III., c. 30, alleging that the defendant had not entry, until after the disseisin or forfeiture of the original wrong-doer, passing by all the intermediate degrees. In Connecticut, on the contrary, the defendant is always alleged to be the deforciant, which, if the fact were not so, would in England be fatal. Neither is the time of the forfeiture or disseisin ever stated, either in the writ or count, at common law; and in England, it would never be said that the disseisin or §3* disseisin was about *such a time. This, at least, may safely be asserted to be peculiar to the practice of Connecticut. So that it becomes manifest, that the peculiar properties of writs of entry cannot be applied to this action, as it exists by the local law and practice. It is used indiscriminately with the action of ejectment, and intended to try the right of possession, which, in that state, is the right of property.

2. The title of the demandants is under an administrator's sale, by order of court. By the local law, there is no limitation to the granting letters of administration, by the mere lapse of time.<sup>1</sup> But even if there were, every question respecting it, and respecting the debts for which the lands were sold, has been decided by the competent court, of peculiar and exclusive jurisdiction. This decision has been confirmed, in the last resort, by the Superior Court of the state, which is the only court that has an appellate jurisdiction from the decrees of the Court of Probates. There can therefore be no objection now to the validity of these letters of administration, and the sale which was made under them, on the ground of the debts being antiquated. The appointed forum has settled these questions forever. If, then, the lands in question were, at the death of William Dudley, his lands in fee, the demandants have a good title, unless that title has been intercepted by an adverse possession or title, as is contended on the other side.

3. The next question, then, is upon William's title. His father died in possession, and William had exclusive possession by himself or guardian, receiving the rents and profits, from 1769 to 1785, claiming *for himself only, [*84 to the exclusion of all the world. That this possession barred all strangers who, at the time, might have a right of entry, there cannot be a doubt; and the only possible question is, whether it barred his brethren and sisters. His father had an estate, or he had not. We may adopt the argument used on the other side for Joseph's protection. If his father had no estate, then none descended to his children; and William's entry was, of course, for his own benefit, and gained him, with the possession which followed, an estate by possession. It is not directly found that his father had any estate which could descend. It might be a naked possession; and if it was, the entry of William, for his own exclusive benefit, he not being heir at law, was not a continuation of that possession for any person's benefit but his own. He did not come to a regular succession as heir, nor were there any duties cast on him as heir by a regular descent. He took in his own right, so as to keep out everybody else. It is true, indeed, that his mother is stated to have received a third of the rents and profits, but whether as dower or how, non constat; and any inference from such a fact cannot now be made in the absence of proof. His brethren and sisters did not need to be barred, if no estate descended to them; and William's possession was not their possession unless they had right.

But suppose an estate descended from Thomas, then William's exclusive possession, for himself, was sufficient to bar his brethren and sisters under the statute of Connecticut, and to gain him a title in fee.

*To this it is objected that he claimed [*85 only a life estate, and, therefore, can gain no more. The answer is, he could not, by an adverse possession, gain an estate for life, or any estate less than a fee. A limited estate can be given only by contract of the parties, or act of law. Wrongful possession must give a fee or nothing. And it must be so in the nature of things, since there is nothing to limit it. The effect of possession is to bar actions against the possessor by those who are entitled to bring the actions. It does not operate like a grant, or any other mode of alienation, which may be circumscribed and limited. His claim of a life estate only did not create a remainder in favor of any other, so as to give to that other, for the first time, a right of action on his death. It did not contribute to exclude actions during his life. The person entitled might as well have sued, within the time of limitations, whether William claimed a life estate or not. The restricted claim changed nothing. It did not prevent his possession from being adversary, or make it less wrongful. It is the proprietor being out of possession, and another being in possession against his title, that produces the bar; and it cannot be material whether the adversary possession excludes the rightful possession upon one pretext or another. Contract only can prevent the effect, and then the possession is not adversary.

1.—Wales v. Willard, 2 Mass. Rep. 120.

It is inconceivable that a wrongful possession can be restricted in its effects as a bar of limitation to a life estate, when the whole fee is 86* actionable against it. Cases may, indeed, be conceived in which it would produce a limited effect; as, for example, if the heir should hold against tenant in dower, or by the curtesy. But there is nothing there to bar but the tenancy in dower or curtesy. If there was, the bar would extend to it. In our case, the whole fee is against the possession by wrong, and his possession is against the whole fee. His declarations, that he claimed only a life estate, did not give him a life estate. They gave him nothing; and if they gave nothing, and secured nothing, how could they restrain the prejudice of the legal effect of his possession? Contract would have operated both ways. But the declarations of the party could not work the effect of contract one way, and there is no reason why it should the other. Whose rights did his declaration save? It could save none, unless it took them out of the statute by postponing their right of action. Whoever had a right of action was told by the statute: sue, or you will be barred by the adversary possession after fifteen years. And unless the declarations of the possessor suspended the right of action, so as that the proprietor could not sue by reason of it, the statute reaches the case; since, it bars all rights of action subsisting during the adversary possession, and not exerted within the time limited. A possession by a man claiming an estate tail, but having in fact no title, would bar all the proprietors having a right to sue. No matter what he claims; if he claims adversely to everybody during his possession of fifteen years, he excludes everybody claiming 87* title during the time, and everybody forbears to disturb him; and the statute says, he shall not afterwards be disturbed.

It is not here necessary to inquire why William claimed only a life estate. That belongs to another branch of the subject. For the present purpose it is immaterial why he did so.

The doctrine of remitter will illustrate this head. Littleton says (sec. 695); "If a man be disseized, and the disseisor let the land to the disseisee by deed poll, or without deed, for term of years, by which the disseisee, entereth, this entry is a remitter to the disseisee. For in such case where the entry of a man is congeable, and a lease is made to him, albeit that he claimeth by words in pais, that he hath estate, by force of such lease, or saith openly that he claimeth nothing in the land but by force of such lease, yet this is a remitter to him, for that such disclaimer in pais is nothing to the purpose." So, also, it is laid down that a dis-seisor has a fee-simple, and cannot have less.<sup>1</sup> And no claim can possibly alter or qualify it.<sup>2</sup>

The question then recurs, are the brothers and sisters barred by William's exclusive possession?

It may be said they are not; because, being coparceners with him,<sup>3</sup> his possession is theirs. But a coparcener or tenant in common may be barred by the statute of limitations, if the possession of his companions be adverse. [88 verse, or, in other words, amount to an actual ouster. So long as there is nothing adversary, the possession of one is the possession of all; but if one parcener usurp the whole, and hold out his companion, he is a deforciant, against whom a writ of entry will lie as well as a writ of partition. Here the coparceners of William never had possession at all. His first entry was for himself, and perfectly exclusive. There never was any possession but his. The leading case on this subject was determined in Lord Mansfield's time,<sup>4</sup> and his doctrine was afterwards confirmed by Lord Kenyon.<sup>5</sup> An entry, and sole occupation of the whole, keeping the co-tenant out, is sufficient.<sup>6</sup> So, also, in a subsequent case, although it was strenuously contended at the bar that there ought to be a receipt of the rents, and an actual hindering of the co-tenant from entering, which did appear in the case, yet the court held that "one tenant in common in possession, claiming the whole, and denying possession to the other, is evidence of an ouster."<sup>7</sup> So, also, Lord Hardwicke says: "In the case of a fine and non-claim by tenant in common, it will bar his companion if he does not call the person to an account for the profits; for this has always been admitted to be evidence of an ouster."<sup>8</sup> And, again, it is said that, "although the entry of one co-tenant is the entry of both, yet if one enter claiming the whole, this will be an entry [89 adverse to his companion."<sup>9</sup>

As to the minority of William's brothers and sisters, and its effect to prevent the operation of the statute, it may be observed that they all arrived at age during his life. The statute had been running against them during minority, as to ten years, and when William died it was running against them for the other five. He had then the fee in progress against them, and nearly completed. It descended to his heirs, and if his brethren and sisters did not sue before the small remnant of the time expired, they are barred by the statute. It seems to be admitted, that they could not sue after that time. Their title was extinguished, beyond all doubt; and it was in progress to be extinguished at William's death.

4. As to the title of Joseph D., it is sought to be founded on the presumption of a grant, from somebody (not said whom), to William for life, with remainder to Joseph in fee or in tail. But presumptions may be rebutted by contrary presumptions. They depend on circumstances; and these must warrant the particular presump-

1.—Co. Litt. 297, a.

2.—Co. Litt. s. 296; Co. Litt. 266, b. Mr. Butler, in his note to the last cited passage, says: "It is to be observed, that a disseisor by his disseisin acquires a tortious fee-simple, notwithstanding at the time he makes the disseisin he claims a less estate."

3.—Fisher and others v. Prosser, Cowp. 219. Wheat. 7.

4.—Peaceable v. Read, 1 East, 275.

5.—5 Burr. 2603; 1 Atk. 493; 2 Atk. 32; 1 Ld. Raym.

6.—Doe v. Bird, 11 East, 51.

7.—2 Atk. 632.

8.—14 Vin. Abr. 512, Pl. 5. And in the margin. "The possession of one heir in gavelkind, claiming the whole, is adverse."

tion, or at least not be inconsistent with it.<sup>1</sup> One of the grounds of presumption is the existence of a state of things which may most reasonably be accounted for by supposing the fact presumed. Here it must be founded on Joseph's possession, and on William's declaration,<sup>90*</sup> that he claimed *only a life estate, and that it would descend to Joseph. The state of the case, as it appears on the bill of exceptions, is defective; but it is easy to see that all the parties must have claimed under the will of Governor Dudley, and upon the supposition of a continuing estate tail created by that will. This explains William's declarations.

It may indeed be said, that records, and acts of parliament, and grants of the crown, have all been presumed. But this has been after the lapse of ages, with imperfect records, and the presumption supported by parol evidence.<sup>2</sup> But it will be found in all these cases, that circumstances have been always shown to support the presumption, and that after a great length of time, all things which the case shows ought to have been done, will be presumed to have been done correctly. But in this country, where all the land titles are recorded, the presumption of a grant cannot be so easily indulged, and especially where the lands lie in two different states, and the property depends on the same title. If the record were lost in one, it would be found in the other. Such a presumption would repeal all the registry acts of both states, and would promote the interests only of the negligent, or the fraudulent.<sup>3</sup> It must be presumed, first, that the deed was made; and, second, that it had been lost. If the grant be supposed from Thomas, who had some estate <sup>91*</sup> of inheritance, it must have *been made before Joseph was born, and when William was under fourteen years of age; not for a valuable consideration certainly; and if a family donation or settlement, some traces of it would appear. Who preserved it for the infant William, or the unborn Joseph? How could it have been preserved except on record? If the presumption goes on the ground of acquiescence, that acquiescence is of recent commencement. Joseph's supposed remainder first took effect in 1786. The deed must have been in existence at that time, to justify the acquiescence. How happens it that no vestige of it now remains? A presumption, which is to make a title, cannot stand under such circumstances. If it were merely to supply some defect arising from circumstances, congenial with the presumption, it would be different. William's claim of a life estate, connected with his declaration, that it would descend to his son Joseph, does not indicate a remainder in the latter; and can only be satisfactorily explained by going up to Governor Dudley's will, which reconciles the conduct and language of all parties.

The creditors cannot be charged with acquiescence. They were strangers to the title. The family believed it to be an estate tail, and none of them administered. The statute of limitations is not a bar, for it allows an entry fifteen years after the title accrued. Possession is adverse only to those who have a right of entry. The creditors had no right of entry, and the demandants had none till the sale to them by the administrators. The estate of the creditors was merely potential. Immediately on the sale, the *purchaser was in as by <sup>[*92]</sup> the intestate. It is well settled by the local decisions that "no seisin of the heir, of his alienee, or his disseisor, can defeat the naked power of the administrator to sell on license."<sup>4</sup> And at common law, where "A devises lands to be sold by his executors; A dies seized; the heirs of A or a disseisor enters, and the heir or disseisor makes a feoffment to B, and B dies seized, and his heir is in by descent. Yet the executors may enter and sell: for a descent takes away rights of entry; but not titles or powers, as entry for condition broken, for mortmain, &c. Neither does it take away in case of devisee or patentee of land, where an abator enters, for they have no other remedy. And executors have only a power; and when they sell, the vendee is in by the will paramount to the descent cast."<sup>5</sup>

The entry of Joseph was consistent with the title of the creditors; and that shall not be taken to be unlawful, which by possibility may be considered as lawful.<sup>6</sup> He had a right to enter, and his possession could not be adverse to the creditors. They might elect to consider him as a trustee for them.<sup>7</sup> He was heir; he took possession as heir, and his claim is reconcilable with that of the creditors. He took it charged with the lien. It was a statutable lien which he could not defeat by his wrong. He was a trustee, and could not bar the trust. The statute of *limitations only runs <sup>[*93]</sup> from the commencement of a clearly adverse possession.<sup>8</sup> If the statute acted against those having no present right, the argument we are considering would be conclusive. But, though the tenant for life be barred, the remainder man cannot, because he has no right of action.

But it is said that Joseph's possession barred his coparceners, represented by William; and as William's estate is barred, the lien which attached to it is gone of course. The answer is, that the bar may exist for one purpose, and against some parties, and not for every purpose, and against all parties. Joseph still retains his character of heir, and by barring the other heirs, the claim of the creditors is not barred. Being heir, he has kept out his companions by deforcing them; but being heir, he cannot destroy the statutable lien by his own wrong, for his own benefit. He has ceased to be liable to his co-heirs, but not to the creditors. He has acquired the whole fee as against his coparceners, because they had a right of action. He has not defeated the estate of the creditors, because they had no such right. In Stanford's case,<sup>9</sup> it was held, that if the lessee of a future term dies, and the prior term expires, then the

1.—Phillips, Evid. 119, 121; 2 Saund. 175; 1 Taunt. 288; 3 East, 290; 16 East, 583; 2 Barnw. & Ald. 791.

2.—1 Inst. 115, a; 12 Rep. 5; 1 Ventr. 257; Bro. Jac. 254; Cowp. 102; 2 Strange, 1129; 2 Atk. 19; 2 T. R. 154; 1 Ves., Jun., 265.

3.—See Jackson v. Cary, 16 Johns. Rep. 302.

4.—4 Mass. Rep. 359.

5.—Jenk. Cent. 184; Ca. 75, Bro. Abr. Devise. Pl. 36; Litt. 1, 381, 392, 169; Sir W. Jones, 352.

6.—10 East, 588; Adams Eject. 50.

7.—1 Burr. 60, 12.

8.—3 Wheat. Rep. 224.

9.—Cited in Cro. Jac. 61; See also Leon, 119.

lessor enters, and levies a fine, and five years pass, and then B takes administration to the lessee; he shall have five years afterwards; for no one had title till administration.

94*] *Allusion has been made to the doctrine of the common law, by which the heir is liable for the specialty debts of his ancestor, so long as the lands remain in his hands, but no longer. It should be remembered, however, that the statute has remedied that evil; that the lands are now subject to the payment of the bond debts of the ancestors, into whose ever hands they may come. The maxim of legislative policy is, caveat emptor. So, too, in equity, the rule is, the vendee under a power shall see to the application of the money. And under the local law of Massachusetts and Connecticut, the cases before cited show that the alienation of the land will not discharge the lien. It is true, that the lapse of 20 years will, under certain circumstances, discharge that lien of a judgment. But how does it discharge it? By presuming payment and satisfaction of the judgment; but that is not the case here. The debts cannot be presumed to be satisfied, since the report of the commissioners to the Court of Probates shows them to be still in existence.

Lastly. The objection as to the sale of the demandants being void as against the statute to prevent the selling of disputed titles, has been sufficiently answered by what has been said respecting the authority of administrators and executors, to sell lands in the possession of heirs, their alienees or disseisors, or the alienees of the latter. This is a sale by authority of law; nor is it within the words of the statute, which speaks only of "sales by a person disseised or ousted of the possession of lands by the entry, possession, and enjoyment of any 95*] other person." *Here was no disseisin or ouster of the creditors of the administrator.

Mr. Webster, for the plaintiff in error, in reply, stated, that there were two questions for consideration. 1. Whether William D. was shown to have been seized of such estate in the lands that they became chargeable with his debts at his decease. 2. Supposing him to have died seized of an estate thus chargeable, are the demandants entitled to recover against the adversary claim of Joseph D. and his grantees?

1. It is not proved that William D. had a fee in the lands. He entered into possession on the death of his father, Thomas, in 1769. But non constat what estate the latter held. The will of Governor Dudley may be wholly laid out of the case, inasmuch as neither party attempted at the trial to deduce title under that will. William, being a minor, and having brothers and sisters younger than himself, then living, entered into possession of the lands, by his guardian; and there being no devise in fee to him from his father in proof, the legal presumption is, that he entered, either as having an estate of his own, in the lands, commencing on his father's death, or as one of the co-heirs of his father. But it is apparent, that he did not enter as a co-heir, because he entered, claiming an exclusive right, took an exclusive possession, and held his brothers and sisters out. He claimed, however, an estate for life only, and the same proof, which shows the possession, shows also under what title that possession was held. This is not inconsistent with *the general doctrine, that a disseisor can- [*96 not qualify his own wrong. For it is first to be proved that he was a disseisor. The presumption ought to be, that he entered rightfully, having such title as he pretended to have. It is clear, that the declarations of a person in possession of land as to his title, are admissible against him. If he were tenant for life, then he had a peculiar limited estate acquired by purchase, and perfectly consistent with Joseph's title in the fee. That he held such a limited estate is shown by his own conduct and declarations, and by the conduct of his brothers and sisters, who never disturbed his possession. On the death of William, in 1786, Joseph, being then a minor, and having also brothers and sisters, entered upon the lands, taking the whole rents and profits, holding his brothers and sisters out of possession, and claiming the lands exclusively as his own, and finally conveyed them as his property to those under whom the tenant in the present action claimed. He did not therefore enter as a co-heir of his father, for he excluded his brothers and sisters. Nor did he enter as a tenant for life, for he claimed the whole fee, and disposed of it. So that from 1769 to the commencement of the present suit, a period of 50 years, these lands have been possessed and enjoyed in a manner strictly conformable to the supposition that William had an estate for life in the premises, with remainder to his son Joseph in fee. Now, as neither party produced any documentary evidence of title, but both parties rested on the presumption of grants arising from possession, such *a [*97 grant, and such a grant only, ought to have been presumed, as should conform to the whole length of possession. It ought to have been left to the jury, to presume a grant to William for life, with remainder to Joseph in fee, because the possession proved such a grant, if it proved any whatsoever. Why should the presumption arise from any one part of the possession, rather than from the whole? And especially, how can a grant to William in fee be presumed from his possession, when he pretended to have an estate for life only? His declarations were not contrary to his possession, but conformable to it; and both his possession and his declarations, and all his conduct, are strictly conformable to the supposition of a remainder in fee in Joseph. The jury ought to have been directed to take all these circumstances into consideration, and to presume such a grant as would support the possession throughout its whole duration.

Wheat. 7.

There is an insurmountable difficulty in any other view of the case. The learned judge below, going upon the supposition that Thomas D. died possessor of an estate in fee, and that William entered as co-heir to that estate, instructed the jury that they might presume a grant to him, by his brothers and sisters, of their portions of the inheritance. But this presumption could not be made, because, when he entered, claiming to hold them out, and down to the time of his death, in 1786, some of them were within the saving of the statute of limitations; and it is very clear that, where the statute would apply, any length of time, short of the statute period, can never warrant a presumption; for that would be to presume against 98*] *the statute.<sup>1</sup> If there were in fact any grant from the brothers and sisters of William, it is more reasonable to suppose such grant made to Joseph. If we admit, then, that the same length of possession by a parcener, would bar one of his coparceners as would bar others, still William, having entered in 1769, would not bar any of his co-heirs, by possession, until 1784; but in the latter year the greater number of his brothers and sisters were still either minors, or within the five years' saving of the statute in favor of minors, and to be allowed after they came of full age. So that there is no ground whatever on which it is possible to presume a grant to William from his brothers and sisters.

There is, then, a double difficulty in supporting the instruction which was given to the jury. 1st. Because they were told that they might presume a grant to William in fee, when the whole possession, taken together, was shown to be incompatible with the existence of such a grant. And, 2d. Because they were instructed they might presume a grant to William, from his brothers and sisters, in a case in which the statute of limitations would apply, if they had not been within its exception as minors. The jury were farther instructed, that William might have claimed an estate for life in the premises by mistake, and that such mistake ought not to defeat his title by possession. I agree, that if it appeared, that he had an estate in fee, his mistake ought not to prejudice him; but that not appearing, there is no evidence, which shows that he had any title at all, shows such title to be only to an estate for life, and there is no ground to presume any mistake.

2. The remaining general question is, whether, supposing William D. to have died possessed of an estate in fee, the demandants are entitled to recover in the present action.

Here has existed a possession of 33 years in Joseph, and those claiming under him. The judge instructed the jury, that, as against the creditors of William, supposing him to have died possessed of the land in fee, neither Joseph, nor those claiming under him, had gained title by possession. There can be no doubt this ought to be considered an adverse possession. Every possession is adverse where there are circumstances to destroy a presumption that the defendant is in under the plaintiff's title.<sup>2</sup> There is no ground to presume that Joseph entered into possession, intending to hold subject to the incumbrance of William's debts; especially, as there were strong reasons to suppose he entered claiming a title in himself, not derived from his father. It seems clear, that this length of possession would have barred William Dudley himself, if he had lived. If he had conveyed on the day of his death, it would have barred his grantee. If he had devised the lands, it would have barred the devisee. If he had mortgaged, it would have barred the mortgagee. If he had mortgaged for the payment of this very 100*] debt, the creditor and mortgagee would have been long since barred by the adverse possession of Joseph, and those claiming under him. The doctrine contended for on the other side goes to give more permanency to a general unknown lien, than to a well-known and specific lien. A mortgage deed is registered, and may be known; but where are debts registered? How is a stranger to know anything of them? In the present case, a creditor, twenty-eight years after the death of his debtor, causes letters of administration of his estate to be taken out, proves his debt, or gets it confessed, and attempts to enforce his general lien as creditor on the debtor's land, after this lapse of time, against bona fide purchasers buying without notice of the claim. To permit this would be opposed to justice and equity, and to the whole policy of the law. If twenty-eight years will not bar such a claim, what lapse of time will bar it? or is it to be perpetual? The general mischiefs of such a doctrine are obvious. It would disturb titles to a very great extent. No man could buy with any security. The defendant in this case has, of course, no means of contesting the existence or amount of the debt. That question is settled between other parties; and although from lapse of time, all debts would be presumed to be paid, yet, if the administrator, who in such cases is generally the agent of the creditor, desires to admit the debt, the tenant of the land cannot dispute it. This renders it absolutely indispensable, for the security and safety of purchasers, that liens of this nature should be enforced promptly, or in reasonable time after the debtor's decease. No system could answer the common purposes of [*101 justice, which should allow a creditor to come on the land for his debt, at any time, and in whosoever hands he might find it. The courts of Massachusetts have expressed the opinion that a creditor, by unreasonable neglect and delay, in pursuing his remedy, should be deemed to waive his lien on the land; and have very clearly intimated that in ascertaining what neglect ought to be considered as unreasonable, they should be governed by the analogy of the statute of limitations.<sup>3</sup> They have also decided that the estate should not be sold, if the creditor's demand be barred by the act limiting actions against administrators and executors; and that if the administrator pay the debt himself, and then lie by till it would have been barred, he shall not indemnify himself by charging it on the land.<sup>4</sup>

In this case there is great reason for following the analogy of the statute of limitations. The words of the Connecticut statute are the same as those of the English, except as to the number of years. "No person shall make entry into lands, &c., but within fifteen years next after his right or title shall descend or accrue." This is descriptive of the title under which he enters, and does not regard the time of his own accession to that title. In the case of Beach v. Catlin,<sup>5</sup> it would seem to be intimated by one of the *learned judges, that a judgment [*102 creditor, coming into the land by extending his judgment on it, is in under a new title, and that,

1.—Cowp. 114.

2.—Jackson v. Todd, 2 Caines' Rep. 183.

3.—Gore v. Brazer, 3 Mass. Rep. 542; Wyman v. Bridgen, 4 Mass. Rep. 150.

4.—Scott v. Hancock, 13 Mass. Rep. 162; Allen v. Strong, 15 Mass. Rep. 58.

5.—4 Day's Rep. 284.

as to him, the statute runs only from the time of the execution of the writ. That case is understood to have been relied upon as applicable to this, in the court below. It would be difficult, I think, to support it; for supposing that a judgment can be extended on lands, of which the judgment debtor is not in possession, but which are in possession of another holding adversely to him, it would seem that he could derive no higher right, or better title than his debtor had, and must hold under him. This would not be the accruing of a new title in the judgment creditor, but merely a transfer or devolution of an existing title. It is no more a new title than if he had acquired it by deed of conveyance. Perhaps it would not be going too far, in the case now before the court, to hold the demandants within the words of the statute, on a liberal construction, as having a right to enter, being creditors, on the death of their debtor, insolvent; for although the right was not perfect, they could make it perfect whenever they pleased. They could as well have caused letters of administration to be taken out in 1784, as in 1814. But because this may be, I contend the present case is within the principle of the cases which have been decided by the analogy of the statute of limitations, and on grounds of public policy. It is well known that many cases which are not within the letter of the statute, are construed to be within it by analogy. The statute, for instance, does not apply, in terms, to proceedings in equity; but 103* they are affected by analogy.<sup>1</sup> Where a party has an equitable lien, if he be guilty of such negligence as would bar him at law, he shall be barred in equity. In relation to the whole class of incorporeal hereditaments, whether the cases arise in equity, or at law, the bar is furnished, not by the terms of the statute of limitations, but by its analogy.<sup>2</sup> So is the law, also, with regard to an equity of redemption. There is no right to enter. It is but a mere equitable interest in the land; it is not, therefore, within the terms of the statute; but yet it is barred by the lapse of time prescribed by the statute for other cases.<sup>3</sup> Rent, also, a highly favored lien, will be presumed to be discharged by the lapse of the statute period.<sup>4</sup>

In short, it will be difficult to find a case in which a lien upon land, which may be asserted and enforced at any time, has been established, after the expiration of the time allowed to make title to the land itself. In most of these cases, the ends of justice, and the policy of the law, are attained by presuming a grant. This presumption is made from principles of public policy, and the necessity of the case. It is for the furtherance of justice, and for the sake of peace; it is founded in this, that whatever has long existed, and has been acquiesced in by 104* those who had an interest to disturb it, had, probably a lawful beginning. It is not to be supposed that a man would suffer another to obstruct the enjoyment of his right without complaint, and an effort to obtain redress. The presumption is not to be made out by weighing minutely the evidence of particular facts and probabilities. This would be proof, not presumption.

Legal presumption is resorted to where there is no particular proof, and because there can be no particular proof; the question, in such cases, is not to be decided by personal belief or disbelief. The grant presumed is taken to exist as a fact, in contemplation of law.<sup>5</sup>

Whatever is possible may be presumed, in order to establish long continued possessions. Royal charters, acts of parliament, grants from the state, common recoveries, and private conveyances of all descriptions.<sup>6</sup> Some of the questions now presented here were fully discussed in the Supreme Court of Connecticut, in a case in which the same parties were plaintiffs, as in this, and which respected the same title; and I refer particularly to the judgment pronounced in that case by the Chief Justice.<sup>7</sup> The ground is, that by a neglect to assert the claim, and enforce the lien for a length of time equal to that prescribed by the statute to bar a title to the land itself, the creditor shall be presumed to have waived *or sur- 105 rendered the lien: that this presumption stands on principles of public policy, and furnishes a complete bar to the demandants' recovery.

Mr. Justice STORY delivered the opinion of the court:

The principal questions which have arisen, and have been argued here, upon the instructions given by the Circuit Court and to which alone the court deem it necessary to direct their attention, are, first, whether, upon the facts stated, a legal presumption exists, that William Dudley died seized of an estate of inheritance in the demanded premises; and, if so, secondly, whether an exclusive possession of the demanded premises, by Joseph Dudley and his grantees, after the death of William, under an adversary claim, for thirty years, is a bar to the entry and title of the demandants under the administration sale.

It is to be considered, that no paper title of any sort is shown in William Dudley, or his son Joseph. Their title, whatever it may be, rests upon possession; and the nature and extent of that possession must be judged of by the acts and circumstances which accompany it, and qualify, explain, or control it. Undoubtedly, if a person be found in possession of land, claiming it as his own, in fee, it is prima facie evidence of his ownership, and seisin of the inheritance. But, it is not the possession alone, but the possession accompanied with the claim of the fee, that gives this effect, by construction of law, to the acts of the party. Possession, per se, evidences *no more 106 than the mere fact of present occupation, by right; for the law will not presume a wrong; and that possession is just as consistent with a present interest, under a lease for years or for life, as in fee. From the very nature of the case, therefore, it must depend upon the collateral circumstances, what is the quality and extent of the interest claimed by the party; and

1.—1 Scho. & Lefr. 413.

2.—2 Saund. 175, note a; 1 Bos. & Pnll. 401; 3 East, 294; 4 Day's Rep. 244.

3.—1 Powell Mort. 408.

Wheat. 7.

4.—Bailey v. Jackson, 16 Johns. Rep. 210.

5.—2 Bos. & Pull. 206; 12 Ves. 261.

6.—12 Ves. 374; 2 Hen. & Munf. 370; 2 T. R. 159.

7.—Sumner v. Child, 2 Conn. Rep. 607.

to that extent, and that only, will the presumption of law go in his favor. And the declarations of the party, while in possession, equally with his acts, must be good evidence for this purpose. If he claims only an estate for life, and that is consistent with his possession, the law will not, upon the mere fact of possession, adjudge him to be in under a higher right, or a larger estate. If, indeed, the party be in under title, and by mistake of law, he supposes himself possessed of a less estate in the land than really belongs to him, the law will adjudge him in possession of, and remit him to, his full right and title. For a mistake of law shall not, in such case, prejudice the right of the party, and his possession, therefore, must be held co-extensive with his right. This is the doctrine in Littleton (sec. 695), cited at the bar; and better authority could not be given, if, indeed, so obvious a principle of justice required any authority to support it. But there the party establishes a title in point of law greater than his claim; whereas, in the case now supposed, the party establishes nothing independent of his possession, and that qualified by his own acts and declarations. This is the 107 distinction between the cases, and accounts at once for the different principles of law applicable to them.

It has also been argued at the bar, that a person who commits a disseisin cannot qualify his own wrong, but must be considered as a disseisor in fee. This is generally true; but it is a rule introduced for the benefit of the disseisee, for the sake of electing his remedy. For if a man enter into possession, under a supposition of a lawful limited right, as under a lease, which turns out to be void, or as a special occupant, where he is not entitled so to claim, if he be a disseisor at all, it is only at the election of the disseisee.<sup>1</sup> There is nothing in the law which prevents the disseisee from considering such a person as a mere trespasser, at his election; or which makes such an entry, under mistake for a limited estate, a disseisin in fee absolutely, and, at all events, so that a descent cast would toll the entry of the disseisee. But, were it otherwise, in order to apply the doctrine at all, it must appear that the party found in possession entered without right, and was, in fact, a disseisor; for if his entry were congeable, or his possession lawful, his entry and possession will be considered as limited by his right. For the law will never construe a possession tortious unless from necessity. On the other hand, it will consider every possession lawful, the commencement and continuance of which is not proved to be wrongful. And this upon the plain principle, that every man shall be presumed to act in obedience to his duty, 108 until the contrary appears. When, therefore, a naked possession is in proof, unaccompanied by evidence, as to its origin, it will be deemed lawful, and co-extensive with the right set up by the party. If the party claim only a limited estate, and not a fee, the law will not, contrary to his intentions, enlarge it to a fee. And it is only when the party is proved to be in by disseisin that the law will construe it a disseisin of the fee, and abridge the party of his right, to qualify his wrong.

1.—Com. Dig. Seisin, F. 2 & F. 3; 1 Roll. Abr. 662, l. 45; Id. 661, l. 45.

Now, in the case at bar, it is not proved of what estate Thomas Dudley died seized in the premises. His possession does not appear to have been accompanied with any claim of right to the inheritance. It might have been an estate for life only, and as such, have had a lawful commencement. If it were intended to be argued that he had a fee in the premises, it should have been established by competent proof that he was in possession, claiming a fee by right, or by wrong. No such fact appears. The only fact, leading even to a slight presumption of that nature, is, that his widow took one-third of the rents and profits during her life. But whether this was under a claim of dower, or any other right, is not proved. The circumstance is equivocal in its character, and is unexplained; and the inference to be deduced from it, of a descendible estate in her husband, is rebutted by the fact, that immediately on his death, his son William entered into the premises, claiming a life estate, and held them during his life, as his own, without any claim on the part of the co-heirs of his father, to share in the estate. There is, then, nothing in the case, from which it can be judicially 109 inferred that Thomas was ever seized of an estate of inheritance in the premises, and, of course, none of a descent from him to his heirs.

Then, as to the estate of his son William in the premises. It is argued, that William had an estate in fee, by right or by wrong. That if his entry, either in person, or by his guardian, was without right, it was a disseisin, and invested him with a wrongful estate in fee. If with right, then it must have been a co-heir of his father, and a grant ought to be presumed from the other co-heirs to him, releasing their title, and confirming his.

The doctrine, as to presumptions of grants, has been gone into largely, on the argument, and the general correctness of the reasoning is not denied. There is no difference in the doctrine, whether the grant relate to corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments. A grant of land may as well be presumed, as a grant of a fishery, or of common, or of a way. Presumptions of this nature are adopted from the general infirmity of human nature, the difficulty of preserving muniments of title, and the public policy of supporting long and uninterrupted possessions. They are founded upon the consideration, that the facts are such as could not, according to the ordinary course of human affairs, occur unless there was a transmutation of title to, or an admission of an existing adverse title in, the party in possession. They may, therefore, be encountered and rebutted by contrary presumptions; and can never fairly arise where all the circumstances are perfectly consistent with the non-existence of a grant.

A fortiori, they cannot arise where the 110 claim is of such a nature as is at variance with the supposition of a grant. In general, it is the policy of courts of law to limit the presumption of grants to periods analogous to those of the statute of limitations, in cases where the statute does not apply. But where the statute applies, it constitutes, ordinarily, a sufficient title or defense, independently of any presumption of a grant, and, therefore, it is not generally resorted to. But if the circumstances of the case justify it, a presumption of a grant may as well be made in the one case as in the other; and where the other circumstances are very cogent and full, there is no absolute bar against the presumption of a grant, within a period short of the statute of limitations.<sup>1</sup>

If we apply the doctrines here asserted to the case at bar, we may ask, in the first place, what ground there is to presume any grant of the premises to William Dudley, and if any, what was the quantity or quality of his estate? It has been already stated that there is no sufficient proof that his father died seized of a descendible estate in the premises; and if so, the entry of William by his guardian, or in person, cannot be deemed to have been under color of title as heir; and in point of fact he never asserted any such title. For the same reason, no estate can be presumed to have descended to his co-heirs; and if so, the very foundation fails upon which the presumption of a grant from them to William can be built; for if they had no title, and asserted no title, 111*] there is no reason *to presume that he or they sought to make or receive an inoperative conveyance. There is no pretense of any presumption of a grant in fee from any other person to William; and as there is no evidence of any connection with the will of Governor Dudley, or of any claim of title under it by William, there does not seem any room to presume that he was in under that will, upon mistaken constructions of his title derived from it. There is this further difficulty in presuming a grant from the co-heirs to William, that at the time of his own entry, as well as that of his guardian, all of them were under age, and incapable of making a valid conveyance. During this period, therefore, no such conveyance can be presumed; and yet William, during all this period, claimed an exclusive right, and had an exclusive possession of the whole to his own use; and his subsequent possession was but a continuation of the same claim without any interference on the part of the co-heirs. In point of fact the youngest brother arrived at age about the time of William's death; and as to two others of the co-heirs, the statute of limitations of Connecticut, as to rights of entry, would not then run against them. The presumption of a grant from them is therefore in this view, also, affected with an intrinsic infirmity.

In addition to all this, William never claimed any estate in fee in the premises. His declaration uniformly was, that he had a life estate only, and that upon his death they would descend to his son Joseph. Of the competency of this evidence to explain the nature of his possession and title, no doubt can reasonably be entertained. His title being evidenced 112*] *only by possession, it must be limited in its extent to the claim which he asserted. If, indeed, it had appeared that he was in under a written title which gave him a larger estate, his mistake of the law could not prejudice him; but his seisin would be co-extensive with, and a remitter to that title. But there is no evidence of any written title, or of any mistake of law in the construction of it. For aught that appears, William's estate was exactly what he claimed, a life estate only, and the inheritance belonged to his son Joseph. It is material also to observe, that the acts of the parties, and the possession of the estates during the period of nearly fifty years, are in conformity with this supposition, and at war with any other. Why should William's brothers and sisters have acquiesced in his exclusive possession during his whole life, of the inheritance descended from their father? Why should Joseph's brothers and sisters have acquiesced in his exclusive possession during a period of twenty-five years without claim, if their father William was seized of the inheritance? Why should the guardians of William and Joseph have successively entered into the premises, claiming the whole in right of their respective wards, if their title was not deemed clearly and indisputably an exclusive title, or if they were in by descent under the title of their fathers? If, indeed, a presumption of a grant is to be made, it should be of a grant conforming to the declarations and acts of possession of the parties during the whole period, and if any grant is to be presumed from the facts of this case, it is a grant of a particular estate to William, with a remainder of the inheritance to Joseph, or in the most *113 favorable view of an estate tail to William, upon whose death the estate would descend to Joseph, as his eldest son, per formam doni. If Thomas, the grandfather, were proved to have been the owner of the fee, there is nothing in the other circumstances which forbids the presumption of such a grant from him; but as the cause now stands, it may as well have been derived from some other ancestor, or from a stranger. It is therefore the opinion of this court, that the Circuit Court erred in directing the jury that William, by mistaken constructions of the will of Governor Dudley, might have claimed an estate for life in the premises, and that such mistake would not operate to defeat his title by possession, for there was no evidence that William ever claimed under that will; and also erred in instructing the jury that they were authorized to presume a grant by the children of Thomas to William. The compromise entered into by Joseph with two of his brothers is not thought to change the posture of the case, because that compromise was made with an explicit denial of their right; and is therefore to be considered as an agreement for a family peace.

The other question in the cause is of great importance, and if decided one way will probably put an end to further controversy. It has been very fully and ably argued at the bar, and does not, from anything before us, appear to have received a final adjudication in the state courts of Connecticut. It must therefore be examined and decided upon principle. By the laws of Connecticut (as has been *alrea- [*114 dy stated), the real estate of an intestate is liable to be sold for the payment of debts, where there is a deficiency of personal estate. The administrator in virtue of his general authority, has no right to meddle with the real estate; but derives this special authority from the order of the Court of Probates, which possesses jurisdiction to direct a sale, upon a proper application, and proof of the deficiency of the personal assets. This power or trust, call it which you please, when granted or ordered, is not understood to convey any estate to the administrator in the lands of the intestate. He derives simply an authority to sell from the court, and upon the sale makes a conveyance to the purchaser; and the estate passes to the purchaser upon his entry into the land by operation of law, so that he is under the estate of the intestate. As long as an administration legally subsists, or may be legally granted, this power over the land may be exercised, if the land remains in possession of the heirs; and it is not defeated simply by an alienation or disseisin of the heirs.<sup>1</sup> By analogy, also, to other cases of a like nature, at the common law, as, for instance, a power given by a will to executors to sell an estate for payment of debts, it may be true that a descent cast will not toll an entry, for there is a distinction between a right of entry and a mere power.<sup>2</sup> The former is in general barred by a descent cast; but the latter is not. On this, however, it is not necessary to express any opinion.

1.—See Phillips on Evidence, ch. 7, s. 2, p. 126; Foley v. Wilson, 11 East, 56.

It does not appear that at the time of granting the administration on this estate, any statutable limitation of the period within which an original administration might be granted, existed in Connecticut, though a limitation generally to seven years after the death of the party has been since introduced.<sup>3</sup> And the present administration, though granted after the lapse of 28 years from the death of William Dudley, must be considered as valid, it having been allowed by a court of competent and exclusive jurisdiction, whose decision we are not at liberty to review.

Still, however, the question recurs, whether a power of sale, thus derived under the law, and not from the act of the party, is to be considered as a perpetual lien on the land of which the intestate died seized, and capable of being called into life at any distance of time, and under any circumstances, whatever may be the mesne conveyances, disseisins, or descents, which may have taken place. If it be of such a nature, great public mischiefs must inevitably occur, and many innocent purchasers, fortified as their possession may be, by length of time, against all interests in the land, may yet be the victims of a secret lien, or power, which could not be forseen or guarded against, and which may spring upon their titles when the original parties to the transactions are buried in the grave.<sup>4</sup> The principles of justice would seem to require, that the law should administer its benefits to those who are vigilant in exercising their rights, and not to those who sleep over them. It is always in the power of creditors to compel an administration to be taken upon an estate by application to a court of probates; and if the next of kin decline the office, it is competent for the court to appoint any other suitable person. So that, if creditors do not choose to act, the loss or injury ought rather to fall on them, than on those who are meritorious purchasers without the means of knowledge to guard them against mistake. A power to sell the estate for payment of debts being created by the law, ought not to be so construed as to work mischiefs against the intent of the law. It ought to be exercised within a reasonable time after the death of the intestate; and gross neglect or delay on the part of the creditors for an unreasonable time, ought to be held to be a waiver or extinguishment of it. This appears to be the doctrine in Massachusetts;<sup>5</sup> whose laws on this subject are like those of Connecticut, and is so just in itself, that unless prevented by authority, we should not hesitate to adopt it. There is no decision in Connecticut, which, to our knowledge, controverts this doctrine; and it stands supported by the very learned opinion of her late Chief Justice in the case of Sumner v. Childs.<sup>6</sup> There are many cases where indisputable liens on land may be lost by lapse of time, and transmutation of the property. And even the rights of mortgageors to redeem, and of mortgagees to enforce payment out of the land, may be lost by presumptions, or laches arising from time.

What, then, is to be deemed a reasonable time for the exercise of this power to sell? It has been argued that the case of such a power is within the purview of the statute of limitations of Connecticut; and if not, that the reasonable time for its exercise is to be fixed by analogy to that statute. The statute provides that no person shall, at any time thereafter, make entry into any lands or tenements, but within fifteen years next after his right or title shall first descend or accrue to the same, with a saving in favor of infants, femes covert, &c., of five years after the removal of the disability.<sup>7</sup> The language of the statute would seem to apply merely to rights of entry; but it has been the uniform construction of the courts of the state, that it also takes away all rights of action, and, therefore, bars all real actions after that period.<sup>8</sup> Now, the argument at the bar is, that the words right or title first accrued, refer solely to the commencement of the original title under which the party claims, and not to his own accession to the title. But it appears to us, that this construction of the statute cannot be maintained.<sup>9</sup> The title against which the statute runs, is a present right of entry; and it is admitted, that when once it so begins to run, no devolution of the same title, and no supervening disability, will stop its operation. When, therefore, it speaks of a right or title first accrued, it means a new right or title first accruing to the party, and not the transfer of an old title. Against titles, in esse, at the time of the adverse possession, the statute was intended to run; but titles which should afterwards come in esse, were not within the provision of the statute, because they could not be enforced within the period, and it would be unjust to bar future

1.—Drinkwater v. Drinkwater, 4 Mass. Rep. 354, 359; Jenk. Cent. 184, pl. 85.

2.—Littleton, s. 169, Jenk. Cent. 184, pl. 85; Brooke's Abridg. Devise, pl. 36; Litt. s. 391; Co. Litt. 240.

3.—Statutes of Connecticut, Revision of 1821, tit. 32, Estates 33.

4.—Gore v. Brazer, 3 Mass. Rep. 523, 542; Wyman v. Brigden, 4 Mass. Rep. 150, 155.

5.—2 Conn. Rep. 607.

6.—See the statute in Revised Laws of Conn., tit. 59, sec. 1, p. 309; 1 Swift's System, 335.

7.—1 Swift's System, 335, 336; Sumner v. Child, 2 Conn. Rep. 607, 615.

rights in respect to which there could, by no possibility, be an imputation of laches. And such has been the uniform construction of all the statutes which contain a clause of this nature. Stanford's case, cited at the bar, and referred to in Cro. Jac., 61, is directly in point; and it would be easy to multiply instances under the statute of limitations, and the statute of fines, to the same effect.<sup>1</sup> If, indeed, the construction were otherwise, it would not help the present case, for the right of entry of the purchaser did not accrue until after the conveyance to him, and if he should then be deemed in under the estate of the intestate, and in privity of title, it would be a new right growing out of the exercise of a power conferred by law, and no more barred than a right of entry upon an ex-
119*] tent after a fine levied, *and five years past, where the judgment was obtained before the fine.<sup>2</sup>

But we do think it is a case clearly within the same equity as those which are governed by the statute of limitations; and that by analogy to the cases where a limitation has been applied to other rights and equities not within the statute, the reasonable time within which the power should be exercised, ought to be limited to the same period which regulates rights of entry. It would be strange, indeed, that when the estate of the heirs in the land, which is but a continuation of the estate of the intestate, is extinguished by the statute, the estate should still be considered as a subsisting estate of the intestate himself. That the administrator should possess a power over the property which the intestate could not possess if living; and that a lien created by operation of law should have a more permanent duration of efficacy, than if created by the express act of the party. The convenience of mankind, the public policy of protecting innocent purchasers, and the repose of titles honestly acquired, require some limitation upon powers of this nature, and we know of none more just and equitable than this, that when the right of entry to the land is gone, or the estate is gone by an adverse possession from those who held as heirs or devisees, the whole interest in the land, the power of the administrator to make sale of the land for payment of debts, is gone also. In this opinion we do but follow the doctrine which has been distinctly intimated both
120*] *in the Massachusetts and Connecticut courts.<sup>3</sup>

The remaining consideration under this head is, whether the possession of Joseph Dudley can be considered as an adverse possession so as to toll the right of entry of the heirs, and, consequently, extinguish, by the lapse of time, their right of action for the land, as well as extinguish by analogy of principle the power of the administrator to sell the land. It is said, that the entry of Joseph into the premises is consistent with the potential right of the creditors; that he had a right to enter as a co-heir of his father, and if he entered as co-heir, his possession was not adverse, but was a possession for the other heirs and creditors, and he could not afterwards hold adversely, or change the nature of his possession, for the creditors might always elect to consider him their trustee. There is no doubt, that in general, the entry of one heir will enure to the benefit of all, and that if the entry is made as heir, and without claim of an exclusive title, it will be deemed an entry not adverse to, but in consonance with, the rights of the other heirs. But it is as clear, that one heir may dispossess his co-heirs, and hold an adverse possession against them, as well as a stranger. And, notwithstanding an entry as heir, the party may, afterwards, by disseisin of his co-heirs, acquire an exclusive possession upon which the statute *will run. An ouster, or disseisin, [*121 is not, indeed, to be presumed from the mere fact of sole possession; but it may be proved by such possession, accompanied with a notorious claim of an exclusive right. And if such exclusive possession will run against the heirs, it will, by parity of reason, run against the creditors. For the heirs, qua heirs, are in no accurate sense in the estate as trustees of the creditors. They hold in their own right by descent from their ancestor, and take the profits to their own use during their possession; and the most that can be said is, that they hold consistently with the right of the creditors. The creditors, in short, have but a lien on the land which may be enforced through the instrumentality of the administrator acting under the order of the Court of Probates.

But in order to apply the argument itself, it is necessary to prove that the ancestor had an estate of inheritance, and that the party entered as heir. Now, in the case at bar, all the circumstances point the other way. There is not, as has been already intimated, any proof, that William Dudley died seized of an inheritance in the land; and there is direct proof that he asserted the inheritance to be in his son Joseph; and the entry of the guardian of Joseph as well as his own entry, after his arrival of age, was under an exclusive claim to the whole, not by descent, but by title distinct or paramount. There is certainly no incapacity in an heir to claim an estate by title distinct or paramount to that of his ancestor; and if his possession is exclusive under such claim, and he holds all other persons out until the statute period has *run, he is entitled to the full benefit [*122 and protection of the bar. It appears to us, therefore, that the jury ought to have been instructed, that if they were satisfied that Joseph's possession was adverse to that of the other heirs, and under a claim of title distinct from, or paramount to that of his father, during his 25 years of exclusive possession, the entry of the purchaser, under the administrator's sale, was not congeable, and that the power of the creditor over the estate was extinguished. There was therefore error in the opinion of the court to the jury, that as against the creditors of William Dudley, neither Joseph nor the tenant had gained any title to the land in controversy by possession.

For these reasons the judgment of the Circuit Court must be reversed, and the cause re-

1.—Bac. Abr. Limitations, B; Bac. Abr. Fines and Recoveries, F; Comyn's Dig. Fine, K. 2.

2.—Bac. Abr. Fines, &c., F. cites 1 Mod. 217.

Wheat. 7.

3.—Gore v. Brazer, 3 Mass. Rep. 523, 542; Wyman v. Bridgen, 4 Mass. Rep. 150, 155; Sumner v. Childs, 2 Conn. Rep. 607.

manded, with directions to the court to order a renire facias de novo

Cited.—9 Wheat. 238; 11 Wheat. 318 (n); 5 Pet. 445; 12 Pet. 262; 3 Wood. & M. 549; 1 Paine, 407; 4 McLean, 285.

[LOCAL LAW.]

BOULDIN AND WIFE V. MASSIE'S
HEIRS AND OTHERS.

The patent issued on a military warrant under the law of Virginia, is prima facie evidence that every prerequisite of the law was complied with.

The loss of a paper must be established before its contents can be proved; but where the patent issues upon an assignment of the warrant, and the legal title is thus consummated, the assignment it-123*] self being no longer a paper essential to that title, the same degree of proof of its existence cannot be required as if it were relied on as composing part of the title.

Where there is a strong degree of probability that the assignment has been lost or destroyed, through accident, its non-production, by the party claiming under it, ought not to operate against him, so as to defeat his legal title.

The original law of Virginia, which authorizes the assignment of warrants, did not require that it should be made by indorsement, or by an instrument annexed to the warrant.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of Ohio.

This suit was brought by the appellants, who were plaintiffs in the Circuit Court, to obtain a conveyance for twelve-nineteenths of a tract of land lying in the state of Ohio, containing 1,900 acres, for which a patent was issued in December, 1814, to the defendants, the heirs of Nathaniel Massie. The other defendants were purchasers from him. The survey on which the patent was founded was made as to 1,200 acres, part thereof on a military land warrant No. 2,675, granted by the commonwealth of Virginia, to Robert Jouitte for 2,666 $\frac{2}{3}$  acres of land, of which 2,051 $\frac{1}{2}$  acres were alleged to have been assigned to Nathaniel Massie by Robert Jouitte. The plaintiff, Alice, claimed as heir of Robert Jouitte, and denied this assignment; on the existence and validity of which the whole cause depended. The assignment itself could not be produced, and was supposed by the defendants to have been consumed with the other papers of the war office, in November, 1800. Under these circumstances, the defendants insisted that the patent was prima facie evidence that every prerequisite of the law was complied with; and that satisfactory and legal proof of the assignment was [\*124 made; and they relied on the testimony in the cause as supporting, instead of weakening, this presumption.

The plaintiffs contended that the papers filed in the land-office did not justify the emanation of the patent; and that the absence of the assignment, and of any proof of its destruction, justified their requiring from the defendants the most complete proof of its existence and loss.

The papers on which the patent issued, were a copy of the original warrant, a copy of the plat and certificate of survey made in the name of N. Massie, as assignee, on the 24th of December, 1796, and recorded in the surveyor's office on the 9th of June, 1797, to which were annexed the following certificate and affidavit: "I do certify that the within survey was made on 1,200 acres, part of warrant No. 2675 (Jouitte's warrant); 403 acres, part of warrant No. 3398; and 277 acres, part of warrant No. 2642. The warrants No. 2675 and 3398 were taken out of this office the 13th day of June, 1797, with the original survey, of which this is a duplicate; warrant No. 4675 was taken out the 14th day of March, 1799; and that the said warrants had not been satisfied prior to the date on which they were taken out of this office, and that so much of each warrant as is contained in this survey, at least, was assigned to said Massie.

Given under my hand and seal of office, this 20th day of April, 1802.

RICHARD ANDERSON. L. S.

*State of Ohio, Ross county, ss. [*125

Personally appeared before me, Joseph Taylor, a justice of the peace in and for the county aforesaid, Nathaniel Massie, who made oath, that the original survey of which this is a duplicate, was lodged in the office of the Secretary of War for the purpose of obtaining a patent

NOTE.—Evidence of lost paper.

If original paper be lost or destroyed, secondary evidence of its contents will be admitted. Sebre v. Dorr, 9 Wheat. 558; Riggs v. Tayloe, 9 Wheat. 483; DeLane v. Moore, 14 How. 253; U. S. v. Doebler, Baldw. 519.

So where the paper is in possession of the opposite party, if notice to produce be given, and it be not produced at the trial, inferior evidence of its contents may be given. Bas v. Steele, 3 Wash. C. C. 381; Hauston v. Eustace, 2 How. 653; U. S. v. Winchester, 2 McLean, 135.

The contents of written instruments cannot be proved by parol, unless the originals have been lost or destroyed, or their non-production is in some way accounted for. Wilson v. Young, 2 Cranch, C. C. 33; U. S. v. Lynn, 2 Cranch, C. C. 309; Hutchinson v. Peyton, 2 Cranch, C. C. 365; Patriotic Bank v. Coote, 3 Cranch, C. C. 169; Halderman v. Halderman, Hempst. 559; U. S. v. Wary, 1 Cranch, C. C. 312; U. S. v. Long, 1 Cranch, C. C. 373; U. S. v. Chevaul, 2 Cranch, C. C. 70; Ransdale v. Grove, 4 McLean, 282.

The rule applies to criminal as well as civil suits. U. S. v. Reyburn, 6 Pet. 352; U. S. v. Carrico, 2 Cranch, C. C. 110; U. S. v. Winchester, 2 McLean, 135.

The party offering secondary evidence must show that he has in good faith exhausted, in a reasonable degree, all the sources of information and means of discovery which the nature of the case would naturally suggest, and which were accessible to him. Simpson v. Dall, 3 Wall. 460.

As to the degree of search necessary, see Hotchkiss v. Mosher, 48 N. Y. 478; Simpson v. Dall, 3 Wall. 460; DeLane v. Moore, 14 How. 253; Minor v. Tillotson, 7 Pet. 99; Ins. Co. v. Weider, 14 Wall. 375.

The secondary evidence must be the best the party has in his power to produce. Cornett v. Williams, 20 Wall. 226.

Photographic copies of public documents on file in the departments at Washington, which public policy requires should not be removed, are admissible in evidence when their genuineness is authenticated in the usual way by proof of handwriting. Leathers v. Salow Wrecking Co. 2 Woods, 680.

Where judgment roll has been lost or destroyed secondary evidence may be given of its contents. Mandeville v. Reynolds, 68 N. Y. 528.

To prove the contents of a lost deed, it must be shown to have been duly executed, and the witness must prove substantially its contents. Edwards v. Noyes, 65 N. Y. 125.

Before giving evidence of the contents of a lost instrument, it is the right of the opposite party to prior to the 8th day of November, 1800, and that the same has been lost or destroyed.

Wheat. 7.

Given under my hand and seal this 16th day of January, 1806.

JOSEPH TAYLOR.

L. S.

The testimony of Anderson was taken in the cause for the purpose of proving the assignment from Joutite to Massie, and the substance of his evidence will be found in the opinion of the court. In confirmation of his testimony, the defendants also relied on a grant made to Massie, on the 2d of January, 1802, on a survey made the first of April, 1797, for Massie, as assignee of part of the same warrant. The entry was made on the 27th of January, 1795, and the patent contains a recital of the assignment of 205½ acres, part of Joutite's warrant.

A decree, dismissing the plaintiff's bill, was entered by the Circuit Court, pro forma, by consent, and the cause was brought by appeal to this court.

Mr. Hammond, for the appellants, argued, that the defendants stood in the same situation that Massie was at the time he made the sales, and it was incumbent upon them to prove the assignment of the warrant to Massie.

126*] "In every case, the person claiming as assignee, must establish his right by proof. If the indorsee of a promissory note, bill of exchange, or other writing made assignable at law, sue in his own name upon such note, bill, or writing, he cannot recover without making proof of the assignment. The person who claims to be the assignee of a warrant or plat and certificate of survey, until after a patent is issued to him, cannot assert in his own name, against third persons, a right arising under such warrant or survey without proving his purchase.<sup>1</sup> If this is the law where the original owner asserts no claim, and is no party before the court, there is much stronger reason that it should be so when such original owner is pursuing his right in the hands of a third person, whose claim he contests. It has, indeed, been decided, that when a grant once issues, such grant is prima facie evidence that every intermediate act necessary to authorize the emanation of the grant has been regularly transacted.<sup>2</sup> But that was at law, and the court, in the opinion delivered, plainly intimate, that the fact, whether the incipient right had actually been assigned, might be contested in equity. Upon whom the burden of proof should rest, in such a case, is not noticed.

But the Kentucky Court of Appeals has decided, that where there had been no actual assignment of the warrant, the owner might recover the lands in *the hands of the [*127 pretended assignee, after the grant, or in the hands of the purchaser with notice.<sup>3</sup> And they seem to have required the claimant to adduce proof that no assignment ever was made. In these cases, the assignment was actually indorsed upon the warrant, which it is conceived is a material circumstance.

Warrants for land, and plats and certificates of survey were not assignable upon the principles of the common law. They were subjects of contract, and might be sold and purchased; but without the aid of statutory provisions, the purchaser could not have acquired an absolute legal interest in them. The first statute of Virginia, that provided for granting land warrants, and executing surveys, enacted that "all persons, as well foreigners as others, shall have a right to assign and transfer warrants and certificates of survey for land." To assign or transfer—that is, to vest in the purchaser an absolute legal title to the warrant or plat and certificate of survey—can only be done by indorsing such assignment or transfer upon the warrant or plat itself, or by making it in writing, and attaching such writing to the document transferred; so that the subject assigned or transferred, and the act of assignment and transfer shall be inseparable. The owner of a land warrant may sell it, either by parol or written contract. Such sale would vest in the purchaser an equitable right to the warrant; a right which a court of law would respect, and a court of equity enforce; *but it [*128 would not constitute him the legal owner. It would not operate as an absolute assignment or transfer of the legal ownership. So the obligee of a bond, made assignable by law, may dispose of it by contract; but if no assignment be cross-examine the witness as to the sufficiency of the search. Loomis v. Mowry, 4 Hun. 271.

1.—Kerr v. Watts, 6 Wheat. 550.

2.—Polk's lessee v. Wendell, 9 Cranch, 87; Ross v. Reed, 1 Wheat. Rep. 482, 487; 6 Wheat. Rep. 293.

3.—1 Hardin, 37; 4 Bibb. 447.

An extract of a lost letter is not evidence, unless the witness can testify as to the contents of the whole document. Walbridge v. Kilpatrick, 9 Hun. 135.

Where the person to whom the letter is written testifies that he does not know where it is, but believes it has been destroyed, its contents are admissible in evidence. Green v. Disbrow, 7 Lans. 381.

The contents of a letter may be proved by parol where the person having it in possession is out of the country. Tucker v. Woolsey, 6 Lans. 482; S. C. 64 Barb. 142.

To render a person competent to testify as to the contents of a writing, he must have seen and read it, and be able to speak from personal knowledge. His having heard it read by another is not sufficient. Nichols v. Ore Co., 56 N. Y. 618.

Where negotiable notes past due are surrendered to the maker, the presumption is that they are destroyed, and secondary evidence of their contents is admissible. Chrysler v. Renois, 43 N. Y. 209.

Copies compared are competent testimony of Wheat. 7.

high order of proof, upon proof of loss of the original. Reid v. U. S. Exp. Co. 48 N. Y. 462; Hildebrand v. Crawford, 6 Lans. 502; Rice v. Davis, 7 Lans. 393.

Letter press copies of letters are in no sense original papers, and are admissible in evidence only after notice to produce the originals, or proof of their loss. Foot v. Bentley, 44 N. Y. 166.

A copy of a letter written by one party to the other, no notice to produce the original having been given, though sworn to by the writer as correct, is not competent evidence in his behalf. Foster v. Newbrough, 58 N. Y. 481.

In action upon lost note, testimony of plaintiff that he let the makers take it, for a special purpose, who said they had lost the note, and he had not since seen it, is sufficient proof of loss to sustain finding of jury of the loss. Ellenwood v. Fults, 63 Barb. 321.

Loss cannot be shown by one who has no recollection of the paper, and has not had it, or searched for it. Roelker v. Ins. Co., 2 Sweny, 275.

Where the paper is of little value, that aids the presumption of its loss, and less diligence of search is required. Baker v. Squier, 1 Hun. 448.

indorsed upon it, or absolutely attached to and connected with it, the purchaser, it is conceived, could not sustain an action upon it in his own name as assignee. He would be compelled to sue in the name of the original obligee, and upon establishing his purchase, a court of law would so far respect it as to preclude the nominal plaintiff from interfering to control the suit.

This position is sustained by the subsequent legislature of Virginia on this subject. Provision was made by law for returning warrants in part located, or otherwise, and receiving new warrants in exchange. The propriety of issuing new warrants to assignees where the name of the original owner was merely indorsed on an assignment executed without the attestation of witnesses, was doubted. To provide for this case, the act of the Virginia Assembly of February, 1809, was enacted. It recites the provision authorizing the assignment of warrants in general terms, and that there are "many warrants outstanding which have been transferred, sometimes by the mere indorsement of the names of the holder, and at others by assignment without attestation, and doubts have arisen whether, in such cases, it would be proper for the register of the land-office to grant to the present holders new warrants in exchange for the warrants so transferred and assigned. It *then directs, that in such cases new warrants may be granted in exchange, provided always that no such exchange shall be made, unless, the applicant therefor shall have previously annexed to such warrant his own affidavit, stating that so far as he knows or believes, the indorsements or assignments appearing on such warrant have been made fairly and bona fide, and that he, or those in whose name or names such exchange is sought, is or are the true and rightful proprietor or proprietors of such warrant." The act provides that this affidavit, with the original warrant, shall be preserved, and that the right of the original owner, or other, to the original warrant, shall not be effected by this proceeding. And it directs, that thereafter warrants shall only be assigned by written assignment on the back, attested by two or more witnesses. It is insisted that the framers of this statute recognized no mode of assignment, to vest a legal interest, in the warrant, that existed distinct and separate from the warrant itself. They contemplated that in every case the warrant should carry with it the evidence of ownership. And because in all transactions with third persons, claiming to be owners, the evidence might be insufficient or fabricated, the law required the preservation of the warrant itself, that with it this evidence might be preserved. Lest by exchanging the warrant this evidence should be lost, and the relative rights of the parties changed, or otherwise affected, the provisions just recited were enacted.

In this case, the warrant never was so assigned or transferred as to vest a legal interest 130* in Massie, *and it certainly cannot be incumbent upon the complainants to disprove that which does not exist. Had an assignment of any kind, subscribed with Joutite's name, been indorsed upon the warrant, there would be something to which the complainants could direct their proof. They might attempt to negative the fact that Joutite had actually subscribed the paper; and the actual existence of such indorsement might be considered, at least after the grant issued, as prima facie evidence that it was genuine. But this presumption cannot be raised, without some foundation for it to rest upon.

Where the assignment is made upon a separate paper, as is claimed here, the defendants must establish the existence of this assignment, before it can avail them anything. When the existence of such separate assignment is established, its genuineness and operative effect are to be examined.

The deposition of Anderson does not sufficiently prove that any such assignment ever existed. He evidently testifies, not from any distinct recollection of the fact, but from a knowledge of what ought to have existed to justify him in allowing entries in Massie's name as assignee. His testimony is as to the general course of business in the office, from which he infers that an assignment must have existed. And when the defendants put the question direct as to the character of the assignment, whether indorsed upon the warrant or made on a separate paper, his answer is not positive as to the fact; but is clearly an inference from other facts. "On a separate piece of paper, I presume, as the entries *in 131 the first instance were in Joutite's name." This presumption, deduced by the witness from the fact that the warrant was deposited in the office by Joutite, unassigned, and various locations made upon it in the owner's name, is but slender evidence upon which to establish any fact. The foundation on which the witness makes this presumption is before the court. Can it be said that the inference is of that irresistible character that amounts to proof? If the witness were present, his testimony could not be received as competent to establish the fact that such paper existed, unless he were able to state, and did state, that he had such knowledge of Joutite's handwriting, as, upon well-settled principles, would enable him to testify to it. Nothing is shown in his deposition of his knowledge of Joutite's handwriting. For this reason alone his testimony is inoperative.

Were the existence of the paper clearly established, its contents and effect could not be proved without first proving its loss. The testimony shows that this assignment was delivered to Massie. It is thus traced to his possession. His own affidavit, made with a view to obtaining the grant for the lands in question, is wholly silent as to its loss or destruction, and there is no evidence what has become of it. In such case it is not competent for the defendants to prove its contents.

The testimony of Anderson is liable to some exceptions. He is positive that he never made but one entry without an assignment of the warrant; that Joutite's first entries were made by Massie; that the assignment was taken out of the office with the plat *and certificate, [*132] and that the assignment was first produced by Massie. He is, with respect to other facts equally material, unable to recollect. He is not certain that the assignment was on a separate paper; does not recollect when it was produced; its date, or whether attested by subscribing witnesses; nor is he positive whether it was executed by Joutte personally, or by an agent. It is manifest from all this, that he does not state facts from a distinct recollection of circumstances and transactions, but from inference only. His official papers show, that certain facts ought to have existed, and hence he supposes that they existed, and so testifies.

The certificate of Anderson, on the 10th of May, 1801, that the warrant had been taken out of the office by mistake on the 14th of June, 1797, is incorrect in point of fact; because, both his subsequent certificates of the 20th of April, 1802, and his deposition, show that it was delivered to Massie with the original plat and certificate of survey to be returned to the war office, that a patent might issue. As the warrant was wholly appropriated, the last survey upon it being made upon the first of April preceding, it was regular and proper, if not absolutely necessary, to return the warrant to the war office. The law required the warrant to be returned to the office where the patent issued, or a certificate to be adduced from the surveyor that a part remained unappropriated in the office, before a grant could issue. As the warrant was wholly appropriated, this certificate could not be made; there was, of consequence, a propriety in returning 133* the original warrant. There *could be no mistake about it; and this certificate was found of great practical convenience to Massie, who was relieved by it from the necessity of returning the warrant without an assignment, or the warrant with the assignment, to be preserved as evidence against him.

The act of Congress of March 3d, 1803, c. 343, which provided what evidence should supply the place of a warrant or certificate lost or destroyed, directed that a certified copy of the warrant or plat and certificate of survey, with satisfactory proof, by affidavit or otherwise, of the loss or destruction of the warrant or plat and certificate of survey, should be sufficient. The warrant never was in fact returned. No evidence was ever produced of its loss. Massie, in his affidavit made in 1806, in conformity with the provisions of this law, is silent as to the loss of the warrant, and confines himself to the plat and certificate of survey. It is by means of this certificate that the warrant was taken out of the office by mistake that the omission to return the warrant is supplied; although a careful examination of the whole documents would have shown that this certificate did by no means account for keeping the warrant back. It is thus demonstrated from the documents themselves, that the grant issued to Massie's heirs was upon incompetent and insufficient evidence.

By depositing his warrant with the surveyor, and procuring it to be located, Joutte did all he could to secure his own rights, and to prevent imposition upon others. The warrant no 134* longer existed a mere floating *evidence of a right to land, which circulated through the country, and upon which any person might forge an assignment, and thereby deceive and prejudice others. After the location, the warrant was no longer assignable until withdrawn; and it was by the unauthorized act of Massie, in withdrawing the warrant, that it was again in a condition to be assigned. The owner of a warrant, who has thus acted, stands in a situation different from one who has not thus been careful. From him and his representatives the same degree of proof ought not to be required of a forged or unauthorized assignment, as might properly be exacted from one whose warrant by his own act, or his own neglect, was thrown afloat into the market. Indeed, it is deemed doubtful, whether, after the owner had entered the warrant, and thus put an end to its assignable character, that character could again be restored by the unauthorized act of another.

Upon the whole, we insist that the evidence does not make for the defendants even a prima facie case of assignment; that when its competency and effect are examined by settled principles of law, it amounts to nothing; of consequence, there is nothing for the plaintiffs to disprove. The right of their ancestor is vested in them, and they must recover.

Mr. Doddridge and Mr. Scott, contra, stated, that whether the burthen of proof of the assignment be cast on the respondents, who claim under it, or the appellants, who deny it, was a question of vast importance to those who hold lands anywhere under the laws of Virginia. The cases cited from the Kentucky *reports furnish precedents in favor of [*135 the respondents, especially as the proofs of the assignments claimed were yet in being, which is not the case here.

It is insisted, on the other side, that the evidence of the contract of assignment ought to be written on the warrant, or on some paper attached to it; inseparably attached to it, to use the language of the counsel.

A warrant for land under the Virginia system may strictly be termed a chose in action. It is the mere evidence of executory contract between the state and a citizen. Bounties in land had been promised to the army, by various laws, as a reward for military services. Where the services were performed, the relation between the parties was that of debtor and creditor. It is immaterial whether the debt thus created was payable in money, or in land at a particular place, and at a future time. When, by the act of 1779, warrants for the bounties were created, like all other evidences of debts due from the state, they would have been subject to the policy of the common law, and not assignable, but for the policy of that act. The statute made warrants and the certificates of survey assignable; but the words "shall have right to assign and transfer warrants and certificates of survey for lands," do not import any particular mode of assignment. They give to the document its assignable quality, leaving the parties to choose their own mode of evidencing the contract. Whether they adopt the ancient policy of the common law, requiring all assignments to be made by deed of indenture, or the more easy mode of indorsement or *deliv- [*136 ery, seems to be quite immaterial. If proof of an assignment on paper, either attached to the writing or not, were now required, the rights of assignees would, at this time, fail for millions of acres; for, if positive proof of an assignment must be made, in all cases, by those claiming under it, the mere ink and paper importing the assignment would not be sufficient. Proof of the execution would be required; in a great majority of cases, it could not be produced. These papers passed from hand to hand like coin; they were owned by all classes of people; as well by the poor and illiterate, as by men of business.

Warrants, in many cases, were left with the principal surveyors, for safe-keeping, and a letter addressed to him from the owner, to let another have so many acres of warrant, was received as sufficient authority to make an entry for the assignee. These letters could be produced in but few cases; but if required at all, the mere production would not be evidence. Proof of the handwriting would be called for on the appellant's principles. As to the cases cited from the Kentucky reports, in one of these an assignment was indorsed; in the other a breach of trust existed. As against the patentee or those claiming under him with notice, proof was admitted, in the one case, that the assignment was a forgery; in the other, that the confidence of the owner was abused. But this proof was given by the owner of the warrant, not by the claimants under the patent. In these cases the nature of the claim could yet be traced; in ours it cannot.

From these cases, and the reason of the thing, 137* it is *evident that the patent is prima facie evidence of all that was necessary to its emanation. Indeed, it seems to be admitted on the other side, that it has been so decided. But this admission is qualified. It is insisted that where the patent office contains the warrant, assignment, and survey, all in regular order, there claimants of the warrant will be held to disprove the derivative claim. If this be the rule, the patent is but prima facie evidence of its own existence only, and, of nothing necessary to its existence. This notion is fanciful, but not sound. The patent is prima facie evidence of an assignment, or it is not. If it is prima facie evidence, the appellants must wholly fail. We have a patent to Massie's heirs, and which they claim legally, and the other defendants, at least, equitably (for we are in a court of equity), and the appellants have no proof.

The act of 1809, referred to by the appellants' counsel, gives him no aid. It recites that assignments were sometimes made in a loose manner, and that there was a consequent hazard in granting exchange warrants; and its provisions are prospective, and all of them are merely directory to the register.

But if the claimants are held to the proof of an assignment, in fact, they have made that proof. Anderson states that he came into office in July, 1784, the commencement of the official duties in Kentucky; has ever since held the office. At the commencement, a few entries were made by another person; in 1812, eight or ten by his daughter, while he was sick; and for some reason, not explained, about as many more, by his son, in 1814. With these exceptions, every *entry on his records was made by himself. All those on Jouitte's were so made. They were all directed by Massie. He considered him agent at first, but never saw a written power. Before the 27th January, 1795, Massie produced a written assignment, on which he made the entry in question of that date. He further states, that on the 14th June, 1797, he delivered the assignment and warrant to Massie, with the survey in question.

An attempt is made to discredit this testimony by its intrinsic demerits. It is said to be wonderful that he should not recollect whether there were any witnesses to the assignment, what its date, and when delivered to him. But the assignments in his office are so numerous, that if at the distance of twenty-two years he should feign to recollect such particulars, that would, indeed, discredit him. It is further objected to him, that he states that he never, but in one instance, made an entry for an assignee, without having the assignment, and that was not in the present case; and that he pretends to recollect delivering out the warrant in question, to whom and when. But it is to be remembered, that upon delivering out official papers, entries are made, which assist the memory. As to the particular case of an entry, without an assignment, it would be strange if he did not recollect it. That was the only case in an official life of nearly forty years in which he suffered such an indiscretion to pass him. He was uneasy about it, and made immediate inquiry of the owner. The attempt to discredit Anderson, from his own examination, therefore fails.

*So much for Anderson's testimony [*139 under the commission. Is it supported or defeated by the official evidence?

Some apparent confusion occurs, which is cleared up by an attention to dates. His second certificate relates to the first transaction in point of time. It was his practice to forward the assignment with the first survey, in order that they might lay in the patent office, to be referred to when other surveys should be returned; and called thence a reference paper. The warrant with the last. But he delivered both the assignment and warrant to Massie, with the survey in question, being the first, which, as to the latter, was a mistake. It was not recollected that one or more surveys were yet to come. Of such delivery an entry is made. The time and the occasion can, therefore, be recollected. If our hypothesis be right, Massie may be well supposed to have delivered all the papers into the war office, when they were destroyed by fire on the 8th of November, 1800. After the destruction of the war office, the surveyor is applied to for the last survey of 851 acres; then it was that the warrant should have been delivered with the survey. But the warrant was not found, and the memorandum book would show what had become of it. He could not refer to the assignment or warrant as reference papers, for they were destroyed. He, therefore, states what was the amount of the assignment, and that the warrant was taken from his office, by mistake, on the 14th of June, 1797. On these papers a grant issued for the 851 *acres. Although Anderson might [*140 have stated in his certificate by whom the warrant was taken, and on what occasion, the omission to do so is unimportant.

By a law of Congress, patents can be had upon lost papers, by taking a copy of the warrant from the register, or a copy of the plat and certificate from the surveyor, and satisfying the officer of the loss of the papers by his own oath, or otherwise. Massie made affidavit on the copy of the plat and certificate, that the original, of which that was a copy, had been filed in the war office, and that it had been lost or destroyed. The omission to state that the warrant and assignment accompanied the plat, and were destroyed with it. He got them all in order to procure a patent. It was his interest to file them; and it is incredible that he did not.

But supposing the assignment not to be clearly proved, the court will presume one from the circumstances, in order to support the possession.

On the subject of such presumptions, generally, reference may be had to the authorities cited in the argument of another cause at the present term.<sup>1</sup> To these may be added some of the decisions in the local tribunals. Thus the Court of Appeals of Virginia have determined that, though the presumption arising from the lapse of time may be repelled by circumstances, yet those circumstances must be clearly proved, which, in the present case, they are not.<sup>2</sup> By the law of Virginia, a person owning lands on one side of a stream, and de-<sup>141*</sup> siring enough of the *lands of another on the opposite side, against which to abut his dam, may acquire it contrary to the will of the owner. He procures a writ from the County Court in nature of a writ ad quod damnum, to value the land. The law provides, that upon paying that value, the party shall be seized of the land condemned. In the case in question, the condemnation had taken place in 1777. The money had not been paid; the land had been sold; possession had gone with the condemnation, and a mill had been built. The statute period of limitation had not elapsed, yet the court presume the fact of payment; the very fact which divests one man and invests another with the inheritance.<sup>3</sup> In another case a testator had appointed several executors, and empowered them to sell. Some had qualified, and some had not. They who qualified, sold and conveyed. Time had not elapsed to bar a writ of right. The case was decided under the stat. 21 Hen. III., c. 4. The deed was absolutely void; it passed no estate in law or equity, unless it appeared that the other executors had renounced. The court determined that the renunciation was a fact which admitted of proof in pais as well as by record; but that in favor of the possession it might be inferred from circumstances.<sup>4</sup>

The presumption sustained in the cases quoted vastly exceeds what is required in ours. In our case the circumstances are unanswerable.

The appellants cannot rely on any supposed difference between an imperfect legal title and an equitable one, as to the question of either <sup>142*</sup> presumption or *abandonment. If a warrant creates nothing but an equitable interest, and an entry upon it an imperfect legal one, then Joutte never had more than an equity. He never had an entry unless the testimony of Anderson be sufficient to establish an agency. Give but credit to that testimony, and both agency and assignment are established.

As to the defendants, who have not admitted the appellants' derivative claim, the decree must be affirmed at all events, unless the documents from Albemarle County Court are sufficient to establish the character of Alice as heiress. Let this be conceded for argument sake; then what are they? Documents made ex parte, and received by usage only in Virginia, for the direction of the register of the land-office. If this evidence can establish a derivative title, ours filed in the land-office for the direction of the commissioner, are of equal authority to support our derivative title. A fortiori, as ours grew in'o use, not by custom merely, but by act of Congress.

Mr. Hammond, for the appellants, in reply, stated, that it had been insisted by the respondent's counsel, that as it is shown in the bill that the complainants never abandoned the first original entries, they cannot claim the land in question, because, if entitled at all, it is to the lands upon which the first location is made. If this were correct, it would follow that the warrant might actually appropriate double the amount of land that it called for. The complainants would hold the first location, and the defendants that where the warrant is patented. This absurd consequence *is sufficient [<sup>143</sup> to show that the position is incorrect. It is, however, untenable for another reason. The owner of a land warrant, who has never parted with his right to it, may regard the person who intermeddles with it, as acting for him; and thus claim and hold the land appropriated, although he never directed the location.

It is also said, that as the legal title was invested in Massie's heirs by the patent to them, that title enures to the benefit of those to whom Massie had previously conveyed without title, and that therefore the defendants are invested with a legal title. This proposition cannot be sustained. It is true, that in certain cases, where a person conveys without title, and the same person afterwards obtains title, as between such person, and the person to whom a conveyance was made, the after-acquired title cannot be set up to prejudice the purchaser. But this proceeds upon the doctrine of estoppel, and can have no application to a case like this, where the person with whom the title first commenced, is seeking to assert it against those who have unfairly got possession of it.

It is conceded that a warrant for lands is made assignable by the statute that authorized it to issue; and it is said, that it is the mere evidence of an executory contract between the state and a citizen. The contract is for a grant of land, hereafter to be made, and the warrant is evidence of that contract. The act did not mean to give authority to transfer the land when granted; but the evidence of right before a grant was made. The power to assign and transfer *is, therefore, not a power to [<sup>144</sup> make a sale of the subject; and it is apprehended that a deed of indenture was never used at the common law to transfer to a purchaser a legal right in any written evidence of an executory contract.

The warrant, or plat and certificate of survey, is the subject that is to be transferred by the act of assignment, and it seems indispensable that there should be some direct connection between an act and the subject upon which it operates. Hence we insist, that an assignment can only be made as before suggested.

1.—Ante, p. 59, Ricard v. Williams.

2.—1 Wash. Rep. 188.

3.—Young v. Price, 2 Munf. 534.

4.—Giddy v. Butler, 3 Munf. 345.

It is not pretended, that a purchaser of a warrant cannot hold, unless it be thus assigned. The principle is applied to the evidence that ought to be required. If the assignment be indorsed upon the warrant, or be executed upon a separate paper, and connected with the warrant, these facts might be considered prima facie evidence of a sale, sufficient at least to put the claimant upon some proof to impeach them. But where nothing of this kind exists, and a purchase be claimed, such purchase is wholly matter in pais, and he who claims under it must furnish the proof of its existence. Until such proof be furnished, there is nothing for the other party to impeach.

This might be insisted upon even after the patent emanated. The law requires the warrant and plat, and certificate upon which the grant emanates, to be carefully preserved. And this is not without object. That object would seem to be a preservation of the evidence upon 145* which the grant was obtained, that *the fact of ownership, decided ex-parte by the officers of the land-office, might be fairly open for investigation. But certainly this matter of fact cannot be presumed against an original owner, before the patent issues, and we insist that this case stands as if the patent had not issued. And, besides, it is conceived, that this fact ought not to be presumed against an owner, in a case standing as this does, where the proof is clear that the patent was issued upon evidence that did not authorize it.

That a very loose method of transferring land warrants was adopted and practiced, cannot vary the law, nor has it been considered to have had that consequence. The cases cited show that property in these warrants could not be acquired by delivery as in the case of other chattels. The mischiefs apprehended do not exist. We do not claim that the warrant can be followed into the hands of an innocent purchaser of the legal title. But we conceive that the patentee is not such a purchaser. It is incumbent upon him to know that he is fairly owner of the intermediate evidence of title; and if he is not, he ought not to hold the land. This is the policy of the act of 1809, and though prospective as to its enactments respecting future assignments, it plainly intimates, by its provisions for existing cases, that its authors contemplated no such thing as an assignment, distinct and separate from the subject claimed to be assigned. If any mischief results from the doctrine asserted, it can only fall upon those who have possessed themselves of the rights of 146* others, without *taking proper precaution to be certain that they were not aiding to do injustice.

It is also insisted for the defendants, that, although an assignment in fact may not be proved, yet from the circumstances, the court will presume an assignment to support the possession.

All presumptions stand upon their own particular circumstances. But presumptions are never resorted to where the facts are otherwise understood. Here the nature and character of the pretended assignment is fully in evidence. It stands surrounded with many suspicious circumstances. Proofs as well as presumptions are strong against the fairness of Massie's conduct. In such a case it would surely be very unsafe to found a title upon presumption. In all the cases cited, the parties were all residents in the same neighborhood. The claimants witnessed daily the acts of ownership exercised, and improvements made by the other party. From their omission to assert any right, the presumption naturally arose that they had no right to assert. Here the case was different. After commencing his title the original proprietor died. His heir knew nothing of what was done. She resided in the interior of Virginia; the land-office was in Kentucky; the lands in the wilderness of Ohio. It is going too far to say that she was bound to take notice of the entry in the office, in Kentucky, and of the improvements commenced and carried on in Ohio. It is palpable that she was in fact unacquainted with the whole subject. The court are asked to presume, first, that she was apprised of that of which she was really ignorant, and from that presumption to presume *again, that she knew there was a sale, [*147 or assignment, and for that reason forbore to assert her pretensions.

The time, in this case, under its circumstances, would not bar a recovery on ejectment, in Ohio; an inchoate legal title ought not to be destroyed by presumption in a shorter period. It is believed, that none of the cases go so far.

The certificate of the court of Albemarle county is sufficient, in this case, to prove the heirship of the plaintiff, Alice, and her intermarriage with the other plaintiff. The facts are evidently denied in the answer, pro forma. The defendants assert only their ignorance, and ask proof. The certificate in question is exactly that kind of evidence which is taken to establish the prima facie right of the party to a warrant, plat, and certificate, and patent as heir, or representative, and ought to be sufficient to satisfy those who profess only that they know nothing, and therefore call for proof.

The surveyor's certificate that the warrant was assigned, has been received in the land-office, as evidence of such assignment, and when the commissioner has acted upon it, and issued the grant, the defendant's counsel has strongly urged, that he who claims against it, must disprove it. We ask no more in the case of the certificate of the County Court. There is no act of Congress directing such certificate to be received for any purpose. In respect to this the counsel are mistaken.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court, and after stating the case, proceeded as follows:

*It may be doubted whether the act [*148 of the 10th of August, 1790, authorized the issuing of a patent in the name of an assignee. This doubt, however, is entirely removed by the act of June 9th, 1794, c. 238, which enacts that every officer and soldier, his heirs or assigns, entitled to bounty lands, &c., according to the laws of Virginia, 'shall, on producing the warrant, or a certified copy thereof, and a certificate under the seal of the office where the said warrants are legally kept, that the same or a part thereof remains uncertified, and on producing the survey agreeably to the laws of Virginia, for the tract or tracts to which he or they may be entitled as aforesaid, to the Secretary of the Department of War, such officer or soldier, his or their heirs or assigns, shall be entitled to and receive a patent for the same, from the President of the United States, anything in any former law to the contrary notwithstanding."

This act recognizes the right of the assignee to a patent, without prescribing the manner in which the assignment is to be proved. It requires the production of the warrant, or a certified copy thereof, and of the plat and certificate of survey, but gives no rule respecting the proof of the assignment.

It is admitted that the assignment may be indorsed on the warrant, or may be connected with it, and that the warrant may remain in the surveyor's office, since a patent may be issued for a part of it, as was done in this case, while a part remains unsatisfied; and may be issued on a certified copy of it. It would seem, from these circumstances, that proof of the assignment might be received by the surveyor.

149*] *If the warrant were assigned by indorsement before the entry, or if the entry were assigned and transferred before the survey, the survey would be made and certified to the land-office, in the name of the assignee. The law does not, in terms, require that the original assignment, or a copy of it, should be transmitted to the office with the survey. It would seem, then, that in ordinary cases, proof of the assignment might be made in the surveyor's office, and certified to the land-office.

Unquestionably, if notice were given by any person claiming title against the certificate of the surveyor, the fact would be examinable before the emanation of the patent; but as no law requires that the assignment should be submitted to the person who issues the patent, or be always examined and decided on by him, nothing seems to oppose the practice of relying, in ordinary cases, on the surveyor's certificate. If such be the rule of the office, the court ought not to disregard it; and that it is the rule, is, we think, to be inferred from the fact that this patent has been issued to the assignee in this case on such testimony, and that the bill does not charge it to have been issued irregularly. It denies the assignment; but not that the usual proof of it was made in the land-office. In this case the survey was made in the name of the assignee, and the surveyor certifies that the warrant was assigned to the extent of the survey. We must suppose that the usual proof of the assignment was received.

By the act of the third of March, 1803, c. 343, it is enacted, that "where any warrants granted by the state of Virginia for military 150*] services, have been surveyed *on the north-west side of the river Ohio, between the Scioto and the Little Miami rivers, and the said warrants, or the plats and certificates of survey made thereon, have been lost or destroyed, the persons entitled to the said land may obtain a patent therefor, by producing a certified duplicate of the warrant from the land-office of Virginia, or of the plat and certificate of survey from the office of the surveyor in which the same was recorded, and giving satisfactory proof to the Secretary of War, by his affidavit, or otherwise, of the loss or destruction of said warrant, or plat and certificate of survey."

Wheat. 7.

This act has been literally complied with, except that instead of "a certified duplicate of the warrant from the land-office of Virginia," we find a copy of the warrant, certified by Richard C. Anderson, the principal surveyor, dated the 30th of April, 1795, when the warrant was in his office, and the certificate regularly and officially given, and written on the back of a survey, No. 1629, for 400 acres, part of the said warrant, on which a patent was issued to Robert Joutte, dated the 26th day of October, 1799.

The purpose for which a certified duplicate from the land-office of Virginia was required in the case of a lost warrant, undoubtedly was to protect the United States from fraudulent claims on warrants alleged to be lost, but which never existed; not to settle controversies between the original holder and those claiming under him by assignment. The land-office of the United States being in possession of an official copy of that warrant, on which a patent had been issued, no motive existed for requiring a duplicate *from the land-office of [*151] Virginia. The original existence of such warrant could not be more fully proved, and the evidence of it which was in the office was such as the law deemed satisfactory at the time it was received. But if this were an irregularity, it is one which could only affect the United States, and is of no consequence in this cause, since all parties admit the existence of the warrant and claim under it.

This patent, then, must be considered as having issued regularly, on the documents required by the rules of the office; at least so far as concerns the parties before the court. The title of the person who has obtained it is undoubtedly examinable, but no presumption exists against him.

The testimony of Anderson, the principal surveyor, has been taken, for the purpose of proving the assignments from Joutte to Massie. He deposes that the office was opened for making entries on the north-west side of the Ohio, on the 1st day of August, 1787, and that he had continued ever since to transact the business in person, with the exception of a short time which he mentions, and which does not comprehend the making of the entries in this case. He has never, except in one instance, which was not Joutte's, made entries in the name of an assignee, without having previously received the assignment, and in that instance he was informed by the original proprietor of the warrant himself, that he had sold it. That Joutte's warrant was deposited in his office on the 19th day of November, 1784 (he thinks by Robert Joutte himself), and that the witness made *all the entries on it. He has no hesi- [*152] tation in saying the assignment was prior to the entry on which this survey was made, or he could not have made the entry. On being asked whether the assignment was on the warrant, or on a separate piece of paper, he answers, on a separate paper, he presumes, as the first entries were made in Joutte's name. On being cross-interrogated by the plaintiff, he says that he does not recollect the precise time when the assignment was produced in his office, but it was not prior to the 27th of January, 1795 (the date of the first entry in the name of Massie), and to the best of his recollection, purported and appeared to be made by Joutte himself. He does not recollect its date, nor whether it was attested by a subscribing witness. It was lodged in his office by Nathaniel Massie, and taken out with the plat and certificate of survey of the assigned part of the warrant, by him, on the 14th of June, 1797.

In corroboration of the testimony of Anderson, the defendants rely on a grant made to Massie, on the 2d of January, 1802, on a survey made the 1st of April, 1797, for Massie, as assignee of part of the same warrant. The entry was made on the 27th of January, 1795, and the patent contains a recital of the assignment of 2051 $\frac{3}{4}$  acres, part of Joutte's warrant.

It is impossible to read the testimony of the principal surveyor, or to credit it, without believing that an assignment, purporting to be made by Joutte, was produced by Massie, and deposited in his office. His fixed rule to require the 153 production of an assignment *before an entry in the name of the assignee could be permitted, his averment that he never departed from that rule, except in a single instance, his clear recollection of the circumstances attending that instance, his admission of entries in the name of Massie, as assignee in the life-time of Joutte, his averment that the assignment was placed in his office, and taken out with the plats and certificates of survey by Massie, prove that there must have been such a paper. But the proof of its being executed, by Joutte, is certainly not so explicit as it might or ought to have been. Colonel Anderson does not say that he was acquainted with the handwriting of Joutte, and believed the assignment to have been written by him. But he acted as a public officer on the full conviction of this fact, and his whole testimony proceeds upon the idea that he was entirely satisfied of the verity of the instrument. Joutte and himself having been officers in the same service, it is not improbable that the handwriting of the one was known to the other; and to the question whether the assignment purported to be made by Joutte himself, or by an agent, he answers that it "purported and appeared to him to be made by Joutte himself, to the best of his recollection." The word "appeared," which is introduced by the witness in his answer, to this interrogatory, and which is not in the question, seems intended to indicate that he had formed an opinion on the handwriting. Had the plaintiff suspected that Anderson was not acquainted with the handwriting of Joutte, or not perfectly satisfied that this assignment was in his handwriting, 154 *some question would have been propounded indicating this suspicion. But no such question is propounded; and we can make no other justifiable inference, from his whole testimony and conduct, than that he was acquainted with the handwriting of Joutte, and was satisfied that the assignment was written by him.

On the character of the principal surveyor no imputation is cast. His office is a proof of the confidence reposed in his integrity by those who knew him. His testimony is incorrect, is studiously calculated to establish an untruth, and his official conduct fraudulent, if he had no sufficient knowledge of the verity of the assignment. That his testimony is less explicit than it ought to have been; that it omits the express averment of a fact, implied by all he says, and which is necessary to its fairness and its truth, will not, we think, justify a presumption against that fact. We understand Colonel Anderson's testimony as implying a knowledge of the handwriting of Mr. Joutte, and of the verity of the assignment.

There is still another defect in the testimony which is by no means inconsiderable, and which has been strongly pressed by the counsel for the plaintiff. The assignment itself is not produced, and there is no direct proof of its loss. Its absence depriving the plaintiffs of the power of disproving it, is a circumstance calculated to excite suspicion, and ought to be accounted for. The rule that the loss of a paper ought to be established before its contents can be proved is well settled, and ought to be maintained. Yet there are difficulties in applying it to this case which are not to be surmounted.

*The legal title of Massie is consumed, [*155 and the assignment, having performed its office, is no longer a paper essential to that title. The same proof respecting it, therefore, cannot be demanded, which might be required were it relied on as composing part of the title. It was not absolutely incumbent on the assignee to preserve it after the emanation of the patent; and he could not, unless the transaction he presumed fraudulent, foresee this controversy. He died before any claim on the part of the plaintiffs was asserted, before any denial of the assignment was made, and therefore could not be expected to prepare testimony in its support, or to account for its loss. Had the assignee been living, he might be expected to show, at least by his own affidavit, supported by probable circumstances, the loss of the assignment; but he died before the occurrence of any circumstance which might suggest the propriety of such an affidavit. The defendants have done all in their power. They aver their belief that the assignment was real, their total ignorance of its present existence, and their belief of its destruction, and they state the probability that it was burnt with the papers of the war office.

Under all the circumstances of the case, the probability of its being consumed in the war office is great. The assignment was delivered with the warrant, and the plat and certificate of survey, to Massie, on the 14th of June, 1797. It might be supposed proper to deposit it with those papers in the war office for the purpose of obtaining the patent. There *is noth- [*156 ing unreasonable in the supposition that it was there deposited, and consumed with the other papers of the office.

We think, too, that the length of time which was permitted to elapse before any inquiries appear to have been made respecting this property, furnishes strong evidence of the opinion that Mr. Joutte had parted with his interest in it. So early as January, 1795, between one and two years before the death of Joutte, Massie claimed a part of the warrant as his own, and made entries on it in the public office, in his own name as assignee. It is not probable that a property which constituted no inconsiderable part of the estates of the officers, should have been neglected by this officer in his life-time, or by his family after his death. Inquiries respecting it would naturally have been made, not by the daughter, who may be supposed to have been an infant, but by her mother, her guardian, or other friends. The omission to make these inquiries may be accounted for if it was known that the warrant was assigned; not otherwise, without imputing to those relatives of the infant, a considerable degree of negligence.

We think that under these circumstances the non-production of the assignment ought not so to operate against the defendants as to defeat their legal title.

But the plaintiffs deny the validity of the assignment, because it was not made on the warrant, nor annexed to it.

The law which authorized the assignment of warrants did not require that it should be made by indorsement, or by any instrument annexed 157* to the warrant. *It is not shown to have been the usage. Under circumstances most generally attending this property, and which actually attended this particular case, the assignment could neither have been indorsed nor annexed without great inconvenience. The warrant was filed in the office of the Surveyor-General, with the entries. This would occur in every case where the entries in whole or in part were made. The original proprietors resided generally in Virginia. The warrants were deposited in the office of the Surveyor-General, in Kentucky. These warrants, thus deposited, and the entries made on them, were transferable. It is obvious that the transfer, if no law forbid it, would be made on a separate paper. If any particular mode of authentication was necessary, the law ought to have prescribed that mode. This not being done, the mode was left to the parties.

The subsequent act of the legislature of Virginia, rather shows the mischief which had grown out of this state of things, and of the practice under the law, than that the practice under the law was contrary to the legislative construction of it.

This is one of those cases in which the equity of the plaintiffs is not, we think, sufficiently proved to deprive the defendants of their legal title.

Decree affirmed with costs.

Cited—13 Pet. 448; 15 Pet. 107; 9 How. 447.

158* [*LOCAL LAW. CHANCERY.]

WATTS

v.

LINDSEY'S HEIRS ET AL.

It is a rule at law, and in equity, that a party must recover on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of his adversary's title.

To support an entry, the party claiming under it must show that the objects called for are so described, or are so notorious, that others, by using reasonable diligence, can readily find them.

The following entry was pronounced, under the circumstances, to be void for uncertainty: "7th of August, 1787. Capt. Ferdinand O'Neal enters 1,000 acres, &c., on the waters of the Ohio, beginning at the north-west corner of Stephen T. Mason's entry, No. 654, thence with his line east 400 poles, north 400 poles, west 400 poles, south 400 poles." The entry of Stephen T. Mason referred to, being as follows: "7th of August, 1787. Stephen T. Mason, Assignee, &c., enters 1,000 acres of land on part of a military warrant, No. 2012, on the waters of the Ohio, beginning 640 poles north from the mouth of the third creek running into the Ohio, above the mouth of the Little Miami River; thence running west 160 poles, north 400 poles, east 400 poles; thence to the beginning."

The Ohio and Little Miami rivers are identified and notorious objects.

But the third creek above the mouth of the Little Miami, is to be taken according to the numerical order of the creeks, unless some other stream has by general reputation or notoriety been so considered.

Cross Creek, the stream which the party claiming under O'Neal's entry assumed for the beginning to run the 640 poles north from the mouth of the third creek, as called for in Mason's entry, not being in fact numerically the third creek above the mouth of the Little Miami, and there being no satisfactory proof that it had acquired that designation by reputation, the claim was pronounced invalid.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of Ohio.

This cause was argued by Mr. Doddridge for the appellant, and by Mr. Brush for the respondents.

**Mr. Justice TODD* delivered the [*159 opinion of the court:

This controversy arises from entries for lands in the Virginia military reservation, lying between the Scioto and Little Miami rivers, in the district of Ohio.

The plaintiff in the court below (Watts), exhibited his bill in chancery for the purpose of compelling the respondents to surrender the legal title, acquired under an elder grant founded on a surveyor's entry, than the one under which he derives his title.

The entry, set forth in the bill, and claimed by the plaintiff, is in the following words: "7th August, 1787. Captain Ferdinand O'Neal enters 1,000 acres, &c., on the waters of the Ohio, beginning at the north-west corner of Stephen T. Mason's entry, No. 654, thence with his line, east 400 poles, north 400 poles, west 400 poles, south 400 poles."

The entry of Stephen T. Mason, referred to in the above entry, is in the following words:

"7th August, 1787. Stephen T. Mason, assignee, &c., enters 1,000 acres of land on part of a military warrant, No. 2012, on the waters of the Ohio, beginning 640 poles north from the mouth of the third creek running into the Ohio above the mouth of the Little Miami River; thence running west 160 poles, north 400 poles, east 400 poles, south 400 poles; thence to the beginning."

The respondents, in their answers, deny the NOTE.—As to description of lands in an entry, &c., see note to McIver's Lessee v. Walker, 9 Cranch, 173; and note to Newsom v. Pryor's Lessee, ante, 7.

Distance along a road is to be computed by the meanders of the road, and not by a straight line. Bodley v. Taylor, 5 Cranch, 191; Littlepage v. Fowler, 11 Wheat. 215.

When the quantity of land is laid off on a given base, it shall be included within four lines, forming Wheat. 7.

a square, as near as may be, unless that form be repugnant to the entry. Massie v. Watts, 6 Cranch, 148; Shipp v. Miller's Heirs, 2 Wheat. 316.

If the calls do not fully describe the land, but furnish enough to enable the court to complete the location, by the application of certain principles, they will complete it. Ibid.

Description must designate the place and objects and identify the lands so as to enable other persons validity of O'Neal's entry; allege that it is vague and uncertain, and that the survey made on it includes no part of the land described in the 160* entry, and if properly *surveyed would not interfere with any part of the land to which they claim title; that the creek selected by the complainant as the third creek, in the entry of Mason, on which that of O'Neal depends, is not in truth and in fact, the third creek running into the Ohio above the mouth of the Little Miami River; but that another is.

The depositions of several witnesses were taken, and other exhibits filed in the cause. Upon a final hearing in the Circuit Court, a decree was pronounced dismissing the plaintiff's bill.

The cause is now brought into this court by appeal, and the principal question to be decided is, whether, from the allegations and proofs in the cause, the entry claimed by the plaintiff can be sustained upon sound construction, and legal principles arising out of the land laws applicable thereto.

Before we go into an examination of that question, we will dispose of some preliminary objections made by the counsel for the respondents. They were that attested copies of the entries and patent referred to, and made exhibits in the bill are not in the record; that there does not appear in the record any assignment, or proof of an assignment from O'Neal to the plaintiff. Nor does it appear from the plat where the entry of O'Neal was actually surveyed, nor does it designate the creeks running into the Ohio above the mouth of the Little Miami River, so as to ascertain the third creek.

Some of these objections seem to be well founded, and might induce the court to dismiss the bill, but such dismissal should be without 161* prejudice to the *commencing of any other suit the party might choose to bring; the effect of which would be only turning the parties out of court, without deciding the merits of the cause. We have therefore attentively examined the record, and are of opinion it contains enough to get at and decide the merits.

It has been long and well established as a rule of law and equity, that a party must recover on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of his adversary's title.

In order to uphold and support an entry, it is incumbent on the party claiming under it, to show that the objects called for in it are so sufficiently described, or so notorious, that others, by using reasonable diligence, could readily find them.

As O'Neal's entry is dependent on Mason's, if the objects called for in the latter can be ascertained, the position of the former can be precisely and certainly fixed.

The Ohio and Little Miami rivers, from general history, the one having been used before, at, and since the time when these entries were made, as the great highway in going from the eastern to the western country, and each of them having been referred to in general laws, and designated as boundaries of certain districts of country, we consider must be deemed and taken as being identified and notorious, without further proof.

The third creek, running into the Ohio above the mouth of the Little Miami River, is then the only and principal object to be ascertained, to fix the entry of Mason with specialty and precision. The plaintiff *has assumed [*162 what is now called Cross Creek for the beginning, to run the 640 poles north from the mouth of the third creek, as called for in Mason's entry. The respondents contend, that what is now called Muddy Creek, and sometimes Nine Mile, is "the third creek."

It seems to be admitted, in argument, that Cross Creek is not, in truth and in fact, numerically the third creek above the mouth of the Little Miami. But the counsel for the plaintiff contends that the early explorers of the country, when the entries were made, designated Muddy Creek as the second. That streams then called creeks have since been degraded into runs, and other streams, then called runs, are now termed creeks.

If this argument was supported by the proofs in the cause, it would be entitled to great consideration; but upon a careful and minute examination, there is a great preponderance of testimony against it: there is the deposition of one witness that affords some foundation for it; there are also the depositions of many witnesses who contradict it. But waving this testimony, and examining this entry upon its face, it is obvious that subsequent locators and explorers commencing their researches at the mouth of the Little Miami River, would examine the creeks emptying into the Ohio above, according to their numerical order. The words "the third creek," emphatically applies to that order; nor would they depart from it, unless another stream, by general reputation or notoriety, had been so conwith reasonable care and diligence to find it. If the description will fit another place better, or equally well, it is defective. Dallum's Lessee v. Brackenbridge, 1 Cooke, 152; Mason v. Herd, 1 Wheat. 130; McArthur v. Browder, 4 Wheat. 488; Littlepage v. Fowler, 11 Wheat. 215; Henderson's Lessee v. Long, 1 Cooke, 128; Brush v. Ware, 15 Pet. 93.

Where an error in description does not mislead, it is not fatal. Shipp v. Miller's Heirs, 2 Wheat. 316; Shum's Lessee v. Dickson, 1 Cooke, 137.

When some of the calls of an entry are vague or repugnant, they may be rejected or controlled by other material calls which are consistent and certain. Course and distance yield to visible, known, and definite objects, if the latter are more material and equally certain. Ibid; Henderson's Lessee v. Long, 1 Cooke, 128; Jackson v. Sprague, 1 Paine. 494; Graham's Lessee v. Dudley, 1 Cooke, 353.

See also Simms v. Guthrie, 9 Cranch, 19; Polk's

Lessee v. Wendel, 9 Cranch, 87; Finley v. Williams, 9 Cranch, 164; Matson v. Hord, 1 Wheat. 130; Danforth's Lessee v. Thomas, 1 Wheat. 155; Ross v. Reed, 1 Wheat. 482; Perkins v. Ramsay, 5 Wheat. 269; Polk's Lessee v. Wendall, 5 Wheat. 293; Hoofnagle v. Anderson, post, 212; Blunt's Lessee v. Smith, post, 248; Meredith v. Pickett, 9 Wheat. 573; Danforth v. Wear, 9 Wheat. 673; Elmendorf v. Taylor, 10 Wheat. 152; McDowell v. Peyton, 10 Wheat. 454; Tyler v. Owing, 11 Wheat. 226; Jackson v. Sprague, 1 Paine, 494; Thompson's Lessee v. Norwood, 1 Cooke, 346; Graham's Lessee v. Dudley, 1 Cooke, 353; Rutledge's Lessee v. Buchanan, 1 Cooke, 363; Shepherd's Lessee v. Bailey, 1 Cooke, 369; Stringer v. Young, 2 Pet. 337; Galt v. Galloway, 4 Pet. 332; Boardman v. The Lessees of Reed, 6 Pet. 328.

It is essential to the validity of an entry, that it shall call for an object notorious at the time, and that the other calls shall have the same precision. Lindsey v. Miller, 6 Pet. 666; 1 McLean, 32.

sidered. It has, however, never been held 163*] that reputation or notoriety *could be established by a single witness; and it may be further observed, that the other witness, whose deposition has been taken on the part of the plaintiff, states, that he had meandered the Ohio, and in his connection, had laid down Muddy, or Nine Mile Creek, as the third, and that he so considered it, until the year 1806, or 1807, when, from the information of the other witness, and an examination of the entries and surveys on the books of the principal surveyor, he was induced to change his opinion. It is also in proof that the plaintiff and the last-mentioned witness, in searching for O'Neal's entry, claimed a different creek as being the third, and directed the survey to be commenced from it. If, then, a locator and deputy-surveyor, who had meandered the Ohio, and designated Muddy Creek as the third, and had so considered it for nearly ten years, it is surely a strong circumstance to show, negatively, that Cross Creek was not in fact numerically, nor by general reputation or notoriety considered as "the third creek." If an examination of the records in the principal surveyor's office would show that the streams were designated and numbered differently, it was incumbent on the party to exhibit at least so much thereof as would conduce to prove the fact. It is incompetent to prove it by parol.

Upon mature consideration of the whole case, it is the unanimous opinion of the court that the decree of the Circuit Court be

Affirmed with costs.

Cited.—4 Otto, 775.

164*] [*CONSTITUTIONAL AND LOCAL LAW.]

MATTHEWS v. ZANE ET AL.

Where a party claiming title to lands under an act of Congress, brought a bill for a conveyance, and stated several equitable circumstances in aid of his title, and the state court where the suit was brought having dismissed the bill, and the cause being brought to this court by appeal, under the 25th section of the judiciary act of 1789, c. 20, upon the ground of an alleged misconstruction of the act of Congress by the state court. Held, that this court could not take into consideration any distinct equity arising out of the contracts or transactions of the parties, and creating a new and independent title, but was confined to an examination of the plaintiff's title as depending upon the construction of the act of Congress.

The lands included within the Zanesville district, by the act of Congress of the 3d of March, 1803, c. 343, s. 6, could not, after that date, be sold at the Marietta land-office.

A statute, for the commencement of which no time is fixed, commences from its date.

The decision of this court in Matthews v. Zane, 5 Cranch, 92, revised and confirmed.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the State of Ohio, being the highest court of equity of that state, under the 25th sec. of the judiciary act of 1789, c. 20.

The bill filed by the plaintiff, Matthews, in the State Court, was brought for the purpose of obtaining from the defendants, Zane and others, a conveyance of a tract of land to Wheat. 7.

which the plaintiff alleged that he had the equitable title, under an entry, prior to that on which a grant had been issued to the defendants. *The validity of his entry [*165 descended on the construction of the act of Congress of May 19th, 1800, c. 209, the 6th section of the act of March 3d, 1803, c. 343, and the act of the 26th of March, 1804, c. 388, all relating to the sale of the public lands in the territory north-west of the river Ohio. The case stated, that on the 7th of February, 1814, the plaintiff applied to the register of the Marietta district, and communicated to him his desire to purchase the land in controversy. The office of receiver being then vacant, no money was paid, and no entry was made; but the register took a note or memorandum of the application. On the 12th of May, 1804, soon after the receiver had entered on the duties of his office, the plaintiff paid the sum of money required by law, and made an entry for the land in controversy, with the register of the Marietta district. In pursuance of the 12th section of the act of the 26th of March, 1804, c. 388, and of instructions from the Secretary of the Treasury, the sale of the lands in the district of Zanesville (which had been formed out of the Marietta district, and included the land in controversy) commenced on the 3d Monday of May, 1804, and on the 26th of that month the defendants became the purchasers of the same land. There were several charges of fraud in the bill, and a contract between the parties was alleged; but as the opinion of this court turned exclusively on the title of the parties under the act of Congress, it is deemed unnecessary to state these circumstances. The State Court having determined against the validity of the plaintiff's title under the act of *Congress, and dis- [*166 missed his bill, the cause was brought by appeal to this court.

Mr. Doddridge, for the appellant, stated, that the cause depended upon the construction of three acts of Congress, which he insisted had been misconstrued by the State Court. The first of these acts, that of May 10th, 1800, c. 209, established the present system of selling the public lands in districts, and by that statute the land in controversy was within the Marietta district. The 6th section of the act of the 3d of March, 1803, c. 343, created an additional district, and provided that the lands within it should be offered for sale, at Zanesville, under the direction of a register and receiver, to be appointed for that purpose, who should reside at that place. The 12th section of the act of the 26th of March, 1804, c. 388, directs the lands in the district of Zanesville to be offered for public sale on the third Monday of May in that year.

On the first view of the case, difficulties present themselves, on the side of the appellant, in the authority of previous decisions, and especially a decision of this court, between the same parties.<sup>1</sup> But that decision resulted from an incorrect and imperfect statement of facts in the former case. Circumstances which are now disclosed did not appear in that case. Upon the present record the following points will be insisted on:

1.—Matthews v. Zane, 5 Cranch, 92.

1. That even by a strict technical construction of <sup>167*</sup>the statutes in question, the power of sale did not cease at Marietta, until after the 12th of May, 1804, the date of the plaintiff's purchase. (2) That such was the practical construction given to those laws by executive officers, which ought in the present case to be conclusive, because it fulfills every object of the law, preserves the private rights of individuals, and if set aside by a mere technical objection, would open a door for the most extensive litigation and disturbance of titles acquired under the land laws of the United States. (3) That supposing the act of March 30, 1803, had in express terms, or by necessary and inevitable implication, taken away the power of sale at Marietta, yet it could not begin to have that effect, until duly promulgated at that place, it not having in fact been transmitted to the officers at Marietta, until after the plaintiff's entry.

The land laws must certainly be considered as forming a part of the contract between the government, and each individual who wishes to become a purchaser of the public domain. If contracts between the public and individuals are to be considered in the same light as contracts between individuals, then the principle applies that a bona fide and innocent purchaser, from an agent who has not received due notice that his authority is superseded, shall not be injured by the negligence of the principal, in not giving notice.<sup>1</sup> The rules of interpretation applicable to the present case are laid down by <sup>168*</sup>the elementary *writers on the construction of statutes, and will be found in the common abridgements of the law.<sup>2</sup> All these rules necessarily resolve themselves into the intention of the law-maker, which is sometimes to be collected from the cause or necessity of making the statute, and at other times from other circumstances of equal weight.<sup>3</sup> Sir William Jones has asserted the true principles on this subject,<sup>4</sup> "Such is the imperfection of human language," says he, "that few written laws are free from ambiguity; and it rarely happens that many minds are united in the same interpretation of them." And then, after relating an anecdote of Lord Coke, adds: "I will here only set down a few rules of interpretation, which the wisdom of ages has established, when the sense of the words is at all ambiguous. 1st. The intention of the writer must be sought, and prevail over the literal sense of the terms; but penal laws must be strictly expounded against offenders, and liberally against the offense.

"2. All clauses, preceeding or subsequent, must be taken together to explain any one doubtful clause.

"3. When a case is expressed to remove any doubt, whether it was included or not, the extent of the clause, with regard to cases not so expressed, is by no means restrained.

"4. The conclusion of a phrase is not concluded by <sup>169*</sup>the words immediately preceding, but usually extended to the whole antecedent phrase.

"These are copious maxims, and, with half a dozen more, are the stars by which we steer, in the construction of all public and private writings."<sup>5</sup>

So, also, this court has laid it down as *a well-established principle in the exposition of statutes, that every part is to be considered, and the intention of the legislature to be extracted from the whole. It is also true, that when great inconvenience will result from a particular construction, that construction is to be avoided, unless the meaning of the legislature be plain, in which case it must be obeyed."<sup>6</sup>

1. In enforcing the construction we contend for, the further considerations which present themselves under the first point are: That all the land laws passed previous to the act of May 10th, 1800, merged in that act; and by it, the system of selling the public lands in districts, through agents called registers and receivers, was settled; so that at the passage of the act of March 3, 1803, that system, in all its relations, was the law; and to all the provisions of the act of May 10th, 1800, and the rights established thereby, that of March 3, 1803, expressly refers, and for its operative capacity necessarily depends.

The whole system is laid in two important objects—public policy, and the rights of the community generally and individually; both terminating in *the sale of the public [<sup>170*</sup>lands. The public policy is twofold—first, revenue; second, national growth and prosperity, by the extension of population and improvement. The right of every individual is, to appropriate to himself any tract of land within the provisions of the system. Words are not necessary to show the importance of the public policy in both its branches; and the interest felt by the community, in the right to appropriate, is of equal extent, and as strong—as distinctly marked, too, as the policy itself; and, though a right peculiar to the American people, is, nevertheless, a general right; requiring, indeed, to be regulated by law; but none will say that the government might, or could wholly repress its exercise, any more than wholly to repress the exercise of the general right to carry on trade and commerce.

The second branch of the public policy—also the right to acquire and improve new lands—did not commence with the land laws of the United States; both existed under, and the latter was exercised through, the regulations of colonial and state government, are coeval with the settlement of America; and when the same policy and right fell within the jurisdiction of the national government, laws were immediately passed to regulate them, and have been continued from time to time, until they all merged in the act of May 10th, 1800; so that the right of every individual in the community to purchase and settle any part of the lands within the provisions of that act, may emphatically be called an existing right.

The first branch of the public policy, revenue, engaged *the attention of the national government immediately after the termination of the revolutionary war, and has been pursued by it ever since, with an unde-

1.—4 Hall's Law Journal, 16; 2 Dall. 320.

2.—6 Bac. Abr. tit, Statute, (I.) (C.)

3.—Vere v. Thompson, Hardr. 208.

4.—Ld. Teignmouth's Life of Sir W. Jones, 267.

5.—Letter to J. Macpherson, Esq., Governor-General of Bengal, Sir W. Jones' Life, 267.

6.—U. S. v. Fisher, 2 Cranch, 286.

viating aim; and it may be here observed, that one condition in the cession from Virginia is, that the lands ceded shall be sold, and the proceeds go in discharge of the public debt. It is not denied that Congress may suspend the sale of the whole or any part of the public lands; but doubtless, in such case, there would appear some distinct and good reason for doing it, as in the act of May 10, 1800, in order to attain, more effectually, the objects of the whole system; and then the intention was expressed with irresistible clearness in the repealing clause. But where nothing of this kind is pretended, where no object or motive can be perceived leading to suspension, the implication must be strong indeed to induce a court of justice to suppose a design to depart from every principle of the law in the case.

The constitution and the law show that the President had no power to establish the Zanesville offices until after the next meeting of Congress; for those offices were not vacancies to be filled during the recess; and it will not be contended, that he was bound to summon a special meeting of the senate for that purpose. Furthermore, the President had no power to cause sales to commence at Zanesville, until, in some act subsequent to that of March 3, 1803, the time for opening sales should be appointed; and we shall now endeavor to show the correctness of that position. The words of the act of March 3, 1803 (sections 5 and 6), refer, 172* generally, to the act <sup>of</sup> May 10th, 1800, and embrace all the regulations prescribed, among which a prominent one is, that all the land must be offered at public sale before being offered at private sale, and that a day should be appointed by law when sales are to commence at each office. The object of public sale, when any tract of country is brought into market for the first time, is principally the enhancement of price above the legal limitation, by means of competition for the most valuable tracts; but it has another of some importance, that is, settling in this way the preference between competitors.

The fair inference from these considerations is, that no sale of any part of the unappropriated lands in the military tract could legally take place, either at Zanesville or Chillicothe, under the bare provisions of the act of March 3, 1803; that some farther legislative provision was necessary, appointing the time when sales should commence. This provision is found in the act of March 26th, 1804. It is true, that in another act, passed also the 3d March, 1803, "regulating the grants of land, and providing for the sale of the public lands south of Tennessee," the time when sales are to commence is left with the President; but it is to be by proclamation, giving due notice. This is a modification only of the practice under the same principle and policy.

But it may be said, the act of May 10, 1800, excepts from public sale a part of the Marietta district, and all the Steubenville district. This is true; and the reason for this exception is not readily perceived. The only probable one is, that all the part excepted in the Marietta district 173* was known to be a <sup>rough, hilly</sup> country, therefore no prospect of sales being immediately effected in it. The distinction, on any other account, between the west of the Muskingum, including the township intersected by it, and the lands lying east of those townships, seems to be idle. With respect to the Steubenville district, all the most valuable lands in it had been sold in New York, in 1787, and at Pittsburg, in 1796; therefore, the competition to be expected at public sale was not thought of sufficient importance to be secured by statutory provision. But whatever may have been the reason for excepting these lands from public sale, the principle of fixing by law the time when the private sale of them shall commence is still preserved; thus securing the equitable mode of settling by lot the preference between applicants for the same tract, provided for in the act of May 10th. In fine, the reference of the act of March 3, 1803, to that of May 10, 1800, is general, therefore embraces the general provisions only; and the correct conclusion from a whole view of this matter is, that the act of March 3, 1803, was inchoate, inoperative of itself, in respect to sales at Zanesville, and, therefore, it would be absurd to give to it a constructive repeal of the preceding statute.

All that has been urged against suspending sales at Marietta until the operative organization of the Zanesville district took place, applies with equal force to the act of March 26, 1804, as to that of March 3, 1803. The absurdity is just as great in principle; the only difference is, its effects are not of so long continuance. Besides, the act of March 26, 1804, appoints <sup>the</sup> time when sales shall com- 174 mence at Zanesville, and thus removes the only objection of the register of the Zanesville district to the construction for which we contend.

There is no difference, in regard to construction, between a law which definitively appoints the time when a certain thing is to be done in future, and a law which leaves indefinite the future time when that certain thing is to be done; and practically, there is less reason to give the subsequent statute a repealing operation from the day of its passage, in the latter, than in the former case, because, there is less inconsistency in suspending the existing rights of individuals, and the public interest and policy for a certain, than for an uncertain time. Resting with some confidence in this position, we shall here introduce a case precisely in point, to show that the repugnant words are not alone and abstractedly to be considered.<sup>1</sup>

"By a statute passed on the 9th of July, the jurisdiction of a court of requests is enlarged after the 30th of September following, from debts of 40s. to £5—and it is also enacted, that if any action shall be commenced in any other court for a debt not exceeding £5, the plaintiff shall not recover costs; yet, from a necessary construction of the whole act, a plaintiff shall recover costs in an action commenced in another court, for a debt between 40s. and £5 after the passage of the act, and before the 30th of September. Till then, he could not sue in the Court of Requests, and therefore had no other remedy but to sue in another court."

*Here was an attempt made to give 175 to the words "if any suit shall be commenced," &c., an abstract meaning and repealing force, from the day of passing the act; but they were not allowed to suspend the existing right to sue somewhere.

1.—Whitham v. Evans, 2 East Rep. 135.

The admissions heretofore made, that is, that had the day been appointed when sales were to commence at Zanesville, they might have been continued at Marietta up to such day, seems to render a reference to the above case unnecessary, in respect to former arguments on the other side; but those admissions may not be extended to the present hearing; and, besides, the cited case shows that the same kind of reasoning has been resorted to on other occasions, that it has been put down by the court, and that the whole law and practical reason are the only sure guides to sound construction. In every proposition importing that the lands taken from the Marietta district "shall be sold at Zanesville," these repugnant words must be used; and when the object is to give them an abstract repealing effect from the moment they are used by the legislature, it matters not when "sold at Zanesville."

2. The second point in our argument is, that the complainant's purchase was made conformably to the practical construction given to the laws in question by the proper executive officers. This relates, principally, to the Secretary of the Treasury, the superintendent of the whole; but extends also to the register of the Marietta district, who, being without instructions, had to act upon his own discretion. 176* The facts in the bill show, that laws affecting the land-offices are received, by the respective officers, through the treasury department, with instructions; it therefore follows, that had the Secretary of the Treasury construed the act of March 3, 1803, as suspending sales at Marietta, he would have given instructions to that effect. This deduction flows by such strong implication from the facts and the nature of the case, that direct proof, if susceptible of being had, would be unnecessary; it is, in fact, involved in the acknowledgement of the Secretary of the Treasury, that his first impressions (that is, that all sales made at Marietta, after the passing of the act of March 3, 1803, were void, as suggested by the private opinion of the register of the Zanesville district) were erroneous; and without saying anything more than has been said, in relation to the act of March 26th, 1804, we may confidently assume the fact stated as the foundation of this point; and shall now endeavor to show that the conclusion drawn from it is correct.

The true doctrine of executive construction is that, generally, it is to be considered and respected; for executive officers are officers of the constitution and laws, as well as the judges; and in the performance of their proper functions, the former are under the necessity of putting a construction on the acts of the legislature, as well as the latter; and it may be added, that they are always supposed to act under the advice of a high law officer, appointed for that purpose. When, in this necessary exercise of their judgment, they put such a construction on a statute as promotes its evident object, preserves all the rights of individuals, and which at the same time becomes a rule by which title to things real or personal is acquired, such construction ought not to be set aside by a rigid criticism of any kind; but where it injures the public interest, or abridges and restrains the rights of individuals, it should be strictly examined and corrected.

When executive constructions and regulations form the rule by which the most interesting of all titles, the title to land, is acquired, all must see and admit the reasonableness of preserving rights growing out of them. Executive construction, in such cases, acquires all the importance, and involves all the consequences of judicial decisions. Could it be established, that the Secretary of the Treasury had misconstrued the act of March 3, 1803, in permitting sales to be made at Marietta, after its passing; and that this was so erroneous as to make void those sales; such a decision would reach, as has before been observed, two valuable interests, bona fide acquired as ours was, and long possessed as ours ought to have been; for their titles cannot, and ought not, to be preserved by the mere refusal of executive officers to act; neither, it is conceived, because the land cannot now be entered in tracts of the same size in which they were offered at public sale, by reason, that the law is modified in this respect; for, should this be admitted, the land officers might, through ignorance, or fraud, entangle titles to any extent. All lands, in fact, unsold at public sale are liable to be entered at private sale; and all tracts *not legally [*178] sold are still public lands and liable to be entered.

The observations of Sir William Jones, before quoted, go to illustrate and support our reasoning on this point. It may readily be supposed, that a difference might take place in construing the minor provisions of a statute, though all should agree in its main object and intent; when this is attained, the minor provisions are of little moment. Suppose the act of March 3, 1803, was actually couched in such ambiguous terms as, taken in their literal and grammatical sense, would raise a doubt whether sales were to continue at Marietta after its passage; but that the Secretary of the Treasury, in consequence of a construction formed from the exercise of his judgment, on a view of the whole law, had given actual instructions to continue them there. Would a sale made under such circumstances be declared void? We think not; and certainly not in the present case, which stands clear of every literal and grammatical ambiguity—where the necessarily implied construction of the Secretary of the Treasury runs with the obvious intentment of the whole law.

In closing our argument on this point, we beg leave to press this view of the subject with some earnestness on the consideration of the court; and confidently taking it for granted, that the not instructing the Marietta officers at all was equivalent to instructions to continue sales there, we again ask, that if actual instructions had been given, to continue sales at Marietta, until a few days before they commenced at Zanesville, giving sufficient time only *for the proper notice to the [*179] Zanesville officers; and the register of the Zanesville district had thought proper to disregard these regulations, and sell the land over again, would the court sanction his sales? or, in other words, would it now sanction a sale of the two tracts entered at Marietta in July, 1803?

3. Our third point is, that supposing the act of March 3, 1803, had, in express words, or by necessary implication, taken away the power of the Marietta office to sell; yet, that it did not begin to have that effect, until duly promulgated at Marietta, conformably to the usual manner of promulgating such acts, &c., and the same of the act of the 26th of March, 1804.

The reason of the rule, that, where no day is appointed, statutes begin to have effect from the day of their passage, seems to be this: that it being practically impossible actually to notify every person in the community of the passage of a law, whatever day might be appointed for its taking effect, no general rule could be adopted less exceptionable. The general rule may, in some instances, produce injustice; but if ignorance of the law was admitted as an excuse, too wide a door would be left open for the breach of it. Where statutes are liable to produce injustice by taking immediate effect, the legislature will, except through inadvertence, appoint a future day from whence they are to be in force. Mr. Justice Blackstone,<sup>1</sup> after treating of the promulgation of laws, and 180* the duty of legislatures to make *them public, says, "all laws should, therefore, be made to commence in future, and be notified before their commencement, which is implied in the term prescribed. The fair inference from this, and, indeed, from all that he and other writers have said, in treating on the elementary principles of law, is, that where unjust consequences result from the application of a general rule to a particular case; courts have the power to except such case and bring it under the control of equitable construction; and to ask, "did the law-maker, supposing him to be an upright man, intend to include or except this case?"<sup>2</sup>

One feature in the reason of the general rule is, that it would be practically impossible to fix on any time for laws to take effect so as that each person affected by them, or liable to be affected, could, with certainty, have notice; had such notice been practicable, doubtless the rule would have been different; and where this part of the reason ceases, according to a maxim of law and reason, so much of the rule ceases also. Now, when a law, under the supposed form of that of March 3d, 1803, should be promulgated at a land-office, every person who could in any way be affected by it would have actual notice; the applicant would know that he could not purchase, and he could not complain of injury. Lord Kaimes' reasoning<sup>3</sup> goes to show, that where the claims of equity can be brought under a general rule, "a court of 181* equity declines not to interfere."<sup>4</sup> Promulgation of the law at each land-office is an easy rule, liable to no uncertainty or difficulty, and, besides, had been the usual practice; therefore, no general promulgation can be a substitute for it. The necessity for the usage is manifest; for, if the numerous dependents of the treasury department were permitted to construe the law for themselves, endless contradiction and confusion must be the consequence. The settled course of decision in relation to deeds which have not been put on record within the time prescribed by law, falls exactly into Lord Kaimes' reasoning. Where it can be proved that the party who holds the second deed, though first on record, had notice of the previous deed, he shall not be permitted to take advantage of the omission to record in the holder of the first deed.

There is a case in Dallas<sup>5</sup> precisely in point, to support the restriction we contend for on the abstract taking effect of statutes, when the nature of the case affords reason for such restriction. The laws of the colonial legislature of Pennsylvania were in force until revoked by the king and council, and the question was, whether a revocation took effect at its date in London, or when notified in Philadelphia; and it was held by the court, not until notified to the governor and council in Philadelphia.

The decision and opinion of this court in the case of Arnold v. The United States,<sup>6</sup> will not, it is *presumed, be found, on due examination, to impinge the foregoing reasoning on this point. The question was, so far as that case is analogous, whether double duties should commence throughout the whole country from the passage of the act, or from its notification at the proper office in each collection district. The double duties were a burden which the whole community ought, in justice, to bear equally; and without making the act take a proper and absolute effect from the day of its passage, this equality of imposition would not be produced; an importation at Washington would have been charged with an impost from which one at a more distant port would have been exempt. Had the act been for reducing the import duty, no doubt but the money received at a distance, after the passing of the act, would have been refunded; this, it is believed, was done on the repeal of the internal taxes; and thus a general reciprocity is produced in the operation of laws of this nature. In this case there was no particular injury set up, but the hypothetical possibility only of injury, and that, not such as would, necessarily, follow the act of importation, but growing out of contracts involved in, and properly referable to, the general risk of trade. Had the question been, an entire suspension of the existing right to import, without the usual equitable provisions on like occasions, allowing all vessels which had departed without knowledge of such suspension to complete their voyages, or with penalties for importation, we may well suppose the taking effect of the law would have been restrained to its due notification at the proper office; *or to show the same [183 principle in another point of view, it may be asked whether the penalties of the embargo laws attach before notice of their passage at the naval offices in their respective districts?

The constitution of the United States has not, in express words, prohibited Congress from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts; but the prohibition is so strongly implied, and such laws, as well as ex post facto laws, are so contrary to justice, that it is presumed an act to that effect would be declared

1.—1 Bl. Com. 45.

2.—6 Bac. Abr. tit. stat. (I.) 386.

3.—Kaimes' Eq. Introduct. XI.

4.—Kaimes' Eq. Introduct. XI.

5.—Albertson v. Robinson, 1 Dall. 9.

6.—9 Cranch, 104.

void: such a law, for instance, as should go to resell any tract of land which had been legally sold. That the entry of a tract of public lands forms a perfect contract will not be denied; neither, that under the supposed form of the act of March 3, 1803, an entry at Marietta, before it was possible that notice could reach there, would come fully within the spirit and meaning of an equitable contract. Now, the established course in the administration of justice, protects equitable contracts equally with those which are strictly legal. The operation of a criminal or penal law, under the construction contended for on the other side, would render it, in its practical effects, as perfectly ex post facto as one made to take effect before its passage; and by parity of reasoning, that construction virtually implies a breach of contract, and so is contrary to the constitution of the United States as well as contrary to reason and justice. The pardoning power of the executive in a criminal case, might afford a remedy for the injustice which would follow; but in a civil one, the only remedy must be found in the reasonable 184* and equitable construction *of the judiciary, "who have authority over all laws, and more especially over statutes, to mould them according to reason and convenience to the best and truest uses."<sup>1</sup>

But it may be said that the general promulgation of all laws, in this country, is sufficient notice; and that from the passage of the act of March 3d, until the plaintiff's entry, or even application in February, there was ample room for notice. It is true, that in this country all laws have a general promulgation; but it is equally true, that many laws are, notwithstanding, strictly local: such is the act in question, and considering the established usage, and the reason for that usage, the register of the Marietta district cannot be supposed to be bound to have acquired a knowledge of the act in a general way.

A striking analogy exists between the land laws and those for the collection of duties on importations. The two leading points in the public policy are the same in both, that is, national strength and prosperity, and revenue; and however deeply laid in the nature of political society the right to carry on trade and commerce may be, we have, it is conceived, sufficiently shown that the right to settle and improve new land enters as deeply into the nature of political society in this country; and has, too, all the force of prescription of which the right is susceptible. The government, acting for the people, have no more claim to the price of the public lands than to a part of the price of merchandise imported, and therefore have no more exclusive and arbitrary control 185* over *the former than the latter; and, repeating what has been before mentioned, an attempt to suppress the settlement of new lands would be as sensibly felt by the community at large, as an attempt to suppress trade and commerce: at the same time, both require to be regulated by law. Now, suppose some newly acquired territory were to be brought within the operation of the revenue laws, and, for this purpose, it should be found expedient to annex it to a part of a former district, making a new district, and that preparatory measures were necessary before the new district could be organized, and that acts should be passed with analogous provisions to those found in the laws in question; would they be construed to suspend the collection of duties in, and the right to import into, the old district?

We have before mentioned, that the case of Wilson v. Mason<sup>2</sup> was cited at the first trial in the Supreme Court of Ohio, to show that notice of an illegal act was void; a position which, we also mentioned, was not disputed: but that case, and the opinion of the court in it, suggests some considerations for direct and hypothetical illustration, which we beg leave to introduce. In the opinion it is said: "But if this opinion should be too strict, if an act entirely equivalent to an entry could be received as a substitute for one, a survey does not appear to be such an act," &c., and then the opinion goes on to show the reason why; that is, that the entry is the necessary notice of the appropriation of any part of the waste lands, and the only way to prevent others, with equal *rights, from being misled and injured; [*186 that the entry was, in fact, the very remedy the law had provided against a previously existing evil. Now, in the present case, supposing suspension of sales at Marietta somehow entered into the general provisions of the law, an entry at Marietta would be an "entire equivalent" to an entry at Zanesville; for it is clear, that before sales could begin at Zanesville, notice must be given what tracts had been sold at Marietta. This, too, would have been a general notice; general, at any rate, to the extent of the object; not an individual notice merely, which the court would not, in the case of Wilson v. Mason, suffer to take place of the general rule.

A case may readily be supposed, under the land laws of the United States, offering arguments and objections parallel to those in the case of Wilson v. Mason. Suppose A purchases in one district, land lying in another; discovering his mistake, and that B is about to enter the same land in its proper district, he gives notice of his previous entry: here A might say, that as between him and the public, a purchase in one district was the same as in another, and that B had notice. In such a case a court would doubtless say, that to permit entries in one district, of land lying in another, would create confusion; that a person with equal rights would never know when he made a safe entry, and that a particular exception, notwithstanding personal notice, was inadmissible; but, as just shown, the objection would not lie in the present case; so that whatever the "if," in the opinion of the court amounts to, may fairly be placed to our side of the question.

*But the point we propose to illus- [*187 trate principally, by the case of Wilson v. Mason, is the right to purchase, by considering that case hypothetically. The right of every individual holding a warrant to appropriate to himself waste lands, was not more substantially or forcibly given, by the laws of Virginia, than the right to purchase any vacant tract of the United States land is given, by the act of May 10, 1800. It is true, that in Virginia, money was advanced on obtaining the warrant, but no priority of claim grew out of the prior date of the warrant, except in the instance of an accidental competition; and having money to pay, and applying to enter, puts the applicant under the laws of the United States on as good ground in law and equity as he stood on who came forward to enter under the laws of Virginia. Besides, by a provision in the act of May 10th, before noticed, money may be paid to the Treasurer of the United States; this corroborates and strengthens our reasons for this equality of right. The right to appropriate extended also over the whole of the waste lands in the state, though the act of appropriation must be performed in some one county. Now, let it be supposed that the question had been between Wilson and Mason, whether Mason's right to enter, in such county as he thought proper, was to be suspended for fifteen months, in consequence of similar legislative provisions to those found in the acts of March 3, 1803, and March 26, 1804, and with constructions and doings of the proper executive officers, parallel to those in the present case; can it for a moment be imagined that the better right would have been decreed to Wilson?

1.—Bac. Abr. tit. statute (H.), 378.

2.—1 Cranch, 95.

188*] *The phraseology of the laws for the collection of duties on imports is, that the bays, ports, harbors, &c., within certain limits, shall be districts, with some appropriate denomination; and when any new district is made, that from and after a certain day the harbors, &c., within certain limits, shall be a district by the name of the district of ———. Here the language precludes all sophistry in relation to the time when the new district is to go into operation; and its effect on the old district; but suppose the language was, "there shall be a district to be called the district of A, and from and after a certain day the duties shall, &c., be paid at B." This one very principle of sound construction would amount to precisely the same thing; and certainly the words, shall be a district, would not, under this supposition, be construed to stop the power of collection in the old district, until the time they were to be collected in the new one at B; yet, according to their reasoning, this would take place, for if the verbal repugnance only is to be considered, as before observed, it matters not when the practical repugnance commences.

Mr. Hammond, for the respondents. The first point made for the respondents is that this court has no jurisdiction.

The alleged contract and fraud of Zane constitute the sole ground for the interference of a court of equity. They are the gist of the plaintiff's case, and in respect to these, this court has no supervising control over the state court. Whether the contract alleged was one, 189*] the obligation of which *a court of chancery should recognize; whether it created a trust in Zane, which a court of equity would compel him to execute; whether the fraud was such that a court of equity would relieve against it; and whether making general propositions of compromise, and delaying more than ten years before a tender of money was made, and a performance specifically required was such diligence, on the part of the plaintiff, as to entitle him to the aid of a court of equity, are all questions over which the state court has complete control. In a court of equity the right of the plaintiff to the relief sought depends upon the decision of the questions here enumerated, and not upon the correct construction of the acts of Congress.

Let it be conceded, that the plaintiff's construction of the acts of Congress is correct, and the consequence is, that at the time of the sale at Zanesville, he held a legal right, imperfect, to be sure, but purely legal in its character. The allegations in the bill show that the plaintiff lost this right by the misconception, or misconduct of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the officers of the land-office at Marietta, and not in consequence of the alleged agreement with Zane. If the plaintiff had a right, and that right had been duly regarded by the public officers, neither the alleged contract with Zane, nor Zane's subsequent purchase could have impaired it. Upon what principle, then, does he come in equity to set up that right against Zane and M'Intire? Is it under color of an agreement with Zane to impeach the conduct of the secretary or register, and *receiver? Can it be said that a decision against the relief sought, in such a case, is a decision against a right or title claimed under an act of Congress? Is it not a more rational inference that the decision was against the party upon the ground that the contract did not entitle him; or upon the ground that he could not have relief in equity? or that if entitled to redress, it must be against the officer, for damages, upon the principle suggested by this court?<sup>1</sup>

Suppose that this court, upon an examination of the case, shall adopt the plaintiff's construction of the different acts of Congress, does it follow that they must, or can reverse this decree? Can they do it without examining the obligation and extent of the alleged agreement with Zane? Can they do it without inquiring into the subsequent conduct of Matthews, and determining how far the whole case entitles the party to the aid of a court of equity? It seems to us that they cannot. And we insist that in this court these inquiries cannot be made; the 25th section of the judiciary act expressly forbids it.

Again, upon the construction of the acts of Congress insisted on by the plaintiff, the certificate of purchase granted to him by the register of the land-office at Marietta, on the 16th of May, 1804, vested in him a legal right to the possession of the lands in dispute. Such certificates have always been received in Ohio as evidence of title in ejectment. The bill shows no reason why this legal remedy was not pursued. If the party by his own laches *has lost his remedy at law, can he [*191] come into a court of equity for relief? Does the bill show any circumstance that prevented him from diligently pursuing his legal remedy, or does it allege that it was lost by the contrivance of the defendants? Can this court examine these allegations, or determine whether upon this ground the bill was, or was not, properly dismissed?

But last of all, the case made in the bill shows, that this is the same case, and between the same parties, decided by this court in 1809.<sup>1</sup> That was an ejectment; the facts were agreed; the point submitted for decision was, the true construction of the acts of Congress referred to, and the decision was against the plaintiff's purchase. If the true construction of the acts of Congress constitutes the essential point to be decided in this bill, then it must be considered as a bill in chancery brought in the state courts, to review the decision of this court in ejectment. Can it be maintained that to dismiss such a bill is to decide against a right or title set up under an act of Congress? We conceive that upon an examination of this record, it will be found immaterial whether the acts of Congress separately, or the alleged agreement and conduct of Zane separately, or whether these conjointly, combined with the other circumstances of the case, constitute its material points; the general dismissal of the bill makes no case upon which the jurisdiction of this court can be made to operate.

The merits are supposed to involve the just 192* construction of the acts of 1803 and 1804, referred to in the bill; and what right, if any, the plaintiff can derive from the alleged agreement and conduct of Zane.

The act of May, 1800, which originated and settled the present plan of selling the public lands, directed that lands, within certain specific boundaries, should be sold at land-offices established at certain places. The uniform understanding and construction of this law has been, that the power to sell at each of the land offices was confined to the lands directed by law to be sold there. The officers at Chillicothe could not sell lands below the Little Miami, nor lands in the seven ranges. They had no power to effect such sale, and no right could be acquired by a purchase so made.

A new, and fifth land-office was established at Zanesville, by the 6th section of the act of March, 1803; and it was directed that the lands within the 11th range, and east of it within the military tract, and all the lands north of the Ohio Company's purchase, west of the seven first ranges and east of the district of Chillicothe, should be sold at Zanesville. The act containing this provision consists of eight sections. The first three are intended finally to make provision for settling claims for military bounties. The fourth authorizes warrants to be issued to General La Fayette. The fifth provides for surveying the unappropriated lands within the military tract, and directs that so much of these lands as lie west of the 11th range shall be made part of the district of Chillicothe, and shall be sold there, "under 193* the same regulations that other lands are within the said district." The sixth section creates the new district at Zanesville, including a large body of lands within the military tract, and a large body, also, of the lands before that time directed to be sold at Marietta. The seventh section gives longer time to the purchasers of lands within J. C. Symmes' purchase to complete their payments; and the eighth section relates to warrants, and plats and certificates of survey, within the Virginia military tract. This act was approved the 3d of March, 1803. No time is fixed for it to take effect; and hence a question is mooted, as to the time when the sixth section commenced its effective operation, so as to put an end to the power of making sales, at Marietta, of the lands formerly within the Marietta district, but directed by the 6th section to be sold at Zanesville.

It is not pretended but that the act in question, for all its general objects, took effect from its passage. There is nothing in its terms to except the 6th section from the general operation. The other seven sections speak from their passage, from the general taking effect of the act. The 6th section says the lands "shall be offered for sale at Zanesville." When? From this time; for no other time is designated. And it is a settled maxim, that where no time is appointed, by the act itself, for it to take effect, its operation commences from its passage. We have nothing to do with cases that may be supposed, of acts committed or rights commenced before the passage of a law that affects them was, or could be known. All such cases stand upon their own circumstances, *and are 194 exceptions to the general rule. The 6th section directs that the lands shall be sold at Zanesville, and as no time is appointed for commencing the sales there, the act, in the natural import of its terms, according to settled rules of construction, must be understood to direct the sales to commence immediately, and by necessary consequence, annuls the power to sell the same lands at Marietta, that existed before the act was passed, from the same period of time. Such being the plain import of the words used, when interpreted by a standard maxim of interpretation, those who undertake to render the 6th section inoperative for an indefinite time, by connecting it with the preceding laws, and with other circumstances, take upon themselves the burthen of proof, and are bound to make out their case. It is not maintained by anyone, that lands within the Zanesville district could be sold at Marietta, after the taking effect of a legal provision, directing them to be sold at Zanesville. The true point in dispute, then, is this: When did this 6th section take effect.

The proposition of the plaintiff, if I have been able to comprehend it, seems to be something like this: The 6th section of the act of March 3d, 1803, ought not to be construed as containing any determinate, positive operative provision; but should be regarded as merely provisional, or inchoative, dependent upon some future act of legislation to give it force and effect. To sustain this position, various arguments are urged, all of which appear to be predicated upon three principles:

First. A construction which would withdraw any *part of the public lands from 195 market is against the public policy.

Second. It is against the right of every individual to purchase.

Third. It is inconsistent with the practical construction given by the Secretary of the Treasury.

If the truth of every one of these dogmas were admitted, it would seem a sufficient reply, that the positive provisions of positive law never can be made to yield to any such considerations. When determining upon the construction to be given to an ambiguous provision,

Wheat. 7.

1.—Matthews v. Zane, 5 Cranch, 92.

they ought to have their influence. But they cannot be legitimately used, first to render a plain provision ambiguous, and then to determine its meaning.

The sixth section, as I have already insisted, stands clear of any ambiguity, and to decide that it takes effect from its passage, does not necessarily determine that its operation must be to withdraw any part of the public lands from market.

So far from being merely inchoative, the sixth section was capable of being carried into immediate practical effect, according to its terms. The officers might have been immediately appointed and furnished with plats and surveys of the unsold lands within the lands taken from the Marietta district; sales might have commenced immediately, and so soon as the military lands were surveyed, they, too, might have been brought into market. Certainly it cannot be contended but that the lands within the military tract, attached to the Chillicothe district, by the fifth section, might have 196* been brought into market as soon *as surveyed, without any additional legislative provision. The plaintiff is, therefore, totally mistaken as to the legitimate consequence of giving to the 6th section an immediate operative effect. Such construction tends to bring the public lands into market, not to shut them out. That the officers were not, in fact, appointed, and that the sales did not commence, are matters that have no bearing upon the argument. The true meaning of a statute must be determined by an examination of its provisions; not by the conduct of those appointed to carry it into execution. This view of the subject is also a satisfactory answer to the allegation respecting the rights of individuals to purchase. If that right exists, in the extent contended for, it could not be impaired by giving the 6th section immediate effect. So far as it was affected, it was by circumstances of a character very different from giving to the law a correct construction.

But the principles assumed, both with respect to the public policy, and the individual right to purchase, are not admitted to be correct. Of the public policy the legislature are exclusively the judges, and the individual right to purchase is also, before its actual application to any particular tract, entirely subject to legislative regulation. Now, I can well conceive, that it might be deemed good policy to withdraw, for a time, a portion of the public lands from the market. And if the legislature should do so, it is conceived that their act would be, at once, decisive of the public policy of the measure, and, so far, must absolutely control the individual 197* right to purchase. *If, then, the just construction of the 6th section should have the effect alleged, of withdrawing from the market a portion of the public lands, that circumstance would furnish no ground whatever upon which a court of justice should, or could, properly interpolate a fanciful construction of their own. They could not rightfully assume a course of policy different from that prescribed in the law, and make their own imaginations a standard of construction.

In fact, it was a part of the public policy, until long after 1803, to withhold a portion of the public lands from market. The three sections in each township reserved for future disposition, was kept back by this policy, and sold at a much higher price in consequence of it, when actually offered for sale. Can it be pretended, that any citizen had a right to purchase these reserves, until their sale was authorized by law, and the terms of the purchase defined? We are required to examine whether the Zanesville district is erected, established, or settled by that section. We maintain that the Zanesville district was fully and completely established by the 6th section. If it was not, it is not yet established. It is recognized as an existing district by subsequent acts; but is, in no other way, authorized or established. It could not be essential to the existence of the district, that a time for commencing sales should be fixed, or that the register and receiver should be appointed. Indeed, until the district was established, no such appointment could be made. The perplexity in which the plaintiff involves his own propositions; at one time considering the section as designating the limits of a new district; at another, regarding it *198 as only providing that a new district should be erected, at some time indefinitely future; and again declaring it inchoate and inoperative; telling us, in one breath, that some subsequent legislative provision is required, fixing the time when it should be established, and in the next, fixing that time upon a speculation of his own, without any such legislative act, is, of itself, very strong evidence that he is in error. The terms of the statute are simple and unambiguous. All this glossing is not required to find out their obvious import. It is not an effort to elucidate, but to establish an hypothesis.

For the defendants, it is contended, that from the passage of the act of March 3d, 1803, the Zanesville district was established, and the power to sell at Marietta determined. We have shown that this construction involves none of the inconveniences suggested by the plaintiff; but that if they actually existed, it resulted not from the provisions of the law, but from other causes. Our interpretation is founded upon a plain, palpable, and consistent doctrine, in every respect definite and certain. Its only possible evil, a suspension, for a short period, of the sales of a small portion of the public land. The construction insisted upon by the complainant is destitute of all certainty, and calculated to involve the whole subject in perplexity and doubt. There is a district, the lands within which must be sold at Zanesville. Was it established by the 6th section of the act of 3d March, 1803? No, says the opposite argument, that section only defined the limits to enable the Surveyor-General *to prepare the *199 plats and surveys. No, says the opposite argument again, that act was only inchoative and inoperative, it provided that the Zanesville district should be erected at some time indefinitely future. Was it established by the act of the 26th of March, 1804, appointing the time of the commencement of the public sales? No, again, says the opposite argument, that act "in relation to the present question, only fixes the future time when it shall be established." Was it established by the appointment of the officers? No, says the complainant, the new district was not established and settled by appointing the officers. And this negative involves the very singular circumstance, that officers should be appointed for a district not established and settled. By the strict terms of the law, the complainant insists that the Zanesville district was not erected, legally established, and settled until the 19th of May, the Saturday before the sales commenced on the Monday (21st) following. But by a reasonable construction, he concedes that the Zanesville district might be considered as established and settled after the 12th of May. At what time after, and before the 19th, he has not informed us, and, no doubt, for this very good reason, that after he made his entry, on the 12th of May, he had no interest in the question. We have the voluminous bill and the elaborate argument of the complainant before us, do they show how the Zanesville district was established, and when it was established? There are, undoubtedly, a multiplicity of allegations, to show that it was not established until after the 12th 200*] of May, but all the *rest is left in obscurity. We have not been able to perceive one single sound reason for considering the 12th of May an era of any importance, except that it was the day upon which the plaintiff made his entry. Ought a court of justice thus to depart from the direct and plain import of unequivocal terms.

Another point labored in the bill, and strongly urged in argument, is, that the whole conduct of the Secretary of the Treasury, as superintendent of the sales of public lands, was in accordance with the hypothesis maintained by the complainant. The act in question, March 3d, 1803, was never specially promulgated at the Marietta offices. No instructions with respect to it were ever sent to the officers; and sales made at Marietta within the tract directed to be sold at Zanesville, after the passage of the act were confirmed by the secretary.

One general observation must be made with respect to all these allegations. The secretary was the agent of the law, and was subject to its provisions, which he could neither restrain nor extend. If he fell into error, that error can avail nothing in a court of justice, bound to declare their own interpretation, not to adopt that of others.

We think we have shown that the three principal propositions upon which the plaintiff rests his construction of the act of 3d March, 1803, are equally unfounded in fact, and untenable in argument; our interpretation of that act is not shaken by them; and it is moreover sustained by the unequivocal decision of the court, in this very case.<sup>1</sup>

201*] *It is alleged, that the act of the 3d of March, 1803, is a mere affirmative act, in no respect repugnant to the act of May, 1800, until, by an actual commencement of sales at Zanesville, it shall be rendered practically repugnant. Very little examination will show that this is the old question, in a new dress. The power to sell at Marietta was created by the act of May, 1800, and depended upon that act for its existence. The act of March 3d, 1803, creates a power to sell the same lands at Zanesville. These two powers are inconsistent with, and repugnant to, each other. Both cannot subsist at the same time. In deciding the question of repugnancy, we are not to inquire only, whether the two powers can be concurrently executed; it is indispensable to determine whether they can exist together. Now, the power to sell at Zanesville, given by the act of March, 1803, is a complete, not an inchoative power. Although no time is fixed at which that power shall be executed, yet the power itself is created; and if it exist, then it is repugnant to the previous power, given to sell at Marietta, and repeals that power. It is impossible that the court cannot at once perceive the distinction between creating the power to sell, and providing for the immediate execution of that power. It is because the complainant has not regarded the distinctive character of these two circumstances, that he has involved his argument in so much perplexity. And here, if it were essential to the argument, it might be shown, that should it be conceded that Congress did not intend to suspend the sales, and that such is the effect of our construction, yet it results *from the force of the terms [*202 used, contrary to the intention. They created a complete and perfect power to sell at Zanesville, and omitted to provide that the legal effect of that power should be suspended until measures were arranged for its immediate execution. So that the question still recurs, when was the power to sell at Zanesville, under the act of March, 1803, actually created? If, as we contend, that power existed the moment the act took effect, it was from that moment repugnant to the power of making sales of the same lands at Marietta. The two acts are, in no single view, affirmative of each other on this point, although they both relate to the sales of public lands. The legal power to sell at Zanesville must have existed, separately and substantively, before any measure could be taken to carry that power into effect. This consideration alone exposes the fallacy of connecting the power to sell, the appointment of the officers, and the commencement of the sales, as all essential to the erection of the district.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought in the State Court of Ohio for the purpose of obtaining a conveyance of a tract of land to which the complainant supposed himself to have the equitable title, founded on an entry prior to that on which a grant had been issued to the defendants. The State Court decreed that the bill should be dismissed, and that decree is now before *this court, on the allegation that the [*203 court of the state has misconstrued an act of Congress.

The plaintiff has stated several equitable circumstances in aid of the title given by his entry; but unless his entry be in itself valid, there can have been no misconstruction of an act of Congress in dismissing the bill, and this court cannot take into consideration any distinct equity arising out of the contracts and transactions of the parties, and creating a new and independent title.

The validity of the plaintiff's entry depends on the land laws of the United States.

In May, 1800, Congress passed an act dividing an extensive territory north-west of the river

Wheat. 7.

1.—5 Cranch, 92.

Ohio, into four districts; and establishing a land-office in each, for the sale of public lands within that district. This act prescribes the time, place, and manner in which the lands of each district shall be offered at public sale; and directs, also, the manner and terms in which those not sold at public sale may be disposed of at private sale. The lands of the district comprehending the tract in controversy were to be offered for public sale at Marietta, on the last Monday of May, 1801.

On the 3d of March, 1803, Congress passed an act, the 6th section of which creates a fifth district, and enacts that the lands contained within it "shall be offered for sale at Zanesville under the direction of a register of the land-office and receiver of public moneys, to be appointed for that purpose, who shall reside at that place."

This district includes the land in controversy. 204* On the 26th of March, 1804, Congress passed an act entitled "an act making provision for the disposal of the public lands in the Indiana territory, and for other purposes."

This act comprehends the lands directed to be sold under the act of 1800 and 1803, as well as the lands in Indiana.

The 5th section enacts, that "all the lands aforesaid" (except certain enumerated tracts, of which the land in controversy forms no part), "be offered for sale to the highest bidder, under the direction of the Surveyor-General, or Governor of the Indiana territory, of the register of the land-office, and of the receiver of public moneys at the places respectively where the land-offices are kept, and on such day or days as shall, by a public proclamation of the President of the United States, be designated for that purpose."

On the 7th of February, 1804, Matthews applied to the register of the Marietta District, and communicated to him his desire to purchase the land in controversy. The office of receiver being then vacant, no money was paid, and no entry was made; but the register took a note or memorandum of the application.

The counsel for the plaintiff insists, that the title of his client commences with this application.

The law authorizes the respective registers to sell at private sale all the lands which may remain unsold at the public sales, and says the sales "shall be made in the following manner, and under the following conditions, to wit:

205* "1. "At the time of purchase, every purchaser shall, exclusively of the fees hereafter mentioned, pay six dollars for every section, and three dollars for every half section he may have purchased, for surveying expenses; and deposit one-twentieth part of the amount of purchase money, to be forfeited if within forty days one-fourth part of the purchase money, including the said twentieth part, is not paid."

The payment of the money required by the act is obviously indispensable to the purchase. Without such payment, the sale prescribed by law could not be made; and certainly no sale, had the register attempted to make one, could be valid if made in opposition to the law. But the register has not attempted to sell, nor could Mr. Matthews have so understood the transaction. He took a note of the land the plaintiff attempted to purchase; and, had the receipt of the receiver been produced, might, perhaps, have made the entry. In so doing he would have acted in the double character of register and agent of the purchaser.

That there was no receiver was undoubtedly not the fault of Mr. Matthews; but this circumstance as completely suspended the power of selling land in the Marietta District as if there had been neither register nor receiver; as if there had been no land-office.

The transactions, then, between Mr. Matthews and the register on the 9th of February, 1804, may be put entirely out of the case.

On the 12th day of May, 1804, soon after the receiver *had entered on the duties of [*206 his office, Matthews paid the sum of money required by law, and made an entry for the land in controversy with the register of the Marietta District.

The 12th section of the act of the 26th of March, 1804, directed that "the lands in the District of Zanesville should be offered for public sale on the third Monday of May."

In pursuance of this act, and of instructions from the Secretary of the Treasury, the sale of the lands in the district did commence on that day; and, on the 26th day of that month, the defendants became the purchasers of the land in controversy.

There are many charges of fraud in the bill, and a contract between the parties is alleged. But this court cannot look into those circumstances, unless they had induced the court of Ohio to determine against the person having title under the laws of the United States. As this case stands, the opinion of the State Court on the fraud and the contract, is conclusive; and the only question to be discussed here is, the title of the plaintiff, under the acts of Congress.<sup>1</sup> This depends entirely on the validity of his entry made on the 12th of May, 1804.

*This question has already been decided in this court. [*207

*The plaintiff brought an ejectment [*208

1.—The constitution of the United States declares (art. 3, s. 2), that "the judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls," &c. And that, "In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a state shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make."

The judiciary act of 1789, c. 20, s. 25, provides, Wheat. 7.

"that a final judgment, or decree, in any suit, in the highest court of law or equity of a state, in which a decision of the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against their validity," &c.; "or where is drawn in question the construction of any clause of the constitution, or of a treaty, or statute of, or commission held under, the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or exception, specially set up by either party, under such clause of the said constitution, treaty, statute, or commission, may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a writ of error," &c. "But no other error shall be assigned or regarded as against the defendants for the lands in controversy; and, the judgment of the State Court being against him, the cause was brought by 209 writ of error into this court. *In February, 1809, the judgment of the State Court was affirmed, this court being of opinion that the creation of the Zanesville District suspended the power of selling the lands lying within that district, at Marietta.

The counsel for the plaintiff contends, that several material circumstances which are now disclosed, did not appear in that case. But the court is of opinion that the additional circumstances relied on in argument can, in no degree, affect the point decided in that case, which was, that the power of selling at Marietta ceased when the new district was established, so far as respected the land in that district.

This point has been re-argued with great labor and talent, and has been reconsidered by the court. The result of that reconsideration is, that the original opinion is correct. We still think, that on the passage of the act by which the district of Zanesville was created, and the land within it directed to be sold at that place, the power of selling the same land at Marietta necessarily ceased.

It is, we think, impossible to look at these acts without perceiving that the lands lying in one district could not be sold in any other. Their words and their policy equally forbid it. The land in controversy might have been sold at Marietta by the register and receiver of that 210 place, previous to the 3d of March, 1803, because it lay in the district, the lands of which were directed by law to be sold at that place by those officers. Had the land been out of that district, it could never have been sold at that place, or by those officers. When, by law, a new district was formed, comprehending this land and its sale was directed at a different place, and by different persons, the land is placed as entirely without the district of Marietta as if it had never been within it. The power of the officers of the land-office at Marietta to sell, is expressly limited to the lands within the district, and land which ceases to be within the district, is instantly withdrawn from that power.

That the effect of this construction is to suspend the sales of land in the new district until the proper officer should be appointed, does not, we think, operate against it. An immense quantity of land was in the market, and the laws furnish no evidence in support of the opinion that the eagerness to keep the whole continually within the reach of every purchaser, was so great as to hazard the confusion which might arise from any uncertainty respecting the office at which any portion of it might be acquired. If this intention had been so predominant, the legislature would certainly have provided that the lands in the Zanesville district might still be sold at Marietta until some day to be fixed in the law by which it might be supposed that the office at Zanesville would come into operation. The omission to make such a provision forbids the opinion that Congress considered the necessity of keeping all their lands in a state to be instantly 211 acquired, as being so urgent that a court would be justified in construing one of their statutes contrary to its words. The known rule being, that a statute for the commencement of which no time is fixed, commences from its date, the act of the 3d of March, 1803, separated this land from the Marietta district on that day, and withdrew it from the direction and power of the officers of that district. It was legally competent to those who possess the power of an appointment immediately to appoint necessary officers to carry on the sales at Zanesville, and Congress did not think proper to provide for continuing the sales at Marietta until such officers should be appointed.

This court, then, retains its opinion, that, independently of the act of the 26th of March, 1804, the entry made by Matthews on the 12th of May, 1804, would be invalid. That opinion is still further strengthened by the act last mentioned. That act, considering its 5th and 12th sections together, directs all the lands in the Zanesville district to be sold under the authority of the proper officers, on the third a ground of reversal, in any such case as aforesaid, than such as appears on the face of the record, and immediately respects the before mentioned questions of validity or construction of the said constitution, treaties, statutes, commissions, or authorities, in dispute."

Under these provisions, with a view to the questions of jurisdiction in the above case (Matthews v. Zane and others), the following points have been determined by this court. In an action of ejectment between two citizens of the same state, in the state court, for lands within the state, if the defendant sets up an outstanding title in a British subject, which he contends is protected by the 9th art. of the treaty of 1794, between the United States and Great Britain, and that therefore the title is out of the plaintiff; and the highest court of law or equity of the state decides against the title thus set up, it is not a case in which a writ of error lies to this court. The words of the judiciary act must be restrained by the constitution, which extends the judicial power to all cases arising under treaties made by authority of the United States. This is not a case arising under the British treaty; and whether an outstanding title be an obstacle to the plaintiff's recovery is a question exclusively for the decision of the state tribunal. But it must be understood that this court has appellate jurisdiction where the treaty is drawn in question, whether incidentally or directly. Whenever a right grows out of, or is protected by, a treaty made under the authority of the United States it is sanctioned against all the laws and judicial decisions of the respective states; and whoever may have this right under such treaty, is to be protected. Thus, if the British subject, in whom was supposed to have been vested the outstanding title protected by the treaty, or his heirs, had claimed in the cause, it would have been a case arising under the treaty. But as neither his title, nor that of any person claiming under him, could be affected by the decision, it was held not to be a case arising under a treaty. Owings v. Norwood, 5 Cranch, 344. But where the decision is against the validity of the treaty, or against the title, specially set up by either party to the cause, under the treaty, this court has jurisdiction to ascertain that title, and determine its legal validity, and is not confined to the mere abstract construction of the treaty itself. Smith v. The State of Maryland, 6 Cranch, 286; Martin v. Hunter, ante, Vol. I., p. 304, 357. The last clause in the 25th section of the judiciary act, which restricts the grounds of reversal to such as appear on the face of the record, and immediately respect the construction of the treaty or statute in dispute, applies only to cases where the parties claim under various titles, and assert various defenses, some of which may and others may not regard the construction of a treaty or statute, and was intended to limit what would otherwise unquestionably have attached to this court the right of revising all the points in dispute, and to confine it to such errors as respect the questions specified in the section. Martin v. Hunter, ante, Vol. I., 357.

Monday of the ensuing May. Consequently there could be no power to sell any of the land within that district at Marietta.

The case of the plaintiff may be, and probably is, a hard one. But to relieve him is not within the power of this court. We think the plaintiff is not entitled under the laws of the United States to the land he claims, and that the decree ought to be

Affirmed with costs.

See S. C. 4 Cranch, 382; 5 Cranch, 92.
Cited—17 Wall. 198; Blatchf. Pr. 5; 3 Blatchf. 339;
3 McLean, 285; 2 Paine, 517.

212*] [*LOCAL LAW. CHANCERY.]

HOOFNAGLE ET AL.

v.

ANDERSON.

A patent is a title from its date, and conclusive against all those whose rights did not commence previous to its emanation.

Courts of equity consider an entry as the commencement of title and will sustain a valid entry against a patent founded on a prior defective entry, if issued after such valid entry was made.

But they never sustain an entry made after the date of the patent.

This case attempted to be taken out of the general rule, upon the ground that the equity of the party claiming under the entry commenced before the legal title of the other party was consummated.

But the circumstances of the case, and the equity arising out of it, were not deemed by the court sufficient to take it out of the general rule.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of Ohio.

This cause was argued by Mr. Scott and Mr. Doddridge for the appellants, and by Mr. Talbot and Mr. Brush for the respondent.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by the appellants, who were plaintiffs in the Circuit Court for the District of Ohio, to obtain a decree for the conveyance of a tract of land of which the respondent has the legal title.

The land lies within the tract of country reserved by the commonwealth of Virginia, out of her cession to the United States for the officers 213*] and soldiers of the Virginia continental line. The respondent's patent is dated on the 9th day of October, 1804, and is founded on a warrant for military services, issued from the land-office of Virginia, to Seymour Powell, heir of Thomas Powell, on the 29th day of May, 1783, which was entered in the office of the principal surveyor on the 16th of June, 1790, and was surveyed on the 30th of October, 1796. The survey was assigned for a valuable consideration to the appellee, in whose name the patent was issued.

The entry under which the plaintiffs claim was not made until the 28th day of May, in the year 1806; and was consequently eighteen months posterior to the emanation of the defendant's grant. They insist, however, that this grant ought not to stand in their way, because it was obtained contrary to law, being founded on a warrant, which was issued by fraud or mistake.

It is admitted, that the service of Thomas Powell was performed in the state, and not in the continental line of Virginia; consequently, the recital of his military service is erroneous. The warrant ought to have been for services in the state, instead of the continental line. How far the patent ought to be affected by this error is the question on which the cause depends.

It is obviously the error of the register of the land-office, because the certificate on which the warrant issued states the service correctly. There can be no ground for suspecting that any fraud is mingled with this mistake. At the time the warrant was made out, [*214 its value was precisely the same if for services in the state, as if for services in the continental line. The quantity of acres allowed to the officer was the same; and precisely the same land was subject to be appropriated by each warrant. Virginia considered the services of the continental and state officers as equally meritorious, and had equally awarded them. There could exist, then, no possible motive for the erroneous statement on the face of the warrant, that it was issued for services in the continental instead of the state line. It was of no advantage to Seymour Powell, whose father had performed service which the law deemed a full consideration for a warrant of equal value with that which was given him by mistake.

This warrant was assignable, and carried with it no evidence of the mistake which had been committed in the office. It has been assigned for a valuable consideration, and the purchaser has obtained a patent for a part of it, without actual notice that there was any defect in the origin of his title. Should he lose this land his warrant is lost. There is no longer any tract of country in which it can be located.

The title of the respondent to the particular tract included in his patent, was complete before that of the appellants commenced. It is not doubted that a patent appropriates land. Any defects in the preliminary steps, which are required by law, are cured by the patent. It is a title from its date, and has always been held conclusive against all those whose rights did not commence previous to its emanation. Courts of equity have considered an entry as the commencement of title, and have sustained [*215 a valid entry against a patent founded on a prior defective entry, if issued after such valid entry was made. But they have gone no farther. They have never sustained an entry made after the date of the patent. They have always rejected such claims. The reason is obvious. A patent appropriates the land it covers; and that land, being no longer vacant, is no longer subject to location. If the patent has been issued irregularly, the government may provide means for repealing it: but no individual has a right to annul it, to consider the land as still vacant, and to appropriate it to himself.

The counsel for the appellants attempt to take this case out of the general rule, because their equity, they say, commenced before the legal title of the respondent was consummated, and their pre-existing rights were impaired by his intrusion into the military lands reserved for the Virginia continental troops. The officer under whom they claim had a right to elect among all the vacant lands in the reserved territory, and this right of election was narrowed by the respondent's patent.

This is a general indefinite equity, not applicable to one tract of land more than to another, and which has, perhaps, never been allowed under circumstances resembling those which exist in the present case. It is a scintilla juris which we should find much difficulty in supporting against a complete legal title founded on an original claim of equal merit of the same character. When it is recollected that, in their origin, these claims stood equal, and were equal-<sup>216*</sup> ly *eapable of appropriating the same land, it might well be urged that the rights of the state officers were not sufficiently respected, when the legislature omitted to insert them, as well as their brethren of the continental line, in the reservation for military warrants; and that the mistake in the land-office has only retained for Mr. Powell rights which he ought never to have lost. The act which authorizes surveys on the north-west side of the Ohio, on warrants granted to the officers and soldiers of the Virginia continental line, likewise authorized the surveying of those which had been granted to the officers and soldiers of the state line. The laws granting these bounties, setting apart this tract of country, and authorizing these surveys, were public laws. They were known, or might have been known, to the government of the Union, when the cession was made and received. This right of election which the appellants would now set up against a complete legal title, originated in them, and was common to both parties. The equity of the one cannot be so inferior to that of the other as to justify the court in considering the patent of the one as an absolute nullity, in favor of the other who has attempted to appropriate the same land after such patent had been issued.

But this right of election, for which so much efficacy is claimed in this case, has some existence in the common case of treasury warrants. The holder of such warrant has a right to locate it on any land, and no land can be regularly patented unless it be first located and surveyed.<sup>217*</sup> If a survey be made on *a place different from the entry, it is as if made without an entry, and the holder of any other warrant has a right to take the land. A patent for this land, not founded on a previous entry, narrows his right of election; yet it has always been held, that such patent, though it must yield to a prior entry, would hold the land against a subsequent entry. The entry, and not the warrant, has always been considered as the commencement of title.

The principle is well settled, in other cases, that a patent is unassailable by any title commenced after its emanation; and we perceive no sufficient reason against applying the principle to this case.

It is contended, also, by the appellants, that as the warrant refers to the certificate of the executive, as the authority on which it is issued, it conveys notice of the contents of this certificate to every purchaser. But this reference to the certificate of the executive appears on the face of every warrant, and contains no other information than is given by law. The law requires this certificate as the authority of the register. It is considered as a formal part of the warrant. These warrants are, by law, transferable. They are proved by the signature of the officer, and the seal of office. This signature and this seal are considered as full proof of the rights expressed in the paper. No inquiry is ever made into the evidence received by the public officer. If the purchaser of such a paper takes it subject to the risk of its having issued erroneously, there ought to be some termination to this risk. We think it ought to terminate when the warrant is completely merged in a patent, *and the title consummated [<sup>218</sup> without having encountered any adversary claim.

The title under this warrant was considered in the case of Miller v. Kerr and others.<sup>1</sup> In that case, the claimant under Powell had the junior patent, and the court thought that the equity growing out of a prior entry might be rebutted, by the person holding the legal title, by showing any defect in that equity; but nothing was said in that case which indicates an opinion that a complete legal title might be overthrown by an entry made after the consummation of that title.

Decree affirmed with costs.

Cited—9 Wheat. 510, 511; 3 Pet. 341; 6 Pet. 672, 677, 732; 12 Pet. 298; 15 Pet. 106; 20 How. 272.

[CHANCERY.]

BROWN ET AL. v. JACKSON.

The decisions of the board of commissioners under the acts of Congress providing for the indemnification of claimants to public lands in the Mississippi Territory (commonly called the Yazoo lands), are conclusive between the parties in all cases within the jurisdiction of the commissioners.

This determination reconciled with that of the court in Brown v. Gilman, ante, Vol. IV., p. 255.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of New York.

This suit was brought in consequence of the decision of this court in the case of Brown v. Gilman,<sup>2</sup> *and for the general history [<sup>219</sup> of the facts, reference was made to that case.

The bill charged, that on the 13th of January, 1795, the state of Georgia was seized in fee of a certain territory within the boundaries of said state, &c., estimated to contain 11,380,000, and bounded, &c.; that on the same day, by force of an act of the legislature of said state, passed on the 7th of January, 1795, George Matthews, the Governor, by letters patent, conveyed said territory to Nicholas Long and others, and their associates, called the Georgia Mississippi Company, reserving 620,000 acres for the use of the citizens of Georgia; that afterwards, on the 20th of January, 1796, certain articles of agreement were made between the defendant Amasa Jackson and William Williamson, authorized by said company to sell, and George Blake and sundry persons, who became the New England Mississippi Land Company; that it was stipulated in the said articles, that on or before the 12th of February, then next, said Jackson and Williamson should fill up and complete to said B. and others, a deed of conveyance (which had been executed by the G. M. Company in Georgia), of all the right and title of the G. M. Company, derived of the state of Georgia; that said Blake and others agreed by the articles to deliver their notes for the payment of two cents for each acre of land by them subscribed for, previous to the first of May, then next; and for the further payment of one cent more for each acre, on or before the 1st of October, then next; and a further payment of two and a half cents per acre, within twelve months from said 1st of May; and a further payment of two and a 220\* half cents, &c., on the 1st of May, 1798; and a further payment of two cents more, on the 1st of May, 1799, in the whole, ten cents per acre, &c. And thereby it was agreed, that as soon as said deed should be prepared, &c., said deed should be delivered by said defendant, Jackson, to some person appointed by said parties, to be held as an escrow, on condition that if the notes or moneys due on the 1st of May, should not be paid, the deed should be re-delivered, and the associates should not be liable for the failure of each other; but if the notes were paid, the deed should be delivered to said Blake, &c., who were then to be severally liable for their own notes. That on the 11th of February, 1796, said Blake and others entered into articles of association, by the name of the N. E. M. L. Company, by which it was agreed that Leonard Jarvis, Henry Newman, and William Wetmore, should be a committee to receive a deed from the defendant Jackson, and William Williamson, of the said lands, belonging to the G. M. Company, for the use of the N. E. M. L. Company; and should execute to the several subscribers thereto, deeds of their respective proportions, to hold as tenants in common, and also, a deed of trust to trustees, &c., and a board of directors should be appointed; and it was agreed the trustee should give each proprietor a certificate in the form, &c., which should be complete evidence, &c., and transferable by indorsement. And to carry such articles of agreement into effect, a deed of indenture, dated 13th of February, 1796, purporting to be made by said Long and others, of one part, and Wetmore, Jarvis, and Newman, of the other, was executed, whereby they 221\* conveyed said territory (excepting \*said 620,000 acres) to said W., J., and N., and the survivor, in fee; and was delivered to G. R. Minot, as an escrow, with an indorsement. The first payment to be made on the first of May, aforesaid, was duly made by every member, except, &c.; and the defendant Jackson, and Williamson, personally delivered said deed to said grantees, and indorsed thereon, &c., "free of conditions." That prior to said absolute delivery, to wit, on the 10th of December, 1796, an agreement of two parts was entered into between the associates of the N. E. M. L. Company, and the defendant Jackson, wherein it was agreed that certain proceedings of certain scrip-holders of the G. M. Company, being also members of the N. E. M. L. Company, so far, &c., should be void; and that the associates of the N. E. M. L. Company should have no control over papers of the G. M. Company; but would deliver to the defendant, Jackson, so many of their certificates or scrip as amount to 103,480 acres, computing the whole at 11,380,000 as an equivalent to the G. M. Company, for a loss by failure of Seth Wetmore, &c., subscriber for 100,000, who had not paid; said defendant, Jackson, to be accountable to said associates for such portion of Wetmore's notes, if recovered, as was equivalent to the debt assumed to be paid, i. e., \$10,348; and thereupon said defendant, Jackson, should deliver said deed of conveyance absolutely, and within, &c., procure from the G. M. Company a confirmation, and deliver the same to said associates; and the defendant, Jackson, covenanted not to negotiate the notes until the confirmation was procured. And on the 17th of February, 1797, said defendant, Jackson, delivered to Wetmore, \*Jarvis, and New- [\*222 man, a deed of confirmation from Long and others, reciting, &c., and ratifying said deed of conveyance of said tract of land, excepting said 620,000 acres. That on the 28th of February, 1797, an indenture of two parts, between Oliver Phelps and others, of the one part, and Jarvis, Newman, and Hull, of the other, was made, wherein reciting said conveyances, said associates conveyed to J., N., and H., and survivor, to hold said land in trust, &c., according to articles of agreement, constituting the N. E. M. L. Company. That William Wetmore, Jarvis, and Newman, still retained their shares of said purchase as subscribed, viz., the said W. 900,000 acres, N. 2,000,000, and J. 500,000, who, to place their shares in the same condition, on the same 28th of February, 1797, by deed poll, released to John Peck, their several proportions being  $\frac{3,400,000}{11,380,000}$  in trust, to convey the same to J., N., and H., and survivor, to be held by them in trust for same uses as expressed in deed of associates; and on same day, said Peck conveyed the same land to said J., N., and H., to be held accordingly; by which means J., N., and H., were seized of all said tract; and H., the survivor, continued so seized until his deed to the United States. Trustees delivered certificates to the members of the N. E. M. L. Company, expressing, &c., whereby each became entitled to an equitable interest in his share.

1.—Ante, p. 1.

2.—Ante, Vol. IV., p. 255.

That on the 31st of March, 1814, the Congress of the United States passed an act for the indemnification of claimants of public land in the Mississippi territory, &c., by which act, 1,550,000 were appropriated *for per- [*223 sons claiming under the G. M. Company. That *on the 25th of January, 1815, Congress made a supplementary act, appointing a board of commissioners, instead of the first, to meet on the fourth Monday of January, &c. That on the 3d of March, 1815, Congress passed another act, &c., providing that in certain cases, the commissioners might allow further time, not over two months from the 3d Monday in March, and to adjust all such claims as should be, or might have been released, &c., within the time limited; and empowering the President to issue certificates for decided claims. That on the 18th of January, 1814, the members of the N. E. M. L. Company authorized their directors to release to the United States the whole claim of said company, under the act of Georgia, and required the trustees to execute deed, &c.; and certificates to be received therefor from the United States, should be held by the treasurer, to be disposed of by order of the directors for the use of the claimants. And on the 24th of November, 1814, W. Hull, sole surviving trustee, made a deed poll to the U. S., releasing, &c., territory described, being the same conveyed by Georgia, as aforesaid, and on the 25th of January, took the oath. And that the directors on the 7th of December, 1814, made their deed poll, releasing all right of said company and the members thereof, to said land; also all claim to money, &c., to the United States, in fee.

The said directors conformed in all things, &c., and became entitled to the whole indemnity, provided, &c., amounting to 1,550,000. Nevertheless, said commissioners did de- 224* cret that certain individuals *holding scrip under the N. E. M. L. Company, to the amount of 2,795,017 acres in all, who personally applied to said commissioners, among whom was said defendant, Jackson, who (said Jackson) held scrip to the amount of 691,677 acres, should receive their indemnity directly, without permitting the same to go through the hands of the directors, &c.; and said individuals have received their several proportions accordingly, estimating the same at $13.62 per acre, deducting a certain sum for expenses. Whereas said commissioners did not estimate said expenses correctly, by a sum exceeding $7,000, and no provision was made to compel said individuals to contribute to future expenses, or any subsequent diminution of the remaining amount of indemnity, as hereafter stated, which reduces the amount to more than two cents per acre less than the amount received by said individuals. Commissioners did secondly decree that indemnity upon 957,600 acres, amounting, at the rate of $13.62, to $130,425.12, should be deducted from claims, by the N. E. M. L. Company, on account of certificates issued to its members who appeared to be in default in payment of purchase money to the G. M. Company; and determined said certificates to be bad, and the parties claiming under them not entitled to indemnity; and allowed said sum of $130,425.12, to be issued to the defendant, Jackson, for the benefit of himself and the other members of the Georgia Mississippi Company, or to him for his own benefit, or on pretense that he was entitled to it as being a creditor of said G. M. 225* Company, whereby manifest *injustice was done to the N. E. M. L. Company, because:

(1) No deduction was made or allowed by the commissioners from the said sum of $130,425.12 for expenses incurred in managing the affairs of said company. (2) It appears among the notes exhibited by the said Jackson, as given for purchase money to the G. M. Company, on which indemnity was claimed as unpaid, there were certain notes of said Seth Wetmore, for $25,760, which, at the rate of ten cents, would have been the price of 257,600 acres; whereas, in truth, said Wetmore was purchaser for 100,000 acres, and no more, as appears by his original deed, so that the greatest part of said notes must have been given for other consideration. (3) It appears by the decrees, indemnity was allowed to Jackson for 957,600 acres, and by certificates filed by the commissioners, that there issued certificates to individuals for 2,795,017 acres; and by certificates issued to other original purchasers, and delivered by the plaintiffs to the commissioners, that there is still 7,734,983 acres entitled to indemnity under said acts. But these quantities amount to 11,487,600 acres, which is 107,600 acres more than the whole purchase of 11,380,000; so that 107,600 acres too much have been allowed to the said Jackson, even upon the principles of the commissioners, amounting at the rate of $13.62 per acre, to $14,655.12. (4) The commissioners were wrong in determining, that persons claiming under certificates of purchasers who had not paid, should lose their indemnity. One Mary *Gilman, holder of three scrip cer- 226* tificates, under the N. E. M. L. Company for 20,000 acres each, the same having been issued to R. Williams, and indorsed, he being assignee and grantee of William Wetmore, an original purchaser in default, whose unpaid notes were before the commissioners, as appears by the 3d decree, which notes entered into the reason of deducting from indemnity to said Jackson, exhibited to the Circuit Court of the United States for Massachusetts District, her bill in equity; and recovered for the whole amount of her claim against the plaintiff, without deducting on account of the proportion of indemnity she might be entitled to claim of individuals who received indemnity in person, which decree was affirmed in the Supreme Court. By reason of all which, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover of Jackson the whole $130,425; also, his proportion of the expenses of said company, since said decrees were made, including said $7,000 as aforesaid, and also, the costs recovered by M. Gilman, and all future expenses. The bill further stated, that the defendant, Jackson, ought to deliver all the stock or indemnity of said $1,550,000, excepting thereout so much as he is entitled to, as holder of scrip under the N. E. M. L. Company.

The defendant (Jackson) in his answer, admitted the several conveyances set forth in the bill, and that the commissioners, by first decree, decreed to reserve indemnity upon 691,677 acres on account of scrip of the N. E. M. L. Company, then in the hands of the defendant, and did so reserve it; but avers the truth to be, that neither he, nor any other person in his stead, or by his direction, received any part of indemnity for *claimants under the G. M. Com- 227* pany. That the certificates of the N. E. M. Land Company came to his hands as follows: At the time of maturity of several of the notes, such notes being dishonored, or the parties being insolvent previous to maturity, they proposed to defendant (who agreed) to pay such notes by certificates of the N. E. M. L. Company; that accordingly, scrip to the amount of 691,677 acres was delivered to him, and notes to equal amount were given up by defendant, and that he never had any other certificates of the N. E. M. L. Company, and these have been given up to the commissioners, and appropriated by them to account of the G. M. Company. Admitted that commissioners deducted from indemnity awarded to the individuals a sum as their proportion of expenses of the N. E. M. L. Company; but avers, that said N. E. M. L. Company produced statements, and litigated before the commissioners as to such expenses, and such sum as was allowed, was allowed after deliberation; but insisted, that the decree as to expenses is conclusive as to the amount, and that any portion of any extra expenses could not be recovered of him; and that no deduction or provision for payment of future expenses of the N. E. M. L. Company, ought to have been made. Commissioners awarded that, indemnity upon 957,600 acres, amounting to $130,425.12, should be deducted from the whole amount claimed by said N. E. M. L. Company, on account of certificates issued by the company to purchasers who were in default of payment to the G. M. Company; that they determined such scrip void, and parties 228* claiming under it *should lose indemnity; but avers he did not receive certificates for said $130,424.12, on behalf of the G. M. Company, or himself, as such member; on the contrary, he was not then a member thereof, and never received any part of indemnity or certificates therefor, save for the amount found due him for the balance of his account with the G. M. Company, as their agent; that, as to said award, there remained, at the time it passed, unpaid notes of members of the N. E. M. L. Company, given for purchase money to the amount of $95,760, and the indemnity of $130,421.25, was ordered on account of such unpaid notes; that he delivered up said unpaid notes, being required so to do; that the said company contested the allowance, and are concluded by the decree. That, after said decrees, deducting the amount of the unpaid notes, and also the amount of scrip of said company, taken in payment of other notes, and held by defendant as aforesaid, the members of the company, separately and individually, according to their shares, did apply to the commissioners, and received certificates entitling them to the indemnity. That the commissioners made no allowance on said $130,425.12, on account of expenses incurred by plaintiffs in managing the affairs of the company, and insists they did right, and their decree is conclusive. That it appeared from the schedule to the articles of agreement between him, Williamson, and Blake, of 26th January, 1796, that Seth Wetmore subscribed for only 100,000 acres. That between the date of said agreement, and the complete delivery of said notes to him, many changes were made in the amounts and purchasers from those in the 229* schedule; *that it appears by an account of said notes and scrip, kept by the defendant (a true copy of part whereof was annexed), that defendant received from Seth and Samuel Wetmore, notes to the amount of $25,760, together with scrip of company, to amount of $11,740, making $37,500, which is the purchase money of 375,000 acres, and therefore Seth and Samuel were interested in the purchase to that amount. Whether notes were made jointly by them, or as principal and indorser, could not answer, but believes jointly, because, in said amount in other instances he distinguished whether drawers or indorsers. That he took an oath before commissioners, that said notes were not taken on any other account than purchase money of said land. And avers the same in answer; and therefore, whether Seth or Sammel were joint drawers, or one drew and the other indorsed, or were reciprocally drawers and indorsers for each's part, or whether Seth was really interested to the amount of the notes, cannot answer; but insists, that being in his hands, and given for no other consideration, whether given for his own interest or that of another, was immaterial, and the decree was right. That, after passing the first decree, defendant was summoned as witness before the board, and required to deliver up all vouchers, papers, notes, scrip, and accounts, touching purchase by the N. E. M. L. Company; he complied, and the commissioners stated an account between him and the G. M. Company, leaving a balance of $24,631.90 in his favor. In stating the account, the G. M. commissioners credited the N. E. M. L. Company with the total amount of sales to the company, deducting *a number of [*230 acres of W. Williamson, and debited the company thus: (1) For 292 full scrip of said company, which scrip was received by defendant, in payment for part of the purchase money, engaged to be paid by members of the N. E. M. L. Company; and it having depreciated in consequence of the repeal of the act of Georgia, and purchased by the members of the N. E. M. L. Company, at a low price, was received in payment as aforesaid, by defendant, at their original value. (2) For amount of unpaid notes, as delivered to commissioners. (3) For said company's proportion of loss on notes of members of the N. E. M. L. Company, consequent to compromise, to which he was compelled by said repeal, nine-tenths of which loss only was charged to said company, the other upon defendant's commissions. (4) For amount of scrip of N. E. M. L. Company, delivered up to commissioners. (5) For commissions at 10 per cent. on sales to the N. E. M. L. Company; and that the commissioners by decree (copy exhibited) awarded said balance to defendant, and issued to him a certificate for so much indemnity; which sum was the whole amount of the indemnity received by defendant, or any other person for him on his own account, or the account of any persons or company whatever. Insisted, that said decree is wholly irreversible; and defendant having received the amount of indemnity, as agent of the G. M. Company, could not be called upon to account to complainants. Admits that indemnity was reserved upon 957,600 acres, on account of notes unpaid, but never allowed to defendant, as stated in bill. Avers the same was the true amount of unpaid notes. That according to the *schedule annexed [*231 to bill of certificates surrendered by individuals, it is certified that the total amount so surrendered was upon 2,795,017 acres; but whether said schedule is a true list, or whether the amount stated is the true amount, defendant is ignorant. As to the amount of certificates by members represented by complainants, defendant is ignorant; but avers, there was no allowance to him, nor was there a reservation of indemnity for 107,600 acres too much, but the excess (if any) between the total amount of acres reserved for individuals, or for unpaid notes, together with the amount represented by plaintiffs, and the original purchase, is owing to error in amount surrendered by individuals, or the amount represented by plaintiffs.

Wheat. 7.

Edward Stow, a witness examined on the part of the plaintiff, testified, that the agent of the Georgia Mississippi Company, and the members of the N. E. M. L. Company, agreed, that the deed of the land purchased of the former, should remain, for certain purposes, an escrow; and on the failure of Seth Wetmore to pay his notes of $10,000 for his 100,000 acres of land, the defendant, Jackson, as agent of the G. M. Company, declined delivering said deed to the N. E. M. L. Company, unless they would agree to deliver him, or some other agent of the G. M. Company, certificates for 103,480 acres, in the stock of the N. E. M. L. Company; and in consequence thereof, they entered into a contract with the defendant, Jackson, on the 10th of December, 1796, to deliver to him, or some other such agent, said certificates; but, as they have never been demanded, the certificates have 232* never been issued. In said contract *the defendant, Jackson, stipulated to account with the N. E. M. L. Company, for such sums as he might recover from the notes. The amount of the expenses incurred by the company, when the directors' accounts were exhibited to the commissioners, in 1815, was, in Mississippi stock, $153,030.90, and in specie, $20,744.36; but $1,500 was by them deducted from the last sum, which had been charged to support the future expenses of the company. In part of such expenses, in Mississippi stock, the company received from their agents, on account of the proportionate part thereof, due from the proprietors, who surrendered individually their certificate to the commissioners, $36,355 22-100, 10-100, in certificates of that stock; and for the debt incurred in specie, $4,688.26, in specie. Seth Wetmore, in and by the contract of the 26th January, 1796, between the defendant Jackson and Williamson, agents of the G. M. Company, of the one part, and the N. E. M. L. Company, of the other part, signed and executed the same, as proprietor of 100,000 acres of land, in said company, and no more; and a deed was executed to him by the committee of the commissioners for that number of acres; and he appeared, by the records and books thereof, to be a proprietor of that number and no more. The number of certificates, on which the indemnity was received from the commissioners, by individual proprietors of the company, was 262, and the number of acres, 2,795,017. The whole number of acres of land, in the N. E. M. L. Company, was 11,380,000; the indemnity on 957,600 acres of which was awarded to Jackson and others, being $130,445.12. The 233* indemnity on *2,795,017 acres was awarded to certain proprietors of the company, who surrendered their certificates individually, being 380,681 31-100 54-100. The indemnity on the remaining 7,627,383 acres was awarded to the N. E. M. L. Company, being 1,038,849, 56-100 46-100; which was on 107,600 acres less than it was entitled to, as the numbers of acres held by the proprietors represented by the directors, was, at the time said awards were made, and now is, 7,734,983 acres; and there could be no error in the number, as the books have been regularly kept. The witness being interrogated whether among the notes surrendered to the commissioners by defendant, there were any notes of Seth Wetmore, answers, that at the request of the directors, the secretary of the commissioners at Washington had transmitted to them copies of ten notes, amounting together to $25,760, signed by Seth and Samuel Wetmore; and it was understood from him that they made a part of the notes presented by the defendant, Jackson, to the commissioners, and represented by him to have been unpaid by the signers of them; but whether the notes were received by any members of the N. E. M. Land Company, in payment of the land they purchased of the G. M. Company, the deponent could not answer. The expenses of the N. E. M. L. Company, since its accounts were exhibited to the commissioners, exceed $4,000, and are daily accumulating. Besides, the members of the company represented by the directors, have been obliged to pay upwards of $80,000 in Mississippi stock, out of their own indemnity to the holders of the certificates *in the [234 company which were considered bad by the commissioners.

Being cross-examined, the witness stated, that S. Dexter and B. Joy appeared before the commissioners as agents of the N. E. M. L. Company, and exhibited the accounts of the company, showing the amount of the expenses incurred in the pursuit of its claims, and endeavored to obtain a full proportion of the said expenses from the individual proprietors who had surrendered their scrip, but did not succeed in this endeavor; as in the apportionment of the expense, a manifest error was committed, it being apportioned on 11,380,000 acres, when it ought to have been apportioned on 1,138,000 minus 957,609 acres, viz., on 10,422,400 acres; the commissioners exempting the indemnity awarded to the defendant, Jackson, and others, on account of the said 957,600 acres, from the payment of any part of the expenses incurred by the company. The witness repeated the same statement respecting the proprietary interest of Seth Wetmore, as is contained in his direct examination, with this addition, that Wetmore signed the deed of trust to the trustees of the company, as a proprietor therein, of 100,000 acres only, and does not appear to have been a proprietor in the company at any time, in his own name, nor jointly with Samuel Wetmore, or any other person for more than said 100,000 acres of land therein, which was in his own name only. Nor does it appear by the records of the company that Samuel Wetmore in his own name, or jointly with any other person, was ever *a [235 proprietor, directly or indirectly, of the company, for any land therein.

A decree was entered in the court below dismissing the plaintiff's bill, pro forma, by consent, and the cause was brought by appeal to this court.

Mr. D. B. Ogden, for the respondent, argued, (1) That there was a defect of parties to the suit, both plaintiffs and defendants. There is no express averment that the plaintiffs are the present directors of the N. E. M. Land Company. Nor are the plaintiffs trustees in the view of a court of equity, nor the cestui que trusts. There is no example of an agent filing a bill, in his own name, for the benefit of his principal. The release to the United States, under the act of Congress, left the property a personal fund. The association has then become a mere partnership, and all the partners must be before the court.<sup>1</sup> So also as to the defendant; he is a mere agent of the Georgia Mississippi Company. His principals ought therefore to be made parties defendants; and if it be insisted that the defendant is personally liable as having received money to the use of the plaintiffs, an action at law would lie for money had and received. (2) Even if all the proper parties were now before the court, the decrees of the commissioners, acting within the sphere of their authority, would be conclusive. In the former decision of this court connected 236*] with the same *subject, the true distinction is stated that, as to the party there suing, and as to the subject-matter of that suit, the decrees of the board were res inter alios acta.<sup>2</sup> But here the case was within their jurisdiction under the very terms of the act of Congress; the same parties were heard before them, as to the same controversy; and it would overthrow all sound principles to permit their decision to be attacked either directly or collaterally.

Mr. Webster, contra, insisted, (1) That the plaintiffs were sufficiently described in the bill as directors, and that it was within the discretion of a court of equity, where the parties were numerous, to permit some to sue for all. Such is the practice in the familiar case of parishioners, societies, commercial companies, and others of the kind. But here the plaintiffs are trustees of the fund which has been produced by selling the land. Besides, the equity jurisdiction of the federal courts would be imperfect, and incompetent to the purposes of justice, unless parties merely formal were dispensed with. As all the parties on one side must be citizens of one state, and all the parties on the other side citizens of another, this court has held that the Circuit Court may dispense with merely formal parties, wherever the real merits of the cause can be determined, without essentially affecting the interest of absent persons.<sup>3</sup> (2) The plaintiffs are not concluded by the decrees of the commissioners. The former 237*] decision of this *court proceeded entirely upon the ground that their decrees were not conclusive, and it cannot be reconciled to the notion of their conclusiveness.<sup>4</sup> Besides, an accurate examination of the acts of Congress will show that the present case was not within the jurisdiction of the commissioners. Here the learned counsel entered into a minute analysis of the statutes, in order to support this position.

Mr. Justice LIVINGSTON delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was commenced in the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, where a decree, pro forma, was pronounced dismissing the bill, from which sentence the present appeal is taken.

From the very great and unusual length of the appellants' bill, and the generality of its prayer, which points to no particular relief, it is not easy to say to what extent they originally contemplated a decree against the respondent.

The material facts of this case are the same with those in the case of Brown v. Gilman (4 Wheat. Rep., 255). In addition to the detail there given it appears that Jackson, who had been agent of the Georgia Company, had in his possession on the 29th of June, 1815, certificates of the New England Company, to the extent of 691,677 acres, which came into his hands as follows: Several of the notes which had been given by members of the New England Company being dishonored, or the parties insolvent, *it was proposed by them to Jackson. [238 and acceded to by him, as agent as aforesaid, that such notes should be returned to the makers, on their transferring to him an equivalent amount in lands of the scrip or certificates of the New England Company; such certificates were accordingly transferred to him, for the number of acres just mentioned, whereupon notes equal in value, computing the land at ten cents per acre, were delivered up by Jackson. For this number of acres an indemnity was reserved by the first decree of the commissioners, out of the whole indemnity claimed by the New England Company, no part of which appears ever to have been received by Jackson as a person entitled to any portion of the indemnity, as such an indemnity was also reserved for the certificates in the New England Company, issued to such purchasers as appeared not to have paid the purchase money to the Georgia Company. The deduction on this account from the indemnity awarded to the New England Company, amounted to $130,425.12, and was made because the commissioners were of opinion that such certificates were void, and that the parties claiming under them should lose their indemnity; or, in other words, that the Georgia Company had a lien to that extent on the lands which had been sold to the New England Company.

It appears, further, that neither Jackson, nor any one for him, ever did receive certificates for the said sum of $130,425.12, nor for any part thereof, on behalf of the said Georgia Company, *or any of them, or for him- [239 self, he not being then a member thereof; and that he never did, at any time whatever, receive any part or portion of the indemnity provided by Congress, nor certificates for any portion thereof, save for the amount due to him on the balance of his account as agent for the Georgia Company, which was settled by the commissioners at $24,831.90; that for the amount allowed to the Georgia Company as an equivalent for the unpaid notes aforesaid, and also for the scrip taken back by Jackson, as agent as aforesaid, in payment of other notes, the members of that company who were entitled to the sums so deducted did separately apply to, and did receive from the commissioners, certificates entitling them to their respective proportions of the indemnity so awarded in their favor; and that the notes before mentioned, and the scrip received in lieu of those which were given up,

1.—2 Bro. Ch. Cas. 331.

2.—Brown v. Gilman, 4 Wheat. Rep. 255; S. C. 1 Mason, 191.

3.—Russell v. Clark's Ex'rs, 7 Cranch, 98.

4.—Brown v. Gilman, 4 Wheat. Rep. 255. Wheat. 7.

were by the commissioners' orders delivered by Jackson into their hands.

This suit appears to have been suggested by the judgment of this court in the case of Brown v. Gilman; and a belief on the part of the plaintiffs, that Jackson had received the whole sum of $130,425.12, awarded to the Georgia Mississippi Land Company, on account of the notes which had been given to them, by the members of the New England Land Company, and which remained unpaid by them, and also, the indemnity for the 691,677 acres aforesaid. Although there be no specific prayer in the bill to have these sums decreed to the complainants, 240* it is difficult to perceive any *other adequate objects of litigation between these parties. As these grounds of relief were not much insisted on at the bar, the court might be justified in considering them as abandoned, and pass at once to an examination of the appellants' title to the whole or any part of the sum which was awarded to the respondent, and received by him as agent of the Georgia Mississippi Company. But as all the facts which exist in the case are probably before us, and as the appellants may expect an opinion on the whole of their bill, which may also prevent future litigation, not only between the parties now here, but between the appellants and the Georgia Company, and the individual members of these two companies, it may be useful to inquire whether the appellants have any remedy either against Jackson, or the members of the Georgia Company, collectively or individually, in consequence of any alleged mistake in distribution or apportionment of the sum allowed by government, for the indemnification of claimants of public land in the Mississippi territory. A proper decision of this question will depend not so much on an examination of the correctness of the several acts and doings of the commissioners, as of the powers conferred on them by law; for as no appeal is given by any of the acts of Congress on this subject, to any other tribunal, and as all the parties concerned have submitted to their jurisdiction, this court claims no right to review or disturb any judgment or decision, in any of the cases in which they have acted, within the authority delegated to them. Considering, indeed, the very great inconvenience 241* which would result from a different course, and the fruitful source of litigation, which would be opened between the parties whose rights have been settled by them, if their decision were not conclusive, the court would feel reluctant unless in a very clear case, to say that they had transcended the limits prescribed them by the legislature.

The first law on this subject is that of the 31st of March, 1814. By this act, it is declared, that every person, or persons, claiming public lands under the act of the state of Georgia, passed 7th of January, 1795, who have exhibited the evidence of their claims to the Secretary of State, conformable to a preceding act of Congress, shall be allowed until the first Monday of January then next, to deposit in his office a sufficient legal release of all such claim or claims to the United States, and the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney-General of the United States, for the time being, were thereby constituted a board of commissioners to adjudge and determine upon the sufficiency of such releases, and, also, to adjudge and finally determine upon all controversies arising from such claims so released, which might be found to conflict with, and to be adverse to, each other. On the 23d of January, 1815, a supplemental act was passed, by which the President of the United States was authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, to appoint three persons to act as commissioners under the former law, in place of the two secretaries and the Attorney-General, who were to execute all the powers granted to, and to *perform all the duties enjoined [242 upon the original board of commissioners. The persons thus appointed were, from time to time, to certify and report to the President of the United States, as to the sufficiency of the releases which should be made, and the claims which they should finally adjudge and allow. By a third act, passed the 3d of March, 1815, the commissioners are authorized to admit, and finally settle, all such claims as have been, or may be, within the time limited, duly released, assigned, and transferred to the United States. And the President is authorized, from time to time, to cause to be issued such certificates of stock as are specified in the first act and the supplement thereto, to such claimant or claimants, whose claim may be decided and reported by the commissioners, on receiving such report in relation to such claim from the commissioners.

The court will now proceed to examine those proceedings of the commissioners, which are complained of by the appellants, which, it is believed, will be found to be not only within the spirit, but within the letter of the powers expressly delegated to them.

One ground of complaint is, that there was deducted from the indemnity allowed to the New England Company, a sum equal in value to 691,677 acres, on account of scrip of this company, then in the hands of the respondent, and which had been delivered to him in payment of notes which had been dishonored, or the parties to which had become insolvent. It cannot be a question that the holders of these *scrip, whether Amasa Jackson, the [243 Georgia Company, or any other person, had as just and valid a claim for the quantity of land therein mentioned, upon the indemnity set apart by Congress, as the New England Company would have had for the same scrip, if they had not been assigned to Jackson. Their returning to the hands of the original vendors, or their agent, could make no difference. The holder or holders, whoever they might be, could not but be regarded within the obvious and plain meaning of the act of the 31st of March, 1814, as a person or persons having a claim on the lands in question; and the commissioners could not, without a violation of duty, have refused to take cognizance of it. It might have been a question, whether the stock which was a portion of the indemnity intended for the Georgia Company, as the holder of these certificates, should not have been transferred for their use, to the directors of the New England Company; that, however, was a subject on which the commissioners were competent to decide, as well as on the validity of the claim itself. There is nothing in the conduct of the commissioners, in this particular, inconsistent with the act under which they were sitting; on the contrary, the act appears to contemplate a settlement by them of an individual, as well as of a company or joint claim; for the President is to issue certificates to such claimant or claimants, whose claim may be decided and reported by the commissioners. All the commissioners had to do was to decide on the validity of the claims, however subdivided, and to determine on the sufficiency 244* of the release made by such *claimant to the United States. The court is, therefore of opinion, that this claim was clearly within the jurisdiction of the commissioners, and that their award on the subject is final and conclusive.

The next subject of complaint in the appellants' bill, is the award of the commissioners that the indemnity upon 957,600 acres, amounting to $130,425.12, should be deducted from the amount claimed by the New England Company, on account of certificates issued by that company to purchasers who had not paid their notes to the Georgia Mississippi Company. These scrip the commissioners determined to be void, and that the parties claiming under them should lose their indemnity. The Georgia Company, thinking they had a lien on the lands sold by them to the New England Company, to the extent of the same thus unpaid, appear, as well as the New England Company, as claimants before the commissioners, who, being of opinion that the former were entitled to the indemnity, pro tanto, decreed accordingly. A decision of this question was also clearly within the power of the commissioners. The act made no distinction between an equitable or a legal claimant. To satisfy the words of the act, it is sufficient that both parties were claimants, and if these claims were found to conflict with, and to be adverse to each other, as was the case here, the commissioners were to adjudge, and finally to determine on them. On this point, also, the court is of opinion that the decision of the commissioners, as between the New England and Georgia Company must be regarded as conclusive. Nor does this opinion in any degree conflict, as has been supposed, 245* with our decision in *the case of Brown v. Gilman. It is true that the court, in that case did say, that the lands which had been granted to the New England Company were exempt from any lien of the Georgia Company, notwithstanding the non-payment of these notes, to which opinion it still adheres; it was not, however, on that ground, or with any view of disturbing the decision of the commissioners, that it decreed in favor of Mrs. Gilman. This decision proceeded on the ground, not of an error in the commissioners, but of a wrong done to Mrs. Gilman by the New England Company, in the distribution which they made of the indemnity awarded to them. This court thought that the sum deducted by the commissioners from the indemnity claimed by the New England Company, was chargeable on the fund generally, and not individually on the share of Mrs. Gilman. Her share was exempted from bearing the whole of the loss, because, according to the laws of the association of the New England Company, she had received a certificate which on its very face purported to be, and was regarded as complete evidence of title, whether the person from whom she had purchased had paid his note or not. After issuing to her a certificate in the form which had been devised, in order to render them more valuable, and to enable the holders the more easily to dispose of their interest, the court thought that whatever the commissioners might think proper to do, as between the two companies, the New England Company was bound to let Mrs. Gilman in for a portion of the indemnity awarded to them, notwithstanding *a failure of [246 payment by any person under whom she claimed.

If the court be correct thus far, there is an end of every demand by the appellants on the respondent; for if the commissioners had a right to make the deductions which they did from the indemnity claimed by the New England Company, it can be of no importance to them how the stock, which has thus been deducted, has been disposed of. But even if the commissioners had exceeded their authority, and improperly awarded the sums which they did to the Georgia Company, it would be difficult to afford the appellants any relief against the respondent. He has received nothing more than the sum awarded to him for his services as agent of the Georgia Company. Whether this sum were too small or too large, is a matter between him and that company; but it cannot here be a proper inquiry out of what fund it was paid. If any persons could be liable to the appellants for a mistake of the commissioners, it ought to be shown in whose favor the deduction from the indemnity claimed by the New England Company was made, and not those to whom the stock awarded to them may have been transferred, in satisfaction of the debt of the company. This would be giving what the court would not be disposed to do, even if the proceedings of the commissioners were not conclusive to the New England Company, a lien on the stock awarded to the Georgia Company, into whose hands it may be passed.

It is also stated in the bill, that 107,600 acres have been allowed to Jackson, which, even upon the principles *established by the [247 commissioners, were too much, and that this sum amounted to $14,655.12, and this sum it is alleged, ought to be decreed to the appellant. It is a sufficient answer to the allegation to say, that there is no proof of such allowance being made to the respondent, and that his answer, which is uncontradicted, denies that he ever received it. As to the allegation of his being liable for $1,163.90, for his portion of expenses chargeable on his stock in the New England Mississippi Land Company, and for the sum received as indemnity on Seth Wetmore's purchase beyond the amount of his notes, the same answer may be given. It does not appear that he ever was a member of the New England Company; and by his answer, which stands uncontradicted, the court is informed that he never received out of the indemnity any other sum than the $24,831.90, which was awarded to him not as a member of either company, but for his services as agent of the Georgia Mississippi Land Company.

The court, however, does not mean to be understood as saying, that the appellants, or those who represent the New England Mississippi Land Company, may not have a remedy against the Georgia Mississippi Land Company for a contribution towards the loss which the former has sustained by the decree in favor of Mrs. Gilman, or for other losses of a similar nature. In this respect, as far as the indemnity extended, which the latter received for the scrip which they held, by their agent, Jackson, they must be considered as coming in under the New 248* England *Company, and contribute with the other members thereof, in making good what they may lose in consequence of the demands of individuals, who stand in the predicament of Mrs. Gilman, for their proportion of the indemnity actually awarded to those whose certificates of land on the New England Company were adjudged to be valid.

An objection was made by the respondent to the want of parties; but the conclusion to which the court has come renders it unnecessary to give any opinion on this point. The court, however, would have hesitated in making any decree against Mr. Jackson in the absence of his principals in whose favor the award was made, and who ought, if its merits were examinable, to have been afforded an opportunity of vindicating the grounds on which it was made.

It is the judgment of this court, that the decree of the Circuit Court dismissing the appellants' bill, be affirmed with costs.

Decree affirmed with costs.

[LOCAL LAW.]

BLUNT'S LESSEE v. SMITH ET AL

The decision of the court below, granting or refusing a motion for a new trial, is not matter for which a writ of error lies to this court.

In Kentucky and Virginia the rule is, that a court of common law cannot look beyond the patent; but in Tennessee the courts of law, under their construction of the land laws of North Carolina, permit the parties in an ejectment to go back to the original entry, and connect the patent with it.

249* *This construction is not limited to a comparison of the dates of the entries, but admits of an inquiry into their legal effect as they stand in relation to each other.

The statutes of North Carolina, which have been construed to justify a court of law in considering the entry as the commencement of title, are applicable to military warrants as well as other titles.

By the decisions of the courts of Tennessee, the validity of surveys does not depend on the will or directions of claimants; and though the mistakes of surveyors may be corrected, they cannot be corrected so as to injure a subsequent adjoining enterer.

The laws of North Carolina do not require that an entry should express the water-courses and remarkable places which are remote, but only those which are contiguous, and which may assist in designating the land intended to be acquired.

Notoriety is not essential to the validity of an entry in Tennessee, as it is in Kentucky. The statute of Virginia, which is the land law of Kentucky, requires that entries shall be so special and certain that any subsequent locator may know how to appropriate the adjacent residuum. But the land law of North Carolina contains no such provision, and the doctrine which requires notoriety as well as identity, has never been received in Tennessee.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of West Tennessee.

This was an action of ejectment, brought by the plaintiff in error, in the Circuit Court, against the defendants in error, to recover the possession of lands in the state of Tennessee. The title of the plaintiff, as spread upon the record, originated in an entry made on the 17th of March, 1785, in the following words: "General Sumner enters 12,000 acres of land, lying east of the upper south road, between the head of Mile Creek, Little Harpeth, and Stewart's Creek, and on the waters of some of the aforementioned creeks, including some deadened trees, marked I. F." The deadened trees were never found. On this entry a patent was issued by the state of North Carolina, on the 27th day of April, 1793, to which *was attached [*250 a plat and certificate of survey purporting to be made by Thomas Malloy, a deputy-surveyor, on the 20th of November, 1786.

The defendants claimed under a patent issued to William Tyrrell, assignee, on the 10th of April, 1797. This grant was founded on an entry made in the name of John Gee, on the 1st of June, 1785, in the following words: "John Gee, heir of Captain James Gee, enters three thousand eight hundred and forty acres of land, lying and adjoining the northern boundary of Brigadier-General Jethro Sumner, running west along his line for complement."

The defendants gave in evidence the record of a former trial in ejectment for the same land, in which the verdict and judgment were against the plaintiffs, and the testimony of Burklely Pollock, a witness examined at that trial, who is since dead, and who swore that he made the survey for General Sumner before Gee's entry was made. A copy of the plat and certificate of survey made by Pollock, and recorded in the Secretary's office of North Carolina, properly authenticated, was also given in evidence. By the plat and certificate of survey, it appears that the land of Sumner was laid off by Pollock, in a parallelogram, the base or first line of which extending from west to east, was 1292 poles, and the side lines 1486 poles. The patent which was issued on the plat and certificate, returned by Malloy, had the same base line, but the side line is extended to 1737 poles, and the survey is said to include 2,026 acres, belonging to Lieutenant Thomas Pasteur.

*The defendants also gave in evidence [*251 copies of a petition presented to the General Assembly of North Carolina, at their session held in November, 1786, by the guardian of the plaintiff, praying that a separate warrant might be issued to the heirs of General Sumner for the quantity of land included in his survey to which Lieutenant Pasteur had a prior title, and the proceedings of the legislature, granting the prayer of the petition. The defendants also gave in evidence a certified copy of a certificate granted by the Commissioners of West Tennessee to the heirs of General Sumner, for so much land as was equal to the quantity lost by the prior title of Lieutenant Pasteur, and a copy of the testimony on which this certificate was founded.

To the admission of all these copies, it is stated in the bill of exceptions the plaintiff's counsel objected, but his objections were overruled, and the papers were read.

Some testimony was offered by the defendants, to prove that in the survey of Sumner's land

Wheat. 7.

Note.—See note to Watts v. Lindley's heirs, ante, 158.

by Pollock, a second as well as the first line was run, and corner trees marked at the end of that line, so as to fix the northern boundary of Sumner's land; but other testimony was offered by the plaintiff to prove that only the first line, which established the southern boundary, was run.

After the testimony was closed, the counsel for the plaintiff moved the court to instruct the jury, "that they should not regard the said copies from the secretary's office of North Carolina, and of the proceedings before the Commissioners of West Tennessee as having 252"] any effect in the said cause; and that the entry in the name of Gee, on which the grant to Tyrrel purported to be founded, could not be located as a special entry to any place, or if to any place, only to the northern boundary of Sumner's land on which the grant was founded, as granted and described in the plat and certificate;" but the judge refused so to instruct the jury, but informed them that all said documents, except the proceedings before the commissioners, which should have no weight in the cause, should be considered as testimony by them; and that the plat and certificate made by Pollock, if he marked no more of the corners and lines of Sumner's tract, but the southern boundary, and south-east corner and south-west corner, would show, by calculation, where the northern boundary of his tract should be according to the said plat, and locate said Sumner's entry and land to the south of that line, and fix said entry in the name of Gee to the north of that line, and make it special from the date of the survey made by Pollock for that place; and that the grant to Tyrrel, although founded on a survey made long after the grant to Sumner was issued, should relate back to the date of said entry, and give a good title to those holding under the said grant to the land north of the north boundary as represented in the plat, &c., made by Pollock, against the title derived from Sumner's grant and entry; and that Sumner's grant should be considered as made on a removed warrant, for all the land north of what is represented in said plat, made by Pollock, as his northern boundary."

253"] **Mr. Gaston*, for the plaintiff in error, argued, that the practice which prevails in the state of Tennessee, of permitting a younger to compete with an elder grantee in ejectment, by reason of the elder and better entry of such younger grantee, was admitted in the Tennessee adjudications to be an usurpation on the part of the courts of law introduced since the year 1798, and now too long established to be questioned.<sup>1</sup> All agree that this innovation is not to be carried beyond its ascertained limits.<sup>2</sup> To this well-meant but impolitic assumption of power in their courts of law is ascribed, with one voice, the fatal uncertainty of the Tennessee land laws.<sup>3</sup> The eldest grant is esteemed conclusive evidence of title except in the single case of an elder legal entry.<sup>4</sup> And every species of evidence to make a younger compete with an elder grant, shall be rejected except the entry.<sup>5</sup> The acts of North Carolina of 1786, c. 20, and 1787, c. 23, are the only statutes authorizing a court of law to go beyond the grant in the examination of land claims, and under these the courts have gone far enough, to say the least of it, when they look to the entry.<sup>6</sup> Under these statutes, declaring an elder grant founded on a younger entry *void, the [254 Tennessee courts have decided that the priority of entries is examinable at law, and that a junior patent founded on a prior entry shall prevail in an action of ejectment against a senior patent founded on a junior entry; but this doctrine has never been extended beyond the cases which have been construed to be within the express purview of these statutes.<sup>7</sup>

It must be conceded, that in some of the Tennessee decisions military grants have been regarded as liable to the application of the same rule of preference from priority of entry or locations, as had been established in cases of grants founded on ordinary entries. It is difficult to say, when an error shall be deemed too inveterate to be corrected. Perhaps this may be the case with respect to the application of this rule to military grants. If it be not, nothing can be more easy than to show, that admitting the rule to be correct, military grants ought not to be brought within the sphere of its operation. The act of 1777, c. 1, opened a land-office in North Carolina for the sale of vacant and unappropriated lands. The 4th and 5th sections prescribe as terms and conditions of the sale, payment by the purchaser of the required price, and a description in writing specifying the quantity and defining the situation of the land which he buys. This land-office was shut by the act of 1781, c. 7. It was again opened by the act of 1783, c. 2, entitled "An act for opening the land-office, for the redemption of *specie and other certificates [255 and discharging the arrears due to the army." The 10th and 11th sections of this act require that the individual wishing to enter a claim for vacant land, shall pay the price of it to the entry-taker, and deliver a writing signed with his name, setting forth where the land shall be situated; and that the entry-taker shall endorse this written claim (or location) with the name of the claimant, and record it in his entry-book, and in due time shall issue to the surveyor a warrant commanding him to survey for the claimant the land described in such entry. When the act of 1777 was passed, an appropriation of lands as a retribution for military service had not been contemplated, and the act of 1783, above referred to, expressly excepts from entry (sec. 12) all lands lying within the bounds reserved for the officers and soldiers of the continental line. The act of 1779, c. 6, which was also passed before an appropriation of lands for military services, directs the surveyor, where entries interfere (sec. 6), to survey the eldest entry first. The act of 1783, above referred to, under which military lands are forbidden to be entered, provides that

1.—Wilson v. Kilcannon, 1 Tenn. Rep. 205.

2.—1 Tenn. Rep. 409, 411; 2 Tenn. Rep. 153, 154; 1 Cooke's Rep. 32; 5 Hayw. Rep. 402.

3.—2 Tenn. Rep. 17; 5 Hayw. 102; Polk's Lessee v. Wendel, 5 Wheat. Rep. 302.

Wheat. 7.

4.—1 Cooke's Rep. 133.

5.—Reid v. Buford, 1 Tenn. Rep. 420.

6.—Lester v. Craig, 1 Cooke's Rep. 485, 487.

7.—Robinson v. Campbell, 3 Wheat. Rep. 221.

all the warrants for entries shall be delivered by the entry-taker to the surveyor on certain prescribed days, and that the surveyor shall proceed in his surveys in the order of the numbers and dates of the entries. All these enactments proceed upon the obvious principle that the first person who has bought and paid for any particular tract of land shall be entitled to a grant for it. The act of 1786, c. 20, and the act of 1787, c. 23, "from which alone the courts of law claim an authority to go beyond the 256]" grant in "the examination of land claims, and beyond the express purview whereof this doctrine ought not to be carried,"<sup>1</sup> are each of them, in title—in preamble—in express enactment, definitively restricted, in this respect, to entries of vacant and unappropriated lands under the acts of 1777 and 1783.

By an act of Assembly of May, 1780, referred to in the 7th section of the act of 1782, a certain tract of country was reserved to be appropriated to the purpose of rewarding the bravery and zeal of the continental officers and soldiers in the service of the state of North Carolina. By the act of 1782, c. 3, entitled, "An act for the relief of the officers and soldiers of the continental line, and for other purposes," it is enacted that these officers and soldiers shall severally have such a number of acres of land, varying according to rank in a certain ratio specified in the act, and preliminary measures are directed to be taken for exploring and laying off the lands out of which this military bounty, or rather military debt, shall be satisfied. By the act of 1783, c. 3, entitled, "An act to amend the last-mentioned act," it is declared that the persons entitled to military grants under the act referred to shall, on application to the Secretary of State, receive from him warrants of survey for such quantities of land as they are respectively entitled to "within the limits of the lands reserved for the officers and soldiers," directed to a surveyor appointed for that special purpose. No previous entry is required from a *military claimant, and the warrant of survey is restricted only by the boundaries of the territory set apart for the satisfaction of military claims. In endeavoring to pay the debt of gratitude due to her brave defenders, the state recognizes no priority of merit among them. The consideration for these grants has been received from all, and from all at the same time. There is no first or second purchaser among them, nor has there been a purchase of any particular lands, but only of specified quantities of land. To prevent disputes which might arise between two or more of them wishing to have their warrants satisfied at the same place, only two provisions are made; one that the choice shall be decided by lot, and the other, that he who has assented to his brother soldier's location, shall not afterwards interfere with it. No enactment was ever made that the warrants of survey should all be delivered at prescribed times, nor that they should be surveyed in the order of their dates or numbers, nor that grants founded on younger warrants should be void. Until the act of sess. 1 of 1784, c. 15, entitled "an act to amend the act of 1782, c. 3," no mode whatever had been provided by which a memorandum of the military locations should be preserved. That act directed that the surveyor to whom the military warrants were directed should keep a book containing a minute of the name of the military claimant, number of his location, number of his warrant, of the quantity of acres, date, and description of his location. The necessity of some such memorial, as a check upon the officers of government and preventive of fraud, is too manifest to [*258 require any other reason to be given for this statutory provision. But to declare that because such statutory provision is made, that, therefore, the positive and special enactments which have been made in regard to entries in the general land-office, shall obtain in these locations, and that enactments thereafter to be made, restricted in terms to the former, shall be law also in regard to the latter, may pass for anything as well as for judicial exposition.

If, however, this court should consider such judicial exposition as established, the inquiry then distinctly presents itself, can Tyrrel's grant claim a preference over Sumner's grant, to which it is younger, by reason of Gee's better entry? The entry to which is allowed the extraordinary property of causing the grant subsequently issued to have legal operation from the date of the entry, is on all hands required to be a "special entry." It has been found a difficult matter to define this "specialty" with precision. The circumstances which make up this specialty are either such as are fitted to identify the entry, or to give it notoriety; and an entry is not now acknowledged as a special entry unless notoriety and identity both concur.<sup>2</sup> In regard to the identity of an entry, this must depend on facts existing at the date of the entry, and appearing on its face, or to be collected by plain inference from those which do appear on its face. The notoriety of an entry is a different affair. Occurrences happening after an *entry has been made [*259 may render it very notorious, although but little known before. But no subsequent occurrences can have any effect upon the identity of an entry. The entry is a matter of record accessible to every individual. It ought to be so definite that all who are acquainted with the country may be enabled, on an examination of it, to ascertain where it lies, and to avoid interference with it.<sup>3</sup> No act less authentic in its nature, such as a survey—no act which is not a matter of record, however notorious it may be—is considered as giving this legal notification.<sup>4</sup> In North Carolina and Tennessee, no record is made of surveys. The surveyor returns two plats to the secretary's office, one of which is kept there, and the other appended to the grant. As every individual has it in his power to procure knowledge of an entry, he is presumed to have such knowledge, and if he locate land which has been before entered, he is in the condition of a purchaser with notice of a prior equitable right, affected with a legal fraud, and trustee for the equitable owner. Land titles must rest on general principles, and

1.—3 Wheat. Rep. 221.

2.—See Dallam's Lessee v. Breckenridge, Cooke's Rep. 157.

448

3.—Anderson v. Cannon, 1 Cooke's Rep. 30, 31.

4.—Ib. 32, 33; 3 Hayw. 186, 215, 217; Wilson v. Mason, 1 Cranch, 99.

Wheat. 7.

the entry, special on its face, and made of record, is not to be supplied by other evidence of an inferior character, but which might be thought reasonably equivalent.<sup>1</sup> It would be an unwarrantable, and a most alarming extension of a principle, already carried too far, to permit an entry originally wandering to become 260* *fixed, originally vague to become specific, by matter ex post facto, and from the time of this change of character to give it the efficacy of retracting the grant to itself. The entry must, on its face, be fixed to some spot.<sup>2</sup> It is foreign from the present inquiry to examine under what circumstances a defect of notoriety in an entry, always sufficiently definite, may be remedied by subsequent occurrences, and what shall be the operation of such entry after it becomes notorious.<sup>3</sup>

Gee's entry is for 3,840 acres adjoining the northern boundary of "General Sumner, and running west along his line for complement." It contains no other words of description, and of course can only be identified by those. It calls for the northern boundary of General Sumner's—what? The plaintiff contends, of General Sumner's entry. Sumner's entry, and Gee's entry, are records of the same office, and in the same book. To this book every locator has a right to recur for the purpose of ascertaining where he may procure lands without interference with prior appropriations. A locator reads Sumner's entry, dated the 17th of March, 1785, and on the next page he meets with Gee's, dated the 1st of June, 1785, containing no other description than that it adjoins Sumner's northern boundary. It is impossible but that he should understand the latter entry as entirely depending on the former. There 261* *is no intimation to him that a survey has been made of Sumner's entry. Calling for its northern boundary, and to run west along that line gives no such hint, for all the military entries are required "to be run out at the four cardinal points of the compass either in a square or an oblong." (Act of 1784, c. 15, sec. 3.) If there has been such a survey he has not the means of seeing it—is uninstructed where to look for it. He is not apprised of the names of those who made it, or from whom he may learn what lines of it were run. He must understand the reference in Gee's entry as made to that which is accessible to him—which is spread before his eyes—to General Sumner's entry. As the object of a special entry is to enable those who examine it to ascertain where it lies, the information which such an entry necessarily conveys to the examiner must be supposed to be the information which the enterer intended to convey. Had Sumner's entry been on its face special, and fixed to a particular spot, it is impossible to deny but that Gee's entry by these words of reference would have been equally definite and special. And if a survey had been made of Sumner's entry varying from its precise requisition, Gee's entry would still have remained fixed to the spot which the record indicated—would not have followed Sumner's survey in its wanderings, nor lost its claims to specialty and certainty.

To suppose Gee's entry to refer to the northern boundary of Sumner's survey, as ascertained by Pollock's plan and certificate, is full of difficulties. It presumes that such survey had then certainly been *made, and plat [*262 and certificate returned. It presumes that these, or some of these, were known to Gee. It presumes that this plat and certificate, and survey, were so notorious that every subsequent locator would understand words of reference in a book of entries, as applying not to an entry but to a survey. Yet there is nothing to show that this alleged survey ever became notorious, even to this day. There is nothing to prove that Gee had any knowledge of this survey, or that the plat had, at the date of his entry, found its way into the secretary's office. Nor is there any testimony to show that any survey had then been made except the date of Pollock's certificate, a paper of very questionable character, produced under circumstances of great suspicion, and emanating from one who seems destitute of all claims to credit. The supposition that the words in Gee's entry refer to Pollock's plat takes for granted facts not proved; accordingly we find the court instructing the jury that this plat, if Pollock marked but one line, "would show where, by calculation, the northern boundary of Sumner's tract should be according to that plat—would make Gee's entry special from the date of Pollock's survey, and would cause Tyrrel's grant to relate back to the date of Gee's entry." Thus the court undertook to pronounce that Gee's entry was subsequent to the marking of one of Sumner's lines by Pollock, and to the legal completion of Pollock's survey. It is not necessary, and, perhaps, it is not practicable, to clear up the mystery which Pollock's plat throws over this transaction. But it would seem probable *that Pollock, having made out a plat, [*263 presented it to his immediate principal, Malloy, and that Malloy, knowing of its interference with Lieutenant Pasteur's prior right, instead of adopting this plat as his own, made a new plat and certificate, extending the second and fourth lines sufficiently far to comprehend the twelve thousand acres exclusive of Pasteur's land. Malloy's plat and certificate were duly returned to the office, for on them the grant actually issued; and it is likely that when he returned them he gave the information to Armstrong that Pollock was, in fact, to be credited for the work to which Malloy's name appeared, as it is otherwise unaccountable that any explanation to that effect should have been either given or required. Pollock had, no doubt, in conformity to the ordinary requisites of the law, prepared two plats. The one not delivered to Malloy afterwards found its way (at what time, or by what means, it is impossible to say) into the secretary's office. Is it unfair to conclude that it was not there in 1793, or otherwise Sumner's grant would have conformed to it? The grossest frauds and irregularities have taken place in the military land-office of North Carolina. These have been proclaimed by the public statutes of the state. (Acts of 1797, c. 24, and 1798, c. 14.) Pollock, whose certificate has caused all this perplexity, was examined as a witness for the defendants on a former occasion, to invalidate the plaintiff's claim. He swore to the running of Sumner's second line, and the marking of the third corner agreeably to this place. Munfee proved 264*] that Pollock did not run *the second line, nor mark the third corner. All the witnesses concurred that not a marked tree was to be found after leaving Sumner's first line; and the demonstration of nature was given to prove the falsehood of his allegation about the third corner. There was no evidence to fix the actual running of Sumner's first line more precisely than to the year 1785 or 1786. Under all these circumstances, was it not, at least, a matter of doubt whether Pollock's survey had been made—had been ratified by his superior—had been filed in the office before the 1st of June, 1785? And if the construction of Gee's entry, given by the Circuit Court, presupposed the existence of facts not ascertained, then an important inquiry was decided by the court, which belonged exclusively to the cognizance of the jury.

1.—Wilson v. Mason, Ib.

2.—1 Tenn. Rep. 407, 411, 412; Id. 505, 507.

3.—Simm's Lessee v. Dickson, 1 Cooke's Rep. 141; Baird v. Trimble, 1 Cooke's Rep. 287, 288.

If Gee's entry rests its claim to certainty upon its reference to Sumner's entry, it can advance no higher pretension than Sumner's to be regarded as a special entry. No evidence having been given of the deadened trees marked I. J., Sumner's entry is thus far fixed, "on the east side of the upper south road, between the heads of Mill Creek, Little Harpeth, and Stewart's Creek, and on the waters of some of them," and Gee's is thus far fixed "to adjoin Sumner's on the north." If the first be vague, so is the second, "fixed in an orb that flies." If the first be sufficiently special, it will apply, as well to that part of the land covered by both grants, as to that covered by Sumner's, and not comprehended within Tyrrel's. Indeed, to have surveyed Sumner's a little further to the north and 265*] west, so as to cause it to take in *more of the land covered by Tyrrel's grant, would have more nearly conformed to the entry than does the survey on which the grant has issued.

Should it be objected on the part of the defendant, that Sumner's grant issued on a second survey after a former survey made and returned, the objection will avail them nothing. Where the state has authorized the granting of lands, and a grant is made, such grant, notwithstanding any irregularities, is good against future claims.<sup>1</sup> A survey on which a grant has not issued, is no estoppel to another survey.<sup>2</sup> If a surveyor mistake in running out land, it is reasonable that he may correct that mistake before a grant issues, so that the rights of innocent third persons be not thereby injured.<sup>3</sup> Unless Gee's entry is identified to the land excluded from the first, and comprehended within the second survey, it cannot be pretended that Gee's rights were injured by such second survey. The survey on Gee's entry was made in 1796, ten years after the survey on which Sumner's grant was founded, and three years after Sumner's grant had issued; and the surveyor of Gee's entry had with him on the survey a plat of Sumner's tract representing the courses and distances as specified in the plat annexed to Sumner's grant.

From some of the facts mentioned in the bill of exceptions, it might be supposed that the parties intended to raise the question of the statute of limitations. It is believed, however, that is a question on *which this court [*266 will not give an opinion. The statute of Westminster, the 2d, 13 Edw. I., ch. 31, which gave the remedy of a bill of exceptions, emphatically confines the attention of the Court of Errors to the exception taken "and if justice cannot deny his seal, they shall proceed to judgment, according to the same exception as it ought to be allowed or disallowed." It does not appear that any opinion was given in the Circuit Court on the statute of limitations, or that it came into consideration there. The instruction to the jury was founded solely on the supposed relation of Tyrrel's grant to the date of Gee's entry, so as to overreach Sumner's prior grant. A bill of exceptions does not draw the whole matter into examination, but only the points to which it is taken, and of course must be regarded as stating such facts only as will enable the revising court to judge of the matter excepted to.<sup>4</sup> It may not be amiss, however, to state, that on this question as presented by the facts appearing on the bill of exceptions, the plaintiff claims to be entitled to recover. The Tennessee adjudications have settled that persons "beyond seas," have eight years after returning to the state, within which to make their entry, or bring their writ;<sup>5</sup> and this court has decided that the words "beyond seas" are equivalent to "without the limits of the state."<sup>6</sup> In this case it is explicitly stated that the lessor of the plaintiff never was within the limits of the state of Tennessee.

**Mr. White*, for the defendants in [*267 error, stated, that before a discussion of the main question presented by this record, the attention of the court ought to be directed to the only bill of exceptions which was either tendered in, or signed by the Circuit Court. By that it would appear, that no exception whatever was taken to the instructions given to the jury, at any time before the verdict was rendered. If the plaintiff was dissatisfied with the charge, that dissatisfaction ought to have been expressed immediately; remaining silent until the rendition of the verdict was a waiver of any exception, which might have availed the party if it had been taken immediately.<sup>7</sup> The first error assigned, as to the charge, is upon a motion for a new trial, after the refusal of which, the bill of exceptions was tendered and signed. Whether the court decided correctly or not in refusing the new trial, is a point which this court will not revise, as has been so well settled that it would only be a waste of time to refer to decisions in support of this statement.

If these preliminary objections are well taken, there is no point brought here, for examination, which can admit of any doubt.

It is to be regretted, that, from the bill of exceptions, we are not at liberty to examine the question relative to the statute of limitations.

4.—Bridgman & Holt, Show. Parl. Cases, 120 Bull. N. P. 316; Frier v. Jackson, 8 Johns. Rep. 495.

5.—2 Tenn. Rep. 341.

6.—Murray v. Baker, 3 Wheat. Rep. 541.

7.—Bull. N. P. 115.

1.—1 Tenn. Rep. 322.

2.—White v. Crocket, 3 Hayw. 183, 181.

3.—1 Tenn. Rep. 6.

It is sufficient to say that only one opinion could be entertained upon it, if it was fairly discussed.

But as it is possible that we may be mistaken 268*] *supposing that the charge of the judge below is not now before this court. Should that be the case, it is submitted that the charge was strictly correct. The line E. F. represented on plat No. 3, must be considered as between these parties the northern boundary of Sumner: (1) Because the proof shows satisfactorily, that in May, 1785, Sumner caused his entry to be surveyed by Pollock; that the corner at A. was made, the lines A. B. and B. E., were then run, and these three corners marked. A plat and certificate of this survey was made, and with the warrant, returned to the secretary's office. The moment these things were done, the surveyor was, as to this transaction, functus officio, the boundaries of Sumner's 12,000 acres were fixed, and he who then made an entry, calling to adjoin him on the north, can never be disturbed by any after act of others, changing Sumner's boundary. The defendant's entry was made on the first day of June, 1785, and his grant is to be viewed as if issued on that day because the entry on which it is issued is special.

The plaintiff is not now at liberty to say, the fact is not as I have stated; although there is a contrariety of evidence upon the fact, whether the line B. E. was run by Pollock, yet as the plaintiff excepted to the charge, the fact is to be taken most strongly against him.<sup>1</sup> But if this be not so, still it is insisted that no man can doubt the running the line A. B., and marking those two corners by Pollock, an authorized surveyor, in May, 1785. This line is now, and 269*] *has at all times been, the southern boundary of Sumner's tract. It is therefore contended, (2) That on the 1st of June, 1785, when the entry of Gee was made, he had a right to include in it any land which Sumner's entry did not notify him was included within Sumner's claim. Of what, then, was Sumner's entry notice? That Sumner had appropriated 12,000 acres which was to run north from B. as many poles as would make that quantity, and nothing more. This will stop us at E. and still make E. F. the northern boundary, which Gee calls to adjoin. The officers and soldiers had equal rights; they had each paid the same kind of consideration, and each had a right to appropriate to his own use any vacant land he could find, within the military district; and all was vacant, except that which had been either granted, or so described in an entry as to afford reasonable notice, to all others, of the spot appropriated by such entry. On the 1st of June, 1785, when Gee entered, how could he know that Sumner's boundary would be changed by extending the line from B. so as to include 14,000 acres of land, when his entry called for 12,000 only? It was impossible. Yield to the pretensions on the other side, and suppose the facts to be, as we may well suppose it, that there was a succession of entries, each calling to bound upon the north of the other, and look at the consequences. By changing Sumner's northern boundary, you change the northern boundary of each succeeding entry, and by this means there is an exchange of tracts to the northern boundary of the state, and the last is pressed into the adjoining state. *The [270 position is too mischievous to be well founded.

But it has been argued that the decisions in Tennessee, which authorize an entry to be noticed as evidence in a court of law, are founded in error, and ought not to be extended.

To those who have no knowledge of the peculiar situation of Tennessee, when North Carolina legislated upon this subject, there is plausibility in this argument; but when the situation of that country is understood, and the statutes relative to this point considered, it is believed, there can be found no ground of doubt upon the subject. It has been often examined, and for many years the point has not only been considered as decided, but decided so often, that it is settled, and settled upon principles which everyone will believe correct, who will take the trouble to examine them.

It has been further argued, that if the defendants are permitted to introduce their entry in this case it will be going farther than has been done in Tennessee.

The counsel who use this argument have not examined this subject with their usual correctness. The principle settled in every case is, that either party, plaintiff or defendant, may introduce his entry, and if that entry is special, and so describes the land afterwards granted to the enterer, that his title shall be considered as if this grant had issued on the day his entry was made.

It has likewise been insisted, that there is very little pretense for putting grants founded upon military warrants upon the same footing with those bottomed *on entries made [271 under the acts of 1777 and 1783.

But the courts have made no distinction, nor ought they to make any, that could benefit the plaintiff. If any distinction can be found, it is that there is more reason for receiving the entry in the former case than the latter. In the latter, the entry office was in North Carolina, remote from the land to be entered. In the former the office directed to be kept at Nashville, in the military district; to the end that the officers and soldiers might conveniently examine it, and become informed of previous appropriations. Upon inspecting this record, and the facts there disclosed, it must be manifest that Sumner's boundary is the line E. F. If not, how came the plaintiff by the certificate for 1808 acres of land, on account of the interference with Pasteur's? It could not have been procured, because there would have been 12,000 acres exclusive of Pasteur's claim, and no certificate could have been procured. There is, therefore, the representation to the General Assembly of North Carolina, the application to the Board of Commissioners, the testimony of many respectable witnesses, and the persuasive evidence furnished by the verdicts of three different juries, all concurring in the fact that the line E. F. is Sumner's northern boundary. Why should it be disturbed? The plaintiff now holds within that line about 11,000 acres of land, and has a land warrant, or certificate for 1808 acres in compensation for that taken by Pasteur, making in all about 13,000, and that without interfering with the defendants. They ought not to be disturbed, and the more *especially as the record shows that [272 many persons are now dead who formerly gave material evidence, and upon whose evidence the two first verdicts were founded.

1.—Bull. N. P. 117.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to a judgment in ejectment rendered in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of West Tennessee, which was brought by the plaintiffs in error. After a verdict in favor of the defendants, the counsel for the plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was refused. To the opinion of the judge, overruling the motion for a new trial, and also to his charge to the jury, the plaintiff excepted, and the cause comes on now to be heard on his exceptions.

It is well settled that this court will not revise the opinion of a circuit court, either granting or rejecting a motion for a new trial; but the exception to the charge of the judge, although taken after a motion for a new trial, may have been and probably was reserved at the time the charge was given, and will therefore be considered.

The exception to this charge of the court below, consists of two parts:

1st. To so much of it as admits the copies taken from the secretary's office of North Carolina, as evidence in the cause.

2d. To so much of it as admits the validity of Gee's entry, and gives it the preference to so much of Sumner's patent as comprehends land not embraced in Pollock's survey.

273*] *The first point seems not to have been relied on by the plaintiff's counsel in argument; and has, we think, been very properly abandoned. These documents were official copies of papers belonging to the title of the parties, taken from the office in which those papers were kept, and regularly authenticated. We perceive no ground on which the objections to their admission could be sustained. If the charge of the judge went beyond these official copies to the proceedings of the legislature, and the record of the former trial, we perceive no error in this. The former trial was between parties or privies, and the petition to the legislature was the act of the party by guardian, the resolution of the General Assembly on which, was a measure of the whole state, the effect of which in this or any other case, might be controverted, but to which all interested in it might have recourse.

The second part of the charge presents a question of more intricacy, which requires an attentive consideration of the land laws of North Carolina, and of the decisions of the courts of Tennessee.

In Kentucky and in Virginia the rule is, that a court of common law cannot look beyond the patent; but in Tennessee it is understood to be otherwise. The courts of law in that state allow the parties, in an ejectment, to go back to the original entry, and to connect the patent with it. This rule is founded on the land laws of North Carolina, which have been construed in Tennessee to permit and require it. But the plaintiffs contend that this construction has been limited to the comparison of the dates of 274*] *the entries, and admits of no inquiry into their legal effect as they stand in relation to each other.

If the question were to depend merely on its reason, it would be difficult to support the opinion that a court authorized to compare entries with each other, should not, in the exercise of this power, be permitted to examine their whole legal operation and relative effect. If it were to depend upon a construction now, for the first time, to be given to the acts of North Carolina, we should find great difficulty in maintaining that they allow the entries to be compared so far as respects dates, but no farther. The act of November, 1786, ch. 20, in its preamble, recites, that, "Whereas it is the intent and meaning of the said act" (the act for opening the land-office), "and of the act hereby revived and put in force, that the first enterers of the vacant and unappropriated lands, if specially located, therein described, shall have preference of all others," &c. The 1st section then enacts, "That every first enterer of any tract of land, specially located, lying in the western parts of this state," &c., shall have a further time for making his surveys, and that grants upon lands previously entered by any other person shall be void.

The same act allows a survey to be made on removed warrants, in cases where the warrants were originally located on lands which had been previously entered "as the law directs," by some other person, "provided such lands were at the time of such survey actually vacant, and that such survey on removed warrants shall not affect or injure the right of *any [275 lands entered, and specially located, in the office aforesaid previous to such survey."

The act of November, 1787, ch. 23, directs all surveyors to survey lands according to their priority of entry, and that every grant obtained on a subsequent entry, contrary to the provisions of that act, shall be void.

The original act had prescribed the manner of making entries, and those made in pursuance of law are considered special.

Between special entries the first is undoubtedly to be preferred; but if one entry be special and the other vague, as if one should describe the land intended to be acquired, in conformity with the act, and the other should totally omit to give a description which might designate the place, should enter 5,000 acres of land, lying in the county of A without naming any place in the county to which it might be fixed, could it be contended that, on any fair construction of the acts, this entry would prevail against one which was special, but was subsequently made? We think it could not. The acts of North Carolina appear to us to have been intended to preserve the priority of legal entries, not of those made contrary to law.

We do not think that the decisions of the courts of Tennessee establish a contrary principle. Several dicta are to be found in the cases stating the rule to be, that courts will go beyond the grant only to support a prior entry, but these dicta were applied to the exclusion of extrinsic matter, not to the exclusion of considerations belonging to the entries themselves. The title *to lands surveyed on removed war- [276 rants, has never been carried back to the entry; and on the same principle the title to lands surveyed off the entry, can have no date anterior to the patent, so far as the survey does not conform to the entry. (1 Tenn. Rep., 172, 351, 306, 413).

The effects of entries, then, as well as their dates, is considered by the courts of Tennessee.

It has also been contended that this principle ought not to be applied to military grants. The acts of North Carolina, which have been construed to justify a court of law in considering the entry as the commencement of title, are not, it is agreed, applicable to military warrants. But the act of 1786, c. 20, on which this construction is supposed to be founded, declares it to have been the intention of the act for opening the land-office, that the first enterers "shall have preference to all others in surveying and obtaining grants for the same."

We think the act which prescribes the mode of obtaining military grants manifests this intention as unequivocally as those which are referred to in the act of 1786, c. 20. It is true, as has been stated in argument by the plaintiff's counsel, that the 3d sec. of the act "for the relief of the officers and soldiers of the Continental line, and for other purposes," directs, that where two or more persons wish or claim to have his or their warrant located on the same piece of land, the parties contending shall cast lots for the choice. But this section obviously provides for applications made at the same time. The 5th section directs, that "where a warrant 277]" shall be hereafter located, without "any person making objections to such location, that such location shall be good and valid, notwithstanding the claim that may be afterwards set up by any other person."

This section, we think, manifests a clear intention to give priority of right to the prior entry; and we are not surprised that, under this act, the courts of Tennessee should comprehend military titles also in that rule which authorizes courts of law to take into view the entries of the parties. At any rate, such is the settled course of the courts of the state, and those of the United States ought to conform to it.

We think, then, that the Circuit Court committed no error in inquiring into the rights of the parties to the land in controversy, under their respective entries. It is next to be considered, whether, in making this inquiry, that court has decided erroneously.

The entry, as well as the patent of the plaintiff, being the oldest, it must prevail unless some circumstance has occurred to defeat the right given by this priority.

The defendants rely upon the survey made by Pollock as confining the entry of Sumner to that survey.

Of the existence of this survey there appears to have been no doubt, and none seems to have been entertained at the trial. The plaintiff objected to receiving the copy of the plat and certificate in evidence; but, when that objection was overruled, he contested the survey no farther. His object, then, was to show that the 278]" second line was never run. *The judge charged the jury that the plat and certificate made by Pollock, if he marked no more of the corners and lines of Sumner's tract, but the southern boundary, and south-east and south-west corner would show, by calculation, where the northern boundary of his tract should be.

Nothing can be more apparent than the correctness of this charge. The law directs, that "every tract surveyed for officers or soldiers, Wheat. 7.

shall be run out at the four cardinal points of the compass, either in a square or in an oblong." Consequently, when one line of a survey is given, the remaining three lines are found by a calculation which cannot vary. General Sumner's entry was for 12,000 acres of land. A line from west to east, constituting the southern boundary, was run, and measured 1,292 poles. Corner trees at each extremity were marked. From the end of this first line the survey calls for a line due north 1,486 poles. Had this line been actually run and marked, the tract would have been bounded by the lines actually run, and the corner trees actually marked. But, the line not having been run, the tract was bounded by the course and distance called for. Had there been no survey, had Sumner's entry been for 12,000 acres of land, to begin where the survey began, and to run east 1,292 poles, and from the ends of that line north for quantity, it must have been bounded in the same manner, because, a rectangular oblong figure, to contain 12,000 acres, one of which is 1,272 poles, must have for its other sides, lines of 1,486 poles. Of course the judge was correct in saying, that if the southern *boundary was given, the [279 northern boundary was to be found by computation.

Was he equally correct in adding, that Gee's land might be located on the north of Sumner's northern line when thus found?

We think he was.

Gee's entry called to lie, "adjoining the northern boundary of Brigadier-General Sumner, running west along his line for complement."

Sumner's northern line was, consequently, Gee's southern line.

If, then, Sumner's grant had been issued according to Pollock's survey, no interference between him and Gee could have taken place. But a plat and certificate of survey was afterwards made out by Malloy, who was also a deputy-surveyor, which extended the lines constituting the eastern and western boundary of Sumner's land, to 1,737 poles; and upon this plat and certificate his patent was issued. We must, therefore, inquire whether Pollock's survey was legally made; and, if it was, whether it could be afterwards changed, so as to affect a person making an entry in the intermediate time between his first and second survey.

The laws of North Carolina make it the duty of surveyors to survey entries in the order in which they are made, and do not require the presence or direction of the owners of the land. Pollock was a deputy-surveyor authorized to make this survey. Consequently, it was regularly made, and had all the consequences of a legal survey.

Admitting the alteration made by Malloy to be *perfectly justifiable, Gee's entry was [280 prior to that alteration; and the question is, whether such alteration can affect an appropriation previously made?

Upon the principles of reason and common justice, we could feel no difficulty on this point. But we are relieved from considering it by the decisions which have already taken place in Tennessee. In Blakemore v. Chambles (1 Tenn. Rep., 3), it was expressly determined, that the validity of surveys "has no dependence on the will or direction of claimants," and that though the mistakes of surveyors may be corrected,

"they cannot be so corrected as to injure a subsequent adjoining enterer."

Gee's entry, then, made after Pollock's survey, will, if a valid entry, hold the lands against any subsequent survey made for Sumner. But as Sumner's is the eldest grant, the validity of Gee's entry must be examined.

It calls to adjoin Sumner's northern boundary, and to run west along his line for complement.

The laws of North Carolina direct, that an entry shall express "the nearest water-courses, and remarkable places, and such water-courses, lakes, and ponds as may be therein, the natural boundaries and lines of any other person or persons, if any, which divide it from other lands."

This law cannot be construed, and never has been construed, to require that water-courses, or remarkable places which are remote, should be expressed in the entry. It requires the expression of those only which are contiguous, 281* and which may assist in showing *the land intended to be acquired. If there be no considerable water-courses, lakes, or ponds within it, the entry cannot express them. The reference to the adjoining land, when we take into view that the law directs entries to be surveyed according to their dates, would always be sufficient to make the entry special, if the line called for could be found. In Smith and others v. Craig's Lessee (2 Tenn. Rep., 296), the court said: "Previously to the year 1786, a vague entry was well understood to be one that contained no such specialty as that a majority of those acquainted in its neighborhood, at its date, could, by reasonable industry, find it; a special entry was considered the reverse. How natural is it, then, for us to suppose, that the legislature designed, in the use of this expression, in the act of 1786, to convey such ideas as had by usage and common consent been appropriated to it."

The books are full of cases containing similar expressions. It is impossible to look at all into the subject, without being satisfied that in the state of Tennessee, such an entry as that of Gee would be deemed special, if Sumner's northern boundary could be found.

There could be no difficulty in finding it, since his land had been surveyed when this entry was made.

But the great objection on which the plaintiffs most rely, is, that to constitute a special entry in the state of Tennessee, the objects called for must be notorious as well as certain. The entry must be such as to give general information of the precise lands it appropriates. Notoriety, as well as identity, are essential, 282* *it is said, to specialty, and a call for Sumner's line is not good, unless Sumner's survey was notorious.

If this proposition be correct, if notoriety as well as identity be essential to the validity of an entry in Tennessee as it is in Kentucky, then Gee's entry cannot be sustained. But the law of Tennessee, is, in this respect, entirely different from that of Kentucky. The act of Virginia, which is the land law of Kentucky, requires that entries shall be so special and certain that any subsequent locator may know how to appropriate the adjacent residuum. The land law of North Carolina, which is the law of Tennessee, contains no such provision. The lawyers of Kentucky have made some attempts to transplant into Tennessee the principles which had grown up in Kentucky; but their attempts were unsuccessful. The books are full of cases in which it is expressly decided that notoriety is not essential to the validity of an entry. In the case of Philip's Lessee v. Robertson (2 Tenn. Rep., 399), the whole subject is reviewed. Judge Overton takes a very comprehensive view of the doctrines growing out of the land laws of North Carolina, and shows conclusively that they do not require, and had never been understood in Tennessee to require notoriety, as essential to the validity of an entry. His opinion in this case has, we are informed, been confirmed by the other judges of their Supreme Court.

If notoriety be not necessary to Gee's entry, it is special according to the laws of Tennessee, and ought to hold the land it covers against any subsequent survey *made of an entry [*283 which had been previously surveyed. The judge was correct in saying that such subsequent survey must be considered as if made on a removed warrant.

Judgment affirmed with costs.

Cited—1 Wall. 598; 7 Wall. 502.

[PRIZE.]

THE SANTISSIMA TRINIDAD AND THE ST. ANDER.

The commission of a publicship of a foreign state, signed by the proper authorities, is conclusive evidence of her national character.

During the existence of the civil war between Spain and her colonies, and previous to the acknowledgement of the independence of the latter by the United States, the colonies were deemed by us belligerent nations, and entitled so far as concerns us, to all the sovereign rights of war, against their enemy.

How far and under what circumstances, the evidence of witnesses, who concur in proof of a material fact, but whose testimony is in other respects contradictory, ought to be credited in respect to that fact.

The sending of armed vessels, or of munitions of war, from a neutral country to a belligerent port, for sale as articles of commerce, is unlawful only as it subjects the property to confiscation on capture by the other belligerent.

No neutral state is bound to prohibit the exportation of contraband articles, and the United States have not prohibited it.

In the case of an illegal augmentation of the force of a belligerent cruiser in our ports by enlisting men, the onus probandi is thrown on him to show that the persons enlisted were subjects of the belligerent state or belonging to its service, and then transiently within the United States.

The 6th article of the Spanish treaty of 1795, applies exclusively to the protection and defense of Spanish ships within our territorial jurisdiction, *and provides only for their restitution, [*284 when captured within the same.

The 4th article of the same treaty, which prohibits the citizens or subjects of the respective contracting parties from taking commissions, &c., to cruise against the other, under the penalty of being considered as pirates, is confined to private armed vessels, and does not extend to public ships.

Quere, Whether a citizen of the United States, independently of any legislative act on the subject, can throw off his allegiance to his native country.

However this may be, it can never be done without a bona fide change of domicile, nor for fraudulent lent purposes, nor to justify the commission of a crime against the country, or any violation of its laws.

Whcat. 7.

An augmentation of force, or illegal outfit, does not affect any capture made after the original cruise, for which such augmentation or outfit was made, is terminated.

But as to captures made during the same cruise, the uniform doctrine of this court has been, that they are infected with the character of torts, and that the original owner is entitled to restitution, when the property is brought into our jurisdiction.

This doctrine extends to captures by public, as well as private armed ships.

Case of The Cassius (3 Dall. Rep. 121), commented on, and confirmed.

Case of The Exchange (7 Cranch, 116), distinguished from the present case.

The exemption of foreign public ships, coming into our waters, under an express or implied license from the local jurisdiction, does not extend to their prize ships or goods, captured in violation of our neutrality.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of Virginia. This was a libel filed by the Consul of Spain, in the District Court of Virginia, in April, 1817, against eighty-nine bales of cochineal, two bales of jalap, and one box of vanilla, originally constituting part of the cargoes of the Spanish ships Santissima Trinidad and St. Ander, and alleged, to be unlawfully, and piratically taken out of those vessels on the high seas by a squadron consisting of two armed 285* vessels called the Independencia del Sud and the Altravida, and manned and commanded by persons assuming themselves to be citizens of the United Provinces of the Rio de la Plata. The libel was filed, in behalf of the original Spanish owners, by Don Pablo Chacon, Consul of His Catholic Majesty for the port of Norfolk; and as amended, it insisted upon restitution principally for three reasons: 1. That the commanders of the capturing vessels, the Independencia and the Altravida, were native citizens of the United States, and were prohibited by our treaty with Spain of 1795 from taking commissions to cruise against that power. 2. That the said capturing vessels were owned in the United States, and were originally equipped, fitted out, armed and manned in the United States, contrary to law. 3. That their force and armament had been illegally augmented within the United States.

A claim and answer was given in by James Chaytor, styling himself Don Diego Chaytor, in which he asserted that he was commander of the Independencia, that she was a public armed vessel belonging to the government of the United Provinces of Rio de la Plata, and that he was duly commissioned as her commander; that open war existed between those provinces and Spain; that the property in question was captured by him, as prize of war, on the high seas, and taken out of the Spanish ships the Santissima Trinidad and the St. Ander, and put on board of the Independencia; and that he, afterwards, in March, 1817, came into the port of Norfolk with his capturing 286* ship, where she was received and acknowledged as a public ship of war, and the captured property, with the approbation and consent of the government of the United States, was there landed for safe-keeping in the custom-house store. The claimant admitted that he was a native citizen of the United States, and that his wife and family have constantly resided at Baltimore; but alleged, that in May, 1816, at the city of Buenos Ayres, he accepted a commission under the government of the United Provinces, and then and there expatriated himself by the only means in his power, viz., a formal notification of the fact to the United States Consul at that place. He denied that the capturing vessel, the Independencia, was owned in the United States, or that she was fitted out, equipped, or armed, or her force augmented, in the ports of the United States, contrary to law. He denied, also, that the Altravida was owned in the United States, or that she was armed, equipped, or fitted out in the United States, contrary to law; or that she aided in the capture of the property in question. He further asserted, that the captured property had been libeled and duly condemned as prize in the tribunal of prizes of the United Provinces, at Buenos Ayres, on the 6th of February, 1818. He denied the illegal enlistment of his crew in the United States; but admitted that several persons there entered themselves on board as seamen in December, 1816, representing themselves to be, and being, as he supposed, citizens of the United Provinces, or in their service, and then transiently in the United States; and that he refused to receive citizens of this country, and actually *287 sent on shore some who had clandestinely introduced themselves on board.

Wheat. 7

It appeared by the evidence in the cause, that the capturing vessel, the Independencia, was originally built and equipped in the port of Baltimore as a privateer, during the late war between the United States and Great Britain, and was then rigged as a schooner, and called the Mammoth, and was fitted out to cruise against the enemy. After the peace she was converted into a brig, and sold by her original owners. In January, 1816, she was loaded with a cargo of munitions of war, by her new owners, who were also inhabitants of Baltimore, and being armed with twelve guns, constituting part of her original armament, she was sent from that port under the command of the claimant, Chaytor, ostensibly on a voyage to the north-west coast of America, but in reality to Buenos Ayres. By the written instructions given to the supercargo on this voyage, he was authorized, by the owners, to sell the vessel to the government of Buenos Ayres if he could obtain a suitable price. She arrived at Buenos Ayres, having committed no act of hostility, but sailing under the protection of the United States flag during the outward voyage. At Buenos Ayres the vessel was sold to the claimant, and two other persons; and, soon afterwards, in May, 1816, assumed the flag and character of a public ship, and was understood by the crew to have been sold to the government of Buenos Ayres, and the claimant made known these facts to the crew, asserting that he had become a citizen of Buenos Ayres, and had received a commission to com- *288 mand the vessel as a national ship; and invited the crew to enlist in the same service; and the greater part of them, accordingly, enlisted. From this period, the public agents of the government of the United States, and other foreign governments at that port considered the vessel as a public ship of war, and this was her avowed character and reputation. No bill of sale to the government of Buenos Ayres was produced, but the claimant's commission from that government was given in evidence.

Upon the point of the illegal equipment and augmentation of force of the capturing vessels in the ports of the United States, different witnesses were examined on the part of the libellant, whose testimony was extremely contradictory; but it appeared from the evidence, and was admitted by the claimant, that after the sale at Buenos Ayres, in May, 1816, the Independencia departed from that port under his command, on a cruise against Spain; and after visiting the coast of Spain, put into Baltimore early in the month of October of the same year, having then on board the greater part of her original crew, among which were many citizens of the United States. On her arrival at Baltimore she was received as a public ship, and underwent considerable repairs in that port. Her bottom was new coppered, some parts of her hull were recaulked, part of her water ways replaced, a new head was put on, some new sails and rigging to a small amount, and a new mainyard were obtained; some bolts were driven into the hull, and the mainmast (which 289*) had been *shivered by lightning) was taken out, reduced in length, and replaced in its former station. For the purpose of making these repairs, her guns, ammunition, and cargo, were discharged under the inspection of an officer of the customs; and when the repairs were made, the armament was replaced, and a report made by the proper officer to the collector, that there was no addition to her armament. The Independencia again left Baltimore in the latter part of December, 1816, having at that time on board a crew of 112 men; and on or about the 8th of February following, sailed from the capes of the Chesapeake on the cruise in which the property in question was captured. During the stay of the Independencia at Baltimore, several persons were enlisted on board her, and the claimant's own witnesses proved that the number was about thirty.

On her departure from Baltimore, the Independencia was accompanied by the Altravida, as a tender or despatch vessel. This last was formerly a privateer called the Romp, and had been condemned by the District Court of Virginia for illegal conduct, and was sold under the decree of court, together with the armament and munitions of war then on board. She was purchased ostensibly for one Thomas Taylor, but immediately transferred to the claimant, Chaytor. She soon afterwards went to Baltimore, and was attached to the Independencia as a tender, having no separate commission, but acting under the authority of the claimant. Some of her guns were mounted, and a crew of about twenty-five men put on board at Baltimore 290*) more. She dropped *down to the Patuxent a few days before the sailing of the Independencia, and was there joined by the latter, and accompanied her on her cruise.

The District Court, upon the hearing of the cause, decreed restitution to the original Spanish owners. That sentence was affirmed in the Circuit Court, and from the decree of the latter the cause was brought by appeal to this court.

Mr. Winder, for the appellant, (1) argued upon the facts to show that there had been no such illegal outfit or augmentation of the force of the capturing vessel in our ports, as would entitle the original Spanish owners to restitution of the captured property, on the ground of a violation of our neutrality by the captors.

2. He argued that even supposing the claimant, Chaytor, to be a native citizen of the United States, the capture was not invalidated by the circumstance of his commanding the capturing vessel. Being a public ship of a foreign state, this court could not, upon its own principles, inquire into her conduct further than to see that she had a regular commission, signed by the proper authorities of that state.<sup>1</sup> It is perfectly consistent with the law and universal practice of nations for neutral subjects to take commissions in foreign wars.<sup>2</sup> This court has determined that an alien may command a private armed vessel of the *United States, and cruise against their [*291 enemy, though it happens to be his own native country.<sup>3</sup> So also the prize ordinance of Buenos Ayres declares, that all officers of commissioned vessels or privateers belonging to that state, although they be foreigners, shall enjoy all the privileges of citizens, whilst thus employed.<sup>4</sup>

But it may be said that the Spanish treaty of 1795 renders such an act criminal, and all its consequences void, and therefore this court cannot listen to the claim of a citizen who has thus violated the supreme law of the land.

The answer to this is, that the treaty shows the idea of the contracting parties, that independently of its stipulations, their respective citizens and subjects might take commissions to cruise against each other without violating the pre-existing law of nations. The sole effect of the treaty is, to subject them to be treated as pirates by the opposite party, if it thinks fit. It excludes them from the protection of their own government, leaves them at the mercy of the opposite party, and excuses the government of the offenders from all responsibility to the other for their misconduct. They are not made pirates by the treaty, but only made liable to be considered as such by the party against whom they act. Would not the government in whose service they held commissions, have a right to retaliate, if they were treated as pirates, either by their own government, or by that *against which they [*292 acted; since by the law of nations the belligerent might grant to them as foreigners, and they might accept the commissions?

The treaty operates only between the contracting parties, and cannot interfere with the lawful powers and rights of other nations, under the law of nations; and between the parties, it only operates to give the belligerent, so far as the neutral contracting party is concerned, a right to treat the citizen as a pirate, without complaint from his government. It dispenses the offended party, so far as the other is concerned, from the obligation to observe the rules of civilized warfare, quoad its citizen thus implicated; but it can have no effect upon the rights of the other belligerent quoad the officer of that belligerent. The party whose

1.—The Exchange, 7 Cranch, 116.

2.—Vattel, Droit des Gens, l. 3, c. 2, s. 13, 14, 16; l. 3, c. 7, s. 228, 230; Bynk. Q. J. Pub. l. 1, c. 22; Du Ponceau's Transl., p. 175.

3.—The Mary and Susan, 1 Wheat. Rep. 57.

4.—4 Wheat. Rep. Appx. Note II., 30.

citizens or subjects they are, is not bound to treat the supposed offenders as pirates, and our courts cannot so treat them in the absence of an act of Congress. The United States are not bound so to treat or consider them. They are simply bound to leave them to the discretion of Spain, and there the effect of the treaty stops. The prohibition of the treaty has its prescribed peril and effect, and cannot, at least judicially, be extended further. To make the treaty bind the United States to restore a prize made by one of its citizens under a commission from a foreign government would be to make a treaty stipulation between Spain and the United States operate to interfere with the undoubted rights of a third foreign power who is no party to the treaty. It would abridge and annul the effect of a commission, which, by the 293*] unquestioned law of nations, he had a right, within his own territory, to grant.

The acts of Congress to protect the neutrality of the United States have nothing to do with it, because none of them extend to, or pretend to extend to, the acceptance of a commission in a foreign country by a citizen of this. And the silence of Congress on the subject is a strong legislative exposition of the treaty; for in making provision to preserve the neutrality of the United States generally, and especially in relation to the contest between Spain and her colonies, they have not rendered criminal such acceptance of a commission, and as they have manifested a spirit of some severity on this subject, and are silent on such a case, it is strong evidence that Congress did not feel bound to add anything to the treaty; since, if they were bound, they would have done so in obedience to this treaty obligation of neutrality as they have done in other cases. Where the law stops, the courts of justice must stop; expressum facit tacitum cessare. The plain object of the law was, even in cases within it, to affect the offending citizen; not to affect the foreign government who employs him; or, in other words, not to authorize a judicial interference with its belligerent acts. The statute committed to the judiciary all that the legislature intended to be within their competency. The rest it reserved for national adjustment by forbearing to submit it to the judiciary. The law must be taken as it is, not expanded by inference. To put a judicial rider upon it, is to 294*] legislate. The inference which would vacate a capture under the commission would be a supplement to the law, would be to legislate on a distinct subject, i. e., the effect of a belligerent act by a foreign state. The law is a restraining law, in terrorem, aimed at the citizens only. The inference deals with a third party, a sovereign state, who is not subject to our jurisdiction; and acts in a way which the law does not prescribe; for the law authorizes nothing but the punishment of the individual. If more had been intended, more would, and ought to have been done; for the whole subject was well understood from 1794 to 1819, when the last act was passed. There is no positive municipal rule giving judicial jurisdiction as to such a commission, or any commission, even within the law, with reference to the effect of restoring a prize made under it. Every belligerent state has a right to decide upon the means of annoyance, which it organizes against its enemy within its own territory. If its commission to make war can be subject to ordinary judicial question in a neutral tribunal, where it cannot be heard and cannot condescend to appear, it is not a sovereign act. But the granting such a commission is the very highest act of sovereignty, and is peculiarly above ordinary judicial control in foreign countries. The legality, the force and effect of the commission itself, must defy ordinary judicial inquiry, or the belligerent can only authorize war so far forth as neutral tribunals shall think fit to suffer it.

Wheat. 7.

A judicial recognition of the legality of the capture in question by a court of prize at Buenos Ayres would undoubtedly have put the capture out of reach of our court. [295 But the sentence of such a court is no more a sovereign act than the granting the commission. It does but ascertain the granting of the commission, and gives to it no new force or validity. The belligerent state is just as much answerable for the wrong done to the neutral state, if any there be, in granting the commissions after the sentence as before. A judicial sentence, in a case of prize, binds for no other reason than that it is the act of the state to which the court belongs. That it is a judicial sentence is of no importance. It is the sovereignty of the state, and its right of decision which gives to the sentence its conclusive character, in the view of foreign tribunals; and all this applies equally to the act of granting a commission, within the territory of the belligerent.

All the cases of this class, which have been decided in this court, turn exclusively upon the fact of an illegal equipment of the capturing vessel within our ports, except that of The Bello Corrunes, in which the judgment does indeed refer to the national character of the claimant, Barnes, as repelling his right to claim.<sup>1</sup> But as the facts of that case will show that it might have been determined on the ground of the illegal equipment of the capturing vessel, without giving a construction to the treaty, or ascertaining the national character of the claimant, all that is said by the learned judge who pronounced the opinion of the court in that case, on these subjects, may be considered as obiter dictum.

*3. But the claimant, in the case [296 now before the court, had ceased to be a citizen, before he accepted the commission, and made the capture in question. He had expatriated himself, and become a citizen of Buenos Ayres, by the only means in his power, an actual residence in that country, with a declaration of his intention to that effect. This act is countenanced by the general usage of nations, and was not forbidden by any law of his own country. By the British law, not only are privateers and merchant vessels allowed to enlist foreign seamen, but the mere fact of two years' service during war makes them British subjects.<sup>2</sup> A resident neutral in a belligerent country is subjected to the disabilities of the country in which he resides, so far as respects the opposite belligerent, and his trade is considered liable to capture and condemnation as enemy's property. Shall he not then be entitled to the corresponding advantages of his situation? The hostile character is fixed upon him by residence even if he goes to the belligerent country, with the desire of preserving his neutral character. Shall he not then be entitled to all the advantages of that character, when it is his avowed purpose and object to acquire it? Length of time generally decides the character of the residence of a neutral to be belligerent or not; but it is taken merely as evidence of his intention, and if that intention is unequivocally manifested in any other mode, his character is instantly fixed.<sup>1</sup>

1.—6 Wheat. Rep. 125, 169.

2.—5 Wheat. Rep. Appx., Note III., 130.

297*] <sup>4</sup>4. This capture being made by a public ship, which has come into our ports, together with her prize goods, under the express permission of our government, the court cannot interfere to restore the captured property to the original owners upon the ground that the capturing vessel has committed a violation of our neutrality. The ship itself must certainly be exempt from the local jurisdiction.<sup>2</sup> And if the ship be exempt, it is difficult to perceive how any other property of the same sovereign, which he has acquired and holds jure coronæ, can be subjected to the local jurisdiction by being brought into the territory under the same permission. Still less can the prizes made by a ship which is herself exempt from the jurisdiction of the local tribunals be subjected to that jurisdiction. These prizes are as much the property of the sovereign, jure coronæ, as the ships by which they are taken and brought in.

The illegal augmentation of her force by the capturing vessel in our ports, cannot forfeit the immunity to which she is entitled by the law and usage of nations. Enlistments of men for this purpose, are not presumed to be made with the assent of the belligerent sovereign, and are not to be imputed to him.<sup>3</sup> It is, therefore, an offense which is not to be visited on the sovereign or his property. Reprisals cannot lawfully be made, until application to him for redress has been made. Courts of justice cannot interfere in such a case, because the sovereign cannot condescend to appear in them, 298*] and they have no *regular means of knowing how far he approves of what has been done by his officers. But, upon remonstrance and diplomatic discussion, the whole affair may be heard, and remedies applied fit for the occasion. Judicial decision, if it can interfere at all, is inflexible; and when the fact is established, must make entire restitution of the captured property, however insignificant may be the augmentation of force by neutral means. Besides, it is bringing into judgment the highest concerns of nations to be determined by the testimony of the basest of mankind. The enlistment of a single seaman on board a single ship of a large squadron, may draw after it the restitution of a whole enemy's fleet. The only safe course, then, is to leave matters of this sort to negotiation, or at least not to take cognizance of them in courts of justice, unless upon the application of the offended state, as in the analogous case of a capture within neutral territory.<sup>4</sup>

5. But, at all events, the condemnation of the prize goods, which took place at Buenos Ayres, in a court of the captor, is conclusive to preclude this court from taking jurisdiction of a question which has already been determined in a competent tribunal.

Mr. Tazewell, contra, stated, that three principal errors were alleged by the appellant in the decrees of the courts below: 1. That the facts assumed by those courts did not warrant the decrees. 2. That *the condemnation [*299] nation in the tribunal of prizes at Buenos Ayres precluded the courts of this country from inquiring into the legality of the capture. 3. That our courts have no authority to make that inquiry because the facts of the case involve the sovereign rights of an independent state.

As to the first objection, it is not necessary to discuss it until the last is disposed of. Jurisdiction must be shown to exist before its rightful exercise can be proved. He would, therefore, invert the order of the argument, and examine the last-mentioned proposition before the others. It would be shown to be the only question of real difficulty in the cause.

The argument on this proposition concedes to the neutral sovereign, or state, the very right which it denies to the neutral judiciary. Now, to the belligerent sovereign, the effect is precisely the same, whether the interference with his rights be by the executive and legislative departments, or by the judiciary alone. In either case his rights are examined into, and he may be deprived of them. To the neutral state, also, the effect is the same in both cases, so far as foreign states are concerned; since, in both, the nation is equally responsible for the act done. It is no answer to the reclamation of a foreign sovereign to say, that he has been injured by the judiciary only. To him all the departments of the government make but one sovereignty. This is represented by the executive, of which the judiciary is regarded but as an emanation. It may be, and undoubtedly is, a matter of great moment to the *neutral [*300] state itself, that its powers be legitimately exercised by those only to whom they have been confided by the municipal constitution. But this is a mere domestic inquiry, in which no foreign state has any concern, nor ought to be permitted to enter. Is it not strange, then, that it should now be presented to us in a litigation between two foreign subjects?

The question being raised, however, it must be discussed; not for the sake of the parties, but of the court itself. Let us then concede what the argument asserts, and it has no application to the cause. For justice is blind, and knows not of the existence of the sovereign, or of his rights, until made manifest by its own record. Nor will it notice even what its own record may disclose, unless the matter be therein duly and orderly set forth, i. e., by proper parties, in proper time, and in proper form. How, then, is this fact of sovereign right to be duly and orderly disclosed, so as to be made manifest to the courts of justice, and to shut the judicial eyes to every other fact in the cause? This, although apparently a mere

1.—Wheat. Dig. Cas. tit. Prize, IV.

2.—The Exchange, 7 Cranch, 116.

3.—Vattel, Droit des Gens, l. 3, s. 15.

4.—The Anne, 3 Wheat. Rep. 435.

technical question, is one of great importance, especially on account of the practice which has been hitherto pursued by the courts of the United States in cases of this sort. And at the very threshold of the inquiry it is plain, that the sovereign who denies the authority of the court to decide, must not answer. If he does, he voluntarily submits to, nay, invites the exercise of the very authority which he denies can be exerted. His averments, too, may be traversed, and issue being joined on 301*] the *traverse, must be decided in some way; and so his sovereignty denied by judicature. Neither can he plead in abatement, or any dilatory exception; for he may be decreed to answer over. Neither may he protest; for the question cannot be raised by a naked protest; and if he couples his protest with an answer, if he does not so overrule his protest, his answer leaves him as before. If he adopts the practice pursued in the case of The Cassius,<sup>1</sup> and suggests his exemption upon the record, he will be met, as in that case, by a replication to his suggestion, and it becomes a mere plea in abatement; for whatsoever one party may affirm, the other may deny.

These are the only known modes of defense, and none of them can the foreign sovereign adopt, without abandoning the exemption claimed for him by the argument. What then must he do? He must not defend himself in judicature at all. He must apply to the sovereign of that tribunal where his rights are drawn in question, and refer to his accountability. This sovereign, if he sees fit, will suggest for him; if he does not, he will refuse to do so, and meet the consequences. To a suggestion coming from this quarter there can be no replication; for he who makes it is no party in interest. Nor is proof necessary to establish it; for it comes duly authenticated. Such was the course pursued in the memorable case of The Exchange,<sup>2</sup> where a suggestion of the sovereign rights of the Emperor *Napoleon was made by the executive government; although proof of the commission of the commander of the vessel was unnecessarily superadded. This is the only proper mode in which the matter of sovereign right can, duly and orderly, be set before the court. It avoids all the technical difficulties of pleading and practice, and places the matter where, according to the argument, it ought to rest with the sovereign.

This course has not, however, been adopted here; and therefore the court will not take judicial cognizance of the fact of sovereign right, involved in the determination of the cause; and the argument insisted on, even if abstractly true, has no application to the cause, as presented upon the record. The matter is reduced to a mere question of practice, settled by the form of the pleadings, which it is now too late to amend.

Suppose, however, it were res integra. The court must contrive some proper form in which subjects of this sort may be brought before it. In adjusting this form, it is a sound and a safe rule to be followed, to attain the object by known, rather than by untried means, to adhere to ancient forms, as far as may be done; and, if possible, to alter nothing. If this be so, whatever may be the rule adopted by the court, the case will still be found exposed to the objection before stated: for the record will not show any information derived from our sovereign, but the very reverse. It is only important then to examine the question, whether the information of the sovereign or executive government be the proper and only *standard to which [*303 the court must refer, in matters wherein not our own people, but foreign states are concerned. Whatever the theory may be on this subject, all know that, in point of fact, courts of justice do and must decide upon the rights of sovereigns, and that even in governments the most absolute. For these courts must necessarily decide upon the rights of private individuals and corporations, and these are oft-times so interwoven with the rights of their sovereigns, that to decide upon the one, is to decide upon the other, not only in form, but effect also. Treaties and war create and destroy rights; and nations as well as individuals, derive their rights from these public transactions, which therefore the tribunals of justice must pass upon. Such, among many others, was the case of The Amiable Isabella, where the sovereign rights of Spain and the United States were involved, and were determined by this court.<sup>3</sup> The rights of sovereigns must then be settled by courts, and may be settled in different modes. This supposition constitutes a part of our complex system of government. Sovereign rights may be settled, not only in the federal courts, but in the state courts: and to guard against the effects of a conflict of opinion in such cases between the different local tribunals, appeals are brought from the state courts to this court. It would be in vain, however, to translate a cause here from the state courts, if this court might decide it differently from the other departments of the government. This must not be, however. The *people, although sovereign, can have [*304 but one will; and that will must be spoken by all their agents, or our government is a many-headed monster. The question, then, at last results in this: In what department of the government does this will, in relation to foreign states, reside? For wherever it does reside, that will must be uttered here, or we shall have two conflicting wills on the same matter. Now, I care not where it resides, if it resides anywhere: and the argument and necessity both prove that it must reside somewhere. If then it resides here, in this court, the argument is radically defective: for then it follows that judicature may decide on sovereign rights. And if it resides not here, but elsewhere, it must be communicated from thence hither, and constitute the law of the court, or our government is a monstrous anarchy. Some mode of communication between the executive government and the judiciary must be contrived. The only doubt is how this communication is to be made. And whatsoever course may be a proper one, none has been adopted in the present case, and the court cannot therefore take notice that any sovereign rights of Buenos Ayres are involved in the cause. You cannot know the

1.—United States v. Peters, 3 Dall. 123.

2.—7 Cranch, 116.

Wheat. 7.

3.—6 Wheat. Rep. 1, 50.

fact, and must proceed as if it did not exist. This does not impugn judicial independence. The judiciary are not independent of the law. They utter the legislative will of the people, when declared by the legislature: they pursue its executive will when communicated by the executive department. All nations have felt the necessity of some such course; the only question is as to the form, which must depend 305 upon the municipal constitution and the practice of each particular country. Thus, in England all rights of prize are originally vested in the crown. Hence, the courts of prize take their law from the king's instructions. The captors cannot proceed to adjudication against the will of the crown. Hence, in the case of The Swedish Convoy, the condemnation of the captured property for resistance to the exercise of the right of search was limited to the merchant vessels, although the same penalty would have been applicable to the conveying frigates, had not the crown interposed its prerogative, and from reasons of state, caused the latter to be restored to the foreign sovereign.<sup>1</sup>

Heretofore the subject has been examined as a technical question of pleading and practice merely. Let us now examine it as one of evidence. Of whom then is this exemption from judicial investigation affirmed? A sovereign state. But is Buenos Ayres a sovereign state?

This court has repeatedly decided that it will not undertake to determine who are sovereign states: but will leave that question to be settled by the other departments of the government, who are charged with the external affairs of the country, and the relations of peace and war.<sup>2</sup> It may, however, be said that both the judiciary and the executive have concurred in affirming the sovereignty of the Spanish Colonies, now in revolt against the mother country. 306 But the obvious answer to this objection is that the court, following the executive department, have merely declared the notorious fact that a civil war exists between Spain and her American provinces; and this so far from affirming, is a denial of the sovereignty of the latter. It would be a public, and not a civil war, if they were sovereign states. The very object of the contest is, to decide whether they shall be sovereign and independent, or not. All that the court has affirmed is, that the existence of this civil war gave to both parties all the rights of war against each other. But belligerent rights are not regalian rights. Now, in the case last cited,<sup>3</sup> the court decided that the seal of this supposed sovereign state might be proved like any other matter in pais. If it were really a sovereign state, the seal would prove itself. The more the subject is examined, the more apparent will it be, what confusion and mischiefs must flow from the judicial department assuming the right to acknowledge the existence of her sovereignties, especially in the present mutable state of the world. Cases of depositions and restorations are continually occurring, of revolutions and counter-revolutions, which present the most complicated questions of strict right and political expediency, the determination of which must be left to the other departments of the government.

But if it were true in fact, and well pleaded, that the res now in controversy is a sovereign's right; still, it would not be correct to say, that all sovereign rights are exempt from 307 judicial examination. There must be some exceptions to the universality of the rule. The exemption only applies to the regalian rights of the sovereign; those which are necessary to maintain his faith, dignity, and security, and to none else. Such are his august person, his ministers, his armies and fleets. These are protected from the interference of foreign judicatures, because they are essentially necessary for these purposes; they make up sovereignty itself. And nothing else which is not within the reason, is within the rule of exemption. Suppose a royal stag or horse escapes into a foreign state, and is there sold in market overt as an estray; or suppose the ship of a foreign sovereign is wrecked on our coasts, and a claim for salvage of the materials interposed. Would you stay your hand from a dread of the sacredness of the subject-matter? The privilege of sovereignty cannot protect these cases. No authority can be shown to prove it; on the contrary, the authorities are clearly the other way. Thus, all prizes made in war are the property of the sovereign, jure coronæ, and this, whether the prize be taken by a public or a private ship. But it is not to be argued (in this court at least) that such prizes may not be taken out of the hands of the captors (whose possession is that of their sovereign) and restored by the neutral tribunal, within whose jurisdiction they may happen to come, if made by privateers in violation of neutral territory or of neutral rights. And if so, why may not prizes made by public ships be restored under like circumstances? They both come **within* the same reason, and, therefore, should fall within the same exception to the general rule. The rule, then, if true at all, must be limited as I have stated: and if so, it will not apply to the present case. It may, indeed, protect the public ship herself, but not her prize goods. These are not the regalian rights of the sovereign; they are a mere accidental, military possession, which are not indispensably necessary to maintain his faith, dignity, or security.

Again; the argument which asserts exemption for sovereign rights does not confine itself to the rights of a belligerent, but equally applies to all sovereigns, whether in peace or war. But if a wrong-doing sovereign may elaim this exemption, what becomes of the rights of the injured sovereign? Must he submit, or hold his hand, and ask redress of the offender? Every objection which applies to the one, exists in equal effect as to the other; and if the tortfeasor may not pursue this course, he must not, by his own act, constrain the injured party to adopt it. To guard against this conflict of dignities, the public law has wisely settled the rule, that each sovereign is supreme at home; all are equal on the high seas, except in war, and then the comity of nations, and the necessity of the case, refers it to the arbitrium of the captors. But this rule of comity protects not violators of the neutral territory, within which its sovereign is supreme; for the implied pledge given to a foreign state, of exemption from the local jurisdiction, is violated the moment it infringes our laws, treaties, and sovereign rights. The fiction of extraterritoriality 309* only applies to the peaceful observers of this implied pledge. The implication is repelled, and the pledge forfeited by abusing the rights of hospitality and asylum. This exception to the rule is recognized distinctly by the court in the case of The Exchange,<sup>1</sup> and it was upon this ground that the court has interfered in the whole class of captures made by means of illegal armaments in our ports.<sup>2</sup> The question in every one of these cases was not as to the character of the wrong-doer, but as to the nature of the act done, and the locus in quo, it was committed. No inquiry was ever made whether the capturing vessel was public or private; but only whether our neutrality had been violated. And the principle to be extracted from them all is, that the neutral tribunal may properly restore any prize brought within its territory, which has been made in violation of neutral laws, or rights, or obligations. Within this principle the present case is found: and, therefore, it is not universally true, that the rights of sovereigns are exempt from judicial examination.

1.—The Maria, 1 Rob. 340.

2.—Rose v. Himely, 4 Cranch, 241, 292; Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. Rep. 246, 224; United States v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. Rep. 610, 634.

3.—The United States v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. Rep. 635.

The argument we are discussing concedes, that the injured sovereign himself may restore, although it denies the power of making restitution to his courts. But the effect to both parties is precisely the same, whether the restitution be made by sovereign or court, as has been already shown. Still, granting that it may be 310* done by the sovereign only; *who is sovereign here, quoad hoc? It must be the judiciary: since wherever individual rights are involved, whether arising under war, or treaty, or municipal regulations, the judiciary in this country must decide.<sup>3</sup> Where indeed no case is made upon which the judiciary can act, then the executive may interfere, as it did in the commencement of the European war in 1793, in the case of The Grange. But even here the genius of our institutions, requires that the preliminary inquiry should be made through the judiciary, which is the proper tribunal to make such examinations, in which private rights are for the most part involved. Such was the course pursued in the case of Thomas Nash alias Robbins. The parties, one of whom was the King of Great Britain, could not appear in court; the executive acted therefore by judicial means, and the facts being judicially ascertained, it proceeded to carry into effect the treaty.<sup>4</sup> If then the sovereign must submit to his co-equal sovereign, as the argument concedes, and the judiciary is invested with this portion of sovereignty, the case is clear, and the argument has no application to it. Nor does this reasoning exclude the executive action, but yields to it in every instance where no case is made adapted for judicial determination; and even where such a case is made, the executive may interpose by suggestion, by which the court will be bound as they would by an act of the legislature in a case fit for the exertion of legislative power.

*But suppose the judiciary not to be [*311 sovereign as to this matter. Yet, whoever be the sovereign, as to it, he need not act directly; but may delegate his power of decision and action to another: still it is the sovereign who acts. If the executive be sovereign, this delegation is effected by suggestion, or the want of it, as the case may be. If he means that the judiciary should decide for him in a particular way, he suggests it. But if he is content to take the lead from the judiciary, and to adopt its construction, he declines to suggest. In the latter case, the judiciary acts according to the sovereign will, because he adopts theirs. In the former, the same thing is effected, for the judiciary adopt his. By this means that harmony is produced which can be effected by no other.

But if it be thought that the legislature is the true sovereign, quoad hoc, then the legislative will has been distinctly expressed in the neutrality act of 1794, c. 226. It is in vain to contend that this statute does not apply to public or national ships. For not only are its terms sufficiently copious to embrace any ship, but their context plainly shows that they were designed to apply especially to such ships. Here the learned counsel analyzed the act, in order to show that it extended to public, as well as private armed ships; and insisted that this construction was confirmed by the consideration that both the cases were equally within the mischief intended to be provided against, which was the violation of our own territory, and of neutral relations and obligations. Nor was there any weight in the argument which *would confine the authority of the [*312 court under the act to captures made within our territorial jurisdiction. For although the 6th section expressly gives cognizance over that class of cases, the history of the law on the subject plainly proves that this was merely an affirmative position, and was not meant as an exclusion of judicial authority in other cases. The provision was meant to define the territorial jurisdiction of the Union, and to settle a supposed doubt with the courts, which did not exist in fact. It was therefore merely declaratory of the law in that case, and could not be intended as a restriction upon the general authority of the courts. If this were not so, what would become of the cases occurring before this statute was passed? or of the numerous cases since decided, of captures without our limits, by means acquired within them? This series of adjudications manifestly shows that the courts exercise their power independently of the statute, the sole effect of which is (of the 6th section at least) to recognize an existing authority in a particular case, and not to limit it to that case only.

But even if this be not so, what is a capture within our waters? Is it not to all legal purposes made within our territory, when the captor is within and the prize without, the potential force being exerted within? or where the actual force is exerted without, by boats sent from within? And if so, it proceeds solely on the ground that the locus in quo is to be fixed,

1.—7 Cranch, 116.

2.—The Divina Pastora, 4 Wheat. Rep. 52, and cases collected in note a, Ib. p. 65.

3.—See 3 Dall. 13.

4.—Speech of Mr. (now Chief Justice) Marshall, 6 Wheat. Rep. Appx.

Wheat. 7.

not by the place of seizure, which in both the supposed cases is without, but by the source from whence the exerted force proceeds. Con-313*]sequently, a capture *made actually on the high seas, by means acquired here, is a capture within our territory.

It is clear then, upon principle, that the property even of a sovereign acquired in war, within a neutral territory, or by means therein illegally obtained, may be subjected to judicature, and restored; and this whether the prize is made by a public or a private cruiser. Nor is the dignity of sovereigns injuriously affected by such a proceeding, which being in rem, the sovereign is not constrained to defend himself before the courts of justice, but may properly apply to the other sovereign for redress, by whose suggestion, duly made, the judiciary must be bound.

That which is thus clear upon principle is equally established by authority. In the history of transactions of this nature, it will be found, that wherever the neutral state interferes to vindicate its own neutrality, no distinction is made whether that neutrality be infringed by a public or private ship.<sup>1</sup> Both
314*] *France and England restore the property of their subjects found on board of prize ships sent into their ports by the vessels of other powers, and that whether the capturing vessels are public or private.<sup>2</sup> During the beginning of the war of the revolution, the prizes sent into France by the Alliance frigate were restored by the tribunals of that country, if the property of her friends. In the case of The Swedish Convoy, in the English High Court of Admiralty, the crown declined proceeding against the Swedish frigates, as has been before mentioned; otherwise, Sir W. Scott declared,
315*] that he would have condemned *even those public ships.<sup>3</sup> But how could he, unless they were subject to judicature? It may be said, that they were regarded as qua belligerent, having forfeited their neutral character by attempting a resistance to the right of search. Be it so. Then we may, vice versa, condemn a public ship, or her prizes, for unneutral conduct, by which they lose their extra-territorial character conferred on them by a fiction which ought no longer to be regarded than it subserves the purposes of justice. There are numerous examples to show that there is nothing so sacred in the rights of sovereigns as to prevent judicature from dealing with them, both directly and incidentally. In the case of Duckworth v. Tucker, the sovereign rights of Portugal were determined by the English Court of C. B., in a private controversy between two British admirals about prize money.<sup>4</sup> In the Canton of Berne v. The Bank of England, that state appeared as an actor in the High Court of Chancery, which had the control of the fund, which the government of Berne laid claim to, as a part of its public treasure.<sup>5</sup> As to the case of The Exchange, in this court, it must be repeated that it does not go on any extravagant notion of the exemption of sovereign rights from judicial scrutiny; but on the ground of preserving the national faith, and that the ship entered under the pledge of an implied license which she had not forfeited by any misconduct. Had she done so, she *would have been con-

316] demned as unhesitatingly as the most insignificant privateer. It is only necessary to recur to the case of The Cassius, a public armed ship of the French republic, and to the words used by the court respecting that case in The Invincible,<sup>6</sup> to show that it never has recognized any distinction in this respect between public and private armed ships.

The learned counsel then proceeded to examine the testimony in the cause, to show that it clearly established the fact of an illegal outfit and augmentation of force, by the capturing vessels in our ports; and, lastly, answered the argument attempted to be drawn from the alleged condemnation at Buenos Ayres, by stating, that the decree was not established in proof, and that if it were so, it could not avail as a bar to the present proceedings, as the property was at the time in the custody of our court, and had been actually sold by consent of the claimant who now sets up the decree in the foreign tribunal.

Mr. Webster, on the same side, (1) argued, that there was no force in the general objection set up by the captors; that the ship which made the capture being a public ship, we could not examine into her acts, because it would be to interfere with the sovereign rights of the state to which she belongs. He denied that there was any such general principle, and no book, or case, or even dictum could be found to *support it. Judicature deals with sov-
317] ereign rights perpetually, in our courts, in England, and in every country, and in every case

1.—Lee on Capt. 116, 121, 123, edit. of 1803. "In the year 1654, a captain of a Dutch man-of-war met with an English ship at sea, running into the port of Leghorn, and seized her even when she was coming to anchor; the Duke of Tuscany complained of this to the states-general, but without redress. He, however, showed his resentment of it by condemning the ship which had taken the Englishman." p. 121.

This book (Lee on Captures), which is called in the preface, "an enlarged translation of the principal part of Bynkershoek's Questiones Juris Publici," is in fact little more than a very poor translation of that treatise. In the original text of Bynkershoek, it by no means appears that it was a public ship which had taken the Englishman in a neutral port. His words are, "Ex factis, puae postea inciderunt, etiam haec videntur probasse Ordines Generales; quum enim anno 1654, Navarcha Hollandus naven Anglicani, in mari deprehensum et ad portum Libernensem fugientem, occupasset, etiam tunc, cum navis Anglica jam funem in terram projecerat, Dux quidem Tusciae ea de re questus est ad Ordines Generales, sed nequequam questum esse legimus. Vide tamen, an non ipse dux id postea vindicaverit; publicata nempé nave, quae opportunitatem prochueraat occupandae istius Anglicae. (Q. J. Pub., l. 1. c. VIII., p. 64; Edit. Lugd. Batav. 1752), which Mr. Duponcau, in his elegant and accurate translation, thus renders: "From facts which afterwards took place, the states-general appear to have approved thus much; for when in the year 1654, a Dutch commander met an English vessel on the high seas, and pursued her flying into the port of Leghorn, where he took her at the moment she was coming to anchor, the Grand Duke of Tuscany complained of it to the states-general, but we read that he complained in vain. He, however, afterwards, took satisfaction by condemning the Dutch vessel that had made the pursuit and occasioned the capture of the English one." Duponcau's Bynk. p. 63.

2.—Ord. de la Mar. Art. 9; Des Prises, 15; 2 Sir L. Jenkins' Life, 780.

3.—1 Rob. 377.

4.—2 Taunt. 33.

5.—9 Ves. 347.

6.—1 Wheat. Rep. 253.

where the government is a party to the suit. Is it meant that judicature cannot deal with sovereign rights, neither domestic nor foreign? All history shows the contrary. If it were so, no sovereign could come into court. The great political powers of government, as those of peace and war, cannot indeed be submitted to judicial decision; but proprietary interests, in which the public are concerned, are settled everywhere by the tribunals of justice, as in the familiar instances of inquests of office, and writs of intrusion. So an ejectment may be brought for the crown lands, the most favorite fief. And nothing can be more sovereign than the right of prize, jure belli; it is a great branch of the prerogative; yet everybody may contest it, and the king must claim, and if he cannot make out a title he must lose it. Any jewel in any king's diadem may become the subject of judicial discussion. The extent and rights of the prerogative are discussed in every court in England; and all the powers of this government are discussed in this court, and in all the state tribunals. The government of the United States, and of the states, are sovereign, and cannot be sued; but in a contest between individuals or corporations, the sovereign rights of the Union and the several states may be decided.

Judicature may then deal collaterally with sovereign rights, and wherever the sovereign himself is actor: wherever he brings the suit. 318*] The true proposition, *therefore, must be, that the Prince cannot personally be sued in his own courts, or in foreign tribunals. As to the domestic forum, two reasons are given why the King cannot be summoned or arrested in any civil or criminal suit. The first is, his supereminency: and the second, that justice is administered by him, and in his name.

These reasons do not apply to a foreign country. He has no supremacy there, nor is justice administered in his name. Sovereignty is local; and when the sovereign transcends the limits of his land, he transcends the limits of his prerogative. The reason why he is not amenable to the foreign tribunal grows out of international law, and does not spring from the municipal code. It is not for want of jurisdiction ample enough to reach him; but that having come into the territory of another sovereign, under his permission, either express or implied, it would be a violation of the public faith to subject his person to any kind of restraint. The same immunity is extended to his ambassador, for the same reason; and to support this immunity, the fiction of extra territoriality has been invented, and applied to the cases of the army, or navy, or single ship of a sovereign coming into the territory of another. Being there under the license of the local sovereign, they are at liberty to remain and depart unmolested. Not that the foreign sovereignty exerts itself within the territory of another state, but that the local sovereignty is suspended from motives of comity, and a regard to the plighted faith of the nation. The exemption probably extends 319*] even to private merchant *vessels; which proves clearly that it does not rest on any right of sovereignty. But the permission may be withdrawn both as to these, and as to public vessels, if the indulgence be abused to the injury of the power by which it is granted.

Wheat. 7.

No neutral nation is bound to admit the belligerent ships of war within its waters, unless under treaty stipulations; and it may concede the privilege on such terms and conditions as it thinks fit. The presumption or fiction under which the license was granted ceases, the moment the license is revoked; and the license is revoked, as soon as the terms and conditions on which it was granted are violated. Still less can a mere general permission to the ships of a foreign state to come into our waters, be construed into a license to violate our laws, and treaties, and neutral obligations. Nor is it necessary here even to contend that the ship herself is subject to the local jurisdiction. We proceed against her prize goods, found within our territory. It is alleged, that they are held by the right of a foreign sovereign, or under a sovereign, and it is impossible to avoid inquiring into the foundation of this right. It is the inherent vice of the opposite argument, that it concedes this position; and in making that concession it yields the inevitable corollary that this sovereign right is not exempt from judicature.

2. If we proceed then to examine into the foundation of the right, we shall find that the Spanish consul here claims, in behalf of his fellow-subjects, their property, which has been taken from them by a cruiser sailing under the flag of the enemy of Spain, *but [320 equipped in our ports, and manned with our citizens, contrary to our municipal laws and the 6th and 14th articles of our treaty with Spain. The true interpretation of the 6th article raises our national duty, wherever a capture is made by our citizens of Spanish property, which is afterwards brought within our jurisdiction. We are to endeavor to protect the vessels and effects of Spanish subjects which shall be within the extent of our jurisdiction by sea or by land," as an act distinct from that of using our "efforts to recover and cause to be restored to the right owners their vessels and effects which may have been taken from them within the extent of said jurisdiction." It is a reciprocal duty of both states, and without invoking the aid of this article, we should find it difficult to maintain our claim upon Spain for the property of our citizens carried into her ports by French cruisers, and condemned by French tribunals within her territory. As to the 14th article, it is pretended that it attaches a mere personal penalty to the offending party, and operates merely to abandon our citizens, who may violate it, to be punished as pirates at the will of Spain. But the mutual prohibition to the citizens or subjects of each power from taking commissions to cruise against the other makes such conduct unlawful to every intent and purpose. The penalty of being punished as pirates is merely superadded as a consequence which would not necessarily have followed from the prohibition without a special provision to that effect. But the invalidity of the captures made under a commission thus unlawfully taken is a necessary *and inevitable consequence of the pro- [321 hibition itself. This article cannot therefore be considered as merely monitory; the words are promissory; they express the undertaking of the two governments and their reciprocal duty. Nor is it confined to captures made by private armed vessels. It is true that the first clause of the article speaks of "any commission or letters of marque, for arming any ship or ships to act as privateers." But in the Spanish counterpart of the second clause, these last words que obren como corsarios are dropped, although they are retained in the English. The Spanish counterpart speaks generally of "patente para armar algun buque ó buques con el fin de perseguir los subditos de S. M. catolica," which obviously extends to public as well as private cruisers. As to our municipal laws, they are not confined to acts done within the limits of the United States. They are full of provisions making it unlawful for our citizens (without those limits) to fit out and arm, or command and enter on board of, a foreign cruiser intended to be employed against powers in amity with us.<sup>1</sup> Whether, therefore, the offense in this case was committed within or without the United States, the illegal equipment or augmentation is within the statutes, and consequently the property acquired under it must be restored to the true owners.

3. What gives additional strength to this national obligation, is the fact that the claimant in the present case, and those for whom he 322* claims as captors, *are citizens of the United States, who claim a title to property acquired in violation of the laws and treaties of their own country, in a court of that country.

But it is said that the claimant, Chaytor, has ceased to be a citizen of this country by what is called an act of expatriation (but which ought rather to be called emigration), and has become a citizen of Buenos Ayres. Now it cannot, and certainly ought not to be denied, that men may remove from their own country in order to better their condition, or to avoid civil and religious persecution. But it does not follow that under all circumstances, and for all possible reasons, a person may shake off his allegiance to the land which gave him birth. The slavish principle of perpetual allegiance growing out of the feudal system, and this fanciful novelty of a man being authorized to change his country and his allegiance at his own will and pleasure, are both equally removed from the truth on this subject. Whatever doubtful cases may be supposed, this much may be affirmed with certainty, that there must be an actual change of the party's domicile, and that this must be done, not merely with the intention of remaining in his adopted country, but it must not be coupled with a design fraudulently to evade the laws of his native country. No act whatever of a foreign government can dispense with the allegiance of a citizen, and authorize him to violate our penal code or our treaties with other nations. This is a prior, paramount obligation, which must be first fulfilled, before he assumes any new and inconsistent duties. Even if there had been, in this case, an actual bona 323* fide change of domicile, animus manendi, so as to entitle the claimant to all the privileges of commercial inhabitancy under the law of prize or the revenue laws, it does not follow that he can with impunity levy war against the United States or their friends. And even if it be admitted that he might defend his adopted country, it does not follow that he may attack his native country, or those whom she is bound to protect. Can it be sufficient to legalize such an act that he has made his election, and that the foreign government has ratified it? Is it not manifest that it was done, cum dolo et culpa, for no other purpose than to evade and violate our laws? In this respect, it is impossible to distinguish between the neutrality acts, and other laws, such as the statutes of treason, or any other the most intimately connected with the national safety and existence. But it is unnecessary to dwell upon this point, as it is the settled doctrine of this court, that a citizen of the United States cannot claim in their courts, the property of foreign nations in amity with them, captured by him in war, even if the capturing vessel be in other respects lawfully equipped and commissioned;<sup>2</sup> and that an act of expatriation cannot be set up to justify such a capture, where the removal from his own country was with the fraudulent intent of violating its laws.<sup>3</sup>

Even admitting that foreign armed vessels may, in the absence of any express prohibition, enter our ports for the purpose of refreshment, or of making repairs, and will not thereby be subject to the local *law and judicature, [324 it does not, therefore, follow that they may make extraordinary repairs so as to be transformed in the species. The implied license may extend to a mere replacement of the original force; but it cannot extend to such an augmentation of the force as would be inconsistent with the neutral character of the power granting the license. It cannot extend to acts done subsequent to the vessel entering the neutral port; in other words, to a violation of the license itself. The vessel may remain in the same condition as she came, but she may not increase her capacity for war by the addition of neutral means, either in munitions or men. Nor does it follow, in any supposable case, that because the capturing ship herself cannot be made answerable to the jurisdiction of the local tribunals for violating the laws and treaties of the neutral state, that her prizes are entitled to a similar exemption. They do not stand on the same principle or reason. The ship of war ought not to be detained from the public service of the sovereign to whom she belongs. Neither his dignity nor safety will permit it. But neither the prize vessels or goods captured by her are necessarily connected with his military power.

5. As to the facts of the illegal equipment and augmentation of the force of the capturing vessels in our ports, they are sufficiently established by the testimony. Although there may be some discrepancies in their evidence as to certain immaterial circumstances; yet, as they all concur in proof of the material facts, and their testimony is uncontradicted even by the claimant's witnesses as to some of the most *important, they are entitled in this re- [325 spect, to credit. Their testimony, taken in connection with the res gesta, which are admitted on all hands, satisfies the rule which the court has laid down in this class of causes, that the fact of illegal equipment in violation of our neutral duties, must be proved beyond all reasonable doubt.

1.—Act of 1797, c. 1; act of 1817, c. 58, s. 2; act of 1818, c. 83, s. 4, s. 10.

2.—The Bello Corrunes, 6 Wheat. Rep. 152, 169.

3.—Talbot v. Janson, 3 Dall. 133, 153, 164.

6. Lastly: As to the pretended condemnation at Buenos Ayres. Independent of the objection which has already been stated to it, the question which has been here raised as to the capture having been made by military means obtained within our neutral territory, could not possibly have occurred in the course of the prize proceedings in the court of the belligerent state. The goods being confessedly the property of its enemy, and liable to capture and condemnation as prize of war, the plea that the capture was made in violation of our neutrality could not be set up by the Spanish owner. Being an enemy, he had no persona standi in judicio for that purpose. The government of the United States must have interposed a claim upon this ground, or have authorized the Spanish claimant to interpose it. Unless this were done, the goods were clearly liable to condemnation as prize of war, as they would be in the analogous case of a capture actually made within the neutral territory itself; where, unless the objection is made by authority of the neutral government, it cannot be made by the enemy owner, who in his character of enemy, is not injured by it. We need not, therefore, directly impeach the validity of the condemnation at Buenos Ayres, so far as the rights of the 326* two belligerents merely are concerned. We only repudiate the claim of one of our own citizens, who comes into our court, and sets up the foreign sentence, which was obtained by him in fraud of our laws, as an excuse for the violation of those laws. To the prize court of Buenos Ayres it was sufficient that, as captor, he had a right to stand upon his commission issued by that state, and to insist upon the condemnation of his prize taken jure belli. But in this court that very commission disables him from claiming any title acquired under it, for reasons which could not be urged in the prize court of Buenos Ayres, where the Spanish owner could not appear at all unless by authority of the government of the United States. It is not, therefore, a res adjudicata. Nor is the claimant a bona fide purchaser of the prize goods, ignorant of the fraudulent and illegal conduct of the party by whom they were captured and sold to him. The claimant, Chaytor, is himself that party, and he can no more set up the sentence of condemnation for his protection, than he can the pretended act of naturalization to cover his crime in confederating with one of the belligerents to violate the laws, and treaties, and most solemn obligations of his own country.

Mr. D. B. Ogden, for the appellant, in reply, stated that he should, for the purposes of the argument, take it for granted that the capturing vessel, the Independencia, was in point of fact a public ship belonging to the government of Buenos Ayres. The flag and commission are 327* conclusive evidence of that fact. *It is contended, on the other side, that the court is bound to interfere and restore the captured property, to the original Spanish owners, because it is said that, though the rights of a sovereign are involved, yet as he cannot appear in a court of justice to claim, these rights must be determined without hearing one of the parties, who is most materially interested in asserting them. And it is said, that the foreign sovereign must state his claim to the executive government, and that it must be brought to the notice of the court by a suggestion from the latter. So that according to this doctrine, the courts of this country could never listen to the complaints of foreign states, who had no minister to represent them here; and their property may be condemned, and their most sacred rights violated, without their being present, or heard. But we never meant to contend, that sovereign rights could not be discussed and determined in a court of justice, and that this suit could not be maintained, because the sovereign rights of Buenos Ayres might be incidentally drawn in question: but because this was a public armed ship of that state, coming into our waters, with her prize goods, under the express or implied permission of our government; and while here she was exempt from the jurisdiction of the local tribunals.

But we are told that Buenos Ayres has not yet been acknowledged by the government of this country as an independent state; that she is a mere revolted colony of Spain, and her cruising vessels cannot be entitled to the privileges and immunities of the public ships of an old established sovereignty. The answer to this position is, that *though the inde- [328] pendence of the South American provinces has not yet been acknowledged by our government, the existence of a civil war between these revolted colonies and the mother country has been acknowledged, and this court has followed the executive government in considering them entitled to all the rights of war against their enemy. Such is the consequence which the writers on the law of nations attribute to a civil war between two portions of an empire. It is assimilated to a public war. They are belligerents in respect to each other; and all other powers, who take no part in the contest, are bound to all the duties of neutrality towards both. Whether, therefore; Buenos Ayres be a sovereign state, in the strict sense of the term, is quite immaterial for the present purpose. It is sufficient that she is a belligerent entitled to use against her enemy every species of military means. Among these, are the armed and commissioned ships of war, sailing under the public authority of that country, and admitted into the ports of this, with the same privileges as are enjoyed by the national ships of Spain. Being at war, the colonies are belligerents, and as belligerents they are entitled to all the rights of war, and we are bound to all the correspondent duties of the neutrality we profess to maintain. In the case of the United States v. Palmer,<sup>1</sup> this court lays down the principle that "when a civil war rages in a foreign nation, one part of which separates itself from the established government, the courts of the Union must view *such newly constituted government, [329] as it is viewed by the legislative and executive departments of the government of the United States. If the government of the Union remains neutral, but recognizes the existence of a civil war, the courts of the Union cannot consider as criminal those acts of hostility which war authorizes, and which the new government may direct against its enemy." Why can they not consider these acts of hostility as criminal? Because war authorizes them, and they are directed by the new government against its enemy. In other words, because they are lawful. And if they are lawful for one purpose, it is difficult to understand how they can be unlawful for any other. If these acts are authorized by the laws of war, they must produce all the consequences of legal acts. They must vest a good title, jure belli, in the prizes taken by authority of the new government from its enemy. And that this is the necessary consequence of the principle is apparent from the words used by the court in The Divina Pastora,<sup>1</sup> which was itself a case of prize, and where the proprietary interest acquired in war came directly in judgment. The court there says, that "the government of the United States having recognized the existence of a civil war between Spain and her colonies, but remaining neutral, the courts of the Union are bound to consider as lawful those acts, which war authorizes, and which the new governments in South America may direct against their enemy." Here the question [330*] was not, whether the *existence of a civil war would excuse from the penalties of piracy those who might act under the authority of the new government, but whether a capture made under that authority was valid by the law of nations. So, also, in the case of The Estrella,<sup>2</sup> the validity of the commission was explicitly recognized by the court, and of course the authority of the government by whom it was issued was admitted.

1.—3 Wheat. Rep. 636:

In the case now in judgment, it is insisted, on the part of the respondent, that the court is bound to restore the property to the original Spanish owner, by the true construction of the treaty of 1795. As to the 6th article, it is certainly a very forced interpretation, which makes it imply our duty to restore all Spanish ships and goods which may happen to be found within our territory, although the title may have been changed by a previous capture jure belli, on the high seas. The article is evidently confined to wrongful acts done within our territorial limits. We are "to endeavor to protect the vessels and effects of Spanish subjects which shall be within the extent of our jurisdiction," but we are not to restore vessels and effects which have ceased to be Spanish by a lawful capture in war, without the extent of our jurisdiction. Nor have the United States insisted upon such an interpretation of the article as against Spain. We claim indemnity from Spain for condemnation of our vessels and effects by the French consuls in her ports, because to exercise the authority of a prize tribunal, is the highest act of sovereignty, and Spain having permitted it to be done by foreigners within her territory, it is the same thing [331*] as if her *own national tribunals had inflicted the wrong. The provision in this article is merely declaratory of the pre-existing law of nations, which always considers every sovereign as bound to protect the property of his friends within his territorial jurisdiction, and as responsible for whatever injuries he permitted to be there inflicted upon them. As to the 14th article, it is manifestly confined to privateers, and was not intended to extend to the case of a person entering the public military, or naval service of one of the contracting parties to commit hostilities against the other, and still less to authorize the seizure of a public ship of war or her prizes. This article was evidently intended to abridge a pre-existing right; and that it was a pre-existing right appears from the uniform practice of the whole civilized world. But it is confined in its terms to privateers and letters of marque, and by no fair rule of construction can it be extended to public ships.

Nor is the court bound to restore, because the claimant, Chaytor, is a citizen of this country, and has violated its laws. Here the learned counsel entered into a minute analysis of the neutrality acts, to show that they were merely penal against the party, or the capturing vessel. But here the penalty would begin and end with the person of the captor, for the capturing vessel being a public ship belonging to a foreign state, she could not be forfeited without its being considered an act of reprisals in the nature of war against that state. Once being admitted with her prizes into our ports, she may remain as long as the executive government thinks proper to allow it. *In [332*] this respect there is no distinction between the public ship herself and her prizes. Here the prize goods taken by her from the enemies of the state, under whose commission she was cruising, were landed and deposited in the custom-house stores, by the express permission of the government. It is novel doctrine that prize ships and prize goods are no part of the regalian possessions of a sovereign. They may be, and frequently are, absolutely necessary to his safety. They may be the principal means by which he is enabled to carry on the war, and a chief source of his revenue. How is it, then, that they are not equally exempt from the jurisdiction of the local tribunals, with the guns, and spars, and rigging of the ship herself, which may be landed in the same manner for the purpose of making repairs? Are they not brought within the territory under the same permission, express or implied? If an army had a right of passage through a neutral territory, can it be doubted that it would extend to its military chest, and its booty previously acquired? If the fiction of extraterritoriality will protect the ship, which is the principal, why will it not protect the prize goods which are the incidents? The permission to enter may, indeed, be qualified by any condition the neutral state thinks fit to impose; such, for example, as that contained in the law of France, that prize goods which may have been taken from the subjects of the state or its allies should be restored. But this court has expressly repudiated that principle in the case of The Invincible,<sup>3</sup> and it is for the executive [333*] and legislative departments to impose such restrictions as they think fit upon the admission into our ports of armed vessels, public or private, with their prizes. In the case of The Exchange, which has been so often referred to, the court in summing up its opinion says: "It seems, then, to be a principle of public law, that national ships of war, entering the ports of a friendly power open to their reception, are to be considered as exempted by the consent of that power from its jurisdiction." The ship herself being exempted from the local jurisdiction, she remains a part of the territory of her own country, and if she brings in with her prize ships, or prize goods, they are to be considered as in the possession of that country. That they are so, is apparent from the established doctrine of this court, that prize ships or goods, though lying in a neutral territory, may be condemned in a competent court of the belligerent state, by whose cruisers they were captured. Indeed, the writers on the law of nations expressly state the privilege of bringing in their prizes to be a part of the permission.<sup>1</sup> But how can this be if the immunity does not extend to everything on board? Here the goods were taken jure belli. Whether they are good prize depends upon the adjudication of the captor's court, which is the only competent tribunal to determine that question. They are in his possession for the purpose of proceeding 334* to adjudication, *even while they are locally within the neutral territory. Either the condemnation at Buenos Ayres is a sufficient adjudication, or not. If it be so, then the appellant is entitled to the goods under it. If it be not, still he is entitled to the possession of the goods, in order that he may proceed against them in the most regular manner, which he has been hitherto prevented from doing by this very suit.

1.—4 Wheat. Rep. 52.

2.—5 Wheat. Rep. 298.

3.—1 Wheat. Rep. 238.

Mr. Justice STORY delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon the argument at the bar several questions have arisen, which have been deliberately considered by the court; and its judgment will now be pronounced. The first in the order, in which we think it most convenient to consider the cause, is, whether the Independencia is in point of fact a public ship, belonging to the government of Buenos Ayres. The history of this vessel, so far as is necessary for the disposal of this point, is briefly this: She was originally built and equipped at Baltimore as a privateer during the late war with Great Britain, and was then rigged as a schooner, and called the Mammoth, and cruised against the enemy. After the peace she was rigged as a brig, and sold by her original owners. In January, 1816, she was loaded with a cargo of munitions of war, by her new owners (who are inhabitants of Baltimore, and being armed with twelve guns, constituting a part of her original armament), she was dispatched from that port, under the command of the claimant, on a voyage, ostensibly to the north west coast, but in 335* reality to Buenos Ayres. *By the written instructions given to the supercargo on this voyage, he was authorized to sell the vessel to the government of Buenos Ayres, if he could obtain a suitable price. She duly arrived at Buenos Ayres, having exercised no act of hostility, but sailed under the protection of the American flag, during the voyage. At Buenos Ayres the vessel was sold to Captain Chaytor and two other persons; and soon afterwards she assumed the flag and character of a public ship, and was understood by the crew to have been sold to the government of Buenos Ayres; and Captain Chaytor made known these facts to the crew, and asserted that he had become a citizen of Buenos Ayres; and had received a commission to command the vessel as a national ship; and invited the crew to enlist in the service; and the greater part of them accordingly enlisted. From this period, which was in May, 1816, the public functionaries of our own and other foreign governments at that port, considered the vessel as a public ship of war, and such was her avowed character and reputation. No bill of sale of the vessel to the government of Buenos Ayres is produced, and a question has been made principally from this defect in the evidence, whether her character as a public ship is established. It is not understood that any doubt is expressed as to the genuineness of Captain Chaytor's commission, nor as to the competency of the other proofs in the cause introduced, to corroborate it. The only point is, whether supposing them true, they afford satisfactory evidence of her public character. We are of opinion that they do. In general the commission of a public ship, signed *by the proper authorities of the nation [336 to which she belongs, is complete proof of her national character. A bill of sale is not necessary to be produced. Nor will the courts of a foreign country inquire into the means by which the title to the property has been acquired. It would be to exert the right of examining into the validity of the acts of the foreign sovereign, and to sit in judgment upon them in cases where he has not conceded the jurisdiction, and where it would be inconsistent with his own supremacy. The commission, therefore, of a public ship, when duly authenticated, so far at least as foreign courts are concerned, imports absolute verity, and the title is not examinable. The property must be taken to be duly acquired, and cannot be controverted. This has been the settled practice between nations; and it is a rule founded in public convenience and policy, and cannot be broken in upon, without endangering the peace and repose; as well of neutral as of belligerent sovereigns. The commission in the present case is not expressed in the most unequivocal terms; but its fair purport and interpretation must be deemed to apply to a public ship of the government. If we add to this the corroborative testimony of our own and the British consul at Buenos Ayres, as well as that of private citizens, to the notoriety of her claim of a public character, and her admission into our own ports as a public ship, with the immunities and privileges belonging to such a ship, with the express approbation of our own government, it does not seem too much to assert, whatever may be the private suspicion of a lurking American *interest, that she must be [337 judicially held to be a public ship of the country whose commission she bears.

There is another objection urged against the admission of this vessel to the privileges and immunities of a public ship, which may as well be disposed of in connection with the question already considered. It is, that Buenos Ayres has not yet been acknowledged as a sovereign independent government by the executive or legislature of the United States, and, therefore, is not entitled to have her ships of war recognized by our courts as national ships. We have, in former cases, had occasion to express our opinion on this point. The government of the United States has recognized the existence of a civil war between Spain and her colonies, and has avowed a determination to remain neutral between the parties, and to allow to each the same rights of asylum and hospitality and intercourse. Each party is, therefore, deemed by us a belligerent nation, having, so far as concerns us, the sovereign rights of war, and entitled to be respected in the exercise of those rights. We cannot interfere to the prejudice of either belligerent without making ourselves a party to the contest, and departing from the posture of neutrality. All captures made by each must be considered as having the same validity, and all the immunities which may be claimed by public ships in our ports under the law of nations must be considered as equally the right of each; and as such must be recognized by our courts of justice, until Congress shall prescribe a different rule. This is the 338* doctrine heretofore asserted by this court, and we see no reason to depart from it.

1.—Vattel, Droit des Gens. l. 3, c. 7.
Wheat. 7.

The next question growing out of this record, is whether the property in controversy was captured in violation of our neutrality, so that restitution ought, by the law of nations, to be decreed to the libelants. Two grounds are relied upon to justify restitution: First, that the Independencia and Altravida were originally equipped, armed, and manned as vessels of war in our ports; second, that there was an illegal augmentation of the force of the Independencia within our ports. Are these grounds, or either of them, sustained by the evidence?

If the cause stood solely upon the testimony of the witnesses who have been examined on behalf of the libelants, we should have great hesitation in admitting the conclusions which have been drawn from it. The witnesses, indeed, speak directly and uniformly either to the point of illegal equipment, or illegal augmentation of force within our ports. But their testimony is much shaken by the manifest contradictions which it involves, and by declarations of facts, the falsity of which was entirely within their knowledge, and has been completely established in proof. It has been said, that if witnesses concur in proof of a material fact, they ought to be believed in respect to that fact, whatever may be the other contradictions in their testimony. That position may be true under circumstances; but it is a doctrine which can be received only under many qualifications, and with great caution. If the 339* circumstances *respecting which the testimony is discordant be immaterial, and of such a nature, that mistakes may easily exist, and be accounted for in a manner consistent with the utmost good faith and probability, there is much reason for indulging the belief that the discrepancies arise from the infirmity of the human mind, rather than from deliberate error. But where the party speaks to a fact in respect to which he cannot be presumed liable to mistake, as in relation to the country of his birth, or his being in a vessel on a particular voyage, or living in a particular place, if the fact turn out otherwise, it is extremely difficult to exempt him from the charge of deliberate falsehood; and courts of justice, under such circumstances, are bound, upon principles of law, and morality and justice, to apply the maxim falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus. What ground of judicial belief can there be left, when the party has shown such gross insensibility to the difference between right and wrong, between truth and falsehood? The contradictions in the testimony of the witnesses of the libelants have been exposed at the bar with great force and accuracy; and they are so numerous that, in ordinary cases, no court of justice could venture to rely on it without danger of being betrayed into the grossest errors. But in a case of the description of that before the court, where the sovereignty and rights of a foreign belligerent nation are in question, and where the exercise of jurisdiction over captures made under its flag, can be justified only by clear proof of the violation of our neutrality, there are still stronger reasons for abstaining from interference, if the testimony is [*340] clouded with doubt and suspicion. We adhere to the rule which has been already adopted by this court, that restitution ought not to be decreed upon the ground of capture in violation of our neutrality, unless the fact be established beyond all reasonable doubt.

But the present case does not stand upon this testimony alone. It derives its principal proofs altogether from independent sources, to the consideration of which the attention of the court will now be directed.

The question as to the original illegal armament and outfit of the Independencia may be dismissed in a few words. It is apparent, that though equipped as a vessel of war, she was sent to Buenos Ayres on a commercial adventure, contraband, indeed, but in no shape violating our laws or our national neutrality. If captured by a Spanish ship of war during the voyage she would have been justly condemnable as good prize, for being engaged in a traffic prohibited by the law of nations. But there is nothing in our laws, or in the law of nations, that forbids our citizens from sending armed vessels, as well as munitions of war, to foreign ports for sale. It is a commercial adventure which no nation is bound to prohibit; and which only exposes the persons engaged in it to the penalty of confiscation. Supposing, therefore, the voyage to have been for commercial purposes, and the sale at Buenos Ayres to have been a bona fide sale (and there is nothing in the evidence before us to contradict it), there is no pretense to say, that the original outfit on the *voyage was illegal, or that a capture [*341] made after the sale was, for that cause alone, invalid.

The more material consideration is as to the augmentation of her force in the United States, at a subsequent period. It appears from the evidence, and, indeed, is admitted by Captain Chaytor, that after the sale in May, 1816, the Independencia sailed for Buenos Ayres under his command, on a cruise against Spain; and after visiting the coast of Spain, she put into Baltimore early in the month of October of the same year, having then on board the greater part of her original crew, among whom were many Americans. On her arrival at Baltimore, she was received as a public ship, and there underwent considerable repairs. Her bottom was new coppered, some parts of her hull were recaulked, part of the water-ways were replaced, a new head was put on, some new sails and rigging to a small amount, a new mainyard was obtained, some bolts were driven into the hull, and the mainmast, which had been shivered by lightning, was taken out, reduced in length, and replaced in its former station. In order to make these repairs, her guns, ammunition and cargo were discharged under the inspection of an officer of the customs, and when the repairs were made, the armament was replaced, and a report made by the proper officer to the collector, that there was no addition to her armament. The Independencia left Baltimore in the latter part of December, 1816, having then on board a crew of 112 men; and about the 8th of January following, she sailed from the capes of the Chesapeake on the cruise on which 342* the property in question was captured, being accompanied by the Altravida, as a tender, or dispatch vessel. It will be necessary, hereafter, to make more particular mention of the Altravida; but, for the present, the observations of the court will be confined to the Independencia. It is admitted by the claimant, that during her stay at Baltimore, several persons were enlisted on board the Independencia, and his own witnesses prove that the number was about thirty.

The first observation that occurs on this part of the case is, that here is a clear augmentation of force within our jurisdiction. The excuse offered is, that the persons so enlisted, represented themselves, or were supposed to be, persons in the service of Buenos Ayres. Of this, however, there is not the slightest proof. The enlistment of men being proved, it is incumbent on the claimant to show that they were persons who might lawfully be enlisted; and as the burden of proof rests on him, the presumption necessarily arising from the absence of such proof is that they were not of that character. It is not a little remarkable that not a single officer of the Independencia has been examined on this occasion. They are the persons who, from their situation, must have been acquainted with the facts; and the total omission to bring their testimony into the cause can scarcely be accounted for but upon a supposition extremely unfavorable to the innocence of the transaction.

Another observation which is drawn from the predicament of this case is, that if, as the 343* claimant asserts, the original voyage to Buenos Ayres, was a mere commercial adventure, the crew must have been composed principally of Americans or residents in our country. They enlisted at Buenos Ayres on board the Independencia, as officers and seamen for the purposes of warfare, and there is no evidence in the case as to the length of time of their engagements, or of the place where the cruise was to terminate. Why are the documents on this subject, for documents must exist, in the possession of the claimant; why are they not produced? If the cruise was to terminate at Buenos Ayres, or at a specific period of time, the fact would have a material bearing on the merits of the cause. Yet though the pressure of this point must, at all times, have been forcibly felt, there has not, up to the present moment, been the slightest effort to relieve it from the darkness which thus surrounds it. Under such circumstances, the natural conclusion would seem to be that the crew were to be discharged, and the cruise to terminate at Baltimore. This was their native or adopted home, the place where they first embarked on board the Mammoth, and that to which most of them must be supposed solicitous to return. The conduct of the vessel indicated the same intent. She underwent general repairs, some of which could hardly be deemed of great necessity, and must have been induced by the consideration that Baltimore was a port peculiarly well fitted for naval equipments. During the repairs (a period of two months) the crew were necessarily on shore; and it is scarcely to be supposed that they were held together by any common bond of attachment, or that 344 they had so far lost the common character of seamen as not to be easily led into some other employment or enterprise, which should yield immediate profit. What proof, indeed, is there that the same crew which came to Baltimore sailed again in the Independencia on her new cruise? It is stated only as hearsay by one or two of the claimant's witnesses, who had no means, and do not pretend to any means of accurate knowledge of the fact. If true, it might have been proved by the officers of the ship, by the muster roll of the crew, and by the shipping articles; and these are wholly withdrawn from the cause, without even an apology for their absence. It would certainly be an unreasonable credulity for the court, under such circumstances, to believe that the actual augmentation of force was not far greater than what is admitted by the party, and that there was either an innocence of intention or act in the enlistments. The court is therefore driven to the conclusion, that there was an illegal augmentation of the force of the Independencia in our ports, by a substantial increase of her crew; and this renders it wholly unnecessary to enter into an investigation of the question, whether there was not also an illegal increase of her armament.

If any doubt could be entertained as to the Independencia, none can be as to the predicament of the Altravida. This vessel was formerly a privateer, called the Romp, and was condemned for illegal conduct by the District Court of Virginia; and under the decree of the court, was sold, together with the armament and munitions of war then on board. 345 She was purchased ostensibly for a Mr. Thomas Taylor, but was immediately transferred to Captain Chaytor. She soon afterwards went to Baltimore, and was attached as a tender to the Independencia, having no separate commission, but acting under the authority of Captain Chaytor. Part of her armament was mounted, and a crew of about twenty-five men were put on board at Baltimore. She dropped down to the Patuxent a few days before the sailing of the Independencia, and was there joined by the latter, and accompanied her on a cruise in the manner already mentioned. Here, then, is complete evidence from the testimony introduced by the claimant himself of an illegal outfit of the Altravida, and an enlistment of her crew within our waters for the purposes of war. There is no pretense that the crew was transferred to her from the Independencia, for the claimants own witnesses admit that a few only were of this description. The Altravida must be considered as attached to, and constituting a part of the force of the Independencia, and so far as the warlike means of the latter were increased by the purchase, her military force must be deemed to be augmented. Not the slightest evidence is offered of the place or circumstances under which the enlistment of the crew took place. It consisted, according to the strong language of the testimony, of persons of all nations; and it deserves consideration, that throughout this voluminous record, not a scintilla of evidence exists to show that any person on board of either vessel was a 346* native of Buenos Ayres. We think, then, that the fact of illegal augmentation of force, by the equipment of the Altravida, is also completely established in proof.

What, then, are the consequences which the law attaches to such conduct, so far as they respect the property now under adjudication? It is argued on the part of the libellant, that it presents a casus fœderis under our treaty with Spain. The sixth and fourteenth articles are relied upon for this purpose. The former is in our judgment exclusively applicable to the protection and defense of Spanish ships within our territorial jurisdiction, and provides for the restitution of them when they have been captured within that jurisdiction. The latter article provides that no subject of Spain "shall apply for, or take any commission or letter of marque for arming any ship or ships to act as privateers," against the United States, or their citizens, or their property, from any prince or state with which the United States shall be at war; and that no citizen of the United States "shall apply for, or take any commission or letters of marque, for arming any ship or ships to act as privateers" against the King of Spain, or his subjects, or their property, from any prince or state with which the said king shall be at war. "And if any person of either nation shall take such commission or letter of marque, he shall be punished as a pirate." In the Spanish counterpart of the treaty, the word "privateers" in the first clause has the corresponding word "corsarios;" but in the second clause, no such word is to be found. But it is obvious 347* that both clauses were intended to receive, and ought to receive, the same construction; and the very terms of the article confine the prohibition to commissions, &c., to privateers. It is not for this court to make the construction of the treaty broader than the apparent intent and purport of the language. There may have existed, and probably did exist, reasons of public policy which forbade an extension of the prohibition to public ships of war. It might well be deemed a breach of good faith in a nation to enlist in its own service an acknowledged foreigner, and at the same time subject him by that very act, and its own stipulations, to the penalties of piracy. But it is sufficient for the court, that the language of the treaty does not include the case of a public ship, and we do not perceive that the apparent intention or spirit of any of its provisions, justifies such an interpolation. The question, then, under the Spanish treaty, may be dismissed without further commentary.

This view of the question renders it unnecessary to consider another which has been discussed at the bar respecting what is denominated the right of expatriation. It is admitted by Captain Chaytor, in the most explicit manner, that during this whole period his wife and family have continued to reside at Baltimore; and so far as this fact goes, it contradicts the supposition of any real change of his own domicile. Assuming, for the purposes of argument, that an American citizen may, independently of any legislative act to this effect, throw off his own allegiance to his native country, as to which we give no *opinion, it is perfectly clear, [348 that this cannot be done without a bona fide change of domicile under circumstances of good faith. It can never be asserted as a cover for fraud, or as a justification for the commission of a crime against the country, or for a violation of its laws, when this appears to be the intention of the act. It is unnecessary to go into a further examination of this doctrine; and it will be sufficient to ascertain its precise nature and limits, when it shall become the leading point of a judgment of the court.

And here we are met by an argument on behalf of the claimant, that the augmentation of the force of the Independencia within our ports, is not an infraction of the law of nations, or a violation of our neutrality; and that so far as it stands prohibited by our municipal laws the penalties are personal, and do not reach the ease of restitution of captures made in the cruise, during which such augmentation has taken place. It has never been held by this court, that an augmentation of force or illegal outfit affected any captures made after the original cruise was terminated. By analogy to other cases of violations of public law the offense may well be deemed to be deposited at the termination of the voyage, and not to affect future transactions. But as to captures made during the same cruise, the doctrine of this court has long established that such illegal augmentation is a violation of the law of nations, as well as of our own municipal laws, and as a violation of our neutrality, by analogy to other cases, it infects the captures subsequently made with the character *of torts, and justifies and re- [349 quires a restitution to the parties who have been injured by such misconduct. It does not lie in the mouth of wrong-doers, to set up a title derived from a violation of our neutrality. The cases in which this doctrine has been recognized and applied, have been cited at the bar, and are so numerous and so uniform, that it would be a waste of time to discuss them, or to examine the reasoning by which they are supported. More especially as no inclination exists on the part of the court to question the soundness of these decisions. If, indeed, the question were entirely new, it would deserve very grave consideration, whether a claim founded on a violation of our neutral jurisdiction could be asserted by private persons, or in any other manner than by a direct intervention of the government itself. In the case of a capture made within a neutral territorial jurisdiction, it is well settled, that as between the captors and the captured, the question can never be litigated. It can arise only upon a claim of the neutral sovereign asserted in his own courts or the courts of the power having cognizance of the capture itself for the purposes of prize. And by analogy to this course of proceeding, the interposition of our own government might seem fit to have been required before cognizance of the wrong could be taken by our courts. But the practice from the beginning in this class of causes, a period of nearly 30 years, has been uniformly the other way; and it is now too late to disturb it. If any inconvenience should grow out of it, from reasons of state policy or executive discretion, it is competent for Congress to apply at its pleasure the proper remedy.

It is further contended by the claimant, that the doctrine heretofore established has been confined to cases of captures made by privateers; and that it has never been applied to captures by public ships, and in reason and policy ought not to be so applied. The case of The Cassius, in 3 Dall. Rep., 121, has been supposed at the bar to authorize such an interpretation of the doctrine. That was the case of a motion for a prohibition to the District Court to prohibit it from exercising jurisdiction on a libel filed against the Cassius, a public armed ship of France, to obtain compensation in damages in rem, for an asserted illegal capture of another vessel belonging to the libelants on the high seas, and sending her into a French port for adjudication, as prize. The libel alleged that the Cassius was originally equipped and fitted for war in a port of the United States contrary to our laws, and the law of nations. But there was no allegation that she had been originally fitted out by her present commander, or after she became the property of the French government. The principal question was, whether our courts could sustain a libel for compensation in rem against the capturing vessel for an asserted illegal capture as prize on the high seas, when the prize was not brought into our ports, but was carried into a port infra presidium of the captors. The court granted the prohibition; but as no reasons were assigned for the judgment, the only ground that can be gathered, is that which is apparent on the face of the writ of prohibition, where it is distinctly asserted, that the jurisdiction in cases of this nature exclusively belongs to the courts of the capturing power, and that neither the public ships of a nation, nor the officers of such ships are liable to be arrested to answer for such captures in any neutral court. The doctrine of that case was fully recognized by this court in the case of The Invincible (1 Wheat. R., 238); and it furnishes a rule for the exemption of a public ship from proceedings in rem, in our courts, for illegal captures on the high seas, in violation of our neutrality; but in no degree exempts her prizes in our ports from the ample exercise of our jurisdiction.

Nor is there in reason or in policy any ground for a distinction between captures in violation of our neutrality by public ships, and by privateers. In each case the injury done to our friend is the same; in each the illegality of the capture is the same; in each the duty of the neutral is equally strong to assert its own rights, and to preserve its own good faith, and to take from the wrong-doer the property he has unjustly acquired, and re-instate the other party in his title and possession which have been tortiously devoted. This very point was directly asserted by this court in its judgment in the causes of The Invincible. Mr. Justice Johnson there said, "as to the restitution of prizes made in violation of neutrality, there could be no reason suggested for creating a distinction between the national and the private armed vessels of a belligerent. Whilst a neutral yields to other nations the unobstructed exercise of their sovereign or belligerent rights, her own dignity and security require of her the vindication of her own neutrality, and of her sovereign right to remain the peaceable and impartial spectator of the war. As to her it is immaterial in whom the property of the offending vessel is vested. The commission under which the captors act is the same, and that alone communicates the right of capture, even to a vessel which is national property." We are satisfied of the correctness of this doctrine, and have no disposition to shake it. In cases of violation of neutral territorial jurisdiction no distinction has ever been made between the capture of public and private armed ships, and the same reason which governs that, applies with equal force to this case.

An objection of a more important and comprehensive nature has been urged at the bar, and that is, that public ships of war are exempted from the local jurisdiction by the universal assent of nations: and that as all property captured by such ships is captured for the sovereign, it is, by parity of reasoning, entitled to the like exemption; for no sovereign is answerable for his acts to the tribunals of any foreign sovereign.

In the case of The Exchange (7 Cranch, 116), the grounds of the exemption of public ships were fully discussed and expounded. It was there shown that it was not founded upon any notion that a foreign sovereign had an absolute right, in virtue of his sovereignty, to an exemption of his property from the local jurisdiction of another sovereign, when it came within his territory; for that would be to give him sovereign power beyond the limits of his own empire. But it stands upon principles of public comity and convenience, and arises from the presumed consent or license of nations, that foreign public ships coming into their ports, and demeaning themselves according to law, and in a friendly manner, shall be exempt from the local jurisdiction. But as such consent and license is implied only from the general usage of nations, it may be withdrawn upon notice at any time, without just offense, and if afterwards such public ships come into our ports, they are amenable to our laws in the same manner as other vessels. To be sure, a foreign sovereign cannot be compelled to appear in our courts, or be made liable to their judgment, so long as he remains in his own dominions, for the sovereignty of each is bounded by territorial limits. If, however, he comes personally within our limits, although he generally enjoys a personal immunity, he may become liable to judicial process in the same way, and under the same circumstances, as the public ships of the nation. But there is nothing in the law of nations which forbids a foreign sovereign, either on account of the dignity of his station, or the nature of his prerogative, from voluntarily becoming a party to a suit in the tribunals of another country, or from asserting there any personal, or proprietary, or sovereign rights, which may be properly recognized and enforced by such tribunals. It is a mere matter of his own good-will and pleasure; and if he happens to hold a private domain within another territory, it may be that he cannot obtain full redress for any injury to it, except through the instrumentality of its 354] courts of justice. It may therefore *be justly laid down as a general proposition, that all persons and property within the territorial jurisdiction of a sovereign, are amenable to the jurisdiction of himself or his courts; and that the exceptions to this rule are such only as by common usage, and public policy, have been allowed, in order to preserve the peace and harmony of nations, and to regulate their intercourse in a manner best suited to their dignity and rights. It would indeed be strange, if a license implied by law from the general practice of nations, for the purposes of peace, should be construed as a license to do wrong to the nation itself, and justify the breach of all those obligations which good faith and friendship, by the same implication, impose upon those who seek an asylum in our ports. We are of opinion that the objection cannot be sustained; and that whatever may be the exemption of the public ship herself, and of her armament and munitions of war, the prize property which she brings into our ports is liable to the jurisdiction of our courts, for the purpose of examination and inquiry, and if a proper case be made out, for restitution to those whose possession has been devested by a violation of our neutrality; and if the goods are landed from the public ship in our ports, the express permission of our own government, by that does not vary the case, since it involves no pledge that if illegally captured they shall be exempted from the ordinary operation of our laws.

The last question which has been made at the bar, on which it is necessary to pronounce an opinion, is as to the effect of the asserted 355] condemnation of the *property in controversy, at Buenos Ayres, during the pendency of this suit. Assuming, for the purpose of argument, that the condemnation was regularly made, and is duly authenticated, we are of opinion that it cannot oust the jurisdiction of this court, after it had once regularly attached itself to the cause. By the seizure and possession of the property, under the process of the District Court, the possession of the captors was devested, and the property was emphatically placed in the custody of the law. It has since been sold, by consent of the parties, under an interlocutory decree of the court, and the proceeds are deposited in its registry, to abide the final adjudication. Admitting, then, that property may be condemned in the courts of the captor, while lying in a neutral country (a doctrine which has been affirmed by this court), still it can be so adjudicated only while the possession of the captor remains; for if it be devested, in fact, or by operation of law, that possession is gone which can alone sustain the jurisdiction. A fortiori, where the property is already in the custody of a neutral tribunal, and the title is in litigation there, no other foreign court can, by its adjudication, rightfully take away its jurisdiction, or forestall and defeat its judgment. It would be an attempt to exercise a sovereign authority over the court having possession of the thing, and take from the nation the right of vindicating its own justice and neutrality.

Upon the whole, it is the opinion of the court that the decree of the Circuit Court be affirmed, with costs.

Aff'g—1 Brock. 478.

Cited—3 Pet. 267; 7 How. 57; 2 Black. 669; 7 Wall. 161; 11 Wall. 307; 6 Otto. 190; 11 Otto. 42; Blatchf. Pr. 10; 6 Blatchf. 139; 2 Cliff. 427; 2 Sprague, 133; 2 Ware (Da.) 16.

[*COMMON LAW.]

[*356

EVANS v. EATON.

A party cannot entitle himself to a patent for more than his own invention; and if the patent be for the whole of a machine, he can maintain a title to it only by establishing that it is substantially new in its structure and mode of operation.

If the same combination existed before in machines of the same nature up to a certain point, and the party's invention consists in adding some new machinery, or some improved mode of operation, to the old, the patent should be limited to such improvement; for if it includes the whole machine, it includes more than his invention, and therefore cannot be supported.

When the patent is for an improvement, the nature and extent of the improvement must be stated in the specification, and it is not sufficient that it be made out and shown at the trial or established by comparing the machine specified in the patent with former machines in use.

The former judgment of this court in the same case (ante, Vol. III., p. 454), commented on, explained and confirmed.

A person having an interest only in the question, and not in the event of the suit, is a competent witness.

In general, the liability of a witness to a like action, or his standing in the same predicament with the party sued, if the verdict cannot be given in evidence for or against him, is an interest in the question, and does not exclude him.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of Pennsylvania.

This is the same case which was formerly before this court, and is reported ante, Vol. III., p. 454; and by a reference to that report, the form of the patent, the nature of the action, and the subsequent proceedings, will fully appear. The cause was now again brought before the court upon a writ of error to the judgment of the Circuit Court, rendered upon the new trial, had in pursuance of the mandate of this court.

Upon the new trial, several exceptions were taken *by the counsel for the plaintiff, [357 Evans. The first was to the admission of one Frederick as a witness for the defendant, upon the ground of his interest in the suit. The witness, on his examination on the voir dire, denied that he had any interest in the cause, or that he was bound to contribute to the expenses of it. He said that he had not a hopper-boy in his mill at present, it being then in court; that it was in his mill about three weeks ago, when he gave it to a person to bring down to Philadelphia; and that his hopper-boy spreads and turns the meal, cools it some, dries it, and gathers it to the bolting chest. Upon this evidence, the plaintiff's counsel contended that Frederick was not a competent witness; but the objection was overruled by the court.

Another exception was to the refusal of the court, to allow the deposition of one Shetter to be read in evidence of the plaintiff, which had been taken according to a prevalent practice of the state courts, instead of being taken pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress.

Wheat. 7.

But the principal exceptions were to the charge by the Circuit Court, in summing up the cause to the jury, which it is deemed necessary here to insert at large.

Mr. Justice WASHINGTON. This is an action for an infringement of the plaintiff's patent, which the plaintiff alleges to be,

1. For the whole of the machine employed in the manufacture of flour, called the hopper-boy.

2. For an improvement on the hopper-boy.

The question is, is the plaintiff entitled to recover upon either of these claims. The question is stated thus singly, because the defendant admits that he uses the very hopper-boy for which the patent is, in part, granted, and justifies himself by insisting,

1st. That the plaintiff was not the original inventor of, but that the same was in use prior to the plaintiff's patent, the hopper-boy as patented.

2d. That his patent for an improvement is bad; because the nature and extent of the improvement is not stated in his specification; and if it had been, still the patent comprehends the whole machine, and is therefore too broad.

1st. The first is a mixed question of fact and law. In order to enable you to decide the first, it will be well to attend to the description, which the plaintiff has given of this machine, in his specification, a model of which is now before you. Its parts are, (6) An upright round shaft, to revolve on a pivot in the floor. (2) A leader or upper arm. (3) An arm set with small inelining boards, called flights and sweepers. (4) Cords from the leader to the arm to turn it. (5) A weight passing over a pulley, to keep the arm tight on the meal. (6) A log at the top of the shaft to turn it, which is operated upon by the water power of the mill.

The flights are so arranged as to track the one below the other, and to operate like ploughs, and at every revolution of the machine to give the meal two turns towards the centre. The sweepers are to receive the meal from the elevator, and to trail it round the circle for the flights to gather it to the centre, and also to sweep the meal into the bolt.

359*The use of this machine is stated to be, to spread any granulated substance over a floor; to stir and expose it to the air, to dry and cool it, and to gather it to the bolt.

The next inquiry under this head is, when was this discovery made? Joseph Evans has sworn, that in 1783 the plaintiff informed him that he was engaged in contriving an improvement in the manufactory of flour, and had completed it in his mind, some time in July of that year. In 1784 he constructed a rough model of the hopper-boy, but having no cords from the extremities of the leader to those of the arm, it was necessary, in making his experiments, to turn around the arm by hand. In 1785 he set up a hopper-boy in his mill, resembling the model in court, and the machine described in his specification. The evidence of Mr. Anderson strongly supports this witness, and, indeed, the discovery as early as 1784 or 1785 is scarcely controverted by the defendant.

The defendant insists that a hopper-boy, similar to the plaintiff's, was discovered, and in Wheat, 7.

use, many years anterior, even to the year 1783, and relies upon the testimony of the following witnesses:

Daniel Stouffer, who deposes, that he first saw the Stouffer hopper-boy in his father's, Christian Stouffer's mill, in the year 1764. In the year 1775, or 1776, he erected a similar one, in the mill of his brother Henry, and another in Jacob Stouffer's mill, in 1777, 1778, or 1779.

*Philip Frederiek swears, that in [*360] 1778 he saw a Stouffer hopper boy in operation in Christian Stouffer's mill, and in the year 1783 he saw one in Jacob Stouffer's mill, and another in U. Charles' mill, and that it was always called Stouffer's machine.

George Roup stated, that in 1784, he erected one of these hopper-boys in the mill of one Braniwar: and that in 1782, Abraham Stouffer described to him a similar machine, which his father used in his mill.

Christopher Stouffer, the son of Christian, has sworn that his father, having enlarged his mill, in the year 1780, erected a new hopper-boy of the description above mentioned, which is still in use in the same mill, now owned by Peter Stouffer.

If these witnesses are believed by the jury, they establish the fact asserted by the defendant, that the Stouffer hopper-boy was in use prior to the plaintiff's discovery.

The next inquiry is into the parts, operation, and use of the Stouffer hopper-boy. This consists of an upright square shaft, which passes lightly through a square mortice in an arm, underneath which are fixed slips of wood, called flights, and the arm is turned by a log on the upper end of it, which is moved by the power which moves the mills.

The arm, with the flights, operates as it turns upon the meal placed below it, and its use is, in a degree, to cool the meal and to conduct it to the bolt. It will now be proper to compare this machine with the plaintiff's. They agree in the following particulars: They each consist of a shaft, or log to turn it by the power of the mill, and an arm with flights on [*361] the under side of it. They each operate on the mill below the arm, to cool, dry, and conduct it to the bolt.

In what do they differ? The plaintiff's shaft is round, and consequently could not turn the arm, into which it is loosely inserted, if it were not for the cords which connect the extremities of the arm to those of the leader. The shaft of the Stouffer hopper-boy is square, and therefore turns the arm without the aid of a leader or of cords. It has neither a weight nor pulley, nor are the flights arranged in the manner the plaintiff's are, and consequently it does not, in the opinion of most of the witnesses, cool or prepare the flour for packing as well as the plaintiff's.

The question of law now arises, which is, are the two machines, up to the point where the difference commences, the same in principle, so as to invalidate the plaintiff's claim to the hopper-boy as the original inventor of it? I take the rule to be, and so it has been settled in this and in other courts, that if the two machines be substantially the same, and operate in the same manner, to produce the same result, though they may differ in form, proportions, and utility, they are the same in principle; and the one last discovered has no other merit than that of being an improved imitation of the one before discovered and in use, for which no valid patent can be granted, because he cannot be considered as the original inventor of the machine. If the alleged inventor of a machine, which differs from another previously patented. 362*) merely in form and proportion, *but not in principle, is not entitled to a patent for an improvement, which he cannot be by the 2d section of the law, he certainly cannot, in a like case, claim a patent for the machine itself.

The question for the jury then is, are the two hopper-boys substantially the same in principle? not whether the plaintiff's hopper-boy is preferable to the other. Because if that superiority amounts to an improvement, he is entitled to a patent only for an improvement, and not for the whole machine. In the latter case the patent would be too broad, and therefore void when the patent is single.

If you are of opinion that the plaintiff is not the original inventor of the hopper-boy, he cannot obtain a verdict on that claim, unless his is an excepted case. The 1st, 2d, 3d, and 6th sections of the general patent law conclusively support this opinion. But the judgment of the Supreme Court in this case<sup>1</sup> is relied upon by the plaintiff's counsel to prove that this is an excepted case; inasmuch that the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict, although you should be satisfied that he is not the original inventor of the hopper-boy. But we are perfectly satisfied that the interpretation put upon the last clause of the judgment by the plaintiff's counsel is incorrect; and that for the following reasons: 1. The question of priority of invention was not before the Supreme Court; and it is therefore incredible that any opinion, much less a judgment, would have been given upon that point. 363*) The error in the charge, which *this part of the judgment was obviously intended to correct, is stated by the Chief Justice in the following words:

"The second error alleged in the charge, is in directing the jury to find for the defendant, if they should be of opinion that, the hopper-boy was in use prior to the improvement alleged to be made thereon by Oliver Evans."

"This part of the charge seems to be founded on the opinion, that if the patent is to be considered as a grant of the exclusive use of distinct improvements, it is a grant for the hopper-boy itself, and not for an improvement on the hopper-boy." (p. 512.)

It contradicts what is stated in p. 517, where it is said that the plaintiff's claim is to the machine "which he has invented," &c. Now, if he did not invent the hopper-boy he has no claim to it; and if so, could the court mean to say, that he was nevertheless entitled to recover under that claim? Such a decision was certainly not called for by the terms of the "act for the relief of Oliver Evans," but would seem to be in direct violation of it. The act directs a patent to issue to Oliver Evans, not for his hopper-boy, elevator, &c., but "for his invention, discovery, and improvement in the art, &c., and on the several machines which he has discovered, invented, and improved." Now if the hopper-boy was not invented, &c., by O.

Evans, this act, without which O. Evans could not have obtained a patent, did not authorize the Secretary of State to grant him one for that machine; or if granted, it is clear that it was *improvidently done. If, indeed, the 364 Supreme Court had been of opinion, that the fact of Oliver Evans' prior invention was decided, and could constitutionally have been decided by Congress, there might have been more difficulty in the case; but the argument of counsel, which pressed that point upon the court, was distinctly repudiated. We conceive that the meaning of that part of the opinion is, that this court erred in stating to the jury that O. Evans was not entitled to recover, if the hopper-boy (that is the original hopper-boy) had been in use prior to the plaintiff's alleged discovery of it; because if the plaintiff was entitled to claim an improvement on the hopper-boy, which this court had denied, and which the Supreme Court affirmed, this court was clearly wrong in saying to the jury that the plaintiff could not recover for his improvement, which, in effect, was said. Upon the whole, then, the court is of opinion, that O. Evans is not entitled to a verdict in his favor as the inventor of the hopper-boy, if you should be of opinion that another hopper-boy, substantially the same as his in principle, as before explained, up to the point, where any alteration or improvement exists in his hopper-boy, was invented, and in use prior to the plaintiff's invention or discovery, however they may differ in mere form, proportions, and utility.

2d. The plaintiff's next claim is to an improvement on a hopper-boy, which claim, we were of opinion in another case, has received the sanction of the Supreme Court. His counsel contend that his improvement is, (1) on the original method of supplying the *bolt, 365 by manual labor; (2) on his own hopper-boy; and (3) on some hopper-boy, invented by some other person. Let this position be analyzed.

1. It is said to be an improvement on the original method by manual labor. But it is obvious that if this be the invention, it is of an original machine, because wherever the patent law speaks of an improvement, it is on some art, machine, or manufacture, &c., and not on manual labor, which was applied to the various arts long before the invention of machinery to supply its place.

2. An improvement on his own discovery.

But where is the evidence of such invention? It is true that Joseph Evans has stated that the plaintiff constructed, in 1784, a rude model of a hopper-boy; but it was no substitute for manual labor, because without the cords or leading lines, the arm could not move, and it was therefore turned by hand. It was, in fact, in an incomplete state; in progress to its completion, but not given out, or prepared to be given out to the world as a machine, before 1785; when the cords to turn the arm were added.

3. An improvement on a former machine.

This is a fair subject for a patent; and the plaintiff has laid before you strong evidence, to prove that his hopper-boy is a more useful machine than the one which is alleged to have been previously discovered and in use. If, then, you are satisfied of this fact, the point of law which has been raised by the defendant's counsel, remains to be considered, which is, that the plaintiff's patent for an improvement 366*] is void, because *the nature and extent of his improvements are not stated in his specification.

Wheat. 7.

The patent is for an improved hopper-boy, as described in the specification, which is referred to, and made part of the patent. Now, does the specification express in what his improvement consist? It states all and each of the parts of the entire machine, its use and mode of operating, and claims as his invention, the machine, the peculiar properties or principles of it, viz., the spreading, turning, and gathering the meal, and the rising and lowering of its arm, by its motion to accommodate itself to the meal under it. But does this description designate the improvement, or in what it consists? Where shall we find the original hopper-boy described either as to its construction, operation, or use; or by reference to any thing, by which a knowledge of it may be obtained? Where are the improvements on such original stated? The undoubted truth is, that the specification communicates no information whatever upon any of these parts. This being so, the law, as to ordinary cases, is clear that the plaintiff cannot recover for an improvement. The 1st section of the general patent law speaks of an improvement as an invention, and directs the patent to issue for this said invention. The 3d section requires the applicant to swear or affirm that he believes himself to be the true inventor of the art, machine, or improvement, for which he asks a patent; and further that he shall deliver a written description of his invention, in such full, clear, and exact terms, that any person acquainted with the art, may know how to construct and use 367*] *the same, &c. That it is necessary to the validity of a patent, that the specification should describe in what the improvement consists, is decided by Mr. Justice Story, in the cases referred to in the appendix to 3 Wheat. Rep., and in the cases of Bombon v. Bule, Boville v. Poor, M'Farlane v. Price, Harmer v. Playne; and perhaps some others. What are the reasons upon which this doctrine is founded? They are to guard the public against an unintentional infringement of the patent, during its continuance, and to enable an artist to make the improvement, by a reference to some known and certain authority, to be found among the records of the office of the Secretary of State, after the patent has run out. But it is contended by the plaintiff's counsel, that the law would be unreasonable to require, and that it does not require this to be done, unless the improvement is upon a patented machine, a description of which can be obtained by a reference to the records of the Secretary of State's office; that it might often be impossible for the patentee to discover, and consequently to describe the parts of a machine in use, perhaps only in some obscure part of the world. The answer to this is, that an improvement necessarily implies an original, and unless the patentee is acquainted with the original which he supposes he has improved, he must talk idly, when he calls his invention an improvement.

If he knows nothing of an original, then his invention is an original, or nothing: and the Wheat. 7.

subsequent appearance of an original to defeat his patent is one of the risks, which every patentee is exposed to under *our law. As [368 to the supposed distinction between an improvement on a machine patented, and one not so, there is nothing in it. In both cases the improvement must be described, but with this difference: That in the former case it may be sufficient to refer to the patent and specification, for a description of the original machine, and then to state, in what the improvements, or such original consists; whereas, in the latter case, it would be necessary to describe the original machine, and also the improvement. The reason for this distinction is too obvious to need explanation.

If the general law upon this subject has been correctly stated, the next question is, is this an excepted case? It is contended by the plaintiff that it is so. 1st. In virtue of the act for the relief of O. Evans; and 2d, by the decision of the Supreme Court.

1. Under the private act: That declares, that the patent is to be granted in the manner and form prescribed by the general patent law. What constitutes the manner and form in which a patent is granted by the law? The obvious answer is, the petition; the patent, with the signature of the President and the seal of the United States affixed to it; the oath or affirmation; the specification, or description of the invention, as required by the third section; the drawings and models, if required. Will it be contended that a patent would be granted in the manner and form prescribed by this law, if there were no description whatever of the invention? and if it would not, which is taken for granted, where is the difference between the total absence of a specification, and one which has no reference *at all to the invention for [369 which the patent is granted?

This is not the case of an imperfect or obscure description; but of one which relates exclusively to the whole machine; whereas, the invention for which the patent is granted, is for an improvement.

2. The opinion of the Supreme Court, which states, "that it will be incumbent on the plaintiff, where he claims for an improvement, to show the extent of his improvement, so that a person understanding the subject may comprehend distinctly in what it consists."<sup>1</sup> But how is it to be shown? The court has not pointed out the manner, and we therefore think the only fair implication is, that it must be shown as the statute of the United States and the general principles of law require, i. e., by the patent and specification. If it may be shown by parol evidence to the jury, as the plaintiff's counsel contend it may, then it may be fairly asked cui bono? which sort of a showing would then be, so far as it would be productive of any useful purpose? As to the defendant, the evidence comes too late, to save him from the consequences of an error innocently committed. As to the public at large with a view to caution, during the continuance of the patent, and to information of the nature of the improvement after its termination, the evidence given in this cause must be evanescent and totally useless.

We feel perfectly convinced that the meaning of the Supreme Court, as to this point, is again misunderstood by the plaintiff's counsel, not only for the reasons above mentioned, but 370*] because the extent and *construction of the plaintiff's patent, and not the validity of it, in relation to any one of the machines, were the questions before that court; and none others (in reference to the charge), were argued at the bar, or reasoned upon by the Chief Justice, in delivering the opinion.

Upon the whole, we are of opinion, that the plaintiff is not entitled to a verdict for the alleged infringement of his patent, for an improvement of the hopper-boy.

Whereupon a verdict and judgment thereon were rendered for the defendant in the Circuit Court, and the cause was again brought by writ of error to this court.

Mr. C. J. Ingersoll,<sup>1</sup> for the plaintiff, premised a review of Evan's inventions and improvements as in proof in the cause, originating in 1783, and perfected, as regards the hopper-boy, in 1785, the grants from the legislatures of Delaware, Maryland, and Pennsylvania, in 1787; the first patent of the plaintiff under the federal government, in 1790, and the second in 1808, by virtue of the special act of Congress for the relief of Oliver Evans. The great utility of those improvements was now universally acknowledged, while the patentee was deprived of all their advantages. It was a singular misfortune for him, among others, to be under the necessity of bringing his patent a second time before this court, for revision, in the same case, in which much of the matter in dispute was the construction of the opinion formerly pronounced, reversing that of the *Circuit Court of Pennsylvania, which that court had occasion to review. It was the earnest hope of the plaintiff that a full and final decision would now take place, so as to put the subject at rest.

With respect to the matters of evidence, he contended, (1) that David Aby was incompetent as a witness, because he was sued in pari delicto, and of course disposed to vacate the patent he had himself infringed. Interest in such a question is equivalent to interest in the cause. Perhaps even the verdict might be given in evidence, under the sixth section of the act of 1793, c. 11, which enjoins it on the court to declare the patent void in the event of a verdict for the defendant. The plaintiff's answer to this objection is, that as the patent is for several machines and improvements, the court could not annul such a patent, but on the foundation of a verdict against all the claims. But why not? Why not declare it void pro tanto? Every principle applicable to common cases applies to this. Nay, it is even more necessary, in so complicated a monopoly, to guard the public against imposition or vexation, by demands founded on any part of it, tried and abrogated. (2) It was objected to David Aby, as a witness, that he and six others, including the defendants in these cases, as was ascertained on his voir dire, combined to defeat the suits, and for that purpose contributed a common purse to bear the expenses of defending them. If any surplus remained, it was to be returned by the witness, who acted as treasurer; if any deficiencies, it was to be raised by further levies from the contributors. This was breaking down all distinction *between bias and [*372 interest. It amounted, perhaps, to maintenance.<sup>2</sup> (3) David Aby was suffered to prove the existence of the Stouffer original hopper-boy, when the notice was that evidence would be given of the existence of the improved hopper-boy. The notice is in 3 Wheat. Rep., 470. By this, a complete surprise was inflicted on the plaintiff. The defendant's position was, that for this purpose, he waived the notice of special matter and gave the evidence, under the general issue, as proof of non-user. But as the notice is equivalent to a special plea, was it competent to the defendant, after putting it in, to abandon it on the trial? There no doubt are cases when the defendant might avail himself of the general issue.<sup>3</sup> But this was a case of special matter, tending to prove that the specification does not contain the whole truth, or that the thing was not originally discovered by the patentee. The decisive proof of this position is, that the defendant was allowed to use the same evidence to show that the plaintiff was not original with his hopper-boy, which he used to show that the defendant did not use the hopper-boy. It was an evasion of the wholesome provisions of the sixth section of the act of 1793,<sup>4</sup> calculated to destroy a patent by means which a patentee never could possibly controvert. It was an aggravation of these objections that the court charged the jury, that after a witness was ruled by the court to be competent, the jury could not *disqualify him on the [*373 ground of discredit, but must believe him, unless otherwise contradicted. By this course of proceeding, the defendants were their own witnesses, and the plaintiff was not allowed to discredit them. (4) The court should have suffered the plaintiff to prove that the son of one of the Stouffers, and the executors of another, purchased Evans' improvements. On the former occasion, similar evidence was sanctioned as to the Stouffers themselves, the alleged originators of the hopper-boy.<sup>5</sup> And why not the acknowledgments of their descendants and legal representatives? It was treated before as evidence of opinion. If so, why not the opinion of one generation as well as another? But it was more than opinion. It was traditional history of the invention and improvements. (5) The court should have suffered the defendant's witness, Philip Frederick, to be asked whether Daniel Stouffer was subject to fits of mental derangement. Stouffer was the defendant's principal witness; and that was a most material circumstance in his faculty to bear credible testimony as to remote periods and obscure circumstances. Besides, the witness, Philip Frederick, if he had denied the fact, might have been contradicted by other testimony; in which respect it was a very important inquiry to be made of him, with a view to Frederick's credit. (6) The deposition of Michael Forner was overruled, after that of John Shet-

1.—Some part of his argument is applicable to the points of evidence in the subsequent case of Evans v. Hettich.

2.—5 Burr. 2730; Phill. Ev. Ch. 5, p. 49.

3.—3 Wheat. Rep. Appx. 27.

4.—Act of 1793, c. 11, s. 6; 3 Wheat. Rep. 504.

5.—3 Wheat. Rep. 495, 505.

ter had been received under precisely the same circumstances. Neither of them was taken according to the act of Congress, which is in-374*] convenient and *unfair in its operation. Rules for depositions were entered by both parties. Both parties took depositions under these rules. When the defendant offered to read Shetter's deposition, no objection was made, and it was laid before the jury. But when the plaintiff offered to read Forner's, taken in the same manner, and under the same rules, it was objected to, and overruled. The clerk testified, that for twenty years the practice had been to take depositions by rule, on notice, instead of taking them under the act of Congress, which requires no notice where the witness lives more than 100 miles from the place of trial. There was, therefore, evidence of mutual consent and understanding between the parties, deducible both from the invariable practice, and from the rules entered and acted on in these cases. Yet the court rejected the plaintiff's proof, and suffered the defendant's to remain as received in force. Thus the plaintiff was most unexpectedly deprived of some of his most material testimony, while the defendants themselves were their own witnesses.

The main matter in dispute was on the court's construction of the word "improvement," which it imputed to the patent. This radical difficulty escaped notice when these cases were before discussed in the circuit and supreme courts. 1. It was a misapprehension to suppose that the word exists at all in the patent or specification, in connection with the hopper-boy. The patent is for improvements in the art of manufacturing flour, and for certain other machines, one of which is denominated an improved hopper-boy. But the distinction is obvious.
375*] between *something patented as an improvement of a hopper-boy, and something patented as an improved hopper-boy. The latter was so called, as substituting mere machinery for manual labor. It might be so called as a caveat against unknown but possibly existing originals, which, in the strong illustration of the court, would avail a defendant if he could prove their existence in the mountains of China. It might be so called, as meaning nothing more than a melioration of the inventor's own original essays. Evans' hopper-boy was a great and most beneficial improvement, which he called an improved hopper-boy. But it had no original. Even the bolt-filler, ascribed to Stouffer, alleged to be of earlier origin, was as different in principle, as it was inferior in practice, to the plaintiff's machine.

2. It was a second error of the court, to take it for granted, that the improved hopper-boy was not so described in the specification, as to distinguish it from all things before known or used, and to enable a person skilled in the art to make it. It is so described. (Here the counsel went into a specification of the peculiar structure and properties of the hopper-boy.) No one skilled in the art could misapprehend this description, or be misled by it. The error of the court was, in condescending to consider itself skilled in the art of which this is a branch. The law does not require of patentees to describe new and old, but merely to distinguish new from old. Otherwise a patent would be more complex and voluminous than a Welsh pedigree. Take a boat, for instance; must every species, from the ark downwards, *be described? The peculiar properties [376 of the improved hopper-boy are perfectly explained. It is not a mere change of form and proportions, but a combination of well-known materials, on new principles, essentially set forth in the specification, so as to prevent all interfering claims during the exclusive term, and to impart the rights to the public afterwards. The authorities were misunderstood by the court in this respect. They all require, to be sure, a discrimination, when the subject-matter is an improvement: But they require only an essential improvement; not a recapitulation of the particulars of both the old rudiments, and the new combinations, in detail, distinguishing them in terms.

3. This, however, was a question of fact to have been submitted to the jury, instead of being, as it was, exclusively assumed and determined by the court. How can a court decide, whether a person skilled in the art could understand a description, and copy a machine? The cases are uniformly so.<sup>1</sup> In all these cases, the court left this inquiry as a fact to the jury. Indeed, the 6th sect. of the act of 1793, c. 11, treats it not only as matter of fact, but of fraud. It must appear that the specification is untrue, either deficient or redundant, in order to deceive the public. It is matter of concealment. Can the court infer this scienter?

4. Indeed, it may well be doubted whether any discrimination is necessary, where, as in this case *there is but one patent in [377 existence. The second section of the law speaks of the case of a prior patented machine. The court would have the third section to be substantive, without association with the second and sixth. But how can a patentee describe what he never saw? If not before patented, how could he see or know? If he knew, but concealed his knowledge, is it not matter of fraud? The cases, when examined, will be found to have most of them referred their reasoning to the point of conflicting patents. Such is the fact in Harmer v. Playne, Bozill v. Moore, and Lowell v. Lewis. Which explanation is all important to a correct understanding of those cases.

5. The special act of Congress for the relief of Oliver Evans, vouchsafes him from all technical obstacles. His improvements by that time were universally acknowledged. Congress did not mean to forestall the ascertainment of their originality, which any citizen might try, if he chose, nor their utility. But the relieving act dispenses with specification, oath, fee, and all the other prerequisites of common cases. It was not designed merely to prolong the term of monopoly, but to relieve it from vexations and frivolous embarrassments. Accordingly, it uses the term improvements, in addition to the terms applied to such subjects by the act of 1793; and confers on Oliver Evans an exclusive right in his discoveries, inventions, machines, and improvements in general, and specifically. The obvious design of this act of grace, was to relieve the grantee from all the formalities to which patentees in common are subjected, 378* leaving the question of priority or originality alone open to inquiry by the country.

1.—8 T. R. 95; 11 East's Rep. 101; 2 Marsh. Rep. 211; Starkie's N. P. Rep. 199; 3 Meriv. 622; 1 Gallis. 438; 2 Gallis. 51; 1 Mass. 182, 432; 3 Wheat. Rep. 514; Appx. 17.

6. But even this inquiry was not competent to these defendants, who are citizens of Pennsylvania. The act of assembly of that commonwealth, in 1786, confers on Evans the exclusive right in his hopper-boy, and inflicts penalties on all infractors of it. To this act, the defendants directly acceded and contributed by their representatives; and it is a well-settled principle, that they are bound by their legislation.<sup>1</sup> Nor is this position at all affected by the 7th section of the act of 1793, c. 11.

Mr. Sergeant. contra. A patent is intended to secure to an inventor the exclusive right, for a limited time, to his invention. At the expiration of the period, the thing thus secured is to become public property, which any one is at liberty to use. In the mean time, every one is to abstain from using the thing patented, at the peril of a severe responsibility in damages. The provisions of the patent law have a view to these several objects, all of which are to be promoted as far as possible, and reconciled with each other, the public security and the benefit being protected, as well the interests of the inventor. He is to enjoy the fruits of his ingenuity, upon terms and conditions, which are compatible with the safety, the peace, and the interest of other citizens.

A patent, therefore, in the first place, can 379* only be for an original invention. It is of no importance, that a man really believes himself to be the inventor, or is the true inventor, having made the discovery himself, without even the knowledge, that the thing he supposes himself to have invented, was known or used before, or described in some public work. However honest he may be, he has no merit, as respects the rest of the community, in discovering what was already known and open to common use; nor will he be allowed to appropriate the thing to himself, because he has made a mistake. The truth of his invention, though not an original one, will protect him against a summary proceeding to set aside his patent under the 10th sec. of the act of 1793, c. 11; but it will not avail him to enforce his claim in an action against an individual. The want of originality, proved by showing that the thing was used or known before, or described in some public work, is, in every case, a valid and conclusive defense.

Again; an invention may be of a machine, or of an improvement on a machine; of something that was entirely unknown before, or of an addition to or alteration in what was previously known, so as to make it more useful. Each of these is a patentable object; but the patent, as to both, is to be for the invention only, and the laws that govern it, thus understood, will be found to be exactly the same. Novelty is an essential part of the merit, and it is only what is new that is to be secured by the patent. A mistake is just as fatal to the patentee in the one case as in the other; and if he 380* should really believe himself to have invented an improvement, when in truth it was known, used or described before, he could not give legal effect to his patent. There is, however, one peculiarity in the case of patents for improvements. Improvement being a relative term, presupposes the existence of something to which it refers, known to the inventor at the time of making the supposed improvement. If he does not know of it, he cannot know he has improved upon it; and if he does know of it, he can readily describe the improvement he has made, that is, his own invention. A man who has never heard of a time-keeper, might suppose himself the inventor of one; but it is impossible to conceive, that a man who has never heard of such a thing, should believe himself to be the inventor of an improvement upon the time-keeper.

A patent for an entire machine covers the whole—a patent for an improvement, on the contrary, covers only the improvement, and necessarily supposes there are parts which are not patented. It is the line between these, and the parts which are patented that defines the respective pretensions of the patentee and the public; and unless that line be somehow marked, it is impossible to say where the one terminates, and the other begins. Confusion, uncertainty, extortion, fraud, and litigation would be the inevitable consequence.

It is the business and duty of the inventor, then, at the time of applying for his patent, and before he can receive a patent, to deliver a "written description of his invention, and of the manner of using, or process of compounding the same, in such full, clear, and [381] exact terms, as to distinguish the same from all other things before known, and to enable any person skilled in the art or science of which it is a branch, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make, compound, and use the same," &c., sec. 3. This specification is to remain in the office of the Secretary of State, and a copy of it is everywhere made evidence. The design of this provision is manifest; it is to secure to the public the use of the invention, after the expiration of the period for which the patent is granted; and to enable individuals, in the mean time, to know what it is that is intended to be secured, so that they may avoid interference, or, if they think proper, dispute the claim of originality. For both these purposes, it was necessary that there should be authentic and recorded evidence, accessible to all, and remaining unchangeable and unaltered. Without a specification, the patent would be void. A specification which does not comply with the requirements of the act of Congress, is, to all legal intents, no specification, and the patent would be equally void, as if there were literally no specification.

In the present case, the patent is to be regarded, either, 1. As a patent for the whole machine, or, 2. As a patent for an improvement on an old and known machine. The utmost that can be contended, is, that the patentee has an election to consider it as the one, or the other; and that is a very liberal concession, inasmuch as it is founded upon the ambiguity of his own specification, from which, generally, a man ought not to be permitted to derive an advantage. But it is clear that it cannot be [382] a patent for both; that would be a legal absurdity, involving a plain contradiction in terms.

1. As a patent for the whole machine, including the plaintiff's alleged improvement, it is void, because the plaintiff was not the original inventor of the machine. The fact, that a hopper-boy, known by the name of an S. or Stouffer hopper-boy, having all the essential parts of the plaintiff's machine, and applied to the same uses and purposes (whether more or less perfectly, is not material to inquire), existed, and was in use, before the date of the plaintiff's earliest alleged discovery, has twice been proved to the satisfaction of intelligent juries in each of these cases, and is now to be taken for granted, as conclusively established. At the former trial, the learned judge who presided (Mr. Justice Washington) instructed the jury, if they should be of opinion that Oliver Evans was not the original inventor, to find for the defendant; which they did accordingly, being fully satisfied of the fact. Upon error to this court, the judgment was reversed, on the ground that the patent was not for the machine, but for an improvement; the phrase "improved hopper-boy," being after much hesitation, deemed equivalent to "improvement" on a hopper-boy. But the opinion of the court distinctly admits, what indeed cannot be questioned, that if, as respects the hopper-boy, the patent had been for the whole machine, the direction of the learned judge would have been right.

Wheat. 7..

1.—10 East's Rep. 536; 3 Johns. Ch. Rep. 598.

In giving to the plaintiff the benefit of the alternative, the case was put in the most favorable view for him. He might claim as inventor of the whole machine, or he might claim as inventor of the improvement; but, under this patent he could not claim for both; and in claiming for either, he must of course abide by the settled principles of law, applicable to the construction of the patent thus adopted. Each must be taken singly. The two could not be confounded, so as to entitle him upon the one to the benefit of principles belonging to the other. If the patent be for the whole machine, it is void if he is not the original inventor; and that he is not, has been fully established.

It is intimated, however, and will probably be insisted upon hereafter, that admitting the S. or Stouffer hopper-boy to have been previously known and used, the two machines are so entirely different, that Mr. Evans might well be entitled to a patent for the whole. As a question of fact, that has been decided by the verdict of the jury, and the identity of the machine must now be taken for granted, unless the jury were led to the conclusion by an erroneous charge from the court. What constitutes identity, and what diversity, is frequently a question of great difficulty. It was the right and the duty of the judge to inform the jury what were the principles to guide their deliberations in deciding it, and this he has done with admirable clearness, and in conformity with the best authority upon this abstruse part of the law. "Where a specific machine already exists" (says Mr. Justice Story), "producing certain effects, if a mere addition is made to such machine, to produce the same effects in a better manner, a patent cannot be taken for the whole machine, but for an improvement only."<sup>1</sup> And the same learned judge says, "the material question, therefore, is not whether the same elements of motion, or the same component parts are used, but whether the given effect is produced substantially by the same mode of operation, and the same combination of powers, in both machines."<sup>2</sup> The identity here is perfectly apparent upon the description, and still more so upon inspection of the models. The object of both is the same—to dispense with manual labor, and supply the hopper—to supply it gradually, in small, successive, regular portions, by means of the power that moves the mill; substituting mechanical contrivances for human agency. The effect is the same, to turn, stir, and cool the flour, and thus prepare it for bolting before it is delivered. The construction of the machines as to "the mode of operation," and "the combination of powers" is the same. In both, there is an upright shaft, with a cog, turned by the power that moves the mill; an arm, resting lightly on the meal, and turned by the upright shaft: something on the under part of the arm, whether flights or sweepers, to gather in the meal to the hopper. So far, they are the same. Now for the differences. The plaintiff's machine has a round shaft, instead of a square one; it has leading lines, which are necessary in consequence of the shaft being round, and a weight to balance the arm. These may all be improvements, but they are only improvements, and do not make a different machine. The name itself bespeaks identity; the old machine was called a bolt-filler, or hopper-boy; and the plaintiff's is called "an improved hopper-boy."

But if the machines be so entirely different, as to entitle the plaintiff to a patent for the whole, though the S. hopper-boy was previously known and used, then it would necessarily follow, that even if the plaintiff were the original inventor of the improved machine, and that was the first invention, yet any one might with impunity make and use such a machine as the S. hopper-boy; that is to say, by stripping off some of the parts, he might entitle himself to use the residue. This is a proposition too monstrous to be maintained. If it be sound, it decides this case without any regard to the question of original invention, for the defendant Eaton used only the S. hopper-boy.

A sure test, however, of the identity, is to consider what parts are indispensable to both machines. They are, the upright shaft with a cog in it, the arm, and the sweeps. With these, the machine will work; without them, it will not. These parts are common to both machines. What is it that the plaintiff has added? What is not indispensable, but perhaps better. That is exactly the definition of an improvement. Can he, in his improved machine, dispense with any one of the parts that belong to the old machine? The answer is clear—he cannot. Can we dispense with any of his additions? Yes, with all of them. The machine is complete, an efficient agent for its purpose, without them; the evidence even leaves it doubtful whether, apart from the elevator, it is not the better of the two. It is certainly in use, and is the very machine for the use of which Mr. Eaton is sued. There can be no serious doubt, that if the plaintiff has any claim, it is only for an improvement.

1.—Whittemore v. Cutter, 1 Gallis. 450.
Wheat. 7.

2.—Odiorne v. Winkley, 2 Gallis. 54.

2. As a patent for an improvement, it is void, because the specification does not show in what the improvement consists, or, in other words, what it is that the plaintiff claims as his invention; "the nature and extent of the improvement are not stated in his specification." This was the precise ground of the decision below.

The counsel for the plaintiff who opened the argument, was understood to concede, that if the patent be for an improvement, and there be nothing in the circumstances of this particular case to make it an exception from the general rule, the law was correctly laid down. And certainly there can be no doubt of this, whether we consider the spirit and terms of the act of Congress, the decisions in England, or the adjudged cases in the United States.

The current of authority, of every sort, is uniform to establish, that the invention to be patented must be described in such full and exact terms as to "distinguish the same from all things before known." The 2d section of the act has no relation to this question. That provides for the case, where one man has a patent for a machine, and another for an improvement, declaring that the one shall not be at liberty to use the invention of the other, and thus precisely limiting their respective rights. Does it follow, that if a machine has not been patented, he who improves upon it has a right to appropriate the whole to himself, and withdraw what 387 *] *was before public property from the public use? That no one can afterwards make use of the old and known machine, without the license of the patentee? The section was made with a different view, and leaves what is not provided for upon the same footing on which it before stood. What was common property remains so; the patentee of the improvement is at liberty to use it because it is common, and no legislation was necessary to enable him; but he is not allowed to appropriate it to himself to the exclusion of others, any more than to appropriate the invention of a prior patentee. The 6th section, which makes it a good defense, that the patentee has stated more or less than the truth in his specification, "for the purpose of deceiving the public," has no relation to the question. There is no allegation here that the machine will not produce the described effect, or that more or less has been stated for the purpose of deceiving or misleading the public. Nor is this, the court will recollect, a summary proceeding to set aside the patent under the 10th section.

But the question, and the only question, is whether in an action by a patentee against a person charged with infringing his patent, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to show in what his invention consists. In the former argument of this case, this court have laid it down expressly, that "in all cases where his claim is for an improvement, it will be incumbent on him to show the extent of his improvement, so that a person understanding the subject may comprehend distinctly in what it consists.<sup>1</sup> How is this to be* shown? The answer is obvious—it is to be shown from the specification. That such was the meaning of the court is evident from their adopting almost the very words of the act of Congress, which are employed to describe the office of the specification, "so that a person understanding," &c. That nothing else could be their meaning is evident, for such, it cannot be denied, is the clear design of the act of Congress, and such is the established law as collected from authoritative decisions. The patent must not be more extensive than the invention; therefore if the invention consists of an addition or improvement only, and the patent is for the whole machine, or manufacture, it is void.<sup>2</sup> In England, the specification is not annexed to the patent, but is enrolled in chancery. Yet the specification is a part of the patent for the purpose of ascertaining the nature and extent of the alleged invention.<sup>3</sup>

In this country, it is filed in the Department of State. An authenticated copy of it is always annexed to the patent, and forms a part of the patent, absolutely essential, because the patent, properly so called, in fact gives no description, referring for that to the specification. The established formula used in all patents, and to be found in the present patent, is, "the said improvement, a description whereof is given in the words of the said Oliver Evans himself, in the schedule hereto annexed, and is made a part of these presents." Now, what should the patent *comprehend? Where the combination [389 of a certain number of the parts has existed, up to a certain point, in former machines, the patentee merely adding other combinations, the patent should comprehend such improvements only.<sup>4</sup> And the cases that have been already referred to clearly decide, that if the invention be of an improvement only, it is indispensable that the patent should not be broader than the invention; and the specification should be drawn up in terms that do not include anything but the improvement. It is essential to point out what is new, and what is old, so as to show precisely the extent of the alleged improvement. The patentee ought, in his specification, to inform the person who consults it, what is new and what is old. He should say, "my improvement consists in this," describing it by words, if he can, or if not, by reference to figures. But here the improvement is neither described in words or figures; and it would not be in the wit of man, unless he were previously acquainted with the construction of the instrument, to say what was old and what was new. A person ought to be warned by the specification against the use of a particular invention.<sup>5</sup> It need not be denied that this description might be sufficiently given by reference; as to some other patented machine, or to some well-known machine in familiar use. For instance, to use the illustration employed by Lord Ellenborough, if *we should say, take a common watch, [390 and add or alter such and such parts, describing them. All that is contended, and that is fully supported by authority, and by the reason of the case is, that the specification must, in

1.—3 Wheat. Rep. 518.

2.—Bull. N. P. 76; Boulton v. Bull, H. Bl. Rep. 463

3.—Boulton v. Bull; Hornblower v. Boulton, 3 Term. Rep. 95.

4.—Bevill v. Moore, 2 Marsh. Rep. 211.

5.—Per Lord Ellenborough; M'Farlane v. Price, 1 Starkie's Rep. 199.

some way or other, distinguish the new from the old, the improvement from what was known before, so as to show what the patented invention is, or else the patent is broader than the invention, and void. The decided cases in the United States are to the same effect. If the inventor of an improvement obtain a patent for the whole machine, the patent being more extensive than the invention, is void.<sup>1</sup>

The cases are brought together, well digested, and the principles stated in the appendix to 3 Wheat. Rep., 13.

How else can the extent of the improvement be shown? Shall it be by evidence at the trial? Then the design of the act would be entirely defeated, and the specification useless. The argument of the court below upon this point is perfectly conclusive. To say that the patent may be for the whole machine, and the claim for as much as the plaintiff can prove to be original, or rather the defendant cannot disprove, is to make the right depend, not upon the patent, nor even upon the fact of originality, but upon the evidence the party may have it in his power to produce, and his intelligence and skill in applying it. The right, instead of being uniform everywhere, *might be one thing in one state, and another in another. In different courts of the same state, it might be different. And even in the same court, at different times, as the particular evidence happened to vary, it would be more or less extensive. The patent would in effect be nothing but an outline, large enough of course, to be filled up as occasion might serve. This is an absurdity, and, what is worse, a great temptation to fraud. Besides, under this supposition, how is any man to inform himself what it is that is patented, so that he may avoid the danger of infringement? It is too late at the time of trial, to answer any good purpose to the defendant. And how are the public to be informed at the expiration of the time, or how is a person of skill to be able to make the improvement; in short, of what use is the specification, unless it be to define, with precision, the extent and nature of the improvement? The act of Congress emphatically refers to the specification, and to that alone, as furnishing everything, without extrinsic aid, and so it must do. If it be broader than the invention, the patent is void.

But it is objected here, that this was a question for the jury, and not for the court. Whether the specification is broader than the invention, may perhaps in some cases be a question of fact, or a mixed question of fact and of law, the construction of the written instrument of specification being for the court, and the other evidence in the case for the jury. But, if it be "incumbent upon the plaintiff to show the extent and nature of his improvement," and that is to be shown from the specification, then it is plainly incumbent upon him 392* to show from the specification, *where he claims for an improvement, that he has described an improvement as distinguished from a known machine. And that it is submitted, being exclusively a question arising upon the face of the instrument, is a question for the court. Let us examine the specification. Is there anything in it which even professes to describe an improvement, as distinguished from a machine known or used before? Does it not plainly, and in terms, include the whole machine? That is evidently a question of law, upon the face of the instrument, and it may be confidently pronounced, that it does include the whole, and that no man can so read the specification, as to ascertain which parts are claimed by the plaintiff, and which are not; or, that there are any parts which are not claimed by him. But, it is due to the court, further to say, that the charge in this respect, must, as in all other cases, be understood with reference to the allegations and to the evidence. If there had been an attempt to prove, or even an assertion, the most distant intimation, that men of skill in mechanics, bringing to the study of this difficult specification, the aid of peculiar knowledge, could discern in it a line between new and old, or any defined limits of improvement, that would doubtless have been fit to be heard, and whatever matter proper for the consideration of a jury might have arisen, would have been submitted to the jury. But no such evidence was offered—the record shows it. No such suggestion even was made; it was not pretended—the charge shows it; for the part excepted to was itself a reply by the court to an argument of the plaintiff's counsel, *which admitted that the specification [393 did not show in what the improvement consisted, by contending for the extravagant position that it was competent to show it by evidence at the trial, which is in effect to say, that the plaintiff was entitled to whatever the defendant had not disproved.

It has been said, however, and to our very great surprise, that the court below erred in dealing with this patent as a patent for an improvement; that it is not for an improvement, but for an improved hopper-boy. When this case was formerly before the Circuit Court, that court dealt with the patent as a patent for a hopper-boy, and not for an improvement. Upon error to this court, one error principally relied upon was, that the court below had thus construed it to be a patent for the machine.<sup>2</sup> And it was contended that an "improved hopper-boy," and an "improvement on a hopper-boy," were one and the same. "This," says one of the counsel, "was a patent for an improvement on the particular machine in question." And of that opinion were the court, after much deliberation.<sup>3</sup> And can it now be contended, in the same court, and by the same party, that this is not to be dealt with as a patent for an improvement? But, the truth is, it has been treated in this case as a patent for both the machine and the improvement, so as to give the plaintiff the full benefit of either construction. The real aim of the argument is to maintain, *that a patent for the whole may [394 be expounded as a patent for each of the parts, and legally covering as many as the patentee may be able to prove he has invented; that it may be a patent in words for one thing and in law for another; that it may have a sort of elas-

1.—Woodworth v. Parker, 1 Gallis. Rep. 439; Whittemore v. Cutter, 1 Gallis. Rep. 475; Odiorne v. Winkley, 2 Gallis. Rep. 51.

Wheat. 7. U. S., Book 5.

2.—3 Wheat. Rep. 486, 502.

3.—3 Wheat. Rep. 517.

tic ambiguity, capable of contraction, if not of expansion, so as to adapt itself to whatever it may be found convenient at any given time to embrace. This is against all settled principles; it is against good policy; and it is against the words and the spirit of the act of Congress.

Such being unquestionably the established law upon the subject of patents in general, it remains only to inquire, whether the ease of Oliver Evans is on any account an exception. And it is insisted here, that the special act for his relief makes it an exception. The history of that act is sufficient to show, that its only object was, to authorize a new patent to be issued by reason of the first having been declared void for irregularity of form attributable to the officers of the government. This gave an equitable title of relief. The appropriate relief was an extension of the time, so that the inventor might enjoy the privileges of a patent for the same time that he would have enjoyed them if the irregularity had not occurred, that is to say, the same privileges. This was sufficiently liberal, for the first patent had actually expired before the new one was granted. The new patent, too, was made retrospective, and gave to Oliver Evans an exclusive right for eight and twenty years, double the usual period; yet it was contended, formerly, that this special 395* act, liberal as it *confessedly was, went the further length of dispensing altogether with the necessity of proving he was the inventor, and even precluded all right to question the invention, which was in effect to say, that the exclusive privilege was secured to him, whether he was the inventor or not. That was overruled by this court, upon the plainest grounds.<sup>1</sup> And the whole scope of the opinion then delivered distinctly establishes, that except the extension of time and the union of different inventions in the same patent, which otherwise perhaps could not be regularly joined, the patent to be issued, was to be in all respects conformable to the general law, and subject to the same regulations as other patents. Such was the interpretation of the plaintiff himself: he applied in the usual manner, by petition, with a specification and oath. Such was the interpretation of the officers of government: the patent underwent the usual examination, and is in the usual form. Such is at this moment the interpretation: for it is upon the adoption of the general law by reference, that the jurisdiction of the federal courts in cases growing out of this patent entirely rests. If that law be not applicable, this court has no power to adjudicate the cause. It is needless to pursue this further, being already decided by the former decision of this court. For the terms and conditions upon which the patent was to be granted; the jurisdiction to attach to it; the rules to govern it; the special act makes no provision, but by reference to the existing law; and 396* *but for this reference we could not advance a single step in the inquiry.

All that has been said of the act of the legislature of Pennsylvania passed in the year 1787, may be disposed of in a single word. What its provisions were does not appear, and if it did, the right they conferred, whatever it may have been, was surrendered by accepting a patent under the law of the United States. The seventh section of the act of Congress is expressed.

In conclusion, then, it is confidently submitted, that the patent of Oliver Evans must be considered as a patent either for the machine or for the improvement.

That if it be for the machine, it is void, because it is fully proved that he was not the original inventor, but the machine was known and used before.

That if it be for an improvement, it is void, because it is broader than his invention, and does not specify in what his improvement consists, so as to distinguish it from what was known and used before.

The learned counsel also urged the points of evidence in this and the next following case (Evans v. Hettich), but as they are so fully noticed in the opinion of the court, it is not thought necessary to report that part of his argument.

Mr. Harper, in reply, observed, that in the opinion of the Circuit Court, two propositions were distinctly affirmed: (1) That Evans' patent of the hopper-boy was a patent for an improvement, and not for an original invention or discovery; and (2) *That being for [397 an improvement, was void, because the specification did not in terms distinguish the improvements from the original machine, called the Stouffer hopper-boy. Both these propositions were indispensable for supporting the judgment below. He denied them both, and should endeavor to show that they were equally void of foundation. If he could succeed in overthrowing either, the judgment of the Circuit Court must be reversed, and the patent right of the plaintiff supported; but he believed, and should endeavor to show, that both were wholly unfounded.

And first, is the patent of Oliver Evans a patent for an improvement, or for an original invention? The decisions of the Circuit Court maintained the former. He should endeavor to demonstrate the latter.

In the outset of this investigation it would be proper to remark, that the specification makes part of the patent; and he had the authority of this court, in the former decision in this case,<sup>2</sup> for saying, that in order to ascertain what Oliver Evans obtained by his patent, one of the proper points of inquiry was, what did he ask for? what was it his wish and intention to obtain? This question may be satisfactorily answered, by referring to that part of his specification which relates to the hopper-boy. This specification is printed at length in a note to 3 Wheat. Rep. and the part of it now in question is found at p. 468. The description of the machine is very full, *minute, and clear; and it [398 concludes with this declaration: "I claim as my invention the peculiar properties or principles which this machine possesses, viz., the spreading, turning, and gathering the meal, at one operation, and the using and lowering its arms by its motion, to accommodate itself to any quantity of meal it has to operate on."

This was what he claimed as his invention. For this he asked a patent. Not for the machine which he had thus improved, but for the principle on which it was made to operate. He has not very accurately expressed himself, or distinguished between the object to be obtained, and the mode of proceeding for its attainment; between the end and the means; the result and the modus operandi by which it is produced. But still his meaning is obvious. The object, the end to be obtained, the result, was the "spreading, turning, and gathering the meal, at one operation." The principle of the machine, the modus operandi by which the object was to be accomplished, in a new and better way, was the power of the machine to raise and lower its arms by its own motion, so as to accommodate itself to any greater or less quantity of flour on which it may have to operate. This, then, is his invention or discovery, which he claims as his own, and for which he demands a patent. His demand is complied with. He gets what he asked. This is what the grantors intended to give him; and I appeal again to the former decision, for the doctrine, that in order to ascertain what is given, we must look to the request of the receiver, and the intention of the giver.

1.—3 Wheat. Rep. 513.

2.—3 Wheat. Rep. 507.

399*] *It is, then, a patent for the peculiar principle of his machine, for its new mode of operating, that Oliver Evans asked for and received. That a new modus operandi, by a new combination of old instruments or machines, so as to produce either a new effect, or an old effect in a new way, is the proper subject-matter of a patent, appears from numerous authorities, and may be considered as a settled principle of the patent law. It was on this principle that Watts' patent for his improvements on the steam engine, which made so much noise in Westminster Hall, and produced such important effects, was finally supported and established.

The English law of patents, though different from ours in its origin, was probably the same in its principles. Indeed, our act of Congress was a mere enactment of the principles and system, which the English courts had established. That system grew out of the ancient prerogative of the crown in England, to grant monopolies. This power, long and often most oppressively exercised, was abolished in the early part of James the First's reign, by an act of Parliament, which was one of the earliest fruits of the increase of knowledge, the progress of correct ideas, and the improvement in the condition of society, which, at that time, had begun to appear. But for the encouragement of industry and ingenuity a proviso was introduced into the statute, that the king might still grant a monopoly "of any manner of new manufactures," to the first inventors, for any term not exceeding 14 years.<sup>1</sup> Upon this short 400*] proviso, this apparently scanty foundation, the whole structure of the English patent law, was raised by the English government and courts. The system which they thus established was adopted by our act of Congress. This system required a specification. Nothing is said of it by the statute; but the government required it, by an express clause of every patent. The principle on which it was required, was this: The statute conferred a benefit on the inventor, by giving him a monopoly of his invention for a limited time. For this benefit conferred on the patentee by the community, it was thought just that he should make a return. That return consisted in the knowledge and free use of his invention, which, by his specification, he should enable the community to obtain, after the expiration of his monopoly. This principle enables us not only to understand the origin and object of the specification, but also its nature and character, as its object was to put the public in possession of the invention, after the monopoly had ceased, so as to enable all persons to use it beneficially; it was indispensable that the invention should be so fully and clearly explained, as to enable persons skilled in the same art to make and use it. This was all that was to be effected by the specification, and consequently all that it was required to contain. The very same certainty of description which would enable persons skilled in the art to make and use the invention, after the monopoly should expire, would enable them to avoid making and using it, so as to subject themselves to penalties or loss, during the continuance of the monopoly.

*In the same manner it was established, that improvements in old machines or processes, might be combined as "new manufactures," and become the subject of patents. This principle was also incorporated into our act of Congress, in express terms. And here the same rule was adopted with respect to the specification. The "new manufacture," whether it consisted in a machine or process entirely new, or in the improvement of an old one, was to be described with such certainty, as to enable persons skilled in the art to make and use the invention, after the monopoly should expire, and to avoid it while the monopoly should exist. The principle and object were the same in both cases, and the same rule was adopted in both, by our act of Congress, as well as by the English decisions.

We shall now be able to perceive the application of the case of Watts' patent,<sup>2</sup> to the point under consideration; which, let it be considered, is to ascertain how far the discovery of a new modus operandi, so as to produce a new effect, or an old one in a new way, is the proper subject of a patent, as a useful invention, and not as an improvement.

The expansive power of steam had been many years before discovered by the Marquis of Winchester, who applied it, though very imperfectly, to various mechanical purposes. Among the rest, he employed it to put machines in motion, by communicating to them the movement which the steam was made to produce in beams and levers. Thus was laid the foundation of that wonderful invention, the steam engine. Various machines of [402 this kind, more or less perfect, were, from time to time, brought into use; and at length Newcomen made a steam engine, which was long considered as having attained the utmost point of perfection. It consisted of a cylinder or large tube of iron, made perfectly smooth and uniform within, and completely closed at the bottom, but open at the top. Inside of this cylinder was placed, horizontally, a thick strong plate of iron, so fitted at the edges to the inner surface of the cylinder, as to be air tight, and yet to play easily up and down. Into the centre of this plate was fitted a strong upright stem of iron, of the length required; and the stem and plate together made what is called the piston. The upper end of the piston stem was fastened by a joint to a horizontal beam, which was made fast by a joint, near the centre or at the farthest end, so as to allow its near end to play up and down with the piston to which it is attached. At the bottom of the cylinder, under the piston, was introduced a pipe or tube, leading from the boiler, where the steam was generated, into the cylinder, and furnished with a valve. When this valve was opened, it let the steam through the pipe into the lower part of the cylinder, under the piston, which was thus raised up by the explosive power of the steam, and raised with it the end of the horizontal beam to which it was attached. When the piston, and with it the beam, had been raised as high as was intended, the valve in the steam pipe was shut by the motion of the machine, and at the same moment, a valve was opened, by the same means, in a pipe, which 403* connected the *cylinder with a vessel of cold water. A quantity of this water was then introduced into the cylinder, under the piston, where it condensed the steam more or less completely, and created a vacuum more or less perfect; in consequence of which the piston was pressed down by the weight of the atmospheric air resting upon it, and carried down with it the end of the horizontal beam to which it was attached. When it had subsided as low as was desired, it opened the steam valve, and let in the steam under the piston, which was raised as before, and again pressed down by the weight of the air, on the steam being again condensed by the introduction of cold water. This operation went on continually, and thus an ascending and descending motion was produced, which was communicated by the horizontal beam to the whole machinery.

1.—See the case of Hornblower v. Boulton, 8 T. R. 105; The opinion of Mr. Justice Lawrence.

Wheat. 7.

2.—8 T. R. 95.

The defect of this engine at length began to be observed. It consisted in the cooling of the cylinder by the cold water let in to condense the steam. The cylinder being thus rendered colder than steam, a considerable portion of the steam introduced was condensed by this coldness, while the piston was rising; and was thus destroyed before it had done its office. This rendered a greater generation of steam necessary, and of course a greater consumption of fuel. The steam, too, was not suddenly or perfectly condensed, so as to let the piston descend with sufficient rapidity or force; by which the power and effect of the machine were diminished. The water, also, into which the steam had been converted by condensation, 404* mained in the bottom of the *cylinder, and further impeded the descent of the piston. These defects were seriously felt in a country where fuel was dear, and became continually more and more so. At length they threatened to render the engine entirely useless, by creating a greater expense in fuel than could be compensated by the labor saving power of the machine.

Then Watt arose, who, after long reflection and many experiments, conceived the happy idea of condensing the steam in a vessel different from that in which it was to perform its office. This he effected by connecting with the machine another vessel called a connector, which was connected with the cylinder by a pipe with a valve in it. This valve being opened by the motion of the machine, at the same moment when the piston had ascended to its greatest height, the steam rushed through it into the conductor, where it met a stream of cold water, introduced by the same means which had been before employed for letting it into the cylinder. This cold water condensed it as fast as it came in; and a pump was also contrived, to work by the motion of the machine, and drew out of the conductor all the steam that remained uncondensed and all the water produced by the condensation. Thus a most perfect vacuum was created in the condenser, and consequently in the cylinder connected with it; the piston descended with freedom, rapidity, and force; and the cylinder, not being touched or affected by the cold water, retained a heat equal to that of steam; so that no portion of the steam introduced into it, was condensed too soon.*

This was the great improvement; but others were *employed to increase its effort. [405 The cylinder was surrounded by a case the best calculated to retain heat, and the space between this case and the cylinder was kept full of steam or boiling water. Thus the cylinder was kept in the hottest possible state; the state best adapted to the preservation of the steam, while performing its office; and as steam thus preserved was found to be more effectual than atmospheric air in bringing down the piston, the top of the cylinder was closed, and steam was introduced above the piston as well as below it. This steam was conducted into the condenser, and there condensed and pumped out, in the same manner with that introduced below; and thus the piston being alternately pressed up and down, by the elastic power of steam, in its most efficacious condition, gave a most powerful, steady, and uniform motion to the engine. Oily substances were employed instead of water, in keeping the vessels air tight; especially the top of the cylinder, where the steam of the piston played through it. Thus the machine was rendered as perfect as it seemed capable of becoming.

Now, in what does this machine differ from the steam engine of Newcomen, which was in use before? Both had a boiler to produce the steam, and a cylinder to receive it. The piston was the same in both, and connected in the same manner with the horizontal beam, for the purpose of communicating the motion to the rest of the machinery. In both the piston was raised by expansive power of the steam; this steam, after its office had been performed, was condensed by cold water, so as to create a *vacuum in the cylinder, and permit the [406 piston to descend; and in both pipes and valves of the same construction was used, for introducing alternately the steam and the cold water. In what, then, did they differ? Merely in a new modus operandi, by which, with the addition of another vessel, the cold water was prevented from cooling the cylinder, while it conducted the steam; and the steam was made to operate in forcing the piston down, as well as in forcing it up. In this new modus operandi, produced by a different arrangement and construction of the old machines, with the addition of one new vessel, to receive and condense the steam, consisted the great invention of Watt; for which he obtained his patent, avowedly as for a new invention, or in the language of the British statute, a "new manufacture," and not for an improvement. His specification is inserted at length in 8 T. R., 96, note (a), where it will appear that he speaks of his discovery as "a new invention," and not as an improvement, and never once mentions or alludes to the old machine.

Wheat. 7.

In what did this new discovery consist? I answer with the two judges of the Common Pleas in England who were in favor of this patent, and one of whom was Lord Chief Justice Eyre,<sup>1</sup> and with the four Judges of the King's Bench, who were unanimous on the point<sup>2</sup> that it consisted in the new principle on which the steam was condensed, and which was carried into effect by a new combination of the old machinery, with the addition of one new instrument. The 407*] word "principle," as used in relation to this subject, is not taken in its general philosophical sense, where it means a law of motion or a property of matter; but in what may be termed its mechanical sense, in which it signifies a method of doing a thing, or of effecting a purpose; in other words, a modus operandi.

It is therefore established by this solemn and elaborate decision of six English judges against two, after repeated arguments and great consideration, that a new principle, or modus operandi, carried into practical and useful effect by the use of new instruments, or by a new combination of old ones, with or without the addition of one or more new ones, is an original invention for which a patent may be supported, without reference to any former invention or machine, for performing the same or a similar operation. This may be taken as a maxim which the cases referred to will be found fully to support.

Let us now apply this maxim to the patent of Oliver Evans. We shall soon see that according to the doctrine thus established, his discovery was not a mere "improvement," as the court below pronounced it to be, but an original invention.

The learned counsel here produced two models, one of Evans's hopper-boy, and one of Stouffer's, and explained minutely the difference between their principles, or modus operandi, which consisted in this: That in Stouffer's hopper-boy, the arms through a square mortice in which the square upright post was made to pass, were carried round by means of the upright post pressing upon the sides of the square 408*] mortice, which renders it impossible for the arms to rise and fall of themselves, as the meal under them might increase or diminish; while in the hopper-boy of Evans the upright post is round, and it passes loosely through a round hole in the arms, which are carried round by two pieces of timber of the proper length, called leaders, which are inserted firmly into the upper part of the post, and attached at their ends by lines or small cords, to the corresponding ends of the arms. These lines and leaders being put in motion by the upright post, trail round the arms, which at the same time play loosely on the post, and rise and fall of themselves, as the meal under them increases or diminishes in quantity. And to make them press more lightly on the meal, and rise and fall with more facility, as occasion may require, a weight a little lighter than themselves is attached to them by a cord which passes over a pulley in the upper part of the post. This weight nearly balances the arms, and enables them to play up and down much more easily and effectually.

The counsel also produced a drawing of Evans's machine from the patent office, to show that his model was correct, and referred to the facts of the evidence in the record where the machine of Stouffer is described, and its properties and defects explained.

He then proceeded to remark that the machine of Evans was obviously constructed upon a new principle, that the modus operandi was entirely new. The great object of both machines was to conduct the meal into the bolting chest, and to stir, turn, dry, and cool it on its way thither. The essential agents in this operation were the arms, which, if they remained stationary on the post, as they must of necessity do in Stouffer's machine, could not possibly perform this operation to advantage. They might sink down on the meal, as its quantity decreased, but could not possibly rise when it was increased; consequently, when new meal was placed on the floor, the machine must be stopped, and the arms lifted up. Hence, its motion was unequal, and its operation necessarily very irregular and imperfect. It also required a hand constantly, or frequently, to be present, and thus increased the expense.

Thus the condensation of the steam within the cylinder itself, in Newcomen's steam engine, cooled the cylinder improperly, wasted steam, made more fuel necessary, and rendered the operation of the machine imperfect, and too expensive. Here the similarity of imperfection is complete.

Evans removed the imperfection of the hopper-boy, not by merely adding to its parts, but by introducing a totally new principle and modus operandi. He detached the arms from the upright post entirely, and carried them round by means of the leaders and lines which have been described, leaving them to play freely up and down on the post, so as to accommodate themselves to the decreasing or increasing quantity of meal under them; and their movement up and down, he facilitated, regulated, and rendered perfect, by means of the weight and pulley. The modus operandi of the two machines consisted in the manner of carrying round the arms. This was the principle of both machines. That of Evans was new, and infinitely superior.

So Watt remedied the defects of Newcomen's steam engine, by condensing the steam in a different vessel from the cylinder, and increased the effect by introducing the steam above the piston as well as below it. This was a new principle; and here again the resemblance between the two cases is complete.

It being then clear that Evans had made a new invention as to the hopper-boy, and not merely what the law on this subject calls an improvement, and the cases showing that such an invention is the subject-matter of a patent for an original invention; it follows that he might have obtained a patent for his invention as an original invention, and not merely as an improvement. This leads to the inquiry, for what was this patent granted? Was it for an original invention of his own, or for an improvement on Stouffer's invention?

1.—Boulton v. Bull, 2 H. Bl. 463.

2.—8 T. R. 95.

We have the authority of this court, in its former decision in this case,<sup>1</sup> for saying that when we inquire what was granted, it is proper in the first place to ascertain what the grantee wished to obtain, and next, what the grantor had the intention and the power to give. What Evans wished to obtain, is fully and most explicitly stated in the concluding sentence of his specification.<sup>2</sup> After describing, most fully and clearly, the structure, principle, and operation of his hopper-boy, he concludes thus: "I 411"] claim as my *invention, the peculiar properties which this machine possesses, viz., the spreading, turning, and gathering the meal at one operation; and the rising and lowering its arms by the motion, to accommodate itself to any quantity of meal it has to operate on." Here it is manifest, that he describes the effect intended to be produced, which was the same in both machines, viz., the spreading, turning, and gathering the meal at one operation; and his modus operandi, for producing this effect, which was entirely new, viz., the rising and lowering the arms of the machine, by its own motion, so as to accommodate itself to the increasing or diminishing quantity of meal. For this modus operandi, this property or principle, he claims a patent.

It is equally clear that the grantor of the patent intended to give what he thus asked for; that is, a patent for this new principle. This appears from the special act of Congress, on which the patent is founded, and to which it refers; from the terms of the patent itself; and from the specification which is expressly incorporated into it, as one of its constituent parts.

As a further illustration of this position, the most celebrated and important invention of modern times may be referred to, an invention which was destined to produce more important effects than any other single effort of the human mind. He alluded to the steamboat; that sublime conception, which had conferred so much glory on its author and his country. What was a steamboat, but a new combination of these well-known machines, a boat, a steam 412"] engine, *and a flutter wheel, machines most familiar to all who knew anything of such subjects. But they were so combined as to produce a new and most surprising effect, by a new modus operandi. This method consisted in attaching a steam engine and two flutter wheels to a boat of proper dimensions and strength, and arranging them in such a manner that the flutter wheels were set in motion by the steam engine, and struck against the water instead of being struck by it, as they are in a common saw-mill. Thus, striking against the water they act as oars, or rather as paddles, and propel the boat forward. Now, what was there new in this machine? Not the instruments, but the manner of combining them, and their manner of operating produced by this combination: and yet no one has denied to the author of this beautiful and sublime idea the merit of an original invention, or called in question his patent, as a patent for an original invention. He, however, merely combined old machines, changing their forms and proportions so as to suit his new purpose. Evans not only combined old machines, but added new and essential parts, and by means of both produced a modus operandi altogether new, and highly useful. Upon what ground, then, can it be said that he is not an original inventor, when Watt was solemnly adjudged, and Fulton unanimously allowed to be so?

I therefore contend, that Evans was an original inventor, and not an improver merely; and that his patent is for an original invention, and not for an improvement. If so, the decision of the Circuit *Court in these two [413 cases<sup>3</sup> must be reversed, and the patent of my client is established.

But if it be not a patent for an original invention, but merely for an improvement, the decision below was erroneous, in declaring that the specification is defective. This defect consists, according to the decision below, in the omission to state particularly in what the improvement consists, and to distinguish it in terms from the pre-existent machine.

Here a very familiar maxim is applicable: quod nemini ad vana aut ad impossibilia lex cogit. The law requires nobody to do that which would be useless if done, or it is impossible to do. And cui bono make this discrimination; how can it be made; and by what provision of the law is it required? On the answer to these three questions the case must depend. If it can be shown that such a discrimination would be useless if made, or is impracticable, and that it is not expressly and positively required by the act of Congress, it will follow that the judgment below must be reversed.

And (1) cui bono make the discrimination? What good would it, or could it do, to anybody? In order to answer these questions, we must revert again to the object and uses of the specification.

The patent law confers a benefit on the discoverer of any artful invention, which consists in a monopoly of his invention for a limited time. The consideration which it requires him to pay for this benefit, is to put the public in possession of his invention; so as to enable all to use it, after his monopoly shall *ex- [414 pire; and all to avoid involving themselves in controversies and difficulties, by inadvertently infringing it while it continues. Hence the necessity of a specification; and here we find its uses, its extent, and its limitations. The British statute said nothing of a specification; but it was introduced by the executive government as a condition of every patent, and its character, objects and properties, have been accurately settled by judicial decisions in England. From those decisions it was borrowed by our act of Congress, and incorporated into its positive enactments. In both systems, its objects and uses, and, consequently, its nature and properties, are the same. Its object and all is to enable the public to enjoy the invention beneficially and fully, after the monopoly shall have expired, and to avoid interference with it while it shall continue. Now, what is necessary for attaining this object? Certainly nothing more than this, that the invention should be so described in the specification, by writing, and where the nature of the subject will permit, by drawings and models, as that anyone competently skilled in the art or science to which it relates, may be enabled to understand, make and use it. This is what the English decisions have established as the necessary properties of the specification; and what our statute expressly, and in terms, requires.

1.—3 Wheat. Rep. 454.

2.—Ib. 468, note.

3.—The present case, and the subsequent case of Evans v. Hettich.

Now, it is obvious, that in the case of an improvement, the principle is exactly the same as in that of an original invention. The invention—that is, the thing in its improved state—must be accurately and fully described; by writing always, and by drawings and models where the [415*] nature of the case will permit. When this is done, it is manifest that anyone who can understand the improved thing, so as to make and use it, may, in every possible case, distinguish the improvement from any and every original or antecedent thing of the same sort. Take these two hopper-boys as an example, and inspect the models which I hold in my hands. Can any man who has sufficient mechanical skill to make a hopper-boy, and understand its use, see at one glance in what these two machines differ from each other? Does not the court see it? Cannot any such mechanic, therefore, make and use the hopper-boy of Stouffer, if he should think proper, and avoid all interference with the improvement of Evans? It cannot be doubted that he may. And so may a person sufficiently skilled in the art or science to which an improvement relates, in every possible case. When he has the improvement, or the improved thing, sufficiently described, as the hopper-boy of Evans is admitted to be, and is informed of any pre-existing machine, or thing of the same general nature, which he wishes to make, sell, or use, he can look at that thing, compare it with the improved machine, or with the description, drawings and models in the patent office; see the difference, and make and use the original or old one, without the least danger of interfering with the improvement. Where, then, is the use of describing the original, or old invention, in the specification of the improvement; and of discriminating, in terms, between them? It is manifest that such a description would be perfectly useless and vain; and neminem ad vana lex cogit.

[416*] *2. But admitting that it might be of some use, would it be possible? This is the next head of inquiry; and I contend that it would not.

And here let it be remembered, that this doctrine of discrimination is not confined to such inventions as are express or avowed improvements on particular inventions. It extends necessarily to all inventions which improve anything that existed before. In the present case there happened, so far at least as is now known, to be but one hopper-boy, that of Stouffer, in use before Evans'. But suppose there had been twenty of as many different kinds, would they not all have been original with respect to Evans', or antecedent to it? Undoubtedly. And every man, notwithstanding Evans' patent, would have had a right to use them all, or any of them. What reason or principle could require the description of one in the specification of Evans, which would not equally apply to all? There certainly is none. Let us take the example of a patent for an improved stove for increasing the heat, or for any other object. How many millions of stoves, of what an endless variety of constructions, are used in the world. Must the patentee of this improved stove, or of this improvement on stoves, describe them all in his specification, and point out in terms the difference between each of them and his invention? It is manifest that he must, according to the doctrine of the Circuit Court; and it is equally manifest that he could not possibly do it. His specification would constitute a library of itself, which no man would or could read, and which the patent-office could hardly contain. So also improved chimneys, improved carriages, and all the multitude of other improvements, real or imaginary, on things in general use, for which patents are obtained, having pre-existent things of the same nature, and used for the same general purpose, must be described in each specification; which, if it were possible to write it, as it would very seldom be, would be far too voluminous to be understood or read.

Wheat. 7.

Thus it is manifest that the discrimination contended for would be impossible, as well as useless, in relation to improvements on unpatented machines. Where, indeed, a machine is already patented, it is very easy to describe it in the specifications of the improvement, and point out all the particulars in which they differ from each other. The original specification is in the patent-office, and may be referred to; the drawings and model are there, and may be seen. Here the rule requiring a discrimination in terms between the original invention and the improvement would not be unreasonable; and it might be useful; by tending to prevent disputes between the different patentees. The mistake of which we complain, has probably arisen from not discriminating between improvements on patented and unpatented inventions. In the latter, the discrimination is manifestly impossible, as well as useless. In the former, it would be easy, and might be of some use. It might be proper to require it in one case, whether the law positively enjoins it or not. To require it in the other, would be to make the law require what is both useless and impossible. This can never be done by the construction merely in a statute, which must always be reasonable. But it may be said [418*] that the statute positively enjoins it. If so, we must submit. When the legislature has clearly expressed its will, the court have no duty but to obey. This brings us to the question, what has the legislature enjoined on this subject?

3. All that can be supposed to relate to it is contained in the 2d and 3d sections. The second speaks of improvements; the third of specifications. It points out the object of the specification, and directs what shall be done for its attainment. The object is to put the public in complete possession of the invention, whether an improvement or an original discovery; so that interference with it may be avoided while the patent continues, and its benefits may be fully enjoyed by the public, after the patent expires. To this end it enjoins that the applicant for a patent "shall deliver a written description of his invention, and of the manner of using, or process of compounding the same; in such full, clear, and exact terms, as to distinguish the same from all other things before known; and to enable any person skilled in the art or science of which it is a branch, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make, compound, and use the same." This is the directory part. The thing is to be described "so as to distinguish it from all other things before known." How distinguish it? By describing all the things before known, and pointing out in terms in what it differs from them all? Certainly not; but by giving a description of it so complete and accurate, as "to enable any person skilled in the art, &c., to make, compound, 419*" and use "the same." Is the discrimination contended for, but not mentioned in the statute, necessary for this purpose? By no means. Any person skilled in the art or science, in order to make, compound, and use the new invention, has but to look to the description of the invention itself. He need not know how nearly it resembles, or how widely it differs, from any other thing before known. With these he has no concern. And if, on the other hand, he wishes to use nothing before used and known, and to avoid interfering with the patented invention, or improvement, he has only to compare the thing which he so wishes to make or use, with the description of the patented invention, or improvement contained in the specification; and he will immediately see wherein they differ, and be enabled to avoid the latter, while he uses the former.

This section (the 3d) further directs, with a view to the same objects, that the applicant, the inventor, "in case of any machine," shall "fully explain the principle, and the several modes in which he has contemplated the application of that principle or character, by which it may be distinguished from other inventions." Here, as in the rest of the section, nothing is said about improvements, as distinguished from original discoveries. They are all treated equally as "inventions," and are placed precisely on the same ground. They are all to be so described as that they may be distinguished in their principles, and modus operandi, as well as in their construction and composition, from other inventions; and this is to be effected by means, not of a formal discrimination, in terms between 420*] them, and any "other thing or things of the same general nature, but of a full and accurate verbal description, aided by drawings, models, and specimens; where the matter is of such a nature as to admit their use. In all this, nothing is said or hinted about "improvements," as contradistinguished from "original discoveries." All are treated alike as "inventions," and the same means of enabling all concerned, to distinguish them from things before used, or known, are provided in relation to both.

In fact, what is an "improvement," but a new invention? Everything that is made better is improved; and everything that makes another thing better, or does it in a better way, is an improvement. If it be new, it is an invention so far as it goes. The greater the improvement, the greater is the invention; and any improvement differs from any other, or from an original discovery, if there be any such thing, not in nature but in degree. They may be greater inventions or less; more or less ingenious; or more or less useful; but as far as they are, so they are all inventions, and are treated precisely alike by this portion of the patent law; which, I again repeat, makes no mention, and gives no hint of a discrimination, in the specification of an improvement, between the improvement, or the thing as improved, and the original thing on which the improvement is made. Treating them all alike as "inventions," it requires, with respect to all, that they shall be so described as clearly to distinguish them; that is, as to enable all concerned to distinguish them from all other things of the same nature, *before in use or [*421 known. To construe the statute, so as to make it require a description not only of the new invention, but of all things of the same general nature before known, and a discrimination in terms between them, would be as unreasonable in the case of an improvement as of an original discovery, and would be perfectly unreasonable in either. It would make the statute do that which its terms do not indicate, and which the law can never be presumed to intend. It would make it require what it is not only impossible in a great variety of cases to do, but what, if done, would in every case be wholly useless and vain. This it cannot be so construed as to require: for neminem ad vana aut ad impossibilia lex cogit.

The counsel then adverted to the 2d section, where it was supposed, he said, that something might be found to support this doctrine of discrimination. That section spoke particularly of improvements, as to which the third was wholly silent. It said nothing whatever of the specification, its objects or motive. It made two provisions, both useful as declarations of the law, to put persons on their guard and prevent mistakes, but both undoubtedly law, without any such declaration. The first was, that the discoverer and patentee of an improvement in anything before patented, should not be entitled to make, use or vend the original; nor the inventor and patentee of the original to make, use, or vend the improvement. Here again they were both considered as inventors, and both put on the same footing. It was declared, for general information, and to prevent doubts *and mistakes, that one should not be [*422 entitled to the invention of the other; but nothing was said about the manner of distinguishing these inventions one from the other. That was left to the third section; where it was done without the least mention or hint of the formal discrimination, in terms, contended for in the judgment below. It was manifest that this discrimination could derive no countenance from this branch of the second section. It obviously could derive none from the other branch, which merely, for giving information to the public, and preventing mistakes, declared "that simply changing the form or proportions of any machine, or composition of matter, in any degree, shall not be deemed a discovery." This merely amounts to saying, what would clearly have been the construction of law without any such declaration, that to constitute a patentable discovery, either original or by improvement, there must be a new principle or modus operandi, and not merely a change of form or proportion. If the change of form or proportion should be such as to produce a new principle or modus operandi, then it would be a discovery or invention, whether it amounts to an original or an improvement only; and here again improvements were treated as inventions, equally with original discoveries; the distinction between them being not in nature, but merely in degree.

But the point under consideration has been expressly settled, by the former decision in this case; the same objection, for want of this discrimination, was made in the court below, on the first trial, and the same doctrine on the subject [*423*] ject expressly laid down *by the Circuit Court. This doctrine formed one of the grounds of objection, distinctly stated in the argument of the former case in this court, and was distinctly noticed by the court; and with this part of the opinion below, and the objection to it, distinctly in view, this court decided this patent on this same specification to be valid, notwithstanding its want of a discrimination in terms between the improvement and the original invention; which was an express decision on this point, in favor of the plaintiff in error. He referred to various parts of the report of the former case of Evans v. Eaton,<sup>1</sup> to support these positions; remarking, that although the court certainly was not bound absolutely by its own decisions, and ought to overrule them, when satisfied of their incorrectness; yet they were the great landmarks of the law, and ought not to be overturned or shaken, without the strongest and clearest reasons.

The learned counsel also cited the authorities cited in the margin, as to the objection to the charge of the court below, upon the ground that it had invaded the proper province of the jury, in respect to the sufficiency of the specification, and to the nature of the patentee's invention, as an improvement or an original discovery.<sup>2</sup>

Mr. Justice STORY delivered the opinion of the court:

This is the same case which was formerly before *this court, and is reported in 3 Wheat. Rep., 454, and by a reference to that report, the form of the patent, the nature of the action, and the subsequent proceedings, will fully appear. The cause now comes before us upon a writ of error to the judgment of the Circuit Court, rendered upon the new trial, had in pursuance of the mandate of this court.

Upon the new trial several exceptions were taken by the counsel for the plaintiff. The first was to the admission of a Mr. Frederick, as a witness for the defendant. It is to be observed, that the sole controversy between the parties at the new trial was, whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover for an alleged breach of his patent by the defendant in using the improved hopper-boy. Frederick, in his examination on the voir dire, denied that he had any interest in the cause, or that he was bound to contribute to the expenses of it. He said he had not a hopper-boy in his mill at present, it being then in court; that it was in his mill about three weeks ago, when he gave it to a person to bring down to Philadelphia; and that his hopper-boy spreads and turns the meal, cools it some, dries it, and gathers it to the bolting-chest. Upon this evidence the plaintiff's counsel contended that Frederick was not a competent witness, but the objection was overruled by the court. It does not appear from this examination whether the hopper-boy used by Frederick was that improved by the plaintiff or not; but assuming it was, we are of opinion that the witness was *rightly admitted. It is perfectly clear, [*425*] that a person having an interest only in the question, and not in the event of the suit, is a competent witness; and in general the liability of a witness to a like action, or his standing in the same predicament with the party sued, if the verdict cannot be given in evidence for or against him, is an interest in the question, and does not exclude him. If nothing had been in controversy in this case, as to the validity of the patent itself, and the general issue only had been pleaded, the present objection would have fallen within the general rule. But the special notice in this case asserts matter, which if true, and found specially by the jury, might authorize the court to adjudge the patent void, and it is supposed that this constitutes such an interest in Frederick in the event of the cause, that he is thereby rendered incompetent. But in this respect, Frederick stands in the same situation as every other person in the community. If the patent is declared void, the invention may be used by the whole community, and all persons may be said to have an interest in making it public property. But this results from a general principle of law, that a party can take nothing by a void patent; and so far as such an interest goes, we think it is to the credit and not to the competency of the witness. It is clear that the verdict in this case, if given for Evans, would not be evidence in a suit against Frederick, but Frederick would be entitled to contest every step in the cause, in the same manner as if no such suit had existed. Non constat, that Frederick himself will ever be sued by the plaintiff, or that if *sued, any [*426*] recovery can be had against him, even if the plaintiff's patent should not be avoided in this suit. It therefore rests in remote contingencies, whether Frederick will, under any circumstances, have an interest in the event of this suit, and the law adjudges the party incompetent only when he has a certain, and not a contingent interest. It has been the inclination of courts of law in modern times, generally, to lean against exceptions to testimony. This is a case which may be considered somewhat anomalous; and we think it safest to admit the testimony, leaving its credibility to the jury.

Another exception was to the refusal of the court to allow a deposition to be read by the plaintiff, which had been taken according to a prevalent practice of the state courts. It is not pretended that the deposition was admissible according to the positive rules of law, or the rules of the Circuit Court; and it is not

1.—3 Wheat. Rep. 454.

2.—12 H. Bl. 478, 484, 497; 8 T. R. 99, 101, 103; 1 Gallis. 481; 1 Mason, 189, 191.

Wheat. 7.

now produced, so that we can see what were the circumstances under which it was taken. No practice, however convenient, can give validity to depositions which are not taken according to law, or the rules of the circuit court, unless the parties expressly waive the objection, or, by previous consent, agree to have them taken and made evidence. This objection, therefore, may at once be dismissed.

The principal arguments, however, at the bar have been urged against the charge given by the Circuit Court in summing up the cause to the jury. The charge is spread in extenso upon the record, a practice which is unnecessary and inconvenient, and may give rise to minute criticisms and observations *upon points incidentally introduced, for purposes of argument or illustration, and by no means essential to the merits of the cause. In causes of this nature we think the substance only of the charge is to be examined; and if it appears, upon the whole, that the law was justly expounded to the jury, general expressions, which may need and would receive qualification, if they were the direct point in judgment, are to be understood in such restricted sense.

It has been already stated, that the whole controversy at the trial turned upon the use of the plaintiff's hopper boy; and no other of the inventions, included in his patent, was asserted or supposed to be pirated by the defendant.

The plaintiff, with a view to the maintenance of his suit, contended, that his patent, so far as respected the hopper-boy, had a double aspect. 1. That it was to be as a patent for the whole of the improved hopper-boy; that is, of the whole machine as his own invention. 2. That if not susceptible of this construction, it was for an improvement upon the hopper-boy, and he was entitled to recover against the defendant for using his improvement. The defendant admitted that he used the improved hopper-boy, and put his defense upon two grounds: 1. That if the patent was for the whole machine, i. e., the improved hopper-boy, the plaintiff was not the inventor of the improved hopper-boy so patented. 2. That if the patent was for an improvement only upon the hopper-boy, the specification did not describe the nature and extent 428* of the improvement; *and if it did, still the patent comprehended the whole machine, and was broader than the invention. To the examination of these points, and summing up the evidence, the attention of the Circuit Court was exclusively directed; and the question is, whether the charge, in respect to the matters of law involved in these points, was erroneous to the injury of the plaintiff.

We will consider the points in the same order in which they were reviewed by the Circuit Court. Was the patent of the plaintiff, so far as respects his improved hopper-boy, a patent for the whole machine as his own invention? It is not disputed that the specification does contain a good and sufficient description of the improved hopper-boy, and of the manner of constructing it; and if there had been any dispute on this subject, it would have been matter of fact for the jury, and not of law for the decision of the court. The plaintiff, in his specification, after describing his hopper-boy, its structure, and use, sums up his invention as follows: "I claim as my invention, the peculiar properties or principles which this machine possesses, in the spreading, turning and gathering the meal at one operation, and the raising and lowering of its arms by its motion, to accommodate itself to any quantity of meal it has to operate upon." From this manner of stating his invention, without any other qualification, it is apparent that it is just such a claim as would be made use of by the plaintiff, if the whole machine was substantially in its structure and combinations new. The plaintiff does not state *it to be a speci- [429fic improvement upon an existing machine, confining his claim to that improvement, but as an invention substantially original. In short, he claims the machine as substantially new in its properties and principles, that is to say, in the modus operandi. If this be true, and this has been the construction strongly and earnestly pressed upon this court by the plaintiff's counsel, in the argument at the present term, what are the legal principles that flow from this doctrine? The patent act of the 21st of February, 1793, ch. 11, upon which the validity of our patents generally depends, authorizes a patent to the inventor, for his invention or improvement in any new and useful art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter not known or used before the application. It also gives to any inventor of an improvement in the principle of any machine, or in the process of any composition of matter which has been patented, an exclusive right to a patent for his improvement; but he is not to be at liberty to use the original discovery, nor is the first inventor at liberty to use the improvement. It also declares that simply changing the form or the proportion of any machine or composition of matter, in any degree, shall not be deemed a discovery. It farther provides, that on any trial for a violation of the patent, the party may give in evidence, having given due notice thereof, any special matter tending to prove that the plaintiff's specification does not contain the whole truth relative to his discovery, or contains more than is necessary to produce the effect (where the addition or concealment shall appear to have been to *deceive [430the public), or that the thing secured by the patent was not originally discovered by the patentee, but had been in use, or had been described in some public work anterior to the supposed discovery of the patentee, or that he had surreptitiously obtained a person's invention; and provides that in either of these cases judgment shall be rendered for the plaintiff, with costs, and the patent shall be declared void. It farther requires, that every inventor, before he can receive a patent, shall swear or affirm to the truth of his invention, "and shall deliver a written description of his invention, and of the manner of using, or process of compounding the same, in such full, clear, and exact terms, as to distinguish the same from all things before known, and to enable any person skilled in the art or science, of which it is a branch, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make, compound and use the same; and in the case of any machine, he shall fully explain the several modes in which he has contemplated the application of the principle, or character by which it may be distinguished from other inventions."

From this enumeration of the provisions of the act, it is clear that the party cannot entitle himself to a patent for more than his own invention; and if his patent includes things before known, or before in use, as his invention, he is not entitled to recover, for his patent is broader than his invention. If, therefore, the patent be for the whole of a machine, the party can maintain a title to it only by establishing that it is substantially new in its structure and mode of operation. If the same combinations 431* existed before <sup>in</sup> machines of the same nature, up to a certain point, and the party's invention consists in adding some new machinery, or some improved mode of operation, to the old, the patent should be limited to such improvement, for if it includes the whole machinery, it includes more than his invention and therefore cannot be supported. This is the view of the law on this point which was taken by the Circuit Court. That court went into a full examination of the testimony, and also of the structure of Evans' hopper-boy, and Stouffer's hopper-boy, and left it to the jury to decide, whether up to a certain point, the two machines were or were not the same in principle. If they were the same in principle, and merely differed in form and proportion, then it was declared that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover; or, to use the language of the court, if the jury were of opinion that the plaintiff was not the inventor of the hopper-boy, he was not entitled to recover, unless his was a case excepted from the general operation of the act. We perceive no reason to be dissatisfied with this part of the charge; it left the fact open for the jury, and instructed them correctly as to the law. And the verdict of the jury negatived the right of the plaintiff, as the inventor of the whole machine. The next inquiry before the Circuit Court was, whether the plaintiff's case was excepted from the general operation of the act. Upon that it is unnecessary to say more than that the point was expressly decided by this court in the negative, upon the former writ of error. And we think the opinion of this court, delivered on that occasion, is correctly understood <sup>and</sup> expounded by the Circuit Court. It could never have been intended by this court to declare, in direct opposition to the very terms of the patent act, that a party was entitled to recover, although he should be proved not to have been the inventor of the machine patented; or that he should be entitled to recover, notwithstanding the machine patented was in use prior to his alleged discovery. There is undoubtedly a slight error in drawing up the judgment of the court upon the former writ of error: but it is immediately corrected by an attentive perusal of the opinion itself. And we do not think that it can be better stated or explained than in the manner in which the Circuit Court has expounded it.

We are then led to the examination of the other point of view in which the plaintiff's counsel have attempted to maintain this patent. That is, by considering it, not as a patent for the whole of the machine or improved hopper-boy, but as an improvement of the hopper-boy. Considered under this aspect, the point presents itself which was urged by the defendant's counsel, viz., that if it be a patent for an improvement, it is void, because the nature and extent of the improvement is not stated in the specification. The Circuit Court went into an elaborate examination of the law applicable to this point, and into a construction of the terms of the patent itself, and came to the conclusion that no distinct improvement was specified in the patent; that such specification was necessary in a patent for an improvement, and that for this defect, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, supposing his patent to be for an improvement <sup>only</sup> of an existing machine. [*433 It may be justly doubted, whether this point at all arises in the cause; for the very terms of the patent, as they have been already considered, and as they have been construed at the bar by the plaintiff's counsel, at the present argument, seem almost conclusively to establish, that the patent is for the whole machine; that is, for the whole of the improved hopper-boy, and not for a mere improvement upon the old hopper-boy. But, waiving this point, can the doctrine asserted at the bar be maintained, that no specification of an improvement is necessary in the patent; and that it is sufficient if it be made out and shown at the trial, or may be established by comparing the machine specified in the patent with former machines in use? That there is no specification of any distinct improvement in the present patent, is not denied; that the patent is good without it, is the subject of inquiry. Let this be decided by reference to the patent act.

The third section of the patent act requires, as has been already stated, that the party "shall deliver a written description of his invention, in such full, clear, and exact terms, as to distinguish the same from all other things before known, and to enable any person skilled in the art or science, &c., &c., to make, compound, and use the same." The specification, then, has two objects: one is to make known the manner of constructing the machine (if the invention is of a machine), so as to enable artisans to make and use it, and thus to give the public the full benefit of the discovery after the expiration <sup>of</sup> the patent. It is not [*434 pretended that the plaintiff's patent is not in this respect sufficiently exact and minute in the description. But whether it be so or not, is not material to the present inquiry. The other object of the specification is, to put the public in possession of what the party claims as his own invention, so as to ascertain if he claim anything that is in common use, or is already known, and to guard against prejudice or injury from the use of an invention which the party may otherwise innocently suppose not to be patented. It is, therefore, for the purpose of warning an innocent purchaser or other person using a machine, of his infringement of the patent; and at the same time of taking from the inventor the means of practicing upon the credulity or the fears of other persons, by pretending that his invention is more than what it really is, or different from its ostensible objects, that the patentee is required to distinguish his invention in his specification. Nothing can be more direct than the very words of the act. The specification must describe the invention "in such full, clear, and distinct terms, as to distinguish the same from all other things before known." How can that be a sufficient specification of an improvement in a machine, which does not distinguish what the improvement is, nor state in what it consists, nor how far the invention extends? Which describes the machine fully and accurately, as a whole, mixing up the new and old, but does not in the slightest degree explain what is the nature or limit of the improvement which the party claims as his own? It seems to us perfectly 435* clear that such a specification *is indispensable. We do not say that the party is bound to describe the old machine; but we are of opinion that he ought to describe what his own improvement is, and to limit his patent to such improvement. For another purpose, indeed, with the view of enabling artizans to construct the machine, it may become necessary for him to state so much of the old machine as will make his specification of the structure intelligible. But the law is sufficiently complied with in relation to the other point, by distinguishing, in full, clear, and exact terms, the nature and extent of his improvement only.

We do not consider that the opinion of the Circuit Court differs, in any material respect, from this exposition of the patent act on this point; and if the plaintiff's patent is to be considered as a patent for an improvement upon an existing hopper-boy, it is defective in not specifying that improvement, and therefore the plaintiff ought not to recover.

Upon the whole, it is the opinion of the majority of the court, that the judgment of the Circuit Court ought to be affirmed with costs.

Mr. Justice LIVINGSTON dissented. At this late period, when the patentee is in his grave, and his patent has expired a natural death, we are called on to say, whether his patent ever had a legal existence, and it may seem not very important to the representatives of the patentee what may be the decision of this court. But understanding that many other actions are pending for a violation of this part of the patent right, and that infractions have taken place for which actions may yet be commenced, and 436* believing that the decision we are about to make will have a very extensive, if not a disastrous bearing on many other patents for improvements, and will in fact amount to a repeal of many of them, I have thought proper to assign my reasons for dissenting from the opinion just delivered.

In doing this, my remarks will be confined principally to the charge of the court, so far as it applies to the claim of Evans for an improvement on a hopper-boy.

I was much struck with the argument of the plaintiff's counsel in favor of the patent being for an original invention, and not for an improvement; nor would it in my opinion be a forced construction, to regard it as a patent for a combination of machines to produce certain results, and not for any of the machines, nor the different parts of which the whole is composed.

But considering it as a patent for an improvement on a hopper-boy, in which light it had been regarded, as well by the Circuit as by this court, when this cause was here before, I proceeded to examine the charge, so far as it relates to this part of the subject.

The court, after stating in what particulars the plaintiff's counsel contended that his improvement consists, which is unnecessary to repeat here, proceeds:

"The plaintiff has laid before you strong evidence to prove that his hopper-boy is a more useful machine than the one which is alleged to have been previously discovered and in use. If, then, you are satisfied of this fact, the point of law which has been *raised by the [437 defendant's counsel remains to be considered, which is, that the plaintiff's patent for an improvement is void because the nature and extent of his improvement is not stated in the specification.

"The patent is for an improved hopper-boy, as described in the specification, which is referred to and made part of the patent. How does the specification express in what his improvement consists? It states all and each of the parts of the entire machine, its use and mode of operating; and claims, as his invention, the peculiar properties or principles of the machine, viz., the spreading, turning, and gathering the meal, and the raising and lowering of its arms by its motion, to accommodate itself to the meal under it. But does this description designate the improvement, or in what it consists? Where shall we find the original hopper-boy described, either as to its construction, operation, or use, or by reference to anything by which a knowledge of it may be obtained? Where are the improvements on such originals stated? The undoubted truth is, that the specification communicates no information whatever upon any of these points." After some farther reasoning on the subject, and showing that the plaintiff's case is not excepted from the general rule of law, by the act which was passed for his relief, the court declares that for this imperfection or omission in the specification, the "plaintiff is not entitled to recover for an alleged infringement of his patent for the improvement on the hopper-boy." This was equivalent to saying that for this defect in the specification, the patent for the improved hopper-boy was void, and, *of [438 course, that no action at all, whatever might be the state of the evidence, could be maintained for the use of it. It left nothing, as it regarded the improved hopper-boy, for the jury to decide. Such is the charge, and it is delivered in terms too plain to be misunderstood.

The objections to it are now to be considered. In doing this it will be shown,

1st. That the specification is not defective, and that although it does not discriminate in what particulars the machine in question does differ from other hopper-boys in use, yet, if from the whole of the description taken together, the machine is specified so minutely, and so accurately, as to be directly and easily distinguished from all other hopper-boys antecedently known, everything has been done which the law requires, and the patent is good.

2d. That if the specification be vicious in the points mentioned, the patent ought not to be considered as absolutely void; but it is enough, and the public interest is sufficiently guarded, if care be taken that it shall not be extended to create a monopoly in any other machine, which may or may not be mentioned in the patent, which was previously known or in use. And,

Wheat. 7.

3d. That if a patent must be set aside for such defect in the specification, it should be left to the jury, on the evidence before them, to decide whether the improvement patented be not set forth with all necessary precision.

1. I have said the specification is not defective.

In determining this question, it would seem 439*] but *natural and just that the validity of a patent granted under a particular act of Congress should be tested by the terms there used, and by the decisions of our own courts, so far as they are of authority, and that we should be extremely cautious in adopting the rules which have been introduced into other countries, and under laws not in every respect like our own, however respectable the tribunals may be which may have prescribed those rules; and this the more especially, as most of the decisions in England, which are generally cited, and seem to have been implicitly followed in this country, are of a date long subsequent to the revolution, and many of them posterior to the passage of the patent laws in this country, and which could not therefore have been in the contemplation of Congress at the time. Besides, there is somewhat of hardship in constantly applying to a patentee in this country, adjudications made on a British act of Parliament very unlike our own, and with which decisions he has no means of becoming acquainted until long after a knowledge of them can be of any service. Already have we extended to patents for improvements on old machines, several recent decisions in England, although it was long doubted in that country, and as late as the year 1776, whether by the act of the 21 James I., c. 3, there could be a patent for an addition only. When the English courts decided in favor of such patents, they also made rules for their construction, as cases arose; there being no direct provisions in the statute on the subject. As we have provided by law, not only for the security of inventions entirely new, but also 440*] for the *protection of those who may discover any new and useful improvement on any art, machine, &c., not known or used before, and have prescribed the terms on which patents under it may be obtained, it would seem, if all those terms are complied with, and the invention be really new and useful, that no court can have a right to add any other terms, or to require of a patentee anything more than what the law has enjoined on him. Let us now try the patent before us by this rule: The act of the 21st February, 1793, c. 11, after stating in what cases letters patent for inventions may issue, and how they are to be obtained, requires, inter alia, that the inventor, before he receives his patent, shall take a certain oath, and shall deliver a written description of his invention, and of the manner of using the same, in such full, clear, and exact terms, as to distinguish the same from all other things before known, and to enable any person skilled in the art or science of which it is a branch, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and use the same. And in the case of a machine, he shall fully explain the principle, and the several modes in which he has contemplated the application of that principle, or character by which it may be distinguished from other inventions; and he is to accompany the whole with drawings and written references, where the nature of the case admits of it; and a model of his machine, if required by the Secretary of State, is also to be delivered.

In the present case, the patent is for an improved hopper-boy; a particular description of which, and its uses, will be found in 3 Wheat. Rep., 466. It is *not pretended that this [*441] machine, if made in conformity with the description given by Mr. Evans, could not in fact be distinguished from everything else before known, when brought into comparison with it, nor that a skillful person, from its description, would not be able to make one like it; which would seem to satisfy every requisition of the law. But the defendant's counsel say this is not enough. It should not only in its organization and aggregate be different from everything else, but every respect in which it differs in its construction or operation from other machines, should be minutely stated in the specification; or, in other words, that other machines heretofore used for similar purposes, should be either described or referred to therein, and the differences between the patented machines and those in former use, be carefully designated.

The answer to this is, that the law does not require it—that it is impracticable, and would be of no use.

We have seen already that the law prescribes no precise form of specification, which would have been impracticable, and imposes no obligation to describe, in any particular mode, the machine in question. Not a word is said as to showing in what particulars the improvement patented differs from all other machines for the same purpose then in use. If, on the whole description taken together, the machine of the plaintiff can be distinguished from other machines when compared with his, the words and the objects of the law are satisfied. The law appears to have nothing else in view, in requiring a specification, than the instruction *of the public; that is, to guard [*442] them against a violation of the patented improvement, and to enable them, when the letters patent expire, from the specification filed, to make a machine similar to the one which had been patented. The only inquiry, therefore, ought to be, whether this obvious intention of the legislature has been answered by the particular specification which may be the subject of litigation; and if enough appears, either to prevent a person from encroaching on the right of the patentee, or to enable a skillful person to make a machine which shall not only resemble the one patented, but produce the like effect; more ought not to be required. Whether these ends be attained by a particular description of every part of the improved machine, or by describing in what respect it differs from other machines, can make no difference. The information to the public is as valuable and intelligible, if not more so, in the former case, than in the latter. If it be, taken altogether, an improved machine, for the purpose of producing certain results, and so described that it may be distinguished from other machines, and that others may be made on the same model, it is a literal compliance with all that the law requires. If the different parts of the machine, and their combination, or connection, be accurately described, or intelligibly set forth, why should it not be supported, although no reference be made to other machines dissimilar in construction, and which, although applied for the same purpose, are inferior in the beneficial results produced by them? To the objection, that it 443*] does not precisely appear in *what the patent hopper-boy differs from those antecedently in use, the answer is, and it ought to be conclusive, that the patentee does not mean to abridge or restrain the public from using those or any other machines, so that they differ from the one described by him; and that any mechanic, on having his specification before him, can avoid an interference with his invention. To confine our examination to the only hopper-boy which was produced on this trial, and which was called Stouffer's hopper-boy, and of which a model has been exhibited to the court, together with a model of Evans' improved hopper-boy, can a doubt be entertained for an instant that they are very dissimilar, and that any mechanic would not, in a moment, point out the distinctions between them, either from the specification or the model—or that he would not be able to make a Stouffer hopper-boy, or the improved hopper-boy of Evans, as he might be directed; and in like manner he would be able, when brought together, to discriminate between any other hopper-boy and that of Evans, provided they were different, so that those who were desirous of having a hopper-boy, on an old construction, and of not interfering with the rights of Mr. Evans, would labor under no difficulty whatever. But inasmuch as Evans himself has not discriminated or exhibited in his specification all the points of difference between his and other hopper-boys, it is supposed that his patent is for some hopper-boy already in use, as well as for his improvement thereon. The very terms of his specification precluded every supposition of that 444*] kind. If there *were a thousand of those machines, on different constructions, in use before the date of his patent, he leaves to the public the undisturbed enjoyment of them. He meddles not, nor does he pretend to interfere with any of them, until they make or use one constructed, in all its parts, upon his model. That form, and that form alone, he claims as his invention or improvement. It would not have been difficult, even from British authorities, to show that this specification was sufficient; but I prefer recurring to our own law as the only proper criterion of the validity or invalidity of the specification in question. My opinion is, that it has all the certainty which is required by law.

Such a specification as is required by the Circuit Court, is not only not prescribed by law, but, to me, it appears to be one extremely difficult, if not impracticable.

If the inventor of an improved hopper-boy is to discriminate, in its specification, between his improvements and any particular hopper-boy, which may be produced on the trial, and is to be non-suited for not having done so, however correct and distinguishing it may be in every other respect, he must do the like as to all other hopper-boys; and if he must describe any, he must describe all others with which he may be acquainted; and, after all, some one may be introduced at the trial, of which he had never heard, or which he had never seen; and inasmuch as he had not stated in what respects it was improved by his machine, although this would immediately be seen on inspection, he must not *only fail [*445 of recovering damages for a manifest violation of his right, but must have his patent declared void by the court, without a trial by jury, and be deprived of the fruits of a most valuable improvement, not because he was not the bona fide inventor—not because he had not described his improvement with sufficient certainty, according to the act of Congress—but because something more was required of him, of which he had no means of information. The only hopper-boy which made its appearance on this trial, except the plaintiff's, was that known by the name of the Stouffer hopper-boy; but non constat, that there may not have been a hundred different kinds in use, and some entirely unknown to the plaintiff. If he could have described them all, which would not have been an easy task, and stated in what particulars his hopper-boy differed from them all, his specification would have extended to an immoderate length, and after all have been less intelligible and satisfactory than a full description, such as is given here, of all the parts of which his consisted, and of the manner in which they are put together. There may be cases in which an improvement may be so simple as to describe it at once by reference to the thing or machine improved, as in the case of an improvement of this kind on a common watch. But even in the case of a watch, if the improvement pervades the whole machine, it would be a compliance with the terms of the law, if the patentee described every part of his improved watch, with its principle, without discriminating particularly in what respect his different wheels, &c., varied from all other watches *then [*446 in use. Many patents have been obtained for improvements on stoves, locks, &c.; but has it ever been required of the patentee, in such cases, not only to describe in what manner his stove or lock is constructed, and the benefits resulting from such construction, but to point out every particular in which they differ from those already in use? This, to say the least, would be a work of great labor, and of little or no use to the public, who would be at liberty to use a stove or lock of any construction, not interfering with the one described in the specification of the patentee.

A few observations will show that such a description as the defendant's counsel contend for, would be of no greater use than the one which Mr. Evans has adopted. After all the pains to discriminate had been taken, the question would still recur, how is the improved hopper-boy to be constructed? and if, from the specification, that could not be ascertained, then, and then only, ought it to be pronounced defective. But if, from the description, the improved hopper-boy could be made by a skillful mechanic, then the public is informed, not only of what has been patented, but of what still remains common as before, and if an action be brought for a violation of the patented right, and it should appear that the hopper-boy used is not of such construction, the plaintiff must fail in his suit. It cannot be said, with any justice, that if the discrimination be not made, the patent includes not only the improvement, but the old machine on which the improvement is engrafted. *The old machine still remains public property; may be used by every one; nor can any person be considered as infringing on the patent right, until he adds to the machine already in use the improvements of the patentee, or, in other words, until he makes a machine resembling, in all its parts, the one which is described in the specification.

2d. But if the specification be defective in the points which have been mentioned, is the patent therefore necessarily void? This is a question of vital importance to every patentee.

I am aware that it has been said in England, that the patent must not be more extensive than the invention; therefore, if the invention consists in an improvement only, and the patent is for the whole machine, it is void. But I am not aware that it has ever been decided there that when a patent is for an "improved machine," and is taken out only for the machine thus improved, and not for the machine as before used, that such patent is void. But whatever may have been some of the late decisions in that country, I prefer, and think it the better course, to consider this question also under our own act, which, in this respect, is different from the English statute, and will therefore afford us more light, and be a safer guide than either that statute or the judgment on it. In what part, then, of our act, may it be asked, is an authority given to the federal courts to declare a patent void for a defective specification, however innocently made, and which in its consequences can injure no one? I state the question in this way, not because I think it necessary to show that if injurious consequences *might flow from an imperfect specification, a patent must necessarily be declared void, but because I think it must be admitted that there is no evidence whatever in this cause, to induce any one to believe that Mr. Evans either intended to take, or that he did receive a patent for anything beyond his invention, which was the hopper-boy in the improved condition in which he describes it. To declare a patent for a highly useful improvement absolutely void, merely for a defective specification, if this be one, is a very high penalty, and should not be lightly inflicted, unless rendered absolutely necessary by law; the more especially, as without recurring to so harsh a measure, a court and jury will always be able to confine a remedy on the patent to violations of the improvement actually secured, and if the patentee should be so foolish, or ill-advised, as to attempt to bring within its reach the machine in its unimproved state, or any other machine before common, he would do it, not only with no prospect of success, but with the certainty of a defeat, attended with a very heavy expense. As long, therefore, as he could maintain no action, but for his improvement, it is not perceived why he should be visited with so heavy a denunciation as the forfeiture of his improvement, merely because, by some construction of his specification, which might after all be a mistaken one, he had included in his invention, something of ever so trifling a nature, which was already known. But if such be the law, and such the frail tenure on which these rights are held, however hard it may apply in particular cases, it must have its course. But *I cannot think [*449 it our duty, or that we have any right to pronounce a patent void on this account; but that this important office is exclusively confided to a jury. Whether we have this right or not, will now be examined. If such summary authority were intended to have been conferred on the federal courts, the patent law ought to have been, and would have been explicit. This is so far from being the case, that in the patent law, a provision, but of a different kind, is inserted on this very subject, which is not the case in the statute of James. It was foreseen, that it must sometimes happen, either from the imperfection of language, or the ignorance of a patentee, that defective specifications would be made; it was also foreseen, that an imperfect specification might be made from design, and with a view of deceiving the public. We accordingly find it provided by law, that among other matters which the defendant may rely on in an action for infringing a patent right, is, "that the specification filed does not contain the whole truth relative to his discovery, or that it contains more than is necessary to produce the described effect, which concealment, or addition, must fully appear to have been made for the purpose of deceiving the public." If judgment is rendered for the defendant on this ground, the patent is to be declared void. This section applies as well to patents for an improvement on an existing machine, as for an invention entirely new; and was intended to protect the patent in either case against an avoidance for an imperfect and innocent specification of the invention patented. If, therefore, the defect which is alleged, *really exist in the specification of the [*450 patented improvement, the court is not authorized, on its mere inspection, to declare it imperfect, and the patent, on that account void. Both questions are clearly questions of fact, and are so treated by the legislature. The party has a right to insist with the jury, not only that his specification is perfect, but that if it be otherwise, no deception was intended on the public; and on either ground, they may find a verdict in his favor. So if, on the allegation, that the thing secured by patent was not originally discovered by the patentee, a verdict passes against the plaintiff, he loses his patent. In like manner, in this case, if it had appeared that the "improved hopper-boy," which was the thing secured by patent, had not been originally discovered by Mr. Evans, and a verdict had passed against him on that ground, there would have been an end of his patent. From the tenth section, also, an argument may be drawn against the right of a court to declare a patent void on mere inspection, for redundancy or deficiency in a specification. This section provides a mode of proceeding before the District Court, where there may be reason to believe a patent was obtained surreptitiously, or upon false suggestions; and if, on such proceeding, it shall appear that the patentee was not the true inventor, judgment shall be rendered by such court for a repeal of the patent.

This is the only case in which a power is conferred on a court, to vacate a patent, without the intervention of a jury. If a proceeding of this kind had been instituted before the proper tribunal against Mr. Evans, the court would 451 *] *have examined witnesses, and have formed its opinion on their testimony; and it is not clear that even in this case a jury might not have been called in. This section has been taken notice of, to show that it could never have been the intention of the legislature, that a patent should be avoided, on any account whatever, on the opinion of the court alone, without some examination other than that of the specification, whatever might be its excess, or poverty of description. If it had been intended to vest so important a power in the court, it would not have been left to mere implication, but would have been conferred in terms admitting of no doubt. My opinion, therefore, on this part of the charge is, that the court erred in taking upon itself to pronounce the patent void, even if the specification had been defective, or imperfect, in not particularly describing what the improvements of the patentee were; this being a power expressly delegated to a jury, who, under all the circumstances of the case, are to decide both questions of fact; that is, whether the specification be deficient, or superfluous, and the intention with which it was made so. I repeat once more, that whatever may have been the decisions in England, which are not admitted to be contrary to the view which has here been taken of the subject, they are not of authority, and are upon an act so very different in its structure from our own, as to afford little or no useful information on the subject. One great and important difference in the two laws is, that the statute of James I. has not prescribed a mode in which a patent for a vicious specification is to be set 452 *] aside. *The patent is granted on a condition that a specification be enrolled.

I give no opinion on the questions which arise from the admission of certain witnesses, who were supposed to be disqualified, on the score of being interested; for if the patent for the hopper-boy be void, for a defect in its specification, and that question is not to be referred to the jury, and such I understand to be the opinion of four of the judges, it is very unimportant, whether any error was committed in this respect by the court before which the cause was tried; as a verdict must ever be rendered against the representatives of the patentee, on this ground, whatever may be the state of the evidence.

Mr. Justice JOHNSON, and Mr. Justice DUVALL, also dissented.

Judgment affirmed with costs.

Aff'g—3 Wash. C. C. 443.

Confirming—S. C. 3 Wheat. 454, Rev'g 1 Pet. C. C. 322.

Cited—4 Pet. 81; 6 Pet. 297; 4 How. 127; 6 How. 437; 7 How. 198; 15 How. 215; 2 McLean, 420; 3 McLean, 254; 3 Wood. & M. 23; Bald. 314, 315, 321; 1 Story, 236; 3 Sumn. 541; 15 Blatch, 455.

EVANS v. HETTICH.

It is no objection to the competency of a witness in a patent cause that he is sued in another action for an infringement of the same patent.

The 6th section of the patent act of 1793, c. 156, which requires a notice of the special matter to be given in evidence by the defendant under the general issue, does not include all the matters of defense which the defendant may be legally entitled to make. And where the witness was asked, whether the machine used by the defendant was like the model exhibited in court of the plaintiff's patented machine, held, that no notice was necessary to authorize the inquiry.

Where a deposition has once been read in evidence without opposition, it cannot be afterwards objected to as being irregularly taken.

It is no objection to the competency or credibility of a witness, that he is subject to fits of derangement, if he is sane at the time of giving his testimony.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of Pennsylvania.

This was an action for the infringement of the same patent as in the preceding case of Evans v. Eaton, and was argued by the same counsel. The points involved will be found to be fully discussed in the argument of that case, to which the learned reader is referred. The following is the charge delivered to the jury in the court below, which it is thought necessary here to insert.

After stating the evidence on both sides, Mr. Justice WASHINGTON proceeded as follows:

The facts intended to be proved by the evidence given in this cause, may be arranged under the following heads:

*(1) Such as respect the value of the [*454 plaintiff's hopper-boy. (2) The time of its discovery. (3) The kind of machine used by the defendant. (4) The time of its discovery and use.

1st. As to the first, the court has no observations to make, except that if you should find a verdict for the plaintiff, you will give the actual damages which the plaintiff has sustained, by reason of the defendant's use of his invention, which the court will treble.

2d. The evidence applicable to this head, if believed by the jury, proves, that in 1783, Oliver Evans commenced his investigation of the subject of an improvement in the manufactory of flour; and in the summer of the same year, he declared that he had accomplished it. In 1784, he made a model of his hopper-boy, which had no cords, weight, or pulley; and consequently the lower arm was, for the sake of the experiment, turned by the hand. In 1785 it was in operation in a mill, in as perfect a state as it now is.

3d. If the witness who was called to prove the kind of machine used by the defendant is believed by the jury, it consists of an upright square shaft, with a cog that turns it, and which is moved by the water-power of the mill. This shaft is inserted into a square mortice, in an arm or board somewhat resembling an S, with strips of wood fixed on its under side, and so arranged as to turn the meal below it, cool, dry, and conduct it to the bolting chest. This arm slips, with ease, up and down the shaft, and must be raised by hand, and kept suspended until *the meal is put under [*455

it. It has no upper arm, pulley, weight, or leading lines, and the strips below the arm are like the rake, as it is called, in the plaintiff's hopper-boy. This machine has acquired the name of the S, or the Stouffer hopper-boy.

4th. The witnesses examined to prove the originality, and use of the defendant's hopper-boy, if believed by the jury, date it as early as about the year 1765; and its erection and actual use in mills, in 1775 and 1778; and progressively to later periods. Objections have been made, on both sides, to the credit of some of the witnesses who have been examined, not on the ground of want of veracity, or of character, but of interest, short of that which can affect their competency. These objections have been pressed so far beyond their just limits, as to require from the court an explanation of their real value. Where the evidence of witnesses opposed by other witnesses is relied upon, by either side, to prove a particular fact, the jury must necessarily weigh their credit, in order to satisfy their own minds on which side the truth is most likely to be; and in making this inquiry, every circumstance which can affect the veracity of the witnesses, whether it concern their moral character, or whether it arise from some interest which they may have in the question, or from feelings favorable to one or the other of the parties, should be taken into the calculation. But if the fact in controversy may exist, without a violation of probability, and the proof is by witnesses exclusively on that side, there is nothing to put into the opposite scale, against which to weigh the credit of 456 those witnesses; *and if the objection to their credit be worth anything, it must be to the full extent of rejecting their testimony altogether, or else it is worth nothing. The jury cannot compromise the matter, or halt between two opinions; they must decide that the fact is so, or is not so; and if the latter be cause of objection to the credit of the witnesses, it would amount to the confounding of the questions of competency, and credibility; for the effect would be the same, whether the court refused to permit the witnesses to testify on the ground of incompetency, or the jury should reject their testimony, when given, on that of want of credibility. I have thought it proper to submit these general observations to the consideration of the jury.

We come now to the question of law, which arises out of these facts, which is,

What are the things in which the plaintiff alleges, and has proved, he has an exclusive property, which he asserts the defendant has used, and which the defendant denies?

The first claim is for an improved hopper-boy, which the plaintiff insists is granted by his patent, which has received the sanction of the Supreme Court, and which the defendant acknowledges. This being, then, conceded ground, the court will proceed to examine it; and the inquiry will be, whether the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict for an infringement of his patent for his improved hopper-boy. The objection relied upon by the defendant is, that the plaintiff has not set forth in his specification what are the improvements 457 of which he claims to be *the inventor, so that a person skilled in the art might comprehend distinctly in what they consist. This objection in point of fact is fully supported. Neither the specification, nor any other document connected with the patent, states, or even alludes to any specific improvement in the hopper-boy. Taking this as true, how stands the law? The 3d section of the patent law declares, that "before an inventor can receive a patent, he shall deliver a written description of his invention, in such full, clear, and exact terms, as to distinguish the same from all other things before known, and to enable a person skilled in the art, &c., of which it is a branch, &c., to make and use the same."

What, then, is the plaintiff's invention, as asserted by his counsel, conceded by the defendant, and sanctioned by the Supreme Court in the case of Evans v. Eaton? The answer is, an improvement of the hopper-boy, or an improved hopper-boy, which that court has declared to be substantially the same. If this be so, then the above section of the law has declared, that he must specify this improvement in full, clear, and exact terms. If he has not done so, he has no valid patent on which he can recover.

The English decisions correspond with the injunctions of our law. (Boulter v. Bull, Boville v. Moor, M'Farlane v. Price, Harmen v. Playne.) The American decisions, so far as we have any reports of them, maintain the same doctrine. Mr. Justice Story, in the case of Lovel v. Lewis, lays it down, *that if [458 the patent be for an improvement in an existing machine, the patentee must, in his specification, distinguish the new from the old, and confine his patent to such parts only as are new, for if both are mixed together, and a patent taken for the whole, it is void." What is the reason for all this?

In the first place, it is to enable the public to enjoy the full benefit of the discovery, when the patentee's monopoly is expired; by having it so described on record, that any person skilled in the art, of which the invention is a branch, may be able to construct it. The next reason is, to put every citizen upon his guard, that he may not, through ignorance, violate the law, by infringing the rights of the patentee, and subjecting himself to the consequences of litigation. The inventor of the original machine, if he has obtained a patent for it, and all persons claiming under him, may lawfully enjoy all the benefits of that discovery, notwithstanding the improvement made upon it by a subsequent discoverer. If he has not chosen to ask for a monopoly, but abandoned it to the public, then it becomes public property, and any person has a right to use it. The inventor of an improvement may also obtain a patent for his discovery, which cannot legally be invaded by the inventor of the original machine, or by any other person. These rights of each are secured by law, and there is no incompatibility between them. But if a man wishing to use the original discovery, and honestly disposed to avoid an infringement of the improver's right, is unable to discover, from any certain and known standard, when the original invention ends, and *the [459 improvement commences, how is it possible for him to exercise his own acknowledged right, freed from the danger of invading that of another? and to what acts of oppression might not this lead? Might not the patentee of this mysterious improvement obtain from the ignorant, the timid, and even the prudent members of society, who wish to use only the original discovery, the price he chooseth to ask for a license to use his improvement, and in this way compel them to purchase it, rather than incur expenses and inconveniences far greater than the sum demanded? If this may happen, then the improver enjoys, in a degree, the benefit of a discoverer, both of the original machine, and also of the improvement. In short, the patentee of the improvement may, to a certain extent, keep men at arm's length as to the use of the original invention, or make them pay him for it, in derogation of the rights of the inventor of the original machine. If the law, as applicable to cases in general, be rightly laid down, the next inquiry is, is the present an excepted case? The plaintiff's counsel have not directly asserted it to be so; but they have referred, with some emphasis, to what is said by the Supreme Court, in the case of Evans v. Eaton.<sup>1</sup> The expressions are: "In all cases where the plaintiff's claim is for an improvement on a machine, it will be incumbent on him to show the extent of his improvement, so that a person understanding the subject, may comprehend distinctly in what it consists."

This decision does not state in what way the 460* extent of the plaintiff's improvement is to be proved; nor did the case require that the Supreme Court should be more explicit. The obvious conclusion is, that the court left that matter undecided, and meant that the extent of the plaintiff's improvement should be shown according to rules of law. A contrary construction would be most unfair and unwarranted.

Is it possible to believe, that if the Supreme Court intended to decide contrary to the provisions of the 3d section of the patent law, and of the English and American decisions, that this was a case without the influence of that law, and those decisions, that such intention would have been expressed in such general terms? This cannot be admitted; neither can the private act for the relief of Oliver Evans warrant the argument, that this case is freed from the restrictions contained in the 3d section of the patent law; because, except as to the extent of the grant it refers to, and the Supreme Court in the before-mentioned case, considers it as within the provisions of that law.

Is it likely that the Supreme Court could have meant, that the plaintiff might cure the defects of his specification, by proving to the jury in what his improvement consisted? If so, then, as to the present defendant, such an explanation would be unavailing to save him from the consequences of an error, against which the sagacity of man, could not have guarded him. He has sinned already, if he has invaded the plaintiff's right, and it is too late to convince him of his error, if he must be a victim of it, for the want of that light, which is now shed upon the act long after his supposed transgression. 461* But of what avail would that explanation be, after the expiration of the plaintiff's monopoly? The parol evidence given in a court of justice being seldom recollected with accuracy, it affords the most unsafe notice of facts, particularly when they respect matters of art, that can well be supposed. What man, who wishes not to invade the plaintiff's patent, would venture to erect a hopper-boy, merely upon the information which he could gather from this trial? He could obtain none upon which he could safely rely; nor could any artist, after the expiration of the plaintiff's right, be enabled from such a source, to know how to construct the improved hopper-boy. But even if the extent of the improvement could be proved in this way, the plaintiff has not attempted to prove it, and what is more, his counsel, though repeatedly called upon to point it out, have not been able to do it.

Can the jury, without evidence, and without the aid of the plaintiff, or his counsel, say in what those improvements consist? If they had never seen another hopper-boy, supposed to be the original, this would be impossible. If, having seen the Stouffer hopper-boy, they can do so by comparing with it the plaintiff's improved hopper-boy, then the consequence seems almost to be inevitable, that the Stouffer hopper-boy is the original one; the point which under the next head is denied by the plaintiff. But if the specification had stated in what the plaintiff's improvement consisted, still he is not entitled to a verdict for a violation of his patent, unless he has proved, to your satisfaction, that the defendant has infringed it.

*Upon the whole, then, this patent, [462 so far as it is for an improvement, cannot be supported; and as to any claim founded on this right, the plaintiff is not entitled to your verdict.

2. The plaintiff contends that he is the original inventor, not only of the improved hopper-boy, but of the whole machine; that his patent grants him the exclusive right for both; and that this claim has received the sanction of the Supreme Court. Whether, in point of fact, he is the original inventor of the hopper-boy, will be attended to hereafter. Neither shall I stop to inquire whether the plaintiff's patent grants him the right, because, if the Supreme Court has sanctioned the claim, that is law to this court. The part of the decision of that court, relied upon by the plaintiff's counsel, is found in 3 Wheat. Rep., 517, where the Chief Justice says: "The opinion of the court, then, is, that Oliver Evans may claim under his patent the exclusive use of his inventions and improvements in the art of manufacturing flour and meal, and in the several machines which he has invented, and in his improvements on machines previously discovered."

It would seem almost impossible to misunderstand this positive declaration of the court. It appears to be the result of the previous reasoning. It states that the plaintiff may claim, (1) The exclusive use of his improvements, and inventions, in the art of manufacturing flour. (2) In the several machines which he has invented. (3) In his improvements on machines previously discovered. As to the 1st, there is no dispute in the cause. The 3d has been [463 already disposed of, and the 2d will now be examined. It is contended by the defendant's counsel, that this is not the correct construction of the above sentence of the court, because it is inconsistent with the pretensions of the plaintiff's counsel, and with the argument of the Chief Justice, throughout the opinion, which led to the above conclusion. This supposed inconsistency may, in the opinion of this court, be explained by the following observations:

1.—3 Wheat. Rep. 518.

The exceptions taken to the charge of this court, in the case of Evans v. Eaton, were, 1st. that Oliver Evans' patent was only for the combined effect of all the machines mentioned in his patent, and, 2d, in directing the jury to find for the defendant, if they should be of opinion that the hopper-boy was in use prior to the improvement alleged to be made by Oliver Evans. These were the only questions presented to the view of the Supreme Court, upon which it was deemed proper by that court to give an opinion. The reasoning of the Chief Justice, therefore, is intended to prove, and correct these errors in the charge, by showing that Oliver Evans was entitled, by his patent, and the accompanying documents, not only to the general combination of the different machines, but to an improvement on the hopper-boy, one of the machines used in combination. If he had a right to an improvement on the hopper-boy, then this court was clearly wrong in directing the jury to find a verdict for the defendant, if they should be of opinion that the hopper-boy was in use prior to the plaintiff's improvement; because it was unimportant who was 464* the original discoverer of the hopper-boy, provided the plaintiff had a patent for an improved hopper-boy, and the defendant used that improvement, and the charge precluded that inquiry. But whilst the Chief Justice aims to prove that Oliver Evans was entitled to this double claim, he does not exclude any other claim. There is an expression relied upon by the defendant's counsel, as having this appearance; but it is more likely that the word relied on is a typographical error, than that the court should both deny and affirm the plaintiff's right, as an original inventor of the hopper-boy. When the court came to state, definitively, what were the plaintiff's claims under this patent, the whole are distinctly stated. The act for the relief of Oliver Evans authorizes a grant to him of his improvement, in the art of manufacturing flour, and in the several machines which he has invented, and in his improvements, &c. The court says, that "the application is for a patent co-extensive with the act," &c.<sup>1</sup>

If, then, in this enumeration of the plaintiff's rights under the patent, those to the machines had been omitted, it might have been supposed that it was not recognized by that court, and it is consequently introduced, in order to prevent a conclusion against its validity, although it had not been brought into view in the previous argument; because a matter not in dispute. This course of reasoning, is, we think, strongly fortified by what the court says (p. 518): "In all cases where his claim is for an improvement," &c. Now, if his claim was confined to 465* an improvement, *produced by the combined operation of all the machines, and if an improvement in the separate machines, why should the court have stated, hypothetically, that which was to be proved in case the plaintiff claims for an improvement? The sentence following immediately that which has been relied on by the defendant's counsel seems to explain it, and to fortify the construction which we have given to it. Upon the whole, we are of opinion, that the question, who is the original inventor of the hopper-boy? is left open by the Supreme Court, and is now to be decided by the jury. If, then, the jury should be of opinion upon the evidence, that the hopper-boy which the defendant uses was invented, and was in use, prior to the discovery of Oliver Evans, then your verdict ought to be for the defendant. But to this construction there are objections made, which it is proper to notice.

1. It is contended, that the judgment of the Supreme Court in Evans v. Eaton,<sup>2</sup> where it is said that there is error in the proceedings below, in this, that in the charge the opinion is expressed, "that Oliver Evans was not entitled to recover if the hopper-boy in his declaration mentioned had been in use previous to his alleged discovery," entitles the plaintiff to a verdict, although the jury should be of opinion that he is not the original inventor of the hopper-boy. That the court did not mean this is most obvious, from what is said in page 517, that Oliver Evans may claim the exclusive use in the several machines which he has invented. Could the Supreme Court intend to [*466] say, immediately after, that he is entitled to a verdict for a machine which he has not invented? Can it be supposed that the court meant to ride over the third section of the patent law, and set up a different rule, to govern this case, without having stated the reasons for so extraordinary a distinction? This is altogether inadmissible. It is also worthy of remark, that the words "in his declaration mentioned" in the judgment of the Supreme Court, are not in the charge of the Circuit Court as stated by the Chief Justice; and it is the insertion of those words in the judgment which produces all the difficulty. Leave them out, and then the judgment is consistent with the whole reasoning of the Chief Justice, which condemned the charge of the Circuit Court, because it precluded Oliver Evans from obtaining a verdict for his improvement, if he was not the original inventor of the elementary parts of the machine. Retain them, and it follows, that if Oliver Evans was proved not to be the inventor of the hopper-boy in his declaration mentioned, still the defendant was not entitled to a verdict. This would be in such direct opposition to the sixth section of the patent law, that we cannot suppose this was the meaning of the Supreme Court.

2. The next objection to the construction is, that the act of the legislature of Pennsylvania, of 1787, conveyed to Oliver Evans the original hopper-boy, and consequently the existence and use of the Stouffer hopper-boy, at a period prior to the plaintiff's discovery, cannot now be urged to invalidate his patent. It is by no means to be admitted that the act operates to make such a *transfer. But if it did, [*467] still the plaintiff cannot recover, if he appears not to be the first or original discoverer of the hopper-boy. His claim is not derivative either from the state or from an individual. His suit is founded on his patent, and unless he was himself the original inventor of the hopper-boy, he cannot recover.

1.—3 Wheat. Rep. 508.
Wheat. 7.

2.—3 Wheat. Rep. 519.

3. Another objection stated by the plaintiff's counsel is, that the Stouffer hopper-boy, although the jury should believe it was in use in many mills before the plaintiff's discovery had fallen into disuse, and therefore cannot be urged to invalidate the plaintiff's right of recovery. The answer to this is, that whether it fell into disuse or not, if it was used before the plaintiff's discovery, the plaintiff could not obtain a patent for it, so as to exclude the defendant from using it, if he chose to do so.

4. The last objection is, that the use of the Stouffer machine cannot affect the plaintiff's patent, unless it was public. Whether that hopper-boy was in public use or not, the jury will judge from the evidence. It was erected and used in four or five mills, if the defendant's witnesses are believed. But this argument has no foundation in the act of Congress, which does not speak of public use. It is immaterial whether the patentee had notice of the prior invention or not. If it was in actual use in any part of the world, however unlikely or impossible that the fact could come to the knowledge of the patentee, his patent for the same machine cannot be supported.

468*] *A verdict was rendered for the defendant, and exceptions being taken to the above charge, the cause was brought by writ of error before this court.

Mr. Justice STORY delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is an action for an infringement of the same patent as in Evans v. Eaton;<sup>1</sup> and many of the remarks in that case are applicable to this; and therefore the opinion now delivered will refer to such points only as are not completely disposed of by the opinion already delivered. The evidence in this case does not establish that the defendant used the plaintiff's improved hopper-boy, but the hopper-boy used by the defendant, is asserted to be Stouffer's hopper-boy. At the new trial, a Mr. Aby was offered as a witness by the defendant, to prove the nature and character of the hopper-boy used by the defendant; the plaintiff objected to his testimony, as incompetent, because he was sued by the plaintiff for an infringement of his patent right, under circumstances similar to those alleged in proof against the defendant. The court overruled the objection; and the witness was then sworn on the voir dire, as to his interest in the suit; but upon a full examination, it did not appear that he was really interested; and the court therefore permitted him to be sworn in chief. The plaintiff took an exception to this decision of the court. The objection to the competency of Aby, so far as he has an interest from being sued, cannot 469*] *be distinguished, in principle, from that already overruled in the case of Evans v. Eaton. There is this additional circumstance in this case, that Aby was not called as a general witness, but to establish a single fact, viz., the nature and character of the hopper-boy used by the defendant. The other objection upon his answers on the voir dire, is disposed of by the single remark that he purged himself of any real interest in the event of the suit. A question was asked of this witness, on his examination in chief, whether the hopper-boy in the defendant's mill was like the model exhibited in court of the plaintiff's patented hopper-boy; the plaintiff objected to the question, because such testimony could not be given in this case, for want of notice thereof. But the objection was overruled by the court; and, in our judgment, with perfect correctness. No notice was necessary to authorize the inquiry; and if the plaintiff meant to rely on the notice required by the sixth section of the patent act, in certain cases, it is only necessary to say, that this was not within the provision of that class of cases. The question was perfectly proper under the general issue. Similar objections were taken to other witnesses; but it is unnecessary to remark on them.

An inquiry was proposed by the plaintiff, to one of the witnesses, whether one Peter Stouffer had paid the plaintiff for a license for his mill; but the court refused to allow the question to be asked; and we see no reason why it should have been allowed, for it merely referred to an act among strangers, which ought not to prejudice the defendant. A *sim-470 ilar question was proposed to be asked of the same witness, whether the executors of Jacob Stouffer had paid the plaintiff for a license for the mill of Jacob; the court overruled the question; and for the same reason, it was rightly overruled.

The deposition of one John Shetter was read in evidence by the defendant, without opposition, and afterwards the plaintiff moved to have the same rejected, because not taken according to the rules of the court; but the court refused to reject it; and in our judgment rightly, because it having been once introduced with the acquiescence and consent of the plaintiff, he could not afterwards avail himself of the objection.

The plaintiff then proposed to ask a question of a witness, whether Daniel Stouffer was subject to fits of derangement, and whether the witness had said so; but the court overruled the question. It does not appear distinctly in the record, that Daniel Stouffer was a witness in the cause; but if he was so, the question was properly overruled, because a person being subject to fits of derangement, is no objection either to his competency or credibility, if he is sane at the time of giving his testimony.

The next objection of the plaintiff's counsel, is to the charge of the court, in summing up the cause to the jury; but the points on which that charge materially depends, have been so fully discussed in the opinion just delivered in Evans v. Eaton, that it is unnecessary to examine them at large.

Upon the whole, it is the opinion of the majority of the court, that the judgment ought to be affirmed with costs.

Aff'g—3 Wash. C. C. 408.

Cited—Bald. 315; 3 Sumn. 541; 2 Story, 171.

Wheat. 7.

3.—Ante, p. 356.

471*]

[*PRIZE.]

THE GRAN PARA.

THE CONSUL-GENERAL OF PORTUGAL,
Libelant.

Prizes made by armed vessels which have violated the statutes for preserving the neutrality of the United States, will be restored if brought into our ports.

This court has never decided that the offense adheres to the vessel under whatever change of circumstances that may take place, nor that it cannot be deposited at the termination of the cruise, in preparing for which it was committed; but if this termination be merely colorable, and the vessel was originally equipped with the intention of being employed on the cruise, during which the capture was made, the delictum is not purged.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of Maryland.

This was a libel filed in the District Court of Maryland, by the Consul-General of Portugal alleging that a large sum of money in silver and gold coins had been, in the year 1818, taken out of the Portuguese ship Gran Para, then bound on a voyage from Rio Janeiro to Lisbon, by a private armed vessel called the Irresistible, which had been fitted out in the United States, in violation of the neutrality acts; that the said sum of money had been brought within our territorial jurisdiction, and deposited in the Marine Bank of Baltimore; and praying that the same might be restored to the original Portuguese owners. A claim was filed by one Stansbury, as agent for John D. Daniels, master and owner of the Irresistible, stating him to be a citizen of the Oriental Republic, which was at war with Portugal, and that he was 472* cruising under the flag *and commission of that republic at the time the capture was made, as set forth in the libel, and insisting on his title to the money as lawful prize of war. By the proofs taken in the cause it appeared that the capturing vessel was built in the port of Baltimore, in the year 1817, and was, in all respects, constructed for the purposes of war. On the 16th of February, 1818, after being launched, she was purchased by the claimant, Daniels, then a citizen of the United States. A crew of about fifty men were enlisted in Baltimore, and she cleared out for Teneriffe, having in her hold 12 eighteen-pound gunnades with their carriages, and a number of small arms, and a quantity of ammunition, entered outwards as cargo. The vessel proceeded directly for Buenos Ayres, where she remained a few weeks, during which time the crew was discharged.

Having obtained a commission from the government at that place to cruise against Spain, a crew was enlisted, consisting chiefly of the same persons who had come in the vessel from Baltimore, and she sailed, in June, 1818, on a cruise under the command of the claimant. The next day after she left the port, a commission from General Artigas, as Chief of the Oriental Republic, was produced, under which the claimant declared that he intended to cruise, and that granted by the government of Buenos Ayres was sent back to that place. During this cruise, several Portuguese vessels were captured, and the money, the restitution of which was prayed for by the libelant, was taken out of them. In September, 1818, the Irresistible returned to Baltimore, *and a large sum [*473 of money, captured during the cruise, was deposited in the bank.

Decrees were entered in the district and circuit courts, restoring the property to the original owners, and the cause was brought by appeal to this court.

Mr. Winder, for the appellant and claimant, made the following points:

1. That the manner in which the Irresistible left the United States, on her voyage to Buenos Ayres, was not in violation of the statutes of Congress, or the neutral obligations of the United States by the law of nations.

2. It was not contrary to the law of nations for the Oriental Republic, finding the Irresistible in the river La Plata, under the circumstances in which she was, to take her into their service as a cruiser against their enemies.

3. That the conduct of Daniels, and any others who went out in her, in entering into the service of the Oriental Republic, was not contrary to the law of nations, nor in violation of the duties of neutrality imposed on the United States by the law of nations.

4. But even if the appellant's counsel should be mistaken in this respect, yet there is no evidence in this cause to show that the money attached was taken from the ship Gran Para, nor that any such ship was captured by the Irresistible.

Mr. D. Hoffman, contra, after commenting on the testimony to establish the American ownership, and the illegal outfit at Baltimore, of the privateer, argued, (1) That the [*474 neutrality and laws of this country having been violated by the captors, this court will decree restitution on that ground, though the commission under which they acted were wholly unimpeachable; a fact which is not admitted in this case, as the commissions of Artigas stand upon grounds essentially different from those which justify the commissions of Buenos Ayres, the Republic of Columbia, &c.

The law on this subject has become to well settled, and familiar, to justify much reference to, or comment on authorities. It was at one time supposed that neutral nations were, in all cases, obliged by their amity and neutrality, to rescue the captured and his property from the power of his enemy, who had brought them infra presidia of the neutral country, and to award restitution a species of jus postliminii. This was certainly, at one time, the doctrine of the English courts and jurists, and obtains in some countries on the continent of Europe.<sup>1</sup>

The rule, however, of the courts of this country, has been established to be exactly the reverse. As a general rule, a neutral court has no such power. The inquiry as to the validity and efficiency of a belligerent capture, is referred to the courts of the captors; and the restoring power, exercised on various occasions by the courts of this country, springs from *certain exceptions, which have been [*475 engrafted on the general rule. This court will inquire into every seizure on the high seas, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the taking were lawful or piratical; for if there be no commission, the seizure is piracy de facto and de jure, and renders the captors responsible civilliter et criminaliter. If there be a commission which at the time of taking was amortised, or abused animo deprædandi, they would be responsible certainly civilliter, perhaps criminaliter. If the commission were granted by an incompetent power, every presumption would be in their favor in a criminal proceeding against them; but they would be civilly responsible before any tribunal administering the jus gentium. Every such tribunal, therefore, will inquire, first, into the fact of the existence of a commission; secondly, the competency of the power granting it; both of which are essential in order to distinguish capture from piracy, and the commission issued by a state or nation from that which is granted by a few associated persons, or an isolated individual, who have assumed the exercise of sovereign power.<sup>1</sup>

1.—2 Azuni, 222, 223, 250, 261; Marten's Priv. 44; 1 Molloy, 58, 60, 66, 76, 87, 100; 6 Vin. Abr. 515, 517, 519, 534; 16 Vin. Abr. 347, 350; Beaves, Lex. Mer. 241, 243, 244; 2 Brown's Civ. and Adm. Law, 214, 215.

With regard to the exceptions to the general rule which refers the question of prize or no prize to the courts of the captors, and repudiates the right in a neutral to restore the res capta to those from whom it has been taken, it is said that there are now only two: first, where the 476* capture was made within the neutral territory;<sup>2</sup> and secondly, where the capturing vessel was in the whole, or in any part, owned or equipped, or her force in any degree augmented within the dominions of such neutral state, and this by the general principles of international law, independently of all statutory inhibitions of such ownership, equipment, &c.<sup>3</sup> The uniform series of decisions of the American courts awards restitution to the original owners of property thus taken, and the facts of the present case will be found, it is presumed, much stronger than in most others which have occurred.<sup>4</sup>

2. This court is competent to restore property to the respondent, by the general principles of maritime and international law, without any reference to the proof that the neutrality and laws of this country have been violated by the captors, but on the sole ground that the taking was not jure belli, but wholly without commission; as Artigas does not represent a state or nation competent to grant a commission to war against Portugal. The principles established 477* by the cases recently decided by this court, do not impugn the doctrine contended for, as they occurred in the case of commissions granted by such of the South American provinces, as our government, in the opinion of the court, had recognized to be in a civil war with Spain, the mother country, and which commissions only operated against such parent state. Our government and this court having, in no instance whatever, recognized Artigas as engaged in a war, even with Spain, the mother country, and certainly not with Portugal, he is wholly incompetent to issue commissions of prize, as much so as any other individual in the Spanish provinces. This court, therefore, is competent as an instance court to decree restitution and damages, as in ordinary cases of maritime tort, and to decide (negatively) that the Banda Oriental is not a state or nation invested with the attributes of sovereignty, the former or ancient state of things being presumed to remain de facto, as well as de jure.

The government of the United States has, in no instance, recognized Artigas as engaged in a civil war with Spain, or in a war of any kind with Portugal. If we refer to the documents recognizing the South American provinces, as engaged in a civil war with Spain, we shall find no mention made of such a war by Artigas, or the Banda Oriental.<sup>5</sup> The general expression, "South American Provinces," is **quali-* 478 fied by the express mention of Buenos Ayres and Venezuela. But if the Banda Oriental, as modified by Artigas, might be embraced under such a general recognition of the South American provinces being engaged in a civil war with Spain, still it would be incumbent on the claimant to prove that this country ever was a province of Spain; it may have been a part of a province; we have no historical or geographical account of the country that is by any means satisfactory; and if Artigas, and his wretched and savage followers be recognized as qualified to wage war, then may every township, district, city, village, hamlet, or individual, claim the same high prerogative. If Artigas, and a few adherents, can segregate themselves from the common cause, and constitute themselves a state or nation competent to wage either a civil or public war, may not every individual in the Spanish provinces claim the same right? Where is the boundary or clear line of demarkation? By what principle can such a right be regulated, except by requiring that the power claiming the right should be possessed of the elements or constituents of a nation, such as a fixed domain, a national treasury, a national force, a code of laws,<sup>6</sup> and perhaps, in order to wage a maritime war, sea-ports? Nor will Grotius, nor his enlightened commentator, allow a company or horde of men to be a state or nation, although they may observe some kind of government and equity among themselves. **All that we know of Artigas* 479 and his adherents, proclaims him a mere adventurer, and them a lawless band to whom he is the sole tie of union. Artigas is mentioned by these documents to be engaged in a contest with Buenos Ayres; but it is nowhere stated that he is the chief magistrate of a province engaged in a civil war with Spain. The only executive notice of the Banda Oriental, is in

1.—Talbot v. Janson, 3 Dall. 133; The Invincible, 1 Wheat. Rep. 258; Rose v. Himely, 4 Cranch, 241.

2.—Grotius, de J. B. ac. P., l. 3, c. 4; Bynk, Q. J. Pub., l. 1, c. 8; Vattel, Droit Des Gens, l. 3, c. 7, s. 132; 5 Rob. 15, 373; Bee's Rep. 204.

3.—Pres. Messages, Vol. I., 21, 24, 27, 36, 42, 47, 48, 56, 61, 62, 72, 73, 78, 82, 87, 95; 9 Cranch, 365; 4 Wheat. Rep. 310, 311.

4.—Bee's Rep. 9, 11, 28, 60, 73, 114, 292, 299; 3 Dall. 285, 307, 319; 2 Peters, 345; The Alerta, 9 Cranch, 359; Divina Pastora, 4 Wheat. Rep. 53; The Estrella, 4 Wheat. Rep. 298; The Neustra Senora, Ib. 695; Amistad de Rues, 5 Wheat. Rep. 335; The Bello Corrunes, 6 Wheat. Rep. 152; Nueva Anna, Ib. 193; Conception, Ib. 335.

5.—9 Niles' Regist. 393, 396; Let. Sec. State, 19th Jan., 1816; Mess. 17th Nov. 1818; 4 Wheat. Rep. Appx. 23; Mess. 17th Dec. 1819; Mess. 8th March, 1822.

6.—Sir L. Jenk. 424, 791; Bynk. Q. J. Pub., l. 1, c. 17; Grot., l. 1, c. 3, s. 34; l. 3, c. 3, s. 1, 2; Cic. Phil. 4, cap. 4.

the President's message of the 17th November, 1818. On submitting to Congress the documents furnished him by our commissioners, he states, that "it appears from these communications, that the government of Buenos Ayres declared itself independent, in July, 1816; that the Banda Oriental, Entre Rios, and Paraguay, with the city of Santa Fe, all of which are also independent, are," &c.

This, surely is not a recognition of their independence; for the executive, I presume, has no power to make such recognition; nor is it a recognition of the existence of a civil war between the Banda Oriental and Spain. It will also be observed, that in the late message of the President, 8th March, 1822, no mention whatever is made of the Banda Oriental.

But if it be admitted, argumenti gratia, that the Banda Oriental was a South American province, engaged in a civil war with Spain, the mother country, would such a partial recognition cloth its chieftain with the power of waging war against a nation in no way connected with Spain? The sound doctrine, perhaps, is, that a colony, though competent to disenthral itself from the despotism of an unnatural 480* parent, and therefore, to wage a civil war, does not thereby become a nation or state, invested with all the high privileges of sovereignty. What would be the consequences of a contrary doctrine? Every minute division of an empire might per saltum become a nation, claiming, and asserting, all the prerogatives of free and independent states. These new-fledged, self-constituted, unorganized hordes of people, perhaps only half civilized, might then well assert their claim to sit in the councils of the great family of nations. They would claim the rights of embassy, of establishing consulates, and of inflicting all the rigors of public wars, as blockades, visitation and search, impressments, seizure, and confiscation of contraband. Such an individual as Artigas, whom no one knows, might, under this doctrine, claim to exercise every belligerent right, and, in waging his triple war, might capture, under the right of blockade, the vessels of every nation presuming to enter Buenos Ayres, Maldonado, Lisbon, or the mouth of the Tagus, though he possessed not a single sea-port, or a single vessel of his own. It is, therefore, presumed that every colony recognized as engaged in a civil war for the assertion of its independence, must rigidly restrict itself to the contest with the parent country and its allies; and cannot wage a distinct and independent war with other nations. If, therefore, the Banda Oriental be regarded as on the same footing with Buenos Ayres, or Venezuela, it cannot war against Portugal; for no alliance is pretended between 481* Spain and Portugal, and if it were asserted, it must be proved.<sup>1</sup> The contest between Artigas and Portugal originated in a special cause, and was prosecuted for a special purpose, viz., the recovery of Monte Video, which had been taken possession of by the Portuguese, because Spanish supremacy having ceased to operate there, the Spaniards had carried on a series of the most vexatious depredations on the adjoining Portuguese provinces, which it became the imperious duty of Portugal to check and terminate. Spain, on the other hand, was engaged in a war with some of its provinces, for general, and very different objects; the conflict, therefore, between Portugal and Artigas, could not by implication make the former an ally of Spain. If the government recognition be a limited and partial one (as it certainly is), so should the effects of such recognition be partial. The fact recognized by this government, is, that a civil war rages between Spain and her South American provinces. In regard to Buenos Ayres, and Venezuela, this was certainly the fact; but government did not mean, thereby, to acknowledge the independence of these provinces. The effect of this recognition is defined by the court, in Palmer's case, and that of The Divina Pastora, to be, that the courts of this country will not regard as criminal, those acts of hostility which the province may direct against its enemy; nor will they undertake to judge of the validity of captures made under their commission, unless the maintenance of our laws and neutrality should require it. *The ac- [482] knowledge of competency, therefore, of these provinces, to wage a civil war, does not clothe them with any powers beyond the sphere of the necessary operation of this right; they have no right to war with other nations, nor to claim the attributes and powers of sovereign states. If this be sound in regard to the known provinces, it must be emphatically so in relation to the Banda Oriental, and its chieftain; who claims not only to war with Spain and her provinces, but with Portugal likewise, which is no way connected with either.

Again; there having been no express recognition of the existence of a civil war between Jose Artigas and Spain; can this court imply such recognition from any circumstances? It would seem not. The power to regard a people emerging from barbarism to civilization and government; or from a colonial, to an independent state, is a prerogative exclusively of the government.<sup>2</sup> Courts are bound to regard the ancient state of things as remaining, until there be a recognition by the proper authority, and, therefore, though it be competent for courts to declare that a people do not constitute a state, they cannot affirmatively declare that they are a state. Nor is it competent for this court to recognize the existence of a civil war; this, also, is a government power, and if there be no such express recognition of the fact of a civil war between the Banda Oriental and Spain, this court will not infer it from the use of a general expression, such as, [483] "South American provinces." The doctrine laid down by this court in Palmer's case,<sup>3</sup> (in which a distinction was taken between an unqualified recognition of the independence of a people, and a partial recognition resulting from the admission of the existence of a civil war between a colony and the parent state), is in no degree at variance with the principle established in the previous cases of Rose v. Himely, and Gelston v. Hoyt, "that courts do not possess the power of first recognizing the national character of a people." Whether the recognition

2.—9 Ves. 347; 10 Ves. 353; Rose v. Himely, 4 Cranch; 272; Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. Rep. 289, 295, 324.

3.—3 Wheat. Rep. 610.

1.—1 Ves. 283, 292.

Wheat. 7.

be unqualified or partial, the government must speak distinctly; otherwise, the courts will regard the ancient state of things; and all acts done on the high seas, under the authority of such separated people, will be looked on as wholly unauthorized and null.

3. The claimant, Daniels, is a citizen of the United States, and appears before this court as a claimant for property procured through means forbidden by the laws of the country, and the duties and obligations of a good citizen. He is an unworthy claimant, and as such will not be permitted to claim the result of his own wrongs, and illegal acts. "A claim," says Sir William Scott, "founded on piracy, or any other act, which in the general estimation of mankind is held to be illegal or immoral, might, I presume, be rejected in any court on that ground alone;"<sup>1</sup> and Mr. Justice John-
484*] son, in the case of **The Bello Corrunes*, expresses himself emphatically to the same effect.<sup>2</sup>

4. With respect to there being no proof as to the seizure of the Gran Para, from which the money libeled is alleged to have been taken, it is presumed that this is altogether immaterial. The libel states the fact of the seizure of the Gran Para, and other Portuguese vessels; the answer expressly admits the taking of the money in controversy, and other money, from Portuguese vessels, and the inquiry is, whether it be the Portuguese property, and if so, whether it were rightfully taken.

Mr. Winder, in reply, insisted that the court would confine its interference to such cases of illegal capture, as would make the United States responsible to the injured foreign country, by the law of nations, or to such acts as are in violation of our statutes of neutrality; restraining their operation to such provisions as are required and justified by the public law. He compared this case to the analogous one of carrying contraband. The neutral nation was not responsible. The building of ships for sale was a lawful branch of commerce, and even if they were armed and equipped for war, they could only be considered as contraband; and though they might be subject to the penalty of confiscation, if taken in their transit to a belligerent, yet, if once incorporated into the mass of his military marine, they could be considered by neutrals in no other light than the rest of his naval force. But even supposing 485*] the original *outfit in the ports of the United States to have been illegal, the vessel was not commissioned as a privateer, nor did she attempt to act as one, until her arrival in the river La Plata, when a lawful commission was obtained, and the crew re-enlisted. Even if she had made captures on her outward voyage, the delictum would be purged by the termination of that voyage, according to the analogies of the maritime law in other cases. This court has never yet determined that the original offense is indelible, and that it adheres to the vessel, whatever changes may have taken place, and that it cannot be deposited at the termination of the cruise, in preparing for which, the offense was committed; and as the Irresistible made no captures on her passage from Baltimore to the river La Plata, and even if she had, the offense was deposited at the latter port, the court cannot connect her subsequent cruise with the transactions at Baltimore, or those which might have happened on her outward voyage. The learned counsel also argued, that the Banda Oriental was a sovereign state de facto, which had been acknowledged by the executive government of this country, as one of the parties to the war between Spain and her colonies, and which was engaged in an incidental contest with Portugal, which gave it the rights of war in respect to that power. He also insisted on such of the points in his argument on a former day, in the case of The Santissima Trinidad, as were applicable to the present. But as they will be found reported *at large in that case,<sup>3</sup> [*486 it is not deemed necessary to repeat them in this place.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court, and after stating the facts, proceeded as follows:

The principle is now firmly settled, that prizes, made by vessels which have violated the acts of Congress, that have been enacted for the preservation of the neutrality of the United States, if brought within their territory, shall be restored. The only question therefore is, does this case come within the principle.

That the Irresistible was purchased, and that she sailed out of the port of Baltimore, armed and manned as a vessel of war, for the purpose of being employed as a cruiser against a nation with whom the United States were at peace, is too clear for controversy. That the arms and ammunition were cleared out as cargo cannot vary the case. Nor is it thought to be material that the men were enlisted in form as for a common mercantile voyage. There is nothing resembling a commercial adventure in any part of the transaction. The vessel was constructed for war, and not for commerce. There was no cargo on board but what was adapted to the purposes of war. The crew was too numerous for a merchantman, and was sufficient for a privateer. These circumstances demonstrate the intent with which the Irresistible sailed out of the port of Baltimore.

*But she was not commissioned as a [*487 privateer, nor did she attempt to act as one, until she reached the river La Plata, when a commission was obtained, and the crew re-enlisted. This court has never decided, that the offense adheres to the vessel whatever changes may have taken place, and cannot be deposited at the termination of the cruise in preparing for which it was committed; and as the Irresistible made no prize on her passage from Baltimore to the river La Plata, it is contended that her offense was deposited there, and that the court cannot connect her subsequent cruise with the transactions of Baltimore.

If this were to be admitted in such a case as this, the laws for the preservation of our neutrality would be completely eluded, so far as this enforcement depends on the restitution of prizes made in violation of them. Vessels completely fitted in our ports for military operations, need only sail to a belligerent port, and there, after obtaining a commission, go through the ceremony of discharging and re-enlisting their crew, to become perfectly legitimate cruisers, purified from every taint contracted at the place where all their real force and capacity for annoyance was acquired. This would, indeed, be a fraudulent neutrality, disgraceful to our own government, and of which no nation would be the dupe. It is impossible for a moment to disguise the facts that the arms and ammunition taken on board the Irresistible at Baltimore, were taken for the purpose of being used on a cruise, and that the men there enlisted, though engaged, in form, as for 488*] a *commercial voyage, were not so engaged in fact. There was no commercial voyage, and no individual of the crew could believe that there was one. Although there might be no express stipulation to serve on board the Irresistible, after her reaching the La Plata, and obtaining a commission, it must have been completely understood that such was to be the fact. For what other purpose could they have undertaken this voyage. Everything they saw, everything that was done, spoke a language too plain to be misunderstood.

1.—The Diana, 1 Dodson, 95, 100.

2.—6 Wheat. Rep. 172.

3.—Ante, pp. 290, 296.

The act of June, 1794, ch. 296, declares, that "if any person shall, within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States," "hire or retain another person to go beyond the limits or jurisdiction of the United States, with intent to be enlisted or entered in the service of any foreign prince or state as a soldier, or as a mariner, or seaman, on board of any vessel of war, letter of marque, or privateer, every person so offending shall be guilty of a high misdemeanor," &c.

Now, if the crew of the Irresistible were not enlisted in the port of Baltimore, to cruise under the commission afterwards obtained, it cannot, we think, be doubted, but that they were "hired or retained to go beyond the limits or jurisdiction of the United States, with intent to be enlisted or entered" into that service. For what other purpose were they hired in the port of Baltimore for the voyage to La Plata?

The third section makes it penal for any person, within any of the waters of the United 489*] States, to be *"knowingly concerned in the furnishing, fitting out, or arming of any ship or vessel, with intent that such ship or vessel shall be employed in the service of any foreign prince or state, to cruise," &c.

It is too clear for controversy, that the Irresistible comes within this section of the law also.

The act of 1817, ch. 58, adapts the previous laws to the actual situation of the world, by adding to the words, "of any foreign prince or state," the words, "or of any colony, district, or people," &c. The act of April, 1818, ch. 83, re-enacts the acts of 1794, 1797, and 1817, with some additional provisions.

It is, therefore, very clear, that the Irresistible was armed and manned in Baltimore, in violation of the laws and of the neutral obligations of the United States. We do not think that any circumstances took place in the river La Plata, by force of which this taint was removed. To the objection that there is no proof that any part of the money was taken out of a vessel called the "Gran Para," it need only be answered, that the allegation of the libel is, that she was called the "Gran Para, or by some other name."

Decree affirmed with costs.

Cited—S. C. 10 Wheat. 497.

[*PRIZE.]

[*490

THE SANTA MARIA.

THE SPANISH CONSUL, Libelant.

A question of fact respecting the proprietary interest in prize goods captured by an armed vessel fitted out in violation of the statutes of neutrality of the United States. Restitution to the original Spanish owners decreed.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of Maryland.

This was a libel filed in the District Court of Maryland, by the consul of His Catholic Majesty for the port of Baltimore, in behalf of the Spanish owners of certain goods alleged to have been captured on the high seas, and taken out of the Spanish ship Santa Maria, by the privateer Patriota, illegally armed and equipped in the United States. The evidence in the cause established the fact that the capturing vessel was owned by citizens of this country, and that she was armed, equipped, and fitted out, in violation of the laws and treaties of the United States. But there was some contrariety in the testimony as to the identity of the property, which the claimant, Burke, insisted upon his title to hold as a bona fide purchaser under a condemnation and sale in some prize tribunal at Galvestown. There was also some evidence tending to show that Burke was a part owner of the capturing vessel. The District Court dismissed the libel, and ordered the property to be restored to the claimant, but this decree was reversed by the Circuit Court, and the cause was brought by appeal to this court.

**Mr. Winder*, for the appellant, argued [*491 upon the facts, in order to show that there was a defect of evidence of proprietary interest in the Spanish subjects, for whom the claim was given, and that there was no proof that the goods in question were taken out of the Santa Maria, or any other Spanish ship. He therefore insisted that even if there was no proof on the part of the claimant and appellant of a lawful condemnation of the goods as prize, he had a right to stand upon his title as an innocent purchaser, until some better title was shown in others.

Mr. D. Hoffman, for the respondent, argued, (1) That the evidence in the cause sufficiently established that the privateer Patriota, which plundered the Santa Maria, was owned and equipped in Baltimore. All captures made under the taint of an illegal outfit, or American ownership, have invariably been declared by this court to be illegal, and the property taken has been restored to the original owners.<sup>1</sup>

1.—The Alerta, 9 Craneh, 359; The Divina Pastora, 4 Wheat. Rep. 52; Estrella, 4 Wheat. Rep. 298; Bello Corrunes, 6 Wheat. Rep. 152; La Concepcion, 6 Wheat. Rep. 235.

2. All the cases cited were captures jure belli, under the sanction of commissions granted by South American provinces acknowledged by our government to be engaged in a civil war with Spain. In these cases, the court would have left the captors, and the courts of their country, in full possession of the res capta, had there been no American ownership, or equipment of the vessel effecting the seizure.<sup>1</sup> But this will not be the case where there is no commission *to legalize the capture. In the absence of a commission, every court administering the jus gentium, will regard the taking as tortious at least, and, according to circumstances, piratical. Every violent dispossession on the high seas is prima facie tortious; and a taking as prize does not necessarily render it a capture jure belli.<sup>2</sup> It lies upon the claimant in this case to show the commission under which the taking is justified. If this be not shown, the court, in the exercise of its general powers, will restore the property, unless the claimant can establish his right on some other ground. In this case, no commission is produced; but,

Burke claims to hold this property rightfully as a bona fide purchaser, wholly ignorant of the circumstances stated in the libel. If there were any truth in this defense, in point of fact, it might be well to inquire how far even a bona fide purchaser, in this case, could protect himself by such a purchase. It might be urged that the doctrine of market overt is unknown to the jus gentium; that it is of peculiar and local origin, known only in England, and never recognized in the courts in this country; that the doctrine a piratis et latronibus capta dominium non mutant, is the received opinion of the most enlightened civilians and publicists; that as no right to the spoil vests in them, no right can be derived from them; that even if the doctrine of market overt were otherwise applicable, it could not obtain, inasmuch as a condemnation is essential, and this could not be [493*] of **bona piratorum*;<sup>3</sup> that if the purchase was bona fide, the claimant only succeeded to the right of the vendors; a sale, ex vi termini, importing nothing more than a succession of the vendee, in consideration of money, to the rights of the vendor; and, finally, that the title of the claimant cannot be broader or more extensive than that of the pirates themselves, or those to whom they may have sold the property. But all this inquiry is unnecessary, if the proofs in this cause establish that the claimant was the active and principal owner of the Patriota, which seized and plundered the Santa Maria. On this point the circumstantial evidence comes strongly in support of the positive testimony. But there is, in the answer itself, a singular inconsistency, which throws a dark shade of suspicion over the character of this claim. The claimant first denies all knowledge of the capture of the Santa Maria, and of every fact stated by the libellant in relation to the Patriota, but subsequently relies on a purchase of this property, by his agent Novion, in regular course of trade, after it had been duly condemned. It was no doubt his intention, at the time of filing his claim, to produce an authenticated record of condemnation, which was subsequently abandoned, no doubt from a knowledge that Aury's commission (the only one he could venture to produce) was a nullity, and that the tribunals of prize at Galveztown were wholly incompetent to adjudicate,<sup>4</sup> even *if a condemnation of a competent court [494 could avail in such case.

After this conclusive testimony, establishing the falsity of the claim and answer filed by Burke, need it be asked whether he is a worthy claimant? He is a citizen of the United States, calling on this court to confirm to him the possession of goods, taken by a vessel fitted out by him in contravention of our laws, neutrality, and solemn treaties; and this, too, not even under the color of a commission from any power, acknowledged or unacknowledged.

Mr. Harper also argued, upon the same side, on the facts respecting the proprietary interest, and upon the question of law arising from the supposed condemnation at Galveztown. The substance of his argument upon the latter point will be found in the case of The Nereyda, where the same question arose more distinctly, but which was ordered to farther proof, and will be reported in the next volume.

Mr. Justice LIVINGSTON delivered the opinion of the court, and after stating the case, proceeded as follows:

In a case of so palpable a fitting out and arming in an American port, and proceeding thence directly on a cruise (whether with or without a commission, is in this case immaterial), the counsel for the claimant and libellant was right in not attempting to justify the capture. He has therefore confined his endeavors to show the insufficiency of the evidence to establish *any title in the libellant, or in those [495 whom he represents, to the merchandise in question.

The allegation of the libel is, that the property was part of the cargo of the Spanish ship Santa Maria, which was captured by the Patriota in the year 1817. The appellant says, there is no adequate proof of this fact. Without laying any stress on the register of this ship, which has been sent from the Havana, and to which the appellant has objected, there are four witnesses, and they are the only witnesses in the cause, whose relation is so uniform and particular as to leave no room to entertain doubt on any part of this transaction.

Three of them were on board of the Patriota, at the time of her sailing on her illegal cruise. They establish, not only the unlawful armament of this vessel in the port of Baltimore, but the capture of the Santa Maria, and that the sugars libeled are the identical sugars which were taken out of her, and put on board of the schooner Harriet, in which they were brought to Baltimore. The other witness, Causter, although not present at the capture, testifies, in the most positive terms, and of his own knowledge, that the sugars libeled were part of the cargo of the Santa Maria. He speaks so much in detail on the subject, and his means of information were

1.—Nuestra Senora, 4 Wheat. Rep. 495.

2.—The Two Friends, 1 Rob. 283; Hallet v. Novion, 14 Johns. Rep. 90.

3.—2 Bro. Civ. and Adm. Law. 55, 461, 462; 2 Woodes. 429; 3 Binn. Rep. 228; 1 Johns. Cas. 471; 1 Tyl. Rep. 538.

4.—The Nueva Anna, 6 Wheat. Rep. 193.

so ample, that it is impossible he should be mistaken. Under these circumstances, and when not a single witness has been examined to throw any doubt on the subject, the court perceives no reason for disturbing the sentence of the Circuit Court, which is affirmed with costs.

S. C. 10 Wheat. 431.
Cited—5 Mason, 471.

496*] [*PRIZE.]

THE ARROGANTE BARCELONES.

THE CONSUL-GENERAL OF SPAIN, Claimant.

This court will restore to the former owners property captured in violation of the neutrality of the United States, where it is claimed by the original wrong-doer, though it may have come back to his possession after a regular condemnation as prize.

Quære, How far a condemnation would protect the title of a third person, being a bona fide purchaser, without notice, in such a case.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of Maryland.

This was a libel filed by the Consul-General of His Catholic Majesty, in the District Court of Maryland, against the Spanish ship Arrogante Barcelones, and cargo, praying restitution to the original Spanish owners, upon the ground of the same having been captured on the high seas, in violation of the laws, treaties, and neutral obligations of the United States, and brought within their territorial jurisdiction. A claim was filed by Joseph Almeida, who insisted upon his title as a bona fide purchaser, under a capture made by the Buenos Ayres privateer, Louisa, and a regular sentence of condemnation in the prize court at Juan Griego, in the island of Margaritta, within the territory of a co-belligerent. It appeared, by the proofs taken in the cause, that the capturing vessel was a prize to the Buenos Ayres privateer El Congrasso, and was purchased by the claimant, Almeida, armed and equipped by him at Ensenada, and in April, 1818, came to 497*] Baltimore to be refitted. She was there refitted, and sailed from that port in August, 1818, under the command of the claimant, ostensibly bound on a sealing voyage to the north-west coast of America, with a crew of ninety-six men, principally citizens of the United States; and armed with ten guns and some small arms. The ship anchored off Patuxent, and there received a considerable addition to the armament. Before the crew left Baltimore they had signed the usual ship's articles for the voyage; but after they had been at sea some days, the claimant produced privateering articles, which he required them to sign. Some of them refused, and were put in irons, and two were put on board another vessel. The crew finally signed the articles, and proceeded to cruise off Lisbon, where, on the 9th of September, 1818, they captured the Spanish ship Arrogante Barcelones and cargo, and proceeded with them to the port of Juan Griego, in the island of Margaritta, where proceedings were instituted, under which the ship and cargo were condemned in the Court of Admiralty as Spanish property and good prize of war, and purchased by the claimant at public auction. The copy of the sentence produced in evidence was certified by the Notary or Secretary of Marine, and his signature was verified by the certificate of Lino Clemente, deputy of the republic of Colombia, to the United States, but who had not then been received in that capacity by our government.<sup>1</sup> Decrees of restitution to the original Spanish owners were entered, pro 498 forma, in the district and circuit courts, and the cause was brought by appeal to this court.

Mr. Winder, for the appellant and claimant, argued, (1) That it was the settled rule of this court not to interfere in a doubtful case of this description,<sup>2</sup> and that the evidence in the present case was too dubious to justify the court in depriving the captors of the possession which they had acquired in war. (2) That even supposing he was mistaken on this point, this was a capture by a lawfully-commissioned cruiser of Buenos Ayres, the title under which had been confirmed by a regular condemnation in the Prize Court of Venezuela, an ally of Buenos Ayres in the war against Spain. It may be stated as an universal proposition, which has never yet been doubted or denied, that a sentence of condemnation by a competent court is conclusive, as to the proprietary interest in the res capta, and upon the mere question of prize or no prize; whatever doubts may have been suggested as to the collateral effect of such sentences. And a condemnation in the court of an ally or co-belligerent is equally competent for this purpose with that of the captor's country itself.<sup>3</sup> This court, as a neutral tribunal, is therefore precluded from all inquiry into the 499 previous circumstances under which the capture was made, and whether the capturing vessel had been armed and equipped in violation of our neutrality. There must be some limit to such inquiries, and there is none so fit as a regular sentence of condemnation, which, by the universal law and usage of nations, quiets the title acquired in war. And even if a decree of restitution in the present case would not directly impugn the sentence, it would so far affect the general doctrine of conclusiveness as to disturb the safety of neutral purchasers.

Mr. D. Hoffman, contra, insisted, (1) That there was no sufficient legal evidence of the existence of the condemnation set up in this case. We have a mere dry sentence of the court of Juan Griego, contained in a few lines, stating that the property is Spanish, and condemned as legal prize. The character of the capturing vessel, by whom commanded, commissioned, or owned and equipped, the authority of the court to adjudicate on the subject, the nature of the connection (if any) between Venezuela

1.—Vide ante, Vol. IV.; App'x., p. 49.

2.—The Amistad de Rues, 5 Wheat. Rep. 385.

3.—Wheat. on Capt. 261; 2 East's Rep. 473; 2 Bro. Civ. and Adm. Law, 257, 281. "What has been said does not extend to ships carried into the ports of an ally in the war, and there condemned, or while the ship is there, condemned in the captor's country; Wheat. 7.

and, therefore, in the present war a sentence of condemnation at Bayonne, of a ship taken by the French and carried into St. Sebastian, (a) and lying there at the time of the sentence, has been held valid; and this decision agrees with Bynkershoek's opinion, Qu. Jur. Pub., cap. 4.

a.—2 Robinson, p. 209, case of The Christopher.

and Bucnos Ayres, or any power by whom the commission may have been granted, do not appear; every ground is withheld which could enlighten this court, now virtually called upon 500*] *to enforce this decree. In a case like the present, the court will require the most satisfactory information that can be furnished. Where a case is free from suspicion and difficulty of any kind, and when the sentence itself, however concise, necessarily involves the point in discussion before another tribunal, it might be sufficient to produce the sentence as evidence of the condemnation relied on; but the court is pressed, on this occasion, with many necessary inquiries which do not usually occur. If the condemnation is to operate as a conclusive bar against the exercise of the restoring power of this court, so essential to the maintenance of the laws, treaties, neutrality, and morals of the country, it has a right to be informed whether their violation was ever the subject of inquiry before the court which pronounced the condemnation; it has a right to ascertain whether there was a commission, and by whom the commission was granted; for if granted by an individual, or a people neither recognized as a sovereign state, nor as engaged in a civil war, the condemnation would, on these grounds alone, be wholly inoperative. In such a case the court will require the entire prize proceedings to be exhibited; but if not, then at least the libel, in addition to the sentence. Here is neither the libel nor an abstract of proof, and the sentence itself is uncommonly bald. The rule on this subject formerly was, that the entire proceedings should be set forth; now, however, if the libel and sentence are satisfactory, the court dispenses with anything 501*] further.<sup>1</sup> The libel, it would *appear, is essential. In Fernandis v. Da Costa,<sup>2</sup> Lord Mansfield dispensed with the libel, only because the plaintiff had, by an unequivocal act of his own, made it unnecessary to be exhibited. So, also, in the case of Beake v. Tyrrel,<sup>3</sup> the necessity of furnishing the court with the material grounds of the prize proceedings, is strongly urged by the Lord Chief Justice Holt. If we advert to the general principles of the common law on this subject, we shall find it an established principle, that wherever a record is relied on, all that concerns the matter in question must be produced. The authorities cited are pointed to this effect.<sup>4</sup> No case can well be imagined in which the necessity of showing the grounds and extent of the proceeding more strongly applies than in the present; for it does not appear that Almeida had any commission; and if this be the fact, no condemnation would avail, were it ever so well authenticated.<sup>5</sup>

2. But were the condemnation satisfactorily proved, it is contended that it was pronounced by a court wholly incompetent to adjudicate on the case; that the whole proceeding was coram non iudice; and that it appertains to all courts to inquire into the jurisdiction of another court, whose judgments or decrees are relied on. It is presumed that under the jus gentium an operative sentence of condemnation must be pronounced; either, first, by a court of the *captor, sitting in the country of [502 the captor; or, secondly, by a court of the captor, held in the country of an ally or co-belligerent of the captor; but that the courts of the ally or co-belligerent are wholly incompetent to hold plea of captures made by any one but themselves. The question is entirely new; and it is believed to be so only because it was never before attempted by the courts of an ally to pass sentence on captures made by their associates in war. That allies and co-belligerents can co-operate judicially as well as in a belligerent manner, is a position not to be found in the works of opinions of any writer. Condemnations in the port of an ally or co-belligerent are frequent; but no case can be produced of a condemnation in the court of an ally. No elementary writer mentions this exercise of judicial power of an ally. Dr. Brown<sup>6</sup> has been evidently misapprehended by the appellant's counsel. That sensible, though hasty, and sometimes inaccurate writer, has not expressed himself, in the passages cited, as clearly as he might have done; but still he does not speak of the courts of an ally condemning property taken by a companion in arms. He speaks of ships carried into the ports of an ally, and there condemned; but he does not state by whom condemned. It is, therefore, but justice to him to infer that he meant a court of the captors established in the territory of the ally in the war; and that this, and nothing else, is his meaning, is obvious from the authorities which he cites. All the cases in support of the condemnation now in judgment, will be found, on examination, to be decrees *pronounced by [503 courts of the captors, sitting in the country of the ally or co-belligerent, and therefore confirmatory of our position. The very silence of the writers on the law of the admiralty as to this subject, and the absence of all judicial authority, argues the soundness of the doctrine contended for. The case of The Harmony<sup>7</sup> was a condemnation of a British vessel, by the French commissary of marine, sitting in the country of an ally in the war; and the cases of The Adelaide, and The Betsey Kruger, were under similar circumstances. The Cosmopolite<sup>8</sup> presents a condemnation by the French consul, in a Spanish port, Spain then being a co-belligerent with France; and though the res capta was American property, the principle is the same. So likewise in the case of Oddy v. Bo-ville,<sup>9</sup> mainly relied on by the appellant's counsel, we find the condemnation to have been pronounced by a French court, sitting in Spain, then an ally of France, in a war against Great Britain. In fine, all the cases of condemnation in the country of a co-belligerent, are by courts of the captor sitting within the dominions of the ally. But it is not alone on the absence of authority, sanctioning prize proceedings in the courts of the ally, that the doctrine now contended for reposes. Every principle and analogy of the law on the subject are at vari-

1.—Mar. Ins. Co. v. Hodgson, 6 Cranch, 207, 220.

2.—Park on Ins. 177, 178.

3.—Comber, 120.

4.—3 Inst. 173; Trial per Pais, 166; 2 Bac. Abr. Evid. F., p. 611, 613.

5.—2 Bro. Civ. Law, 55.

6.—2 Bro. Civ. Law, 215, 257, 281.

7.—2 Rob. Adm. Rep. 174, note.

8.—3 Rob. 268.

9.—2 East's Rep. 474.

ance with the exercise of such a power. The principles which introduced condemnation as an evidence of transmutation of property under the laws of war, in lieu of the doctrine of *de-504** *ductio infra *presidia*, pernoctation, &c., evince the impropriety of transferring the investigation ad aliud examen. A judicial inquiry into the regularity of prize proceedings is important to the world at large. The capturing nation has an interest in knowing that its prize ordinances are strictly adhered to, and the courts of that nation are the most competent to inquire into this, and to enforce their observance. The nation of the captured belligerent has also some rights in respect to the things taken. As war is a contest by force to compel the party in the wrong to make retribution for some injury, the principals in the war have an account to settle, and they are reciprocally responsible for the justice and regularity of all hostile acts. No tribunals, therefore, but those of the capturing belligerent, ought to inquire into the validity of captures. Neutrals, likewise, are interested that the regularity and validity of seizures made from them should be passed on by the tribunals of that belligerent by whom the taking was effected. A contrary doctrine might deprive them of the benefit of that responsibility to which captors should ever be liable. If the ally passes sentence, it is probable the neutral would be referred to the capturing nation for any satisfaction the case of an illegal capture might demand; and if application were then made to that nation, the neutral might be referred back to the ally who pronounced the sentence. In theory, therefore, and practice, there appears to be a moral fitness in the rule which would restrict the power of condemnation to the tribunals of that belligerent by whom the property had been actually taken. The country, *505** then, of an ally, may be subservient to this purpose, but not the courts, unless where the captures are made by the allies or co-belligerents themselves.

In addition to the objections to the mode of authenticating the condemnation, and the competency of the tribunal pronouncing it, may we not ask for some proof of an alliance or association in arms between Venezuela, the alleged ally, and the power, whatever that be, under which the claimant pretends to have acted? Even the sentence itself affords no light on this subject, and if it did, the proof should be by matter aliundi. As the condemnation is silent as to the power granting the commission, and no commission has been produced, this court has no evidence that the condemnation was pronounced even by the court of an ally; for the court may justly infer that there was no commission, and if the inference be not made, but it should turn out that Almeida acted under an Artigas commission, the court might then be of opinion that no alliance could be formed with the Banda Oriental, or its chieftain, Artigas, as none are capable of maintaining the relation of an ally who cannot be a sole belligerent. Hence, then, the necessity of proving the alliance, and thus furnishing an additional reason for requiring the production of something more than a naked sentence of condemnation.

4. But should all these objections prove unfounded, we then resort to the ground that a condemnation by a court of competent jurisdiction does not deprive this court of the power it otherwise would possess of restoring this property, the exercise of this *power being [**506* essential to the maintenance of our laws and neutrality.

That this sentence is wholly inoperative, as respects the restoring power of this court, appears to be manifest from a variety of considerations.

As the avowed object of this condemnation, was to close the judicial eye, and paralyze the judicial arm, of this tribunal, it will be proper to inquire into the object and extent of the prize proceeding in the vice-admiralty of Juan Griego, and the jurisdiction and power now required to be exercised by this court. We contend, first, that this court, in vindication of the violated laws of the land, will, if necessary, wholly disregard this condemnation; but, secondly, that restitution may be decreed without impugning, in any degree, the operation of this sentence, or the general doctrine of the conclusiveness of admiralty decrees. This is not a petitory but a possessory suit. The title to the property is no way involved in this proceeding. There is but one inquiry: Has the claimant acquired the possession of this property by means unlawful, as regards this country? if so, that possession will be restored to those from whom it has been wrested by the instrumentality of our citizens. The possession will be placed in statu quo, without any reference to the title which may otherwise have been acquired by the capture and condemnation. If this can hereafter avail the claimant anything, it is well; this court only claims the power of undoing that which has been done in breach of the laws, and only so far as to place both parties, *in regard to the possession, in [**507* their former condition.

Were the court deprived of this wholesome power, our citizens and foreigners might violate our laws and most solemn treaties with complete effect. The fruits of their illegal captures, though brought here, and in the control of our tribunals, might be at once snatched from it by the production of a condemnation decreed by the very power, and in favor of the very persons, by whom our laws have been infringed. If, during this investigation, the captors, by the pretended necessity of sending a commission abroad, should procrastinate the adjudication, sufficient time would be gained for the production of a well-concocted condemnation, which would never fail to make its appearance in due time; and thus the violators of our laws would uniformly be confirmed in the possession of the fruits of their own wrong.

In the case of The Anne<sup>1</sup> it was decided by this court, that a capture made within neutral territory, is nevertheless valid, as between the belligerents, though it be a nullity as respects the neutral whose territory has been violated. If England, then, and France be at war, and an English privateer captures a French vessel, in the port of Philadelphia, and forthwith proceeds with the prize to sea, carries her infra presidia capientium, where she is condemned, and is then brought back to the port of Philadelphia; what would probably be the language

508*] *of this court, when about to restore the prize, if a condemnation were presented with a view of closing all inquiry as to the violation of our territory? We apprehend it would be to this effect: In regard to France, your enemy, the capture is rightful; your condemnation pronounces it such; but in the present inquiry a third party is interested. Your possession of this vessel was gained by an abuse of our asylum, and an infraction of our territorial jurisdiction; as we have now the possession of the corpus, we restore it to those from whom you have, as to this country, illegally taken it. If such would be the language of this court, in the case of a gross violation of our territory, I apprehend the same reply will be given to Almeida, who has not only violated all the laws enacted for the preservation of our neutrality, but has, also, grossly abused the asylum accorded to the privateers of the South American provinces. If these vessels, in the use of that asylum, completely equip themselves with our arms, ammunition, and men, and all is to be rendered valid, or at least inscrutable, by a formal condemnation, all legislation on the subject of neutrality is but public and solemn mockery.

If this condemnation be a conclusive bar against all inquiry as to the violation of our laws, the competency of the power granting the commission, the competency of the person receiving the commission, &c., it is manifest that Venezuela, Buenos Ayres, or any of these new 509*] formed sovereignties, may compel *us, through the instrumentality of a condemnation, to accord to them the rights of sovereignty to every extent. In such case, captures made under the commission of Aury, or Artigas, would be equally operative with those granted by powers acknowledged to be independent, or engaged in a civil war, and the doctrine of Rose v. Himely, and the distinction taken in Palmer's case, and that of The Estrella, would be of no avail. Nay, even in the case of seizures clearly piratical, the 6th and 14th articles of our treaty with Spain would be effectually annulled.

Again, all inquiry into the fact of the violation of our laws, and its civil as well as penal consequences, belongs exclusively to the tribunals of this country. The courts of other nations have no right to pronounce a binding judgment as to the validity or invalidity of any act against our civil, political or criminal laws; the right to vindicate our own laws is essential and inherent; it is a sovereign right, which we have not parted with to the tribunals of other nations. If the decrees or judgments of those tribunals come in collision with our laws, the courts of this country must pursue their even way, and enforce those laws, without any reference either to the laws or judgments of a foreign state. Passive obedience to the decisions of foreign tribunals has been sufficiently inculcated; but no attempt has ever been made of so exceptionable a character as this: to require this court not only to yield to the demands of foreign violators of our laws and sovereignty, but also to the insolent requisitions of our own 510*] criminal citizens.<sup>1</sup> *To give force to this condemnation, is, in fact, to call on this court to enforce the decree of a foreign court.

A court, thus called on, always claims the privilege of examining into the jurisdiction of the court pronouncing the decree, the regularity of its judicial proceedings, and the intended extent of its operation.

It cannot be denied, that if a privateer, or even a public vessel of war, of a foreign power, be fitted out in our ports, her commission can protect neither her nor her prizes from the sanctions of our law. Why, then, should a condemnation, which is but the exercise of another species of sovereign power, place the property in a state of absolute immunity? The position taken on the other side, that decrees of a court of competent jurisdiction are always binding, and exclude all inquiry, is far from sound. The general doctrine is well known, but its extent and its exceptions are equally well known.

Secondly. But this court may decree restitution, without in any degree impugning the doctrine of the conclusiveness of admiralty sentences.

If the postulate be allowed, that the restoring power of this court rests exclusively on the ground of violated neutrality, then the prize court had no right to, and never did, in fact, institute any inquiry relative to the illegality of the equipment, in reference to our laws; that is an inquiry competent for this court solely. There is another inquiry, competent solely for the courts of the captors, viz., the fact of the capture, and its conformity to prize regulations and the jus belli. These are distinct rights, in the exercise of *which neither tribunal [511] is called on to pronounce on any matter not essential to be proved in order to justify a decision. The taking was rightful in regard to the belligerents, though our laws were violated, and its restitution by this tribunal will be equally so, though the seizure be valid qua prize. In this point of view, there is no collision between the two tribunals; the decree of each stands, valeat quantum valere potest. No judgment or decree establishes anything beyond what was necessarily proved in order to arrive at the decision. The sentence, at most, proves nothing but its own correctness in regard to the mere question of prize.<sup>2</sup> All the cases, where condemnations are relied on, have a qualification to this extent. The sentence in this case pronounces that the property was Spanish, and is condemned as good prize. It does not state, either affirmatively or negatively, one word about the equipment of the privateer; and it cannot, therefore, be even prima facie evidence that the privateer had proceeded legally in regard to the whole world. Where a vessel is captured by a belligerent, for unneutral conduct, a condemnation would be conclusive; she was condemned on this sole ground, and she could not be restored by the courts of the neutral nation, without falsifying the very fact on which the capture and condemnation proceeded. But here the possession will be restored to the Spanish owners, not qua prize, but simply on the ground that the use of our neutral means in making the *capture was a matter [512] in which the prize court of Juan Griego had no concern.

As a capture in violation of neutral territory

2.—Maley v. Shattuck, 3 Cranch, 458, 488; The Mary, 9 Cranch, 126, 142; 1 Gamb. N. P. Cas. 419; 12 Mass. Rep. 291; 2 Bro. Civ. and Adm. Law, 121.

1.—2 Azuni, 252; 1 H. Bl. 123; 2 H. Bl. 410.

is still valid, in regard to the contending parties, the capture, in a belligerent court, would be omni exceptione major. Spain, in the present case, would in vain have set up the violation of our laws as a defense, and the United States had no persona standi in judicio. A suggestion of violated neutrality, on behalf of this country, would not have been regarded.

Adverting, for a moment, to the grounds on which the doctrine of conclusiveness is said to rest, we shall find that none of them would be impeached by the restoration of this property. They are said to be three: comity, notice to all the world, and the co-equality of nations. As to the doctrine of comity, it is founded on the supposition of the utmost good faith, and there must be a perfect reciprocity in order to support it. Is it not too much to require of any nation, on the ground of comity, to permit foreign powers to confederate with the worst class of our people, in insulting and trampling on our solemn treaties, neutral obligations, and explicit laws of public policy?

But it is supposed to be a second ground of this doctrine of conclusiveness, that the whole world have notice, and are parties to the proceedings in a prize court, they being in rem. This, if true in fact, only applies to those who have a title or interest in the res ipsa, and not to those who have such a collateral, incidental, or potential right as that of the United States. 513* But the notice is itself a mere fiction.<sup>1</sup> The United States had no persona standi in that court; and if they had, it would have been impossible to assert it, as the libel, condemnation, sale, and arrival of the prize in this country, were nearly cotemporaneous. It is the nature of fictions to work justice, not palpable injustice; this court, therefore, will not suffer itself to be ousted of its rights by a forced application of such a fiction.

The last ground on which condemnations have acquired their power, is the admitted co-equality of all nations. This, perhaps, is the true principle. Admitting that the recognized competency to wage a civil war would clothe these provinces with every attribute of sovereignty, the reply is, that the courts of no nation are competent to render this condemnation binding to the extent contended for: this would be at war with the very principle; we should become inferior. The deductio infra præsidia does not clothe this court with any power; its jurisdiction originates in its right to maintain our neutral duties, and extends only so far as is required for that maintenance; no power on earth can deprive us of this right. If the sentence of any court be extended thus far, we may say, with Lord Kenyon, "it may be throwing a veil over decisions founded on Algerine, or worse than Algerine principles; and if such sentences are to protect their own injustice, redress would be sought in vain;" and it may be added, that the rights of this country, 514* and those of the "most vital nature, would be prostrated without remedy. If, then, the prize court of Venezuela have powers co-ordinate with this, we should not, however, by asking restoration, impute to this condemnation a legal infirmity, but to the capture a vice antecedent and paramount to the decree, and not cognizable by that tribunal.

Were the doctrine of conclusiveness permitted to rest on its original principles, we should not be inclined to quarrel with it; but where it is extended beyond its known and salutary operation, we cannot regard it but with a jealous eye. If it be invoked by a purchaser under the decree, or to falsify a warranty of neutrality, there are then special reasons of policy, convenience, and comity, which sustain it. These special grounds are satisfactorily explained in the case of Croudson v. Leonard;<sup>2</sup> but it will be seen that none of the three grounds there set forth would be impugned by a restitution of this property; for, first, the question of prize is not before this court; second, the present inquiry is not in a common law court, but before a tribunal of the law of nations, and every way competent to make the necessary investigation; and, third, the decision of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction is not re-examined.

But it has been urged, that a restitution of this property to the Spanish owner, though it might not directly impugn the condemnation, would be so far opening admiralty decrees as to disturb the safety of neutral purchasers generally, and that this would be contrary to the policy of nations. The answer to this <sup>*515</sup> is, that the purchaser under the decree of any court does not necessarily obtain an unimpeachable title. He must take the property cum onere; the paramount vices in the title remain; he does not purchase under a general, but under a special warranty. The title gained by the capture, remains; it was illegal in its origin, and, as to the offended power, can never be rehabilitated.<sup>3</sup>

5. Lastly, the proof in the present case is positive that this vessel and cargo were captured by the claimant, for himself and his associates. The condemnation enures to his benefit; the alleged purchase by him was nominal; and, if it were otherwise, he gained his title or possession by a wrong, and no act of his can purge the wrong. Here we may apply the rule of the civilians: That no one can change the cause of his own possession. On this principle is it, in part, that executors, guardians and all who stand in the relation of trustees, are (as a general rule) incompetent to purchase the trust estate. Almeida's possession was gained by a wrong; he cannot change the character of that possession; he cannot, by his own act, give himself a better title. A defective title may indeed be rendered good by the purchase of outstanding good titles; but here is no outstanding interest in the subject-matter, but in the United States. The condemnation, then, could only corroborate the title which he had gained, and could not clothe him with a better one.

Mr. Harper also argued on the same side; but <sup>*516</sup> as the whole of his argument up- on the conclusiveness of the foreign sentence will be found reported at large, in the next volume, in the case of The Nereyda, in order to avoid a repetition, it is thought expedient to refer the reader to that case, which involved the same question.

2.—4 Cranch, 434.

3.—Moodie v. The Betty Cathcart, Boe's Rep. 299.

1.—3 Dall. 91; 9 Cranch, 144.
Wheat. 7.

Mr. Winder, in reply, denied the authority of the supposed rule that a decree or sentence of a court of admiralty cannot be given in evidence, without producing the libel, or other proceedings. There can be no necessity for producing the libel, if the sentence itself shows what the libel would show; and in this case the decree sets forth every fact which would appear on the face of the libel, or which is material to establish the conclusiveness of the proceedings. The decree accompanies the possession of the vessel, the essential muniment of her title.

This court has never asserted a right to look beyond the sentence of condemnation. It has always admitted its conclusiveness, even as to collateral effects. But even if the sentence be conclusive as to the question of prize only, the right of the original owner is completely devested. And even admitting this to be a possessory action, yet the right of possession depends on the right of property, otherwise any stranger might claim. As to the competency of the tribunal, the fact of the connection between the different Spanish provinces in the present war is notorious, and courts of justice will always take notice of such facts. Indeed, the President, in his different official communications to Congress, has alluded to 517*] their being engaged *in a common contest against the mother country. Why, then, should they not lend each other the aid of their tribunals to pronounce condemnations, as well as of their ports to fit out the armaments with which the captures of Spanish property are made? If, according to the original practice of nations, a carrying infra presidia were to consummate the title, would it not be sufficient to carry the prize within the territory of an ally, or co-belligerent? If one co-belligerent can consent to a foreign tribunal sitting within its territory, and condemning prizes made by the cruisers of its ally, why may not the ally permit its captures to be adjudged in the courts of its co-belligerent? But at all events, Venezuela was herself engaged in war against Spain, and this was the property of her enemy brought into her territory. She had a right to condemn it in her courts, and did condemn it so as to make it a part of the mass of national property. There is no positive authority which denies the authority of the courts of a belligerent, to condemn prizes captured by its co-belligerent; and in the absence of any case to the contrary, it is sufficient that no reason of principle or public policy exists to prevent it. The learned counsel also referred to the resolution of Congress during the revolutionary war, authorizing their courts to condemn prizes captured by French cruisers, to show that the opinion and practice of nations had authorized similar proceedings.<sup>1</sup>

**Mr. Justice JOHNSON* delivered the [*518 opinion of the court:

The offense proved upon Almeida in this case is one of a very aggravated nature. He not only violated the neutrality of this government, but effected his purpose, by practicing a flagrant fraud, either upon his crew, or upon the revenue officers of the port of Baltimore; or perhaps partially upon both. Everything in the case proves that the sealing voyage round Cape Horn was a mere pretext; and if it be true that the crew were kidnapped under that pretext, and forced into belligerent service after getting to sea, it is a remarkable instance of bold and successful imposition. But who can believe it? The truth unquestionably is, that the crew, with perhaps the exception of the few who were put in irons, understood perfectly the nature of the enterprise they were embarking in, and were deceived into the belief that their affected ignorance, or the impudence of the fraud, would screen them from the penalties of the laws which forbade their entering into belligerent service.

It cannot, then, be questioned that Almeida now appears before us in the character of a flagrant offender against the laws and neutral obligations of this country. And there is no shadow of a ground for hesitating to apply to this case the established rule of this court, in cases of illegal outfit, unless it be the condemnation of this vessel and cargo in the court of Margarita.

This court will for the present waive all expression of its opinion on the questions raised upon the validity of that condemnation, or the sufficiency of the *document produced [*519 to prove it. We will put our decision upon a single, and independent ground, that the view of this court, with regard to all such cases, may henceforth be distinctly understood.

We find the captured property in the hands of the offender, and hold it to be immaterial through what circuitry of changes it has come back to him. It is not for him to claim a right springing out of his own wrong. In the hands of a third person, a valid sentence of condemnation, properly authenticated, would present a very different view of the subject. The offender's touch here restores the taint from which the condemnation may have purified the prize. Although a purchaser without notice may, in many cases, hold his purchase free from an interest with which it was chargeable in the hands of the vendor, yet it cannot return into the hands of that vendor, without reviving the original lien. Nor will courts of justice ever yield the locus standi in judicio to the suitor, who is compelled to trace his title through his own criminal acts.<sup>2</sup>

Decree affirmed.

1.—5 Wheat. Rep. Appx. 123.

2.—In the case of The Nereyda, which was argued at the present term, the court was of opinion that in cases where a condemnation is relied on, the libel as well as the sentence ought to be produced, in order that the court might judicially see that the foreign tribunal had jurisdiction, and what was the ground of application for condemnation, and the parties by whom it was sought. The court also thought that the claimant ought to show by competent evidence that he was a bona fide purchaser of the property for a valuable consideration; and from the defects of the proofs on both points, the cause was ordered to further proof. It has therefore been thought fit to omit a report of the case, until its final decision.

520*]

[*PRIZE.]

THE MONTE ALLEGRE AND THE RAINHA DE LOS ANJOS.

THE PORTUGUESE CONSUL-GENERAL,
Libellant.

A question of fact upon the bona fides of an alleged sale of Portuguese ships, and their cargoes, which had been captured in violation of our neutrality. Restitution to the original owners decreed.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of Maryland.

These causes were argued by Mr. Winder for the appellant and claimant, and by Mr. D. Hoffman for the respondent and libellant; but as the same points were insisted on as in the preceding cases of The Gran Para and The Arrogante Barcelones, ante, pp. 471, 496, it is not thought necessary to report the argument of counsel in the present case. The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

The Monte Allegre was captured by the private armed vessel called La Fortuna, cruising at the time under a commission from the chief of the Oriental Republic. She was completely fitted out, equipped, and manned, in Baltimore, from which port she sailed on her first cruise, in December, 1816; owned and commanded by citizens of the United States; but commissioned by the government of Buenos Ayres. She sailed again on her second 521*] cruise, in August, 1817, from the port of Baltimore. This cruise terminated at Buenos Ayres, where she was in part dismantled, some of her rigging and arms being deposited in a store-ship which lay near her. The crew also were discharged. After lying in port four or five weeks, she sailed on her third cruise, having the same armament with which she sailed from Baltimore, and about twenty or thirty of the same crew. Her commander was changed, but was still a citizen of the United States; and she sailed under a commission from the Oriental Republic. On this cruise, the Monte Allegre was taken, and sent into the port of Baltimore, where she was libeled by the Consul-General of Portugal. She was claimed by William Foster, the prize master, in behalf of the Oriental Republic, who alleged, that while she lay in the port of Buenos Ayres, she was purchased by the government of the Banda Oriental.

The reality of this sale constitutes the only question which can arise in this case.

The testimony in support of it is found in the depositions of James Brown, James Williams, William Towson, and Alexander Towson. They mention the partial dismantling of the vessel, and speak of a report that she was sold, but they give no positive information on the subject, nor did they even hear to whom the sale was made. This testimony would weigh very little, were it even uncontradicted. But the regular transmission of her prizes to Baltimore, her returning to that port, at the termination of her cruise, the depositions taken to show that the original proprietors had not parted with their interest, *are proofs [*522 of a continuing American ownership, which are entirely conclusive. There can, then, be no doubt but that the captures made by the Fortuna are in violation of the laws of the United States, enacted for the preservation of our neutrality, and that they ought to be restored when brought within our territory.

The Rainha de los Anjos was a Portuguese vessel, captured by the La Fortuna, in the same cruise in which she captured the Monte Allegre. The cases are, in all material respects, the same.

Sentences affirmed with costs.

S. C. 9 Wheat. 616.

Cited—9 Wheat. 641; 11 Wheat. 429.

[LOCAL LAW. CHANCERY.]

CROCKET v. LEE.

SAME v. SAME.

A question on the validity of a certificate for a settlement right in Kentucky, and of the entry thereof in the surveyor's office.

It is a settled rule, that the decree must conform to the allegations in the pleadings, as well as to the proofs in the cause.

Therefore, when the question is on the validity of a location, and neither its vagueness nor its certainty are distinctly put in issue by the pleadings, the testimony to that point will be disregarded by this court; but if the merits appear to justify it, the cause will be remanded to the court below, with directions to permit the pleadings to be amended.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of Kentucky.

*These causes were argued by Mr. [523 Sheffey<sup>1</sup> for the appellant, and by Mr. Clay<sup>2</sup> for the respondent.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

These causes relate to the same title, and depend on the same question. It is the validity of a certificate for a settlement right granted to Angus Cameron, and of the entry thereof in the surveyor's office.

The certificate is in these words:

"Angus Cameron this day claimed a settlement and pre-emption in the District of Kentucky, on account of residing in the country twelve months before the year 1778, lying at the head right-hand fork of Welles' branch, extending south-east to the head of a small run that empties into the north fork of Licking, including the spring on the head of both branches, about one and a half miles above the war-path

1.—Who cited Bodley v. Taylor, 5 Cranch, 229; 6 Cranch, 148; 3 Cranch, 239; 2 Wheat. Rep. 144; 2 Bibb. 144; 1 Bibb. 72; 1 Wheat. Rep. 141; 1 Wheat. Rep. 130; 3 Bibb. 623; 5 Wheat. Rep. 116; 6 Wheat. Rep. 119; 1 Bibb. 228.

2.—Who cited 1 Bibb. 10, 46, 34, 129, 136; 2 Bibb. 109, 114, 259, 476, 479; Hardie, 411; 1 Marsh. Kent. Rep. 281; Print. Dec. 95; 3 Bibb. 148, 149; Wheat. Dig. Dec. tit. Local Law, XI.

NOTE.—See note to Watts v. Lindsey's heirs, ante, 158.

that crosses the north fork. Satisfactory proof being made to the court, they are of opinion that the said Cameron has a right to a settlement of 400 acres of land, to include the above location, and the pre-emption of 1,000 acres adjoining, and that a certificate issue accordingly.

524*] *The entry in the surveyor's office conforms to the location expressed in the certificate.

The right of Cameron, both to his settlement and pre-emption, was regularly conveyed to the appellant, in whose name patents have been obtained.

The appellee claims under junior entries, for which patents have been issued, younger than the appellant's patent on the pre-emption warrant, but elder than his patent on the settlement right. The appellant, therefore, filed his bill to obtain a conveyance for the land covered by his settlement right, the legal title to which was in the appellee; and the appellee filed his bill to obtain a conveyance for the land covered by the appellant's patent on the pre-emption right, to which he claimed the equitable title.

Pending the controversy, Lee purchased in the right of a person claiming under a patent older than either of those under which Crocket claimed; but as this patent was founded on a junior entry, the validity of Cameron's certificate was still the question on which the whole case depended.

In the Circuit Court, Crocket's bill was dismissed; and, in the other suit, he was decreed to convey to Lee the land contained in his patent for Cameron's settlement right. The decrees were founded entirely on the opinion that Cameron's location was too vague to be supported. In the Circuit Court, the cause turned almost entirely on this point, and the greater part of the testimony is taken with a view to it. If the validity of Cameron's location be sustained, Crocket must succeed, because his right is prior in time, and superior in dignity, 525*] to any title conflicting with it. If Cameron's entry be invalid, then the decrees are right, either because Young's entry is good, or because the legal title was in Lee, when they were made.

The testimony which has been taken in these causes, certainly is very strong in support of the decrees of the Circuit Court; but the counsel for the appellant contends that so much of this testimony as respects the vagueness of Cameron's location must be disregarded, because neither its vagueness nor its certainty has been put in issue. Lee has not averred in his bill, nor alleged in his answer, that this location is vague, nor has he anywhere, or in any manner, questioned its validity.

The principle advanced by the appellant's counsel cannot be controverted. No rule is better settled than that the decree must conform to the allegations, as well as to the proofs in the cause. The location being set out in the pleadings, the court can undoubtedly notice any intrinsic apparent defect. If it be void in itself, no testimony can sustain it, and it would be deemed void on a demurrer to the bill. But if it be not void in itself, if its validity depends upon facts to be proved in the cause, then its validity ought to be put in issue.

The counsel for the appellee does not directly controvert this principle, but endeavors to withdraw his case from its operation, by contending that terms are used in the pleadings which are equivalent to a direct allegation that Cameron's location is too vague to be sustained.

If in this he is correct, the consequence he draws from it will be admitted; for it [*526 will certainly be sufficient, if the matter to be proved be substantially alleged in the proceedings. How, then, is the fact?

In his answer to Crocket's bill, he says that he does not "admit that the survey has been made agreeable to location or to law."

This allegation certainly questions the survey. If it vary from the entry, if it be chargeable with any fatal irregularity, if it be in any respect contrary to law, such defects may be shown, and the party may avail himself of it to the extent justified by his testimony, and by the law. But this allegation is confined to the survey. It does not mount up to the location, nor does it draw that into question. It gives no notice to Crocket that his entry was to be controverted.

The bill filed by Lee is equally defective in this respect. After setting out his own title, he states that of his adversary; and, after reciting the certificate granted to Cameron, subjoins that Crocket claimed the land "in dispute by virtue of the said improvement, and having caused the same to be surveyed contrary to location, and to law, and was to interfere with" his (Lee's) claims, had obtained a prior patent, &c.

This allegation, like that in the answer, draws into question only the survey. It does not controvert the location or entry.

The counsel for the appellant says it would be monstrous, if, after the parties had gone to trial on the validity of the entry, and have directed all their testimony in the Circuit [*527 Court to that point, their rights should be made to depend in the appellate court on a mere defect in the pleadings, which had entirely escaped their observation in the court where it might have been amended, and the non-existence of which would not have varied the case.

The hardships of a particular case would not justify this tribunal in prostrating the fundamental rules of a court of chancery—rules which have been established for ages, on the soundest and clearest principles of general utility. If the pleadings in the cause were to give no notice to the parties or to the court of the material facts on which the right asserted was to depend, no notice of the points to which the testimony was to be directed, and to which it was to be limited; if a new case might be made out in proof, differing from that stated in the pleadings, all will perceive the confusion and uncertainty which would attend legal proceedings, and the injustice which must frequently take place. The rule that the decree must conform to the allegations, as well as to the proofs of the parties, is not only one which justice requires, but one which necessity imposes on courts. We cannot dispense with it in this case. But although the entry is not put in issue, the survey is; and if that be made on ground not covered by any part of the entry, the decrees would, on that account, be affirmed.

It must at once occur that in a case where the entry is in reality attended with much uncertainty, there will be some difficulty in showing

528*] how much a *survey varies from it, unless the survey be made on land entirely different from the entry. That does not appear to be the fact in the present case. Cameron's entry calls for the head right-hand fork of Welles' branch, for the head of a small run that empties into the north fork, and to lie about one and a half miles above the war-path that crosses the north fork. The survey is upon the head waters of these streams, and lies a small distance above the war-path that crosses the north fork. There is reason to believe, that, were the location to be sustained, the survey would be found to conform to it in part, though not, perhaps, entirely. This court has no means of ascertaining how far they agree, and how far they disagree, and the decrees of the Circuit Court must be reversed.

But as this reversal is not on the merits of the case, and the court is rather inclined to the opinion that the decrees on the merits are right, no final decree will be directed in either cause, but each will be remanded to the Circuit Court, with directions to permit the parties to amend their pleadings.

ANDREW CROCKET, Appellant, }
v.
HENRY LEE, Respondent. }

DECREE.—This cause came on to be heard on the bill, &c., and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, this court is of opinion that the decree dismissing the plaintiff's bill was erroneous, in this, that the plaintiff is shown to possess the prior and better equitable title, unless his location, which is the foundation 529*] tion *to that title, be void for want of certainty, a point not properly examinable under the pleadings in the cause, as they now stand, because it is not put in issue. This court doth therefore reverse the said decree, and doth remand the cause to the Circuit Court, that the parties may be permitted to amend their pleadings, and that farther proceedings may be had therein, according to law.

SAME }
v. } SAME. }

DECREE.—This cause came on to be heard on the bill, &c., and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, this court is of opinion that the decree directing the defendant to convey to the plaintiff the land therein mentioned, is erroneous in this, that the defendant is shown to possess the prior and better equitable title, unless his location, which is the foundation of that title, be void for want of certainty, a point not properly examinable under the pleadings in the cause, as they now stand, because it is not put in issue. This court doth therefore reverse the said decree, and doth remand the cause to the Circuit Court, that the parties may be permitted to amend their pleadings, and that farther proceedings may be had therein, according to law.

[*PRACTICE.]

[*530]

MACKER'S HEIRS v. THOMAS.

In real actions, the death of the ancestor, without having appeared to the suit, abates the suit, and it cannot be revived and prosecuted against the heirs of the original defendant.

If the heirs be made parties by order of the court in which the suit is brought, and judgment is entered against them by default for want of a plea, upon a summons and count against the original defendant, they may sue out a writ of error, and reverse the judgment.

MR JUSTICE WASHINGTON delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to a judgment of the Circuit Court for the District of Kentucky. The defendant brought a writ of right in that court against John Macker, the ancestor of the plaintiff in error, for an undivided moiety in a certain tract of land. After a summons served upon Macker, he died, without having appeared to the suit, and a rule was obtained by the plaintiff below, upon the heirs of the defendant, to show cause why the suit should not be revived against them. This rule being served and no cause shown to the contrary, the suit, by order of the court, was revived against the heirs, the plaintiffs in error, and at a subsequent term of the court, judgment by default was entered against them, from which judgment this writ of error is prosecuted.

The main question for the decision of this court is, whether the Circuit Court erred in directing the suit to be revived against the heirs of Macker, and rendering *judgment [*531] against them? The court considered this point to have been decided in the case of Green v. Watkins (6 Wheat. Rep., 260). The question there was, whether in real actions, the death of either party, after a writ of error sued out, abates the suit; and it was decided that it did not. But in examining the general principles of law upon the subject of abatement by the death of parties, it was distinctly laid down, that in real and personal actions, the death of either party, before judgment, did at common law abate the suit; and that the 31st section of the judiciary act of 1789, c. 20, was necessary to enable the action to be prosecuted by or against the representatives of the deceased party, when the cause of action survived. But this section is clearly confined to personal actions, as the power to prosecute or defend is given to the executor or administrator of the deceased party, and not to the heir or devisee.

It is objected by the counsel for the defendant in error, that the defendants in the court below could not sue out and prosecute a writ of error, because they failed to appear and plead to the suit in that court. No case was referred to in support of this objection, and it is confidently believed that none can be found to countenance it. Although the plaintiffs in error did not plead to the suit, they were nevertheless made parties to it by the order of the court, and as such, judgment was rendered against them, and that, too, upon a summons and count against the ancestor. Being, then, parties to the suit, and affected by the judgment against them, they were *clearly [*532] entitled to sue out a writ of error; and although the judgment was entered by default for want of a plea, they may be injured not less by such judgment, than if it had been entered upon a verdict. If judgment in an action of trespass be rendered against one defendant by default, and in favor of the other defendant upon a plea, the former may alone bring a writ of error. (Lev., 220; Hob., 70.) If it should be said that the appearance of the plaintiffs in error in the Circuit Court, by an attorney of that court, cured the error committed in reviving the suit against them, the answer is, that by the death of the ancestor, a new cause of action arose against the heirs, and the plea is not in the same condition as it was in the life-time of the party.<sup>1</sup> The suit having once abated by the death of the defendant, it was out of court, and a new summons and count against the heirs was necessary. Besides, the appearance was not voluntary, but was the consequence of an erroneous order of the court, enabling the plaintiff below to prosecute the suit against the heirs.

Cited—3 Pet. 54; 19 How. 130; 1 Wall. 155; 4 Cliff. 373.

It is objected, in the last place, that if the plaintiffs have a right to prosecute this writ of error, they nevertheless cannot assign for error the order of the court reviving the suit, because they failed in that court to appear and except to the opinion of the court in relation to the order. But an exception to the opinion of the court is only necessary when the alleged error could not otherwise appear upon the record. The 533 error in this case was in ordering *the suit to be revived and prosecuted against the heirs of the original defendant, and proceeding to render judgment against them upon a summons and count against the original defendant, all which sufficiently appears upon the face of this record.

JUDGMENT.—This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kentucky, and was argued by counsel for the defendant in error. On consideration whereof, this court is of opinion that the said Circuit Court erred in ordering the suit to be revived and prosecuted against the heirs of the original defendant, and proceeding to render judgment against them upon a summons and count against the original defendant. It is therefore adjudged and ordered that the judgment of the said Circuit Court in this case be, and the same is hereby reversed and annulled. And this court proceeding to render such judgment as the said Circuit Court should have rendered, it is farther adjudged and ordered that the said suit be, and the same is hereby abated.

Cited—1 Cliff. 129.

534 [*PRACTICE.]

THE COLUMBIAN INSURANCE CO.

v.

WHEELRIGHT ET AL.

A writ of error will lie from this court upon the judgments of the circuit courts, awarding a peremptory mandamus.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia.

1.—Green v. Watkins, 6 Wheat. Rep. 202.

In this case, which was argued by Mr. Jones for the plaintiffs in error, and by Mr. Sarann for the defendants in error,<sup>2</sup> the court determined that a writ of error would lie under the act relating to the District of Columbia, which is similar in its provisions to the judiciary act of 1789, c. 20, sec. 22, to reverse the judgment of the Circuit Court, awarding a peremptory mandamus, to admit the defendants in error to the offices of directors in the Columbian Insurance Company, and directed Mr. Jones to produce affidavits as to the value of the matter in controversy. But it not appearing that it amounted to one thousand dollars, the sum required to give this court appellate jurisdiction from the final judgment or decrees of the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia, the court afterwards directed the writ of error to be quashed. The court was of opinion that there was nothing in controversy but the value of the office, and that its value must be ascertained by the salary. *Although, therefore, a writ of error 535 might issue to a judgment awarding a peremptory mandamus to restore the office where the matter in controversy was sufficient to give jurisdiction to the court, it could not regularly issue in this case.

Writ of error quashed.

Cited—12 Pet. 640, 641; 14 Pet. 565, 566, 607, 618; 22 How. 184; 2 Cranch, C. C. 273.

[COMMON LAW.]

BLIGHT'S LESSEE ET AL.

v.

ROCHESTER.

British subjects, born before the revolution, are equally incapable with those born after, of inheriting, or transmitting the inheritance of lands in this country.

The treaties of 1783 and 1794, only provide for titles existing at the time those treaties were made, and not to titles subsequently acquired.

Actual possession is not necessary to give the party the benefit of the treaty; but the existence of title at the time is necessary.

Where J. D., an alien and British subject, came into the United States subsequent to the treaty of 1783, and before the signature of the treaty of 1794, died, seized of the lands in question; held, that the title of his heirs was not protected by the treaties.

In what cases citizenship may be presumed so as to confirm a title to lands.

The doctrine of estoppel, or the principle of legal policy, which forbids a party from denying the title under which he has received a conveyance, does not apply as between vendor and vendee, especially where the latter has not received possession from the former.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of Kentucky.

This was an ejectment in the court below, brought to recover the possession of lot No. 18, in the town of *Danville, in the state 536 of Kentucky. It appeared, from the evidence in the cause, that the plaintiffs are the heirs of John Dunlap, who was a citizen of Pennsylvania, and claimed as the heir of his brother, James Dunlap, who died seized of the premises in question, in the autumn of 1794. James Dunlap was an alien, and a subject of the King of Great Britain, who came to the United States subsequent to the treaty of peace of 1783, and died before the signature of the treaty of 1794. After his death, one Hunter, professing to have purchased of John Dunlap, entered into possession, and conveyed to several persons, parcels of the lot; and to the defendant, Rochester, one parcel, in 1795, who entered into possession thereof, and has occupied the same ever since; having acknowledged the title of said Dunlap, as that under which he held.

2.—He cited Bac. Abr. tit. Mandamus; 8 Mod. 27; 1 P. Wms. 348.

Upon this evidence, the counsel for the plaintiffs moved the court to instruct the jury.

1st. That if the jury find the defendant obtained possession under James G. Hunter, who obtained possession as the attorney of John Dunlap, or who claimed under an executory agreement with John Dunlap, and that said defendant has held, and occupied under John Dunlap's title, claiming from said Hunter, as the attorney of said Dunlap, or under an executory agreement, or has, since he was in possession, acknowledged the title of said Dunlap, as that under which he held; that then the defendant is not permitted to impeach or controvert the title of said John Dunlap, by parol evidence that James Dunlap was an alien.

537* 2d. That if the defendant, Rochester, acquired the possession, and has continued to hold as above, the possession of the defendant was not such an adverse possession as would toll the right of entry of said John Dunlap, and the statute of limitations does not apply.

3d. That if James Dunlap occupied the lot, from the date of his deed till his death, and said James G. Hunter and the defendant have continued to hold it under the claim of John Dunlap, his brother, as heir to James; that from these facts, connected with the evidence in the cause, and in the absence of any proof of an inquisition or office found as to the alienage of James Dunlap, and in the absence of any grant or other act of the commonwealth or its officers since the death of said James, in derogation of the title of said James or of said John, they should presume that said James was a citizen of the United States.

4th. That if they believe the evidence, they should find for the plaintiff.

5th. That the jury have a right to presume that James Dunlap was a citizen of the state of Virginia, or of some one of the United States, and if so, John Dunlap was his heir, and capable of inheriting.

6th. That if James Hunter entered under a parol agreement with John Dunlap, the possession of said Hunter was the possession of said Dunlap.

7th. That the inheritance claimed by John Dunlap, as heir to James, is protected by, and within the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed 19th November, 1794.

The court refused the 1st, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 538* and *7th instructions, moved by the plaintiff; and gave the second, with this qualification, "that if John Dunlap had either title or the actual possession of the premises after the death of James Dunlap, and before the entry of said Hunter, or of the defendant, then the statute of limitations did not apply."

The defendant moved the instruction, that if James Dunlap was an alien, and died before the 19th November, 1794, then the plaintiff has made out no title to the land in question which will authorize them to find for him; which was given by the court with this qualification, that if the jury find that John Dunlap had actual possession of the premises after the death of James Dunlap, and prior to the time when Hunter took possession, in that event this instruction would not be given.

Mr. Bibb, for the plaintiff, (1) stated that the first instruction, moved on the part of the plaintiffs, involved the proposition that Hunter, who entered, claiming under John Dunlap, would be estopped from denying John Dunlap's title by parol, and that the defendant, Rochester, who entered under Hunter, stands in the same predicament with his grantor, and is besides precluded by his own acknowledgement from denying the title from which his own is derived.<sup>1</sup>

*2. The second instruction asked by the [*539] plaintiff was given by the judge below, but with a qualification. That qualification involves the question discussed on the first instruction, by permitting the defendant to impeach the title of John Dunlap, or by requiring an actual entry by John, after the death of James, and before Hunter or the defendant entered. It is insisted that pedis possessio of John was not necessary; that the entry of Hunter, claiming under him, enured to his benefit, and was sufficient to enable Hunter, and all claiming or holding under him, after such entry, to show title derived from John Dunlap.<sup>2</sup>

3. The third and fifth instructions prayed for, may be considered together. In withholding both these instructions, the court has denied to the jury the right to infer one fact from another. From the long uninterrupted possession held under the title of the Dunlaps, and as against the defendant, who had acknowledged John Dunlap's title, the jury ought to have been permitted to fill, by intendment or presumption, after the death of both the Dunlaps, the only chasm alleged by the defendant to exist in that title. Before the establishment of a uniform rule of naturalization under the new constitution, the laws of the different states gave great encouragement to emigration, by conferring the privileges of citizenship on easy terms. The acknowledgement of John Dunlap's title by the defendant, his possession under it, and demand of a deed from John D., was sufficient evidence, of itself, to [*540] warrant the jury to find John D. a citizen, if that were necessary to perfect his title. Omne majus continet in se minus; the acknowledgement of his title involved the admission of the fact that he was a citizen.<sup>3</sup>

1.—Jackson v. Stewart, 6 Johns. Rep. 34; Jackson v. Reynolds, 1 Caines' Rep. 444; Jackson v. Whitford, 2 Caines' Rep. 215; Brandt v. Livermore, 10 Johns. Rep. 358; Jackson v. Hinman, 1b. 292; Jackson v. Bush, 1b. 223; Jackson v. M'Leod, 12 Johns. Rep. 182; Jackson v. Graham, 3 Caines' Rep. 188;

Phillips v. Rothwell, 4 Bibb's Rep. 33; Connelly v. Chiles, 2 Marsh. Kent. Rep. 242.

2.—Barr v. Gratz, 4 Wheat. Rep. 214; Jackson v. Reynolds, 1 Caines' Rep. 444; Jackson v. M'Leod, 12 Johns. Rep. 182.

3.—Co. Litt. 52, b; Noy. Max. 16-17.

4. The fourth instruction may be considered as involving the previous instructions moved; for, if the defendant was stopped, to deny John D.'s title, and the statute of limitations did apply to the case, then certainly the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. As to the statute of limitations, as the defendant claimed under John D., and looked to him for the perfection of his title, the possession of the defendant is not such an adverse possession as would toll the right of entry of the heirs of the said John D.<sup>1</sup> To bar the plaintiff in ejectment, the possession of the defendant must have been adverse in its commencement, and so continued.<sup>2</sup> The defendant admitted John D.'s title within twenty years before action brought, and the plaintiffs were residing out of the state of Kentucky, and consequently within the savings of the statute.

5. The sixth instruction asked is grounded upon the local statute of frauds and perjuries, which is similar to the English statute of frauds (29 Car. II., c. 3), and avoids "any contract for the sale of lands, &c., unless the agreement, or 541* some note, or memorandum *thereof, shall be in writing, and signed by the party," &c. Hunter having entered, claiming under John D., and showing no agreement between them, the statute applies to avoid any parol agreement; Hunter was, upon his entry, the tenant at will of Dunlap, and the defendant, coming in under Hunter, is in the same predicament.

7. The treaty of 1794, between the United States and Great Britain, is to be construed liberally, according to its spirit, and the good faith which ought to be observed between sovereigns. The words, "now hold," as used in the 9th article, do not mean an actual possession.<sup>3</sup> These expressions exclude titles acquired after the signature of the treaty, but embrace all titles before the treaty, not confiscated or annulled by legislative acts before the signature of the treaty. The latter clause of this article declares, that "neither they, nor their heirs and assigns, shall be regarded as aliens." As to all the cases provided for by that article, the inheritance is provided for without regard to the common law requisition of mutual or common allegiance between ancestor and heir; and the capacity to make title as heir is placed entirely upon the fact of private relationship between American citizens or British subjects, independent of their political relationship to the one or the other of the two governments. The treaty of 1783 had provided against future confiscations. Taking that and the treaty of 1794 together, as made in pari materia, the 542* words "now hold" ought not to be confined to cases of actual occupation by British subjects or American citizens, nor to the exclusion of such as would be heirs but for alienage, but would apply to all those claims which were not actually seized upon, or confiscated by the respective governments of the United States or Great Britain; and which would, but for the treaty, be liable to be affected by the common law doctrines in relation to inheritance. If such be the true construction, John D. might inherit the property of James D. under the treaty of 1794, if James were an alien; because no act of the government has confiscated, escheated, or regranted the premises.

As to the instructions asked on the part of the defendant, they are substantially involved in those which have already been discussed.

Mr. B. Hardin, contra, argued, (1) That the defendant, Rochester, was not estopped from disputing the title of the plaintiffs. If the doctrine as applicable between lessor and lessee be insisted on, the answer is, that the defendant, if a tenant, is a tenant at will, with a parol permission to enter. This cannot estop, for no man is estopped by parol from alleging the truth. There must then be a deed to estop. An estoppel consists only of an instrument superior in dignity to the evidence offered. Suppose the fact to be, that John D. sold to Hunter, and that Hunter conveyed to Rochester, and it turns out that D. had no title, can he recover? If a lease be made by deed poll, and the lessor have nothing in the premises, the lessee [*543] is not estopped.<sup>4</sup> It is on principles of legal policy or moral honesty, and not of estoppel, that a lessee is not permitted to deny the estate of his lessor. The court has some discretion in limiting the rule, because, being adopted to promote the purposes of justice, it is not inflexible. It applies only to a person who enters as tenant, and never to one who enters and claims in his own right. It cannot apply as between vendor and vendee, and certainly not where the latter never received possession from the former.

2. As to the treaties of 1783 and 1794, it is the settled doctrine of this court, that they were meant to provide only for titles legally existing at the time the treaties were signed, and not to titles subsequently acquired. It is true that it is not necessary that the parties should have an actual possession of seizin; but it is necessary that the title should be legally vested in them at the time the treaty was made.<sup>5</sup>

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

The exceptions taken to the opinion of the Circuit Court in this case, may be divided into two parts:

1st. Those which respect the actual title of the plaintiffs.

2d. Those which respect the ability of the defendant to contest that title.

1st. The title of the plaintiffs.

*They are the heirs of John Dunlap, [*544] who was a citizen of Pennsylvania, and claimed as the heir of James Dunlap, who died seized of the premises in the declaration mentioned, in the autumn of 1794. The defendants allege and prove that James Dunlap was an alien, and subject to the King of Great Britain, who came into the United States subsequent to the treaty of peace, and who died before the signature of the treaty of 1794, and whose title,

1.—Litt., s. 396, 397; Co. Litt. 242; Bull. N. P. 102, 104.

2.—1 Johns. Rep. 158; 3 Johns. Rep. 223; 2 Johns. Rep. 22; 4 Johns. Rep. 230; 9 Johns. Rep. 167; 10 Johns. Rep. 435; 12 Johns. Rep. 368; 1 Marsh. Kent. Rep. 62; 2 Bibb, 506.

3.—Harden v. Fisher, 1 Wheat. Rep. 300; Orr v. Hodgson, 4 Wheat. Rep. 463.

4.—Co. Litt. 47, b; Roll. Abr. 871.

5.—Harden v. Fisher, 1 Wheat. Rep. 310.

therefore, is not protected by either of those treaties.

The court having left the fact to the jury, their verdict has found that James Dunlap died previous to the signature of the treaty of 1794, and the question is, whether the court erred in determining that this case was not either within the treaty of peace or the treaty of 1794.

It has been decided that British subjects, though born before the revolution, are equally incapable with those born subsequent to that event, of inheriting or transmitting the inheritance of lands in this country. Consequently, the sole inquiry in this case respects the effect of the treaties between the United States and Great Britain.

The treaty of peace has always been considered as providing only for titles existing at the time; and as the title of James Dunlap was afterwards acquired, it can derive no aid from that treaty.

James Dunlap, therefore, if he continued to be an alien, continued liable to all the disabilities of alienage, one of which is an incapacity to transmit lands to heirs. Consequently, when he died, the next of kin could take nothing by 545* descent. The treaty of 1794, *like that of 1783, provides only for existing rights. It does not give title. Had James conveyed, or devised the property to John, the title would have vested in him, subject to the right of the government to seize the land; and the treaty would have confirmed that title, so if the law would have vested the estate in him by descent. But as the fact is, he had no title, nothing on which the treaty could operate. It has been said that this court has never supposed actual possession to be necessary to entitle a party to the benefit of the treaty. This is true. But the existence of title, at the time, has always been supposed necessary.

The plaintiffs also insisted that under the circumstances of this case, the jury might presume James Dunlap was a citizen.

The circumstances are the length of time which has intervened since his arrival in this country, and since his first acquisition of real estate, during which there have been no proceedings instituted under the laws of escheat and forfeiture.

The weight which might be allowed to this argument, had the property continued in the peaceable occupation of the heirs of James Dunlap, and had this presumption been required to sustain the title clothed with that possession, is, we think, diminished by the circumstance that the land was, soon after his death, claimed and occupied by a citizen of Kentucky as a purchaser. In such a state of things it is not surprising that no inquiries should be made into his citizenship, and that no person should feel disposed to intermeddle with the affair.

546* *The alienage of James Dunlap being fully proved, and the laws of Virginia requiring, as indispensable to his citizenship, that he should take the oath of fidelity to the commonwealth, in a court of record, of which the clerk is directed to grant a certificate, we do not think that this fact, which, had it taken place, must appear on record, ought to be presumed, unless there were some other fact, such as holding an office of which citizens alone were capable, or Wheat. 7.

which required an oath of fidelity, from which it might be inferred.

In favor of long possession, in favor of strong apparent equity, much may be presumed; but in a case where the presumption would defeat possession, where the equity is doubtful, where the parties rely upon strict law, courts will be cautious how they lean in favor of presuming that which does not appear, and which might be shown by a record.

The Circuit Court has declined giving the instruction which was required; but, on this point, has given no counter instruction, and has assigned no reason for refusing that which was required. It may have been, that the presumption in favor of a deed from John Dunlap so entirely balances the presumption in favor of the citizenship of James, as to prevent the allowance of either.

If James Dunlap could not be considered as a citizen at the time of his death, the plaintiffs have no title; and the only remaining question arising on the bill of exceptions is, was the defendant restrained *on the principle [*547 of estoppel, or any other principle, from resisting their claim.

It is contended that he is so restrained, because John Dunlap sold to Hunter, and Hunter has conveyed to the present defendant.

It is very certain that these sales do not create a legal estoppel. The defendant has executed no deed to prevent him from averring and proving the truth of the case. If he is bound in law to admit a title which has no existence in reality, it is not on the doctrine of estoppel that he is bound. It is because, by receiving a conveyance of a title which is deduced from Dunlap, the moral policy of the law will not permit him to contest that title.

This principle originates in the relation between lessor and lessee, and so far as respects them is well established, and ought to be maintained. The title of the lessee is, in fact, the title of the lessor. He comes in by virtue of it, holds by virtue of it, and rests upon it to maintain and justify his possession. He professes to have no independent right in himself, and it is a part of the very essence of the contract under which he claims that the paramount ownership of the lessor shall be acknowledged during the continuance of the lease, and that possession shall be surrendered at its expiration. He cannot be allowed to controvert the title of the lessor, without disparaging his own, and he cannot set up the title of another, without violating that contract by which he obtained and holds possession; and breaking that faith which he has pledged, and the obligation of which is still continuing, and in full operation.

*In considering this subject, we [*548 ought to recollect, too, the policy of the times in which this doctrine originated. It may be traced back to the feudal tenures, when the connection between landlord and tenant was much more intimate than it is at present. When the latter was bound to the former by ties not much less strict, nor not much less sacred, than those of allegiance itself.

The propriety of applying the doctrines between lessor and lessee to a vendor and vendee, may well be doubted.

The vendee acquires the property for himself, and his faith is not pledged to maintain the title of the vendor. The rights of the vendor are intended to be extinguished by the sale, and he has no continuing interest in the maintenance of his title, unless he should be called upon in consequence of some covenant or warranty in his deed. The property having become, by the sale, the property of the vendee, he has a right to fortify that title by the purchase of any other which may protect him in the quiet enjoyment of the premises. No principle of morality restrains him from doing this; nor is either the letter or spirit of the contract violated by it. The only controversy, which ought to arise between him and the vendor, respects the payment of the purchase money. How far he may be bound to this by law, or by the obligations of good faith, is a question depending on all the circumstances of the case; and, in deciding it, all those circumstances are examinable.

If the vendor has actually made a conveyance, his title is extinguished in law as well as equity, 549* and it *will not be pretended that he can maintain an ejectment. If he has sold, but has not conveyed, the contract of sale binds him to convey, unless it be conditional. If, after such a contract, he brings an ejectment for the land, he violates his own contract, unless the condition be broken by the vendee; and if it be, the vendor ought to show it.

In this case a sale by John Dunlap to Hunter is stated, and a conveyance from Hunter to Rochester, the defendant, is also stated, but that conveyance does not appear in the record. Whether it contains any reference to the title of Dunlap, or not, is not shown. The defendant then holds in his own right by a deed of conveyance which purports to pass the legal title. The plaintiffs show no title in themselves, but allege and prove that the title under which the defendant claims is derived from their ancestor. They therefore insist that the defendant is bound in good faith to admit this title, and surrender the premises to them.

But the sole principle on which this claim is founded is, that the defendant must trace his title up to their ancestor, and is bound, therefore, to admit it. But if the deed of the defendant does not refer to their ancestor, and the record does not convey this information, the defendant holds in opposition to the title of John Dunlap, or claims to have acquired that title. If he holds under an adversary title his right to contest that of Dunlap is admitted. If he claims under a sale from Dunlap, and Dunlap himself is compelled to aver that he does, then the plaintiffs themselves assert a 550* title against this contract. Unless *they show that it was conditional, and that the condition is broken, they cannot, in the very act of disregarding it themselves, insist that it binds the defendant in good faith to acknowledge a title which has no real existence.

Upon reason, then, we should think that the defendant in this case, under all its circumstances, is at liberty to controvert the title of the plaintiffs.

But it is contended that this question is settled in Kentucky by authority. There are also several cases quoted from the decisions in New York, which we have not had an opportunity of examining fully. Those we have considered are, we think, distinguishable from this in some of their circumstances, especially in this material one, that the vendor gave possession to the vendee. But the decisions of one state, though highly to be respected, are not authority in another, especially with respect to land titles. In Phillips v. Rothwell, in 4 Bibb., 33, the defendant claimed under a conveyance from the tenant of the plaintiff. That case, therefore, was decided on the doctrine applicable to lessor or lessee.

The case in 2 Marshall, 242, was the case of a purchaser who had not received a conveyance, and who was not allowed to set up an outstanding title in a third person. The report gives us only the opinion of the court, not accompanied by a statement of the case, or the points made at the bar. We therefore cannot tell whether, in asserting his title, the vendor acted in opposition to his contract. We cannot say that the condition on which the sale might depend had not been broken. There is, too, a difference between setting *up an ad- [551] verse title in a third person, to controvert an actual existing title, and resisting a claim made by a person having no title whatever. In the case last mentioned it would appear that the plaintiff had a title which was in itself sufficient to maintain his action; but there was another, and perhaps a superior title, in a third person, with which the defendant was not connected. The rejection of all evidence of this title does not, we think, prove that the same court would have compelled the defendant to acknowledge a title of which no evidence was given, or have rejected proof of any title in himself; especially when the vendee received nothing—not even possession from the vendor.

Judgment affirmed with costs.

Cited—12 Wheat. 168; 3 Pet. 47, 50, 122; 4 Pet. 507; 5 Pet. 439; 6 Pet. 384; 10 Pet. 224-226; 14 Pet. 413; 16 Pet. 54; 3 How. 690; 4 How. 296; 5 Wall. 287; 9 Wall. 293, 600; 21 Wall. 488; 2 Curt. 210; 2 McLean. 399; 2 Sumn. 545.

[INSTANCE COURT.]

THE IRRESISTIBLE. DANIELS, Claimant.

An offense against a temporary statute cannot be punished after the expiration of the act, unless a particular provision be made by law for that purpose.

The proviso in the repealing clause of the Neutrality act of the 20th of April, 1818, did not authorize a forfeiture under the act of the 3d of March, 1817 (which was included in the repeal), after the time when that act would have expired by its own limitation.

THIS cause was submitted without argument.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

*This is an appeal from the sentence [552] of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Maryland, dismissing an information filed in that court against the brig La Irresistible, as forfeited under the acts of Congress, made for the preservation of the neutrality of the United States. The offense charged in the information was committed under the act of 1817, and the only question is, whether the information can be sustained after the time when that act would have expired by its own limitation.

Wheat. 7.

The act was to continue in force two years after the 3d of March, 1817.

On the 20th of April, 1818, Congress passed an act making farther provision on the same subject, which repealed all former acts on that subject, and among these the act of 1817, and annexed to the repealing clause the following proviso, "Provided, nevertheless, that persons having offended against any of the acts aforesaid may be prosecuted, convicted, and punished, as if the same were not repealed, and no forfeiture heretofore incurred by a violation of any of the acts aforesaid shall be affected by such repeal."

The obvious construction of this clause is, that the power to prosecute, convict, and punish offenders against either of the repealed acts, remains as if the repealing act had never been passed. It does not create a power to punish, but preserves that which before existed. Now, it is well settled, that an offense against a temporary act cannot be punished after the expiration of the act, unless a particular provision be made by law for the purpose.

Sentence affirmed.

Cited—9 Wall. 575.

553*] [*LOCAL LAW.]

HOLBROOK ET AL.

v.

THE UNION BANK OF ALEXANDRIA.

The turnpike road stock, paid in as a part of the capital of the Union Bank of Alexandria, before its incorporation, became the common property of the association, so as to be subject to be sold and distributed among the members, after the charter, which directed, that the capital stock should consist of money only, was accepted; and those who subscribed the road stock, or their assignees, are not entitled to have the same returned specifically to them.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia.

This was a suit in chancery, instituted in the court below, by Holbrook and Alexander, against the Union Bank, to recover from the bank certain shares of road stock, which had been originally subscribed to that bank by them, and to have an account of the profits of that stock, and a payment of whatever should be found to be due to them. The cause was set down for hearing upon the bill, answer, and exhibits, from which it appeared that a number of persons formed themselves into an association, for the purpose of carrying on the banking business, for the term of — years, in the town of Alexandria, under the name of "The Union Bank of Alexandria." That the association adopted certain articles as the basis of their union; by which articles, it was, among other things, agreed, that the subscribers to the 554*] bank *should be permitted to pay one-tenth of their subscription in the stock of certain incorporated road companies, and the Wheat. 7.

other nine-tenths in money, at certain periods prescribed in the said articles. That, in pursuance of these articles, the subscriptions to the bank were filled up, and the stocks of various road companies were subscribed, which stocks were different in their respective values. The articles of association authorized the immediate commencement of the banking business. But they provided for, and contemplated an application to Congress for a charter. The bank commenced its business without a charter, and carried on its business until the year 1817, when an act of Congress was obtained, incorporating the bank. This act directed, that the capital stock of the bank should consist of $500,000, to be paid entirely in money. When this act was passed, a question was raised among the stockholders whether the road stock was to be returned specifically to the subscribers, or whether it was to be blended together into one general mass, and divided among the subscribers, without regard to the value of the respective stocks. The Little River Turnpike stock was the most valuable at the time it was subscribed, and is now much the most valuable stock; and the plaintiffs, Holbrook and Alexander, having subscribed this stock, insisted that the same should be specifically returned to them. The court below decided that they were not entitled to a specific return of this stock, but that it was to be considered the common property of the stockholders, subject to be divided among *them, without regard to the value of [*555 their respective stocks; and the cause was brought by appeal to this court.

The cause was argued by Mr. Swann for the appellant, and by Mr. Jones for the respondent.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question is, whether the road stock paid in as part of the capital of the bank became the common property of the company, so entirely that it should be sold and distributed among the members, after the charter of the incorporation—which directed that the capital should consist of money only—was accepted; or should be returned specifically to those who subscribed it, or to the assignees of their shares.

The articles of association show that this stock constituted originally a part of the capital; that it was received from each stockholder as so much money; that it constituted the subject on which the bank traded. Each share represented an equal part of the whole capital, comprehending each description of road stock and of the money paid in; and there was nothing on the face of the certificate which was transferable, indicating that one share was more valuable than another. If, instead of obtaining the act of incorporation, the company had expired or been dissolved by consent, the shares would have been equal, and would have entitled the holders to equal portions of the whole capital. The dividends, during the continuance of the company, must have been *equal. Had the road stock been sold, [*556 it must have been carried to the credit of the whole company.

Upon every view we can take of this subject, the road stock can be considered only as a component part of each share, all individual property in which was lost on its being transferred to the company. It became consolidated with the other part of the capital, and the charter of incorporation did not produce any change in this respect.

Decree affirmed with costs.

[COMMON LAW.]

MARBURY v. BROOKS.

A debtor has a right to prefer one creditor to another in payment, and his private motives for giving the preference cannot affect the exercise of the right, if the preferred creditor has done nothing improper to procure it.

But any unlawful consideration, moving from the preferred creditor, to induce the preference, will avoid the deed which gives it.

It is not necessary, to the validity of such a deed, that the creditors, for whose benefit it is made, should have notice of the execution of the deed, provided they afterwards assent to the provisions made for their benefit.

Nor is it any objection, to the validity of the deed, that it was made by the grantor, in the hope and expectation that it would prevent a prosecution for a felony, connected with his transactions with his creditors; if the favored creditors have done nothing to excite that hope, and the deed was not made with their concurrence, and with a knowledge of the motives which influenced the grantor, or was not afterwards assented to by them under some express or implied engagement to suppress the prosecution.

557*] Nor will it be invalidated by the fact that the trustee, to whom the conveyance is made, being the father-in-law of the debtor, received the conveyance with a view of concealing the felony, and preventing a prosecution of his son-in-law, provided it was not executed with the concurrence of the cestui que trusts, and a knowledge on their part of the motives which influenced the trustee, or was not afterwards assented to by them under some engagement to suppress the prosecution.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia.

This was an attachment sued out by the defendant in error, Brooks, on the 10th February, 1820, to attach the lands, tenements, goods, chattels, and credits of Fitzhugh, an absconding debtor, pursuant to the act of Assembly of Maryland of November, 1795, ch. 56; levied in the hands of the plaintiff in error, Marbury, who was duly summoned as garnishee, on the 11th February, 1820. The garnishee appeared and pleaded that he had no effects, &c., of the absconding debtor in his hands, upon which an issue was joined and tried by a jury; verdict for plaintiff in the attachment, and judgment in due form against the garnishee.

Upon the trial, evidence was produced on the part of the plaintiff to prove that the said Fitzhugh had, on the 31st of December, 1819, a store of goods in Georgetown, furniture, and other personal property, which came to the hands of the said garnishee, and were afterwards sold and disposed of by him; leaving in his hands, from that time to the present, money and effects of the said Fitzhugh, to a very considerable amount, over and above the debt claimed by the plaintiff in the said attachment; that the said Fitzhugh was, at and before the time of the issuing and *serving of the [*558 said attachment, and still is, indebted to the plaintiff in the said sum of $1,421.30. Whereupon the garnishee, in order to prove that the money and effects so being in his hands were not liable to the attachment, produced and read to the jury a paper writing, purporting to be a bill of sale from the absconding debtor to the garnishee, recorded among the land records of the proper county, on the 3d day of June, next ensuing its date, in the words following:

This Indenture, made this thirty-first day of December, in the year eighteen hundred and nineteen, between Richard H. Fitzhugh, of the one part, and William Marbury, of the other part: Whereas, the said Richard H. Fitzhugh is indebted to the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Georgetown, in the sum of four thousand three hundred dollars; to the Bank of Columbia, in the sum of two thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars; to the Union Bank of Georgetown, in the sum of fifteen hundred and fifty dollars; and to the Branch Bank of the United States, at Washington, in the sum of seven thousand dollars, all current money; for the payment of which, the said Fitzhugh wishes to provide, and therefore executes this deed or instrument of writing. Now, this Indenture witnesseth, that the said Richard H. Fitzhugh, for, and in consideration of the premises, and for the further consideration of five dollars, current money, to him in hand paid by the said William Marbury, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, hath given, granted, bargained, and sold, and by these presents doth give, grant, bargain, and sell, unto the said William Marbury, his executors

NOTE.—Assignments.

A debtor, though insolvent, may lawfully prefer one creditor to another, by an assignment, though by so doing, some creditors get nothing. Brashier v. West, 7 Pet. 608; Pearpoint v. Graham, 4 Wash. 232; Clark v. White, 12 Pet. 178; Tompkins v. Wheeler, 16 Pet. 106; Halsey v. Fairbanks, 4 Mas. 206; Fuller v. Ives, 6 McLean, 478; U. S. v. King, Wall. C. C. 12; Lawrence v. Davis, 3 McLean, 177; Brooks v. Marbury, 11 Wheat. 78; Spring v. So. Car. Ins. Co., 8 Wheat. 268; Bohleu v. Cleveland, 5 Mas. 174; Halsey v. Whitney, 4 Mas. 206; Maguire v. Thompson, 7 Pet. 348; S. C. Baldwin, 358; Murrill v. Neill, 8 How. 414; Adams v. Blodgett, 2 Wood. & M. 233; Caskie v. Webster, 2 Wall., Jr., C. C. 131; Murray v. Riggs, 15 John. 571; Putnam v. Hubbell, 42 N. Y. 106; DeRuyter v. St. Peter's Church, 3 Barb. Ch. 119; aff'd, 3 N. Y. 238; Turner v. Jaycox, 40 N. Y. 470; Haxton v. Bishop, 3 Wend. 13; Hill v. Reed, 16 Barb. 280; Spaulding v. Strang, 38 N. Y. 9; 37 N. Y. 135; Jacobs v. Reusen, 36 N. Y. 668; Putnam v. Hubbell, 42 N. Y. 146; Talcott v. Rosenthal, 22 Hun. 573;

Mackie v. Cairns, 5 Cow. 547; Powers v. Graydon, 10 Bosw. 630.

An assignment more than six months before the bankruptcy of the assignor, of all the assignor's property, without preferences, valid under bankrupt law. Mayer v. Hellman, 1 Otto, 496.

When assignment void or voidable under bankrupt law. Globe Ins. Co. v. Cleveland Ins. Co., 14 Bank. Reg. 311; Cragin v. Thompson, 12 Bank. Reg. 81; Jackson v. McCulloch, 1 Woods, 433; 13 Bank. Reg. 383; Re Marter, 12 Bank. Reg. 185; Meador v. Everett, 3 Dill. 214; Johnson v. Rogers, 5 Am. L. Rec. 536; MacDonald v. Moore, 1 Abb. N. C. 53; Clark v. Marx, 6 Ben. 275; MacDonald v. Moore, 23 Int. Rev. Rec. 25; Belden v. Smith, 16 Bank. Reg. 302; Re Beisenthal, 15 Bank. Reg. 1.

A corporation may make an assignment when not restricted by its charter, or by statute. 3 Barb. Ch. 119; 3 N. Y. 238; 3 Wend. 13; 16 Barb. 280.

In New York the legislature enacted that when an incorporated company shall have refused the payment of any of its notes or other evidences of debt, such company cannot assign any of its prop-

Wheat. 7.

559*] and administrators, *all the stock of goods and merchandise now in the store, on Bridge street, Georgetown, occupied by said Fitzhugh; also, all the household furniture, goods and chattels, in the house situate in First street, in the same town, occupied by said Fitzhugh, as a dwelling-house; also a negro woman, Maria, a negro woman named Chloe, and her children, Westley, Caroline, John, and Nancy, all of which said negroes are now in the possession of said Fitzhugh. And the said Richard H. Fitzhugh doth hereby make over, transfer, and assign to the said William Marbury, his executors, administrators, and assigns, all his books of accounts, notes, bonds, and other securities, to have, and to hold, all the said goods and merchandises, chattels, furniture, negroes, books of accounts, notes, bonds, and securities, unto him, the said William Marbury, his executors, administrators, and assigns, forever; in trust, however, to sell the same, according to the best of his judgment and discretion; and to pay the money thereby arising, as follows: First, to pay the expenses of such sale, and after that, to divide the same between the banks aforesaid, in proportion to the respective amounts due them; and if anything remain, it is to be paid to the creditors of the said Fitzhugh, in proportion to the debts ascertained to be due them."

In witness whereof, the said Richard H. Fitzhugh hath hereunto subscribed his name, and affixed his seal, the day and year before written.

R. H. FITZHUGH.

Signed, sealed, and delivered in my presence, the word "three," being first interlined in the sixth line of the first page. [SEAL.]

THOMAS CORCORAN.

560*] *District of Columbia, Washington County, viz:

On this thirty-first day of December, in the year eighteen hundred and nineteen, personally appeared before me, the subscriber, a justice of the peace, in and for the district and county aforesaid, Richard H. Fitzhugh, party grantor within named, and acknowledged the foregoing instrument of writing to be his act and deed.

THOMAS CORCORAN.

And after the evidence on both sides had been fully examined, the plaintiff, having offered evidence tending to prove the following facts, prayed the instruction of the court to the jury, if the jury find from the evidence that the said Fitzhugh, being a merchant and trader at Georgetown, in the county aforesaid, had committed divers forgeries of notes, and indorsements of notes, upon which he obtained money and credit to the amount of from fourteen thousand to fifteen thousand dollars; and that he was bona fide indebted to the plaintiff and divers other creditors (all of whom are interested, as attaching and general creditors, in the determination of this cause), for goods, wares, and merchandises, and for moneys lent and advanced, to the amount of $20,000 or upwards, over and above the said forgeries; that William Marbury, the trustee named in the said deed, and the garnishee summoned in this cause, is the father-in-law of said Fitzhugh; and that the said Marbury, before the execution of the said deed, being desirous to screen the said Fitzhugh from disgrace and prosecution for the said forgeries, and understanding that the *said forg- [561eries amounted only to about five or six thousand dollars, had consented to pay off the same, and take a deed of trust or mortgage from the defendant, by way of collateral security for the moneys so to be advanced by him; and that in pursuance of that arrangement, such a deed of trust or mortgage, by way of collateral security, was actually drawn and executed; in which was included the same identical property mentioned and conveyed in and by the deed above given in evidence; but the said Marbury, discovering that the amount of forgeries was in fact so much greater than had been represented, and finding that he would have to pay from fourteen to fifteen thousand dollars, instead of five or six thousand dollars, in order to accomplish his first design of screening said Fitzhugh from disgrace and prosecution, refused to advance any money to take up the forged notes; and said: "I will not ruin my family for you; now, I advise you to make your escape as soon as you can." Whereupon, the said deed, so executed as aforesaid, was cancelled and torn up, and immediately afterwards, another deed (being the same now produced) was drawn by John Marbury, a witness present at its execution; that the said deed was executed after the noon on the day on which it bears date; and that on the night of the same day, the said erty to any stockholder or officer, for the payment of any debt, nor assign in contemplation of insolvency to any person; and every such assignment shall be void. 1 R. S. N. Y. 603, sec. 4; Haxtun v. Bishop, 3 Wend. 13; Harris v. Thompson, 15 Barb. 62; Robinson v. Bank of Attica, 21 N. Y. 406; Sibell v. Remsen, 33 N. Y. 95; Loring v. U. S. Gutta Percha Co., 36 Barb. 329; Bowen v. Lease, 5 Hill. 221.

An assignment by directors of a company of all its property is void as against stockholders. Smith v. N. Y. Stage Co., 18 Abb. Pr. 419; S. C. 28 How. Pr. 208; Dyckman v. Valiente, 43 Barb. 143; 42 N. Y. 549.

General assignment for benefit of creditors is not absolutely void under the bankrupt act. Voidable, if impaired by proceedings within the time limited by that act. Maltbie v. Hotchkiss, 38 Conn. 80; Beck v. Parker, 65 Penn. 262; Hobson v. Markson, 1 Dill. 424; Reed v. Taylor, 32 Ia. 209; Sedgwick v. Place, 3 Ben. 360; In re Hawkins, 34 Conn. 548; Cragin v. Thompson, 2 Dill. 513; Thrasher v. Bentley, 2 N. Y. Supr. 309; S. C. 59 N. Y. 649; McLean v. Meline, 3 Wheat. 7.

McLean, 199; McLean v. Johnson, 3 McLean, 202; In re Charles W. Holmes, 1 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 211; Weiner v. Farnham, 2 Penn. 146; 3 Penn. L. J. 440; In re Anon. 1 Penn. L. J. 323.

But debtor in making assignment cannot secure to himself the future control of the assigned property or of its proceeds. Haydock v. Coope, 53 N. Y. 68.

Or, reserve other benefit to himself. Barney v. Griffin, 2 N. Y. 365; Goodrich v. Downs, 6 Hill. 438; Strong v. Skinner, 4 Barb. 546; Leitch v. Hollister, 4 N. Y. 211; Mackie v. Cairns, 5 Cow. 547; Elias v. Farley, 3 Keyes, 398; Sheldon v. Dodge, 4 Denio. 217; Hyslop v. Clarke, 14 John. 458; Austin v. Bell, 20 John. 442; Leaving v. Brinkerhoof, 5 John. Ch. 329; Wakeman v. Grover, 4 Paige, 23; aff'd 11 Wend. 117; Armstrong v. Byrne, 1 Edw. Ch. 79; Lentillon v. Moffatt, 4 Edw. Ch. 451; Gasherie v. Apple, 14 Abb. Pr. 64; Berry v. Riley, 2 Barb. 307; Hastings v. Bolknap, 1 Den. 190; Bellows v. Partridge, 19 Barb. 176; Oliver Lee Bk. v. Talcott, 19 N. Y. 146; Dunham v. Waterman, 11 N. Y. 9; Schlusell v. Willett, 34 Barb. 615.

Fitzhugh absconded from the District of Columbia, and was so absconding from that time, until, and at the time the attachment issued in this cause, and ever since; that the creditors, whose debts the said deed purports to secure, were wholly ignorant of the execution, and of the intent to execute the same, until after the same was executed as aforesaid; and were not in any manner privy or consenting thereto; except that the said William Marbury held stock as a trustee in one of the said banks, and John Marbury, the attorney who drew the same, was a stockholder in another of the said banks; that the whole of said property lay within the county aforesaid, and would have been subject to this attachment, but for the said conveyance; that the said deed includes and conveys the whole of the property, choses in action, and estate of every kind, in possession of said Fitzhugh, or to which he was in any manner entitled, at the time of executing the same; that the whole of the debts, which the said deed purports to secure, stood upon no other foundation than that of notes forged by the said Fitzhugh, and passed by him as genuine to the banks respectively mentioned in said deed, and discounted by said banks for him, and the money thereupon advanced to him (such notes, however, being all actually signed or endorsed by said Fitzhugh, and he being liable for the payment thereof), to the respective amounts stated in said deed; and that at the time of the execution of the said deed, it was expected and understood, that it comprehended all the cases in which the said Fitzhugh was involved by means of his said forgeries, and was not intended to comprehend any other, except as to the surplus, after satisfying said forged paper; and that said Fitzhugh, the evening before the execution of the said deed, called on C. Smith, the cashier of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank, in said deed mentioned, and a stockholder in the same, and had conversation with him relative to the said forgeries; and that the said Smith, after being informed that the said forgeries amounted to only about five or six thousand dollars, and that he thought he had property enough to pay all his debts, if judiciously managed, said to the said Fitzhugh, that he had no doubt the said Marbury would take up and pay all the said forged notes, and that nothing more would be said about it; and said Fitzhugh begged of said Smith to see said Marbury, and recommend that course to him, which said Smith promised to do the next morning; that when said Smith called for that purpose the next morning, he found said Marbury with said Fitzhugh, and the said John Marbury, Esquire, together at the office of the latter, engaged in drawing a deed; that the said William Marbury declared, in consequence of finding the forgeries amount to so much more than he expected, that he would pay nothing; and the said Smith left the office before the said deed was executed; that on the day of the execution of said deed above given in evidence, a note to which the said W. Marbury's name had been forged by Fitzhugh, and by him passed for value received to one G. R. Gaither, became due and payable at said Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank, where the same was deposited by the holder for collection, said bank having no interest in the same; that the holder had called at the bank, and expressly ordered the said note to be sent out and presented for payment, in order that the said Marbury might distinctly avow or disavow his signature; and to be protested if not admitted and paid; and that the said Marbury, either in the evening of the same day the deed was executed, and after the execution of the same, or in the morning of the next day, called at said bank and took up said note, after it had been sent out to the notary, and before the return of the protest; that said Marbury, at the same time, took up another forged note and a check due to the said bank (both being also forgeries of the said Fitzhugh), upon neither of which his (Marbury's) name had been forged; and the said two notes and checks were the whole of the paper forged by said Fitzhugh, which was then due and demandable; and said Marbury took up said notes and check in anticipation of funds expected to arise from the property conveyed as aforesaid; and took the receipt of C. Smith, cashier of said bank, for the amount so paid on said forged notes and check, in the words following:

“GEORGETOWN, January 1, 1820.

“Received of William Marbury, twelve hundred and fifty dollars forty cents, part of the debt due the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Georgetown, mentioned in the deed of R. H. Fitzhugh to the said Marbury, dated 31st December, 1819.

$1,250.40.

C. SMITH.”

That the said Marbury, in a conversation, the day after the execution of said deed, relative to the said deed, and to the circumstances attending the execution of the same, expressed regret at having had anything to do with it; represented that said Fitzhugh had come to him in tears; and entreated him to save him, or screen him from prosecution, and to have the affair hushed up, (or words to that effect); and the said Marbury, in that conversation, expressed it as his wish, that it might be hushed up; and the said Marbury, in the course of conversation, further remarked, that said Fitzhugh seemed scarcely to know what he was about, and would have done anything to get away; and said Marbury further remarked in said conversation, that said Fitzhugh had a rich uncle disposed to assist him, and his father was expected in town in a few days, and that if his debts did not amount to too much, they might all yet be provided for; that he (Marbury) did not suppose the loss, upon winding up said Fitzhugh's affairs, would exceed ten thousand dollars; that if it did not exceed that sum, his friends would arrange the whole, and he (Marbury) himself would be willing to go as far as five thousand dollars, if Fitzhugh's other friends would answer the balance; and the said Marbury further remarked, that if twenty thousand dollars would save him (Fitzhugh) from disgrace, he (Marbury) would pay it; that what he had already done, was to save Fitzhugh from prosecution, he (Marbury) having no interest in it; and that said Marbury, in another conversation, speaking of having taken up the said note due to said Gaither, said he was anxious to get the forged notes out of the way; and that after the execution of said deed, the defendant was unwilling to leave the district, and wished to remain at least a week longer; and that the attorney who drew the said deed, being nearly connected with the parties as the son of the trustee, and brother-in-law of said Fitzhugh, persuaded and advised him to quit the district, 566*) and among other reasons, urged, *that if all the parties were satisfied to let him remain unmolested, still Mr. Richard Smith, the cashier of the Branch Bank of the United States (which is one of the banks which the said deed purports to secure), would feel himself compelled to prosecute; and that it would be more than his office was worth to overlook it, on account of the great interest the Bank of the United States felt in prosecuting and bringing to justice persons guilty of forgery; that said William Marbury also urged said Fitzhugh to quit the district, in order to get out of the way of prosecution; and that said Fitzhugh, in the night of the same day said deed was executed, actually fled from justice, and absconded as aforesaid, with the privity and consent of said William Marbury; and that neither he, nor any person on the part of any of the said banks interested in said deed, did ever move in the said prosecution, or attempt to have the said Fitzhugh arrested and brought to justice; and that it was known to the acting officers and agents of the said banks, before the departure of the said Fitzhugh, that he was guilty of said forgeries.

Wheat. 7.

Then the jury may conclude from the said facts and evidence, that the said deed was devised and executed by the said Fitzhugh, and accepted by the said William Marbury, with the motive and intent of prevailing with the holders of the said forged notes to forego a prosecution for the said forgeries; and also, that upon the facts so given in evidence on the part of the plaintiff as aforesaid, if believed by the jury to be true as stated, that the said deed is fraudulent and void as against the plaintiff. Which 567*) instruction *the court gave as prayed. To which the defendant excepted.

And the said garnishee having offered evidence to prove the following facts, viz.: That after the execution of the said deed, the said Fitzhugh was urged by the said John and William Marbury to fly from the district; that the said Fitzhugh made great objections to going away, and wished to remain a week, and upon being told that he would be in danger of arrest and prosecution if he did so, the said Fitzhugh replied that he could not be arrested until the meeting of the court; but upon being satisfied that he might be called before a magistrate, and immediately arrested, and the observation before stated being made about Mr. R. Smith, and being told of the punishment to which he was exposed, he consented to go. And he further offered to prove, by the evidence of the said John Marbury, a witness sworn in the cause, that he was not certain who first proposed the drawing of the new deed; but to the best of his recollection, the proposal came from said Fitzhugh, and that said W. Marbury was requested by said Fitzhugh to become the trustee; to which he consented. That at the time of the execution of the said deed, the said Fitzhugh executed the same voluntarily, and that no expectation was held out to him, either by Wheat, 7.

himself, or by Mr. W. Marbury, or any other person to the witness's knowledge, either then or at any time before, that by executing the same he would be saved from a prosecution; nor was there any promise or expectation given, that they, the said Marburys, or either of them, would endeavor to prevail with the *holders of the said forged notes, or [568 any other persons, to forbear arresting or prosecuting the said Fitzhugh; and further, that neither the witness nor W. Marbury ever made any such application to any of the said holders, or to any other person; and further, that at the time of the execution of said deed, all expectation of preventing a prosecution, or concealing the said forgeries, was abandoned, and that the only mode pointed out to said Fitzhugh, for avoiding said prosecution, was by an immediate flight; and all the said forged notes still remain in said banks, except the two notes and the check mentioned in the statement of plaintiff's evidence; and upon the evidence, offered as aforesaid, both on the part of plaintiff and the garnishee, and so stated as aforesaid, the garnishee, by his counsel, prayed the court to instruct the jury.

If the jury believe, from the evidence, that R. H. Fitzhugh, owing the debts mentioned in the deed offered in evidence, executed and delivered the same voluntarily and without any threat of prosecution, and without any promise or agreement made to him; that in case of executing it, he would not be prosecuted, then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. But the court refused to give the instructions as prayed by the defendant, and in lieu thereof, gave the following instructions, to wit:

If the jury believe, from the evidence, that R. H. Fitzhugh, owing the debts mentioned in the deed offered in evidence, executed and delivered the same (voluntarily and bona fide), and without any threat of prosecution, and without any promise or agreement made to *him, and without any expectation on [569 the part of said Fitzhugh, raised by the acts of said Marbury, or of some of the persons interested in the said trust—that in case of his executing it he would not be prosecuted, and that possession of the said goods accompanied and followed the execution of the said deed, then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. To which refusal the defendant excepted; and the plaintiff excepted to the instructions granted by the court.

And the defendant, by his counsel, then prayed the court to instruct the jury, that if they believed from the evidence that the said R. H. Fitzhugh, owing the debts mentioned in the deed offered in evidence, executed and delivered the same without any persuasion or threats, and upon his own proposal, and without any understanding with anybody, that by executing the same he should be saved from prosecution, and that nothing was said or done by any person for the purpose of influencing him by any such consideration to execute the same, and that the previous understanding between him and said Marbury, as to the latter paying and taking up the said forged papers was before the execution of the said deed abandoned, and that there was no understanding between the said Fitzhugh and the said Marbury, that they, or either of them, should forbear prosecuting him, or should attempt to prevail with the holders of said forged paper to forbear prosecuting him on account of the same, nor any understanding with said holders that they should so forbear, and that no attempt whatever was ever made so to prevail upon the 570]* said holders nor in any manner *to prevent such prosecution; and that said Fitzhugh, at the time of executing such deed, asserted that he had property enough, if judiciously managed, to pay the said forged paper and all his other debts also; and that said Marbury and the said holders of said forged notes could have instantly prosecuted the said Fitzhugh for said forgeries without violating any promise or understanding that had subsisted between them; and that unless he had absconded as aforesaid, he would have been by the said holders immediately prosecuted for said offenses, and that such prosecution was not in any manner avoided by the execution of said deed, but only by his absconding from the district, then the jury may and ought to presume that the said deed was executed bona fide and for a valuable consideration; and that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover; which instruction the court gave. To which opinion and direction the plaintiff excepted.

And thereupon the plaintiff prayed the court to instruct the jury, that if, under all the circumstances before given in evidence, the jury shall find that the obtaining of impunity or forbearance of prosecution, for said forgeries, formed no part of the consideration or inducement for the execution of the said deed, with said Fitzhugh, or with any other person, directly or indirectly concerned, still if the jury find from the evidence that the great majority of the creditors of said Fitzhugh, in number and value, were by means of said deed unjustly and purposely hindered, delayed, and defeated in their proper suits and remedies, for the recovery of their said debts, upon the absconding 571]* of said Fitzhugh, and that the *said deed was executed as aforesaid, with the purpose and design of preventing and defeating any legal recourse in behalf of such majority of creditors, against the property and effects which said Fitzhugh intended to leave behind, and did leave behind him, when he fled from justice as aforesaid; and if it be further found that no creditor whatever of the said Fitzhugh was party or privy, or in any manner consenting to the execution of the said deed, then the said deed is fraudulent and void in law, as against the plaintiff. Which instruction the court gave; but also instructed the jury that the preference given by the said deed to some of the creditors of said Fitzhugh, did not of itself make the said deed fraudulent and void in law. To which also the defendant excepted.

And the defendant further prayed the court to instruct the jury as follows:

If the jury should believe, from the evidence, that Richard H. Fitzhugh, owing the debts mentioned in the deed, executed the same under an expectation that it might have prevented him from being prosecuted for the forgeries, and that neither the said William Marbury, nor any of the holders of the said forged notes, nor persons interested in the same, held out to him any such expectations, then the said deed is valid, and the plaintiff not entitled to recover.

Which opinion the court refused to give, but instructed them as follows:

If the jury should believe, from the evidence, that Richard H. Fitzhugh, owing the debts mentioned in the deed, executed the same under an expectation that it might prevent him from being prosecuted for *the forgeries, and [572 that neither the said William Marbury, nor any of the holders of the said forged notes, nor persons interested in the same, held out to him any such expectation, then the said deed is valid (unless there should be some other objection to it), and the plaintiff not entitled to recover.

To which refusal the defendant by his counsel excepted; and the plaintiff also excepted to the instructions given by the court.

A verdict and judgment thereon having been rendered for the plaintiff, Brooks, in the court below, the cause was brought by writ of error to this court.

This cause was argued by the Attorney-General and Mr. Key<sup>1</sup> for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. Jones<sup>2</sup> for the defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to a judgment rendered in the Circuit Court of the United States for the county of Washington. In the Circuit Court the controversy turned entirely on the validity of the deed of the 31st of December, 1819. The jury found against its validity, and the cause depends in this court on the correctness of the instructions under which the verdict was found.

*After the testimony was concluded, [573 the plaintiff in the Circuit Court moved that court to instruct the jury, that if they find from the evidence the facts which it was offered to prove, and which are stated at large in the bill of exceptions, "that then the jury may conclude from the said facts and evidence that the said deed was devised and executed by the said Fitzhugh, and accepted by the said William Marbury, with the motive and intent of prevailing with the holders of the said forged notes to forego a prosecution for the said forgeries; and also upon the facts so given in evidence on the part of the plaintiff as aforesaid, if believed by the jury to be true as stated, that the said deed is fraudulent and void as against the plaintiff."

This instruction the court gave as prayed. It consists of two parts. First, that which authorizes the jury to infer "the motive and intent" with which the deed was executed; and second, that which declares the deed "fraudulent and void as against the plaintiff," if the facts given in evidence by him, as stated in the bill of exceptions, are believed to be true.

This last part of the instruction may possibly have been intended to depend on the first. It may have been intended to say, that if the jury should draw the conclusion which was authorized by the court, respecting the motive and intent with which the deed was executed, they should then find the deed fraudulent and void as against the plaintiff. But such is not the direction of the court, as it appears in the case before us. The second clause of the 574* instruction *is entirely independent of the first, and the jury is directed to find the deed fraudulent and void, if the facts stated in the bill of exceptions are believed.

1.—They cited 1 Johns. Cas. 205; 2 Johns. Ch. Rep. 297; 4 Wheat. Rep. 503; 13 Vin. Abr. 517, pl. 10, 541; pl. 3, Ambl. 596; 4 East's Rep. 13; 5 T. R. 424; 8 T. R. 528.

2.—He cited 9 Johns. Rep. 337; 5 Cranch, 350; 6 Mass. Rep. 339; Cowp. 434; Roberts on Frauds, 585.

Wheat. 7.

The testimony of the plaintiff would certainly justify the conclusion, respecting the motive and intent with which the deed was executed and received, that he wished the jury to draw; and, although the instructions on this point might have been expressed in terms less exposed to cavil, we will not say that they withdraw from the jury their right of deciding for or against that conclusion. If the case rested on this branch of the opinion of the court, we feel some difficulty in saying that it was too strongly expressed.

But the second branch of this instruction cannot, we think, be sustained.

Had the motive and intent with which the deed was executed and received been left to the jury; and had they been instructed, "that, if they believed it to have been executed and received with the motive and intent of prevailing with the holders of the forged notes to forego a prosecution for the said forgeries, then the deed would be fraudulent and void against the plaintiff," the single question of law respecting the validity of such a deed would have been presented to this court. But the instruction, as given, does not depend on this conclusion. It depends on their believing that the facts stated in the bill of exceptions are proved; and they are informed that if those facts are true, the deed is void. To sustain this instruction, the facts must be such as clearly to amount to a fraud.

The first fact is, that Marbury, the father-in-575* law *of Fitzhugh, and the trustee in the deed, when first informed of the forgeries which had been committed, being desirous of screening his son-in-law from disgrace and from punishment, and being informed that the forged notes amounted to only $5,000 or $6,000, agreed to take up the notes on receiving a conveyance of property for his indemnity; but on finding that their amount was much more considerable than he had supposed, he tore up the deed, and refused to engage himself for the notes.

This part of the transaction has been denominated a fraud. We cannot think it one. To advance money for a son-in-law to repair the frauds he had committed, even with the hope of concealing the perpetration of them, is not, we think, an offense which may not be excused; nor can a security taken for the repayment of money so advanced be deemed fraudulent. If the notes were to be taken upon condition that the holders would forbear to prosecute the criminal, or if the repayment of the money advanced were to depend upon his escape from prosecution, the validity of the contract might well be questioned. But the undertaking of Marbury was unconditional, as was the security for the repayment of the money advanced. The only feature in the transaction to which blame is attached is the attempt of a father-in-law to conceal the forgeries of a son-in-law, by paying off the notes he had forged. It may be the duty of a citizen to accuse every offender, and to proclaim every offense which comes to his knowledge; but the law which would punish him in every case for not performing this duty is too harsh for man. This [*576] fact certainly indicates the interest taken by Marbury in the escape of Fitzhugh, but goes no farther.

On canceling this first deed, Marbury said to Fitzhugh: "Now, I advise you to make your escape as soon as you can." And immediately after it was canceled, the deed now in contest was drawn by a person then present, which comprises all the property of Fitzhugh of every description, and purports to secure all those creditors who were then understood to be holders of the forged notes. It did not appear that the creditors, for whose particular benefit the deed was made, had any notice of the transaction; but William Marbury, the trustee, and John Marbury, who drew the deed, were severally stockholders in two of the banks for whose debts it provided. It was also proved that the evening before the execution of the deed, Fitzhugh called on C. Smith, the cashier of one of the banks, and a stockholder in it; and in a conversation with him respecting the forgeries, said that Marbury would pay the notes. That Smith called on Marbury next day, while the deed was preparing, but on being told that he would not pay the notes, departed before it was executed. Two of the forged notes fell due about that time, and were taken up by the trustee on the day after the deed was executed. It appeared that Fitzhugh was anxious to remain some time longer in the district, but was urged both by William Marbury and John Marbury, who was son of William, to escape immediately, as he would certainly be prosecuted by the Bank of the United States if he remained; and that he did abscond the *night succeeding the execution of [*577] the deed. It appeared, from the declarations of Marbury himself, that his object, throughout the whole transaction, was to save Fitzhugh from prosecution.

It is sufficiently obvious that Marbury acted as the friend and adviser of Fitzhugh, and in the hope that, if the notes should be taken up, the creditor banks would not pursue him out of the district. It is stated that they have not instituted any prosecution against him, but it is not stated that it has been in their power to do so, or that they know where he is.

Do these facts, of themselves, avoid the deed?

That a debtor has a right to prefer one creditor to another cannot be denied, and that his private motives for giving this preference, provided the preferred creditor has done nothing improper, cannot annul this right, is equally certain. On the other hand, it will be also admitted that any unlawful consideration moving from the preferred creditor to induce this preference, may avoid the deed which gives it. Had Mr. Marbury acted as the agent of the banks holding the forged notes, or with their knowledge and concurrence; had they been in any manner pledged not to prosecute Fitzhugh should the notes be taken up, either before or after the deed was executed, and while it was in the power of Marbury to withhold from them the money produced by the property conveyed, the case would be a strong one against the banks. But there is no ingredient of this sort in the case; at least, none is submitted to the jury. The fact, in its strongest aspect, is, that a deed was made, giving this preference. 578*] in the hope that it would propitiate *the preferred creditors, and prevent their being so active as they might otherwise be in proceeding against the criminal. But the facts, as they stand, show no agreement made at any time to forbear to prosecute, nor that the interest of the creditors would be in any manner affected by the institution of a prosecution, and carrying it on to the conviction of the offender.

If Fitzhugh had remained, and his crime had not been discovered, he might have sold all the property comprised in this deed, and might have applied the money to the notes he had counterfeited. His hope that this act would conceal the crime, and save him from punishment, would not have vitiated the transaction.

Had he, on determining to abscond, executed to Mr. Marbury the very deed now in question, conveying all his property in trust for the creditors who are preferred in that deed, and afterwards for other creditors, without any previous communication with any person whatever, would such conveyance have been distinguishable from an absolute sale? Would the hope in his own bosom, that such conveyance might have the effect of exempting him from a prosecution, unaccompanied by any act of the favored creditors giving countenance to such hope, avoid the deed?

The consideration moving from the creditor would be a real debt, and, consequently, a valuable and fair consideration. It would not be tainted by any secret hope working in the mind 579*] of the maker *of the deed. It would not be the less fair on account of that hope. We think that the validity of such a deed could not be drawn into question.

The only circumstance which can create any doubt in this case, is, that the father-in-law of the maker of the deed, the man who took a strong interest in his escaping prosecution, and who advised his flight, is made the trustee. How far ought this circumstance to affect the preferred creditors?

There are cases in which notice to a trustee may affect the cestui que trust, and in which the acts of a trustee may be considered as the acts of the cestui que trust; but we are not prepared to say that this is one of those cases. Mr. Marbury was not a trustee selected for this purpose by the bank. They were entirely ignorant of all that was passing between him and Fitzhugh. He was not, then, agent in obtaining the deed. He was not empowered to act for them, or to make any representations in their name, or to bind them in any manner whatever. He is the agent of Fitzhugh to sell his property and pay his debts in the order prescribed by himself. He had a right to prescribe this order, and the secret hopes of himself or his agent cannot affect those who never did any act to inspire those hopes.

This deed is absolute on its face, and there is no allegation that its effect was to depend on any subsequent agreement of the banks for the suppression of the prosecution. There is no evidence of any communication between the banks and Marbury before the deed was re-580*] corded and irrevocable. Suppose *Marbury had applied to the banks, the deed not being delivered as an escrow, and had told them that unless they would consent to suppress the prosecution, he would not allow them to take any benefit from the deed, would his attempt to deprive them of its benefits be supported in law? We think it would not. Suppose Marbury had, in consequence of the actual institution of a prosecution against Fitzhugh, refused to act under the deed. Would not a court of chancery have decreed him to execute the trust, or have appointed some other trustee to execute it? It certainly would.

It is, then, the opinion of the court, that, even supposing the deed to have been executed in the hope and expectation that it would operate as a suppression of the prosecution, the favored creditors having done nothing to excite that hope, and being entirely ignorant of the transaction, ought not to be affected by it.

But that this was the motive to the deed, though highly probable, is not certain. Fitzhugh might have been impelled by other considerations to give these particular creditors the preference. The court was not, we think, at liberty to say that the deed was void, in consequence of any motive which the court might impute to its maker. The motive was a fact of which the jury was to judge.

There are in the case some facts which seem to be introduced for the purpose of raising a suspicion that the banks might have had notice of the forgeries before the execution of the deed, and of the transactions between Fitzhugh and Marbury. But *the cause was not [581 put on this point, nor do any of the instructions given by the court refer to it. There is no allusion to notice to all the banks, and the deed would not be void, on account of notice to one, so far as respected others.

There are several opinions given by the court, which are dependent on this single principle: That the communications between Fitzhugh and Marbury, though unknown to the banks, avoid the deed. The cause, so far as it is now before the court, essentially depends on this single principle. This court is of opinion, that in this, the Circuit Court erred, and that the deed is not void, unless Marbury acted with the concurrence or knowledge of the banks, or unless they assented to it under some engagement, express or implied, to suppress the prosecution.

Judgment reversed, and a venire de novo awarded.

See S. C. 11 Wheat. 78.

Cited—11 Wheat. 85; 16 Pet. 118, 119; 4 Mason, 213, 215; 2 Wood. & M. 238, 357.

[COMMON LAW.]

DORR

v.

THE PACIFIC INSURANCE COMPANY.

Under a policy containing the following clause: "And lastly, it is agreed, that if the above vessel, upon a regular survey, should be thereby declared unseaworthy, by reason of her being unsound or rotten, then the assurers shall not be bound to pay their subscription on this policy," and it was found by the jury that the vessel was seaworthy at the time of the commencement of the risk, and when she sailed on the voyage insured. Held, that proof, by a regular survey, of unsoundness at any subsequent period of the voyage, discharged the underwriters.

Wheat. 7.

582* An exemplification of a condemnation of the vessel in a foreign court of vice-admiralty, reciting the certificate of surveyors, that the vessel was unworthy of being repaired, and unsafe and unfit ever to go to sea again, and produced in evidence by the insured to prove the loss, is "a regular survey," in the language of the above clause.

But the survey must correspond with the contract, and if the vessel be declared unseaworthy for any additional cause, besides being "unsound or rotten," it is not conclusive evidence of unseaworthiness.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York.

This was an action of assumpsit upon a policy of insurance subscribed by the defendants on the 8th September, 1819, whereby they insured the ship Holofern, belonging to the plaintiff, and valued at $6,125, on a voyage from Wiscasset, in Maine, to Havana, in the West Indies. The policy contained the following clause:

"And lastly, it is agreed, that if the above vessel, upon a regular survey, should be thereby declared unseaworthy, by reason of her being unsound or rotten, or incapable of prosecuting her voyage on account of her being unsound or rotten, then the assurers shall not be bound to pay their subscription on this policy."

A special verdict was found by the jury, stating that the ship Holofern was the property of the plaintiff, and sailed on the voyage, insured, on the 9th September, 1819, and in the course of the voyage she met with violent gales, in consequence of which she sprung a leak, and after attempting, in vain to pursue her voyage, was compelled to bear away for New Providence, and arrived in the harbor she grounded, from an insufficient depth of water, 583* but was got off *and a regular survey was had upon her by surveyors appointed by the Vice-Admiralty Court at said Nassau, and upon such survey the said ship was condemned in the manner stated in the sentence of condemnation, of which the following is a copy:

Bahama Islands, New Providence.

IN THE INSTANCE COURT OF VICE-ADMIRALTY.

SHIP HOLOFERN, JOHN S. THOMPSON, MASTER.

In the name of God, Amen!

L. S. At a court of vice-admiralty held the twenty-sixth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and nineteen, before me, the Worshipful Theodore George Alexander, Esquire, judge and commissary of the said court, John S. Thompson, the master of the American ship Holofern, by William Kerr and Henry M. Williams, his proctor in that behalf duly appointed, came into court, and alleged, that on the twentieth day of this instant month of October, he did exhibit a libel or information against the said ship, when he gave the court to understand and be informed, that on the 8th day of October instant, the said John S. Thompson, by his proctor aforesaid, did make humble petition to the court, stating, that on the ninth day of September last past, he sailed in and with the said ship from Wiscasset, in the state of Massachusetts, bound on a voyage to Havana, in the Island of Cuba, with a cargo of lumber, spars, oars, anchors, and coals, and on the eighteenth day of the same month, in latitude 28° 39', by observation, he experienced a very violent gale of wind, during which the said ship sprung a leak; *that all hands were, in con- [584 sequence thereof, employed at the pumps until the twenty-fourth of the same month, when he had proceeded on his voyage as far as the Bahama bank; that at that time the people, being nearly exhausted by incessant labor at the pumps, they insisted on bearing up for New Providence, which he thought it prudent to do as the wind was then westerly, and ahead for the Havana; that he accordingly proceeded for New Providence with the said ship, and arrived in the harbor of Nassau on the twenty-sixth day of the said month of September; that since the arrival of the said ship in the said port, a part of her cargo had been landed, and, upon his inspecting and examining into her condition, he conceived her not only unfit to proceed to sea again in her present state, but altogether unworthy of being repaired. And he therefore prayed that a warrant might forthwith issue out of this honorable court, according to law and the usage and practice of the said court in such cases, to cause the said ship to be surveyed and examined by persons duly competent in that behalf, who might report as to the true state and condition of the said ship. And thereupon a warrant did issue accordingly, directed to William Gibson and John Russell, of the Island of New Providence, shipwrights, and Samuel Clutsum, of the same place, late a master mariner, who did certify, on the nineteenth day of October instant, on oath, that on the eighth day of October instant they repaired on board the said American ship Holofern, John S. Thompson, master, riding at anchor in the harbor of Nassau, but not finding the said ship more than half *dis- [585 charged, they could not then properly proceed to examine into her state and condition. And they did further certify, that on the sixteenth day of October instant, the said ship being then nearly discharged, they were enabled to inspect and examine into her state and condition, and having done so minutely and diligently, they found her to be in a very leaky state, and having at the same time caused a part of her inside ceiling to be stripped off, they discovered the said ship to be in a very decayed condition. And they did further certify, that they were of opinion, that the said ship was altogether unworthy of being repaired, and that she ought to be condemned as being unsafe and unfit ever to go to sea again.

Wheat. 7.

U. S., Book 5.

Wherefore the said William Kerr and Henry M. Williams, as the lawful proctor aforesaid, prayed me, the Worshipful Theodore George Alexander, Esquire, judge and commissary as aforesaid, that right and justice might be duly administered to them and their party in the premises; that the said ship Holofern might, together with boats, tackle, apparel, and by the decree of this honorable court, be condemned as unfit for further service, and furniture, be ordered to be sold by the marshal of this court, and the proceeds thereof might be paid to the said John S. Thompson, or his agent, for the use of the owners and proprietors and insurers thereof, and that such other proceedings might be had and done in the premises as should be agreeable to law, and the style and practice of the admiralty. And whereas, the usual and proper monition hath been issued and returned in this cause, and no 586* person having appeared *to show cause why the said ship should not be condemned agreeable to the prayer of the said master, therefore, I, the said Theodore George Alexander, Esquire, judge and commissary as aforesaid, having considered the whole proceedings had and done before me in this cause, do hereby adjudge, pronounce, and declare the said ship unfit for the further service, and as such do condemn the said ship, and direct that the same, together with her boats, tackle, apparel, and furniture, be forthwith sold by the marshal of the said court, and the proceeds paid to the said John S. Thompson, or his agents, for and upon account and use of the owner, proprietors, and insurers thereof.

In testimony whereof, I, the said Theodore George Alexander, Esquire, judge and commissary as aforesaid, have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the said court to be affixed, at Nassau, the twenty-sixth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and nineteen.

(Signed) THEO. G. ALEXANDER,
J. C. V. A.

Bahama Islands, New Providence.

IN THE VICE-ADMIRALTY INSTANCE COURT.

In the case of the American ship Holofern. John S. Thompson, master, I certify the foregoing paper writing to be a true copy of the decree made and given in the above cause.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the said court to be affixed, this seventeenth day of July, in 587* the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty.

ALEXANDER M. EDWARDS,
Dep. Reg. C. V. A.

The special verdict also found, that the said condemnation was obtained through the agency of John and George K. Storr, a mercantile house at New Providence, to whom the Holofern was consigned by her captain, and that the said John and George K. Storr (though ignorant of the insurance in this case), were the general agents of the defendants to manage their concerns at New Providence.

The special verdict further stated, that in consequence of this condemnation the ship was sold, and the voyage lost; that the plaintiff exhibited to the defendants the requisite preliminary proofs of interest and loss, more than thirty days before bringing the action.

That the said ship was seaworthy at the time of the commencement of the said risk, and when she sailed upon the voyage insured; and assessed the plaintiff's damages, in case he was entitled to recover, at $6,625.20.

The record also contained a bill of exceptions, by which it appeared that the plaintiff produced a copy of the record of the said Vice-Admiralty Court, as preliminary proof of loss, and the judge charged the jury that the said copy of the said sentence of condemnation having been produced in evidence by the counsel for the plaintiff, as preliminary proof of loss, *was, as against the plaintiff, sufficient evidence of a regular survey, in the absence of any proof to the contrary; to which opinion the plaintiff's counsel excepted.

It further appeared, that the said admiralty proceedings at New Providence were conducted under the directions of Messrs. John and George K. Storrs, a mercantile firm of that place, under whose charge the captain had placed the Holofern. The Messrs. Storrs were authorized by a general power of attorney, set out in the bill of exceptions, to attend to the interests of the defendants at New Providence, but there was no evidence that they were apprised that the defendants had insured the Holofern.

The counsel for the plaintiff, for the purpose of proving that the said condemnation had been fraudulently obtained, inquired of the captain of the Holofern, who was a witness in the cause, whether he ever made the statement represented by the said sentence of condemnation, to have been made in his petition to the said court, to wit, that he conceived that the Holofern was not only incapable to proceed to sea in her then state, but altogether unworthy of being repaired? This question was overruled by the judge.

The same witness was then asked, by the plaintiff's counsel, whether the inside ceiling of the said ship was ever stripped off, as stated in the said sentence of condemnation, and whether she was not in such a situation, by reason of the position of such parts of her cargo and ballast as remained on board, and of the water in the hold, that it could not have *been 589 stripped off as there stated? This question was in like manner overruled.

The witness was then asked, whether he had not been informed by Gibson, one of the surveyors, that the Holofern was not condemned on account of her being rotten, but because she could not be hove down to be repaired, for want of conveniences for that purpose at New Providence. This question was also overruled.

The same witness was then asked, whether he did not, by directions from the Messrs. Storrs, after the sale of the ship and cargo (at which sale the witness was not present), call upon the said Gibson, as having purchased part of the said cargo at auction, for the price thereof, and receive the same. The judge having ascertained, by inquiry of the plaintiff's counsel, that they had been in possession of the account sales of the said cargo, signed by the Messrs. Storrs, but that the same had been sent to Maine, to recover a loss upon a policy on the cargo subscribed there, overruled the said question.

The plaintiff's counsel excepted to the several decisions overruling the said questions.

Mr. H. D. Sedgwick, for the plaintiff in error, argued, (1) That the sentence of condemnation, of the Court of Vice-Admiralty at New Providence, and the survey stated therein, being subsequent to the commencement of the risk, could only prove the unseaworthiness of the ship, at the time of the survey.<sup>1</sup>

590*] *The clause in question has always been considered, both in arguments at the bar, and in the decision of the courts, not as varying the reciprocal rights and duties of the parties, but simply as a stipulation in relation to evidence; nothing farther is required of the insured than to furnish a competent vessel at the inception of the voyage, and all subsequent accidents and losses are at the risk of the insurer, and of consequence, it was held in the case cited, that a report of surveyors in regard to the state of the ship on the 16th of October, was not competent, or if competent, not conclusive evidence of her condition, on the 9th September preceding. It had been suggested, that the decision in the Marine Insurance Company v. Wilson was founded on the particular state of the pleadings; but there was no intimation in that case, that the defense would have been available in any other form, and the case was decided for the plaintiff on the ground that it did not appear by the record that any evidence was offered to prove the vessel unsound on the 24th October, except the report of the surveyors, which was made on the 26th November, and that there was no parol testimony to explain the report, or apply it to the time of the commencement of the risk.

2. It is necessary for the protection of the insurers, that it should appear by the survey, that the rottenness of the ship was the exclusive cause of her condemnation. Such is the clear result of all the cases.<sup>2</sup>

591*] *Now, here it does not appear that the ship was irreparable from unsoundness solely. On the contrary, it appears by the special verdict, that she "met with violent gales, in consequence of which she sprang a leak." The Holofern is stated by the survey to have been in a leaky state; the cause of that leakiness is not stated, but it is to be referred to the leak sprung in consequence of the perils insured against. The rule has been laid down more strongly than we contend for. "Springing a leak is a peril insured against, and any accident which can be traced to the springing of a leak, in a calm or in a storm, and after a long or short absence from port."<sup>3</sup>

The condemnation proceeded as well on the ground of the leakiness of the vessel, as of her decayed condition; and it is sufficient for the plaintiff, if it appear that the leakiness was not, of necessity, to be solely ascribed to the decay. In this case, the language of the record may fairly be considered as amounting to no more than this: "By the extraordinary violence of the gale, the ship was so sprung, and started in her timbers and planks, as to be in a very leaky state, and to require a thorough repair to be made tight. She was decayed, as all ships are, and not so sound a vessel as to render extensive repairs expedient."

It appears, from the whole record, that there 592*] was *no proof that a regular survey had been had on the ship.

The bill of exceptions is part of the record; and if necessary, the special verdict may be amended by it. As a general rule, all errors and defects may be amended when there is anything by which the amendment can be made. The provision for amendments made by the law of the United States, is much more liberal than any of the English statutes of Jeofails.<sup>4</sup> The practice of amending verdicts is familiar. It is often done from the notes of the judge, at the term subsequent to the trial, and such notes are certainly much less authentic than a bill of exceptions, settled at the time, and sealed by the judge as making part of the record.

Although the fact of a survey having been had on the Holofern, is directly stated in the special verdict, we have a right, therefore, to resort to the bill of exceptions, to see upon what evidence the fact is so stated.

It is obvious to remark a very striking difference between this case and every other to be found in the books, in which the application of this clause in a policy of insurance was brought in question. In every other case the survey itself, or an authenticated copy, was produced in evidence, and is set out in the case. Here no survey was produced; no copy proved, nor even an extract given from the survey. What the survey was, or whether it ever had any existence as a written document, does not appear. All the evidence we have of it, is an account or summary *(and probably an imperfect [593 one]), which is contained in the record of the Vice-Admiralty Court, and it is apparent from this record, that the words of the surveyors are not given. If there ever was any paper in writing signed by the surveyors, it has been wholly remodeled. All the tenses of the verbs are changed.

The defendant should have produced the survey itself, or at least have distinctly and unequivocally required the plaintiff to produce it. They did neither.

Upon what evidence, then, do the defendants rely to substantiate the fact in question? Solely on the record of the Court of Vice-Admiralty at New Providence.

It is first to be observed that the clause in question in the New York policies (of which this is one) differs in one respect from the correspondent clause in the policies of the cities south of New York, upon which adjudications have been had. In the southern policies, the phraseology is such as might seem to point to judicial proceedings; here the words are, "if the above vessel, upon a regular survey, should be thereby declared, &c.;" distinctly placing the bar on the survey alone.

The great question between the parties is, whether the decree in the Vice-Admiralty Court is conclusive evidence of a regular survey; for if not conclusive, the verdict in our favor will entitle us to judgment.

It will scarcely be pretended, that independently of the stipulation in the policy, the record of the Vice-Admiralty Court, or even the survey itself, however authenticated, *would [594

1.—Marine Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 3 Cranch, 187.

2.—Guamiguez v. Cox, 1 Bin. 592; Watson et al. v. Ins. Co. of N. A. Condry's Marsh. 169, note b; Am-Whcat, 7.

rayd v. Union Ins. Co., 2 Bin. 394; Stienmitz v. United Ins. Co., 2 Ser. & Rawle, 293.

3.—Patrick v. Hallett, 3 Johns. Cas. 76.

4.—Judiciary Act, 1789, c. 20, s. 32.

be conclusive evidence, or any evidence of the unseaworthiness of the vessel.

It has been settled too often, and upon too solid grounds, that admiralty surveys, and the decrees of courts thereon, are ex-parte proceedings, and wholly inadmissible as evidence between the insurer and insured, to make it necessary to do anything more than refer to the authorities.<sup>1</sup>

The precise reason for introducing the clause in question into the policy, was because these surveys were not evidence antecedently. It is evident, therefore, that if the record in question have any validity, either as evidence of a survey or otherwise, such validity must be acquired wholly from the stipulation in the policy without which the survey itself, and the adjudication of the court thereon (however efficacious as a foundation of the title in a bona fide purchaser) would, as between the parties to this suit, be mere nullities.

What, then, is the stipulation which is now pressed against us? If we allow it all the effect contended for on the other side, it is no more than this—a regular survey shall be taken as conclusive proof of unseaworthiness. The stipulation regards the fact, not the manner in which it is to be proved; there is no stipulation as to evidence.

The just construction of the contract requires that there should be a written survey, under the hands of the surveyor. As has been observed, 595* such a survey *did exist, and was proved in every case reported in the books. Now, we insist that our stipulation, which merely makes this document evidence, does not in any degree dispense with the ordinary and regular proof of the existence and contents of the document itself. The record of the Vice-Admiralty Court was not competent to establish this document, and, as before observed, it does not even attempt to do it.

If the record be conclusive evidence of the fact and contents of the survey, it must be for one of two reasons.

1. Because it was produced by the plaintiff; or, 2. By its own efficacy.

1st. The plaintiff was bound, by a provision in the policy, to produce to the defendant preliminary proof of loss, thirty days before the commencement of the suit, and it was necessary to show on the trial that he had exhibited this evidence of the defendant.

In point of fact, the decree of condemnation in the Vice-Admiralty Court of New Providence occasioned, or rather consummated that loss, and, therefore, the plaintiff produced a copy of that decree. His having done so furnishes no reason why the recitals in that decree should be evidence against him, much less why they should be received as incontrovertible; and the hardship of such a rule is the greater in a case like the present, where the plaintiff was required to produce the evidence. A protest of the master is usually produced among the preliminary proof, but it was never supposed that the insured was conclusively bound by all the allegations the captain might choose *to insert in it. On the contrary, it has been held to afford no legal evidence.<sup>2</sup>

The general rule is, that a document coming from the possession of a party is evidence against him, only where he claims under it, and then it is subject to explanation. Here we claim in opposition to it.

It may still be urged that the plaintiff was bound to produce the survey. If it were necessary, we should wholly deny this position. The policy imposes no such obligation on the insured but simply to produce to the underwriters "proof of interest and loss." In every other respect the parties contest upon the usual principle, viz., that each produces the evidence in his own favor. Both parties so understood their reciprocal rights and duties. The defendants required the production, not of the the survey, but of the decree of condemnation. The plaintiff furnished the document as the decree of condemnation, and nothing else. We say, then, as Lord Kenyon justly observed in a similar case,<sup>3</sup> the record of the Court of Vice-Admiralty proves the fact of the condemnation, and proves nothing else.

It is a rule properly and fully settled that the underwriters can make no objection to the preliminary proofs at the trial, except such as they may at the time they were exhibited. The insured is only bound to produce what is specially required.<sup>4</sup> The special verdict in this case finds that the plaintiff, on the defendants' requisition, produced the copy of the *de-[597] cree of the Vice-Admiralty Court, "whereupon the defendants required no further preliminary proof, but refused to pay on the ground of unseaworthiness." Agreeably to the spirit of the rule, they ought now to be held to the ground then taken.

Again, this objection, viz., that we were bound to produce the survey, assumes a very important fact, which we by no means admit, viz., that there is or ever was a written document signed by the surveyors, which could be produced. This throws us back to the great and only question in this part of the cause, viz., whether the record of the Vice-Admiralty Court is conclusive evidence.

But we contend, that independently of its production by the plaintiff, the sentence of the Vice-Admiralty Court has not, by virtue of the stipulation of the parties, or its own efficacy, any such conclusive effect as is contended for by the defendants.

It may be said that the necessary effect of the clause is to refer the parties to the municipal regulations of any port where the vessel may happen to be in distress, for there the survey must be had. We admit this in its fullest extent. The foreign court is to order the survey, appoint the surveyors, and the proceedings are all to be conducted according to the local regulations. But this is all. The parties here made no stipulation as to the rules of evidence, upon which the cause is to be tried here. It is universally true that the evidence is to be given according to the lex fori. We consented that the Vice Admiralty Court of New Providence

1.—Abbott v. Seabor, 3 Johns. Cas. 39; Wright v. Barnard, 2 Esp. N. P. Cas. 701; S. C. Park. on Ins. 548, 6th Lon. Ed; Saltus v. Commercial Ins. Co., 16 Johns. Rep. 487.

2.—Senat v. Parker, 7 T. R. 158.

3.—Wright v. Barnard, ubi sup.

4.—Vose v. Robinson, 9 Johns. Rep. 192.

might order the survey; but then we were to be bound by the survey itself, produced in 598*] *court here, or a copy duly proved according to our rules of evidence, and not by a partial garbled statement of that survey which the register or other officer of that court might choose to make.

The court below erred in overruling the several questions put to the witness Thompson. The petition was the foundation of the jurisdiction of the court. The decree of a prize court (a much stronger case) has been held void for want of a libel, as without it there could be no jurisdiction.<sup>1</sup> Suppose in this case there had been no petition, then the acts of the court would have been wholly founded on the assent of the party.

The answer of the witness to the second question overruled by the judge, might have shown, not merely crassam negligentiam in the surveyors, but direct fraud and falsehood.

The third question is precisely similar to one which was considered proper by the Supreme Court of the state of New York.<sup>2</sup> The court there says, "the evidence of the declaration of Rogers (one of the surveyors) was admissible, because, though the plaintiff offered the survey as preliminary proof, yet the defendants offered it as proof in chief, and the plaintiff had a right to show the contradictory declaration of Rogers as a witness for the defendant."

The object of the last question was to show that the conduct of one of the surveyors 599*] ceded from *interested motives, and thus to render more probable the fraudulent intent imputed to him. It was overruled on the ground that better evidence might have been produced. But the account sales, which is a commercial document, only admissible by a relaxation of the rules of evidence in regard to foreign transactions, was not so good evidence, as the res gesta, which he offered to prove. The witness, it is true, was not present at the sale, but he offered to prove the fact of his recovering payment from the surveyor, as a purchaser of part of the cargo.

The rule is universal, that fraud may be proved, and when proved, will vitiate all proceedings. It must be proved directly, when the party injured by it has a direct opportunity; and, therefore, in the ordinary case of misconduct of jurors or arbitrators, the party must move to set aside the verdict or award. But this rule does not hold where the person injured was not a party to the proceedings, and of course had no such opportunity. Whatever objections a party to the proceedings might take at the time, a third person may take at any time, when the proceedings are made to bear against him. But it may be said, that the captain was our agent, and the proceedings were at his instance. This begs the question; for if the loss were such as to authorize the abandonment, then the captain by relation was the agent of the underwriters. Besides, the Messrs. Storrs were the agents of the defendants. Their interference in the proceedings is liable to strict scrutiny, and any impropriety ought to invalidate proceedings conducted under their direction, even though it were shown (as it is not) that the captain connived with them.

*The case most analogous to this in [*600 common law proceedings, is that of a jury of view. Now, suppose it was shown that such a jury never went on the land in question, would not their verdict have been set aside? The evidence he offered was equivalent to this. It was not necessary for us to show any agency of the defendants in the alleged misconduct of the surveyors. The evidence of fraud is necessarily circumstantial. It was enough that they sought to profit by it.

Mr. Griffin, contra, contended, (1) That, by the lex loci contractus, it was the business of the assured to produce the survey;<sup>3</sup> and that it was to be proved, not by examining the surveyors, but by an authenticated copy of the proceedings. This the plaintiff did produce, and read in evidence. It was a copy of all the proceedings. The sentence of condemnation, disconnected with the survey, would be unmeaning. Nor is it any objection, that the survey is set forth by way of recital. It would not have been better authenticated had it been in hæc verba. A party producing in evidence, a deed or other instrument, is bound by the recitals.

But the objection to the competency of the evidence was too late. The bill of exceptions does not state that it was taken, until the judge charged the jury;<sup>4</sup> but it evidently implies that the objection was *not taken sooner; [*601 and the plaintiff recognized the survey, as being in evidence, by attempting to impeach it.

2. As to the objections to the rejected testimony, which was offered to show the survey to be incorrect. The survey was given in evidence by the assured. Expunge it, and what cause for a total loss appears? In that event, the judgment would necessarily have been for the defendants. Now, it is a rule that a party cannot call a witness, and then impeach him. The reason assigned by Mr. Justice Buller is, that it "would enable him to destroy the witness if he spoke against him, and to make him a good witness if he spoke for him, with the means in his hands of destroying the witness if he spoke against him."<sup>5</sup> This rule applies with equal force to impeaching a document, introduced by the party who seeks to impeach it. In the only case where the assured was allowed to contradict the survey, it was given in evidence not by himself, but by the underwriters.<sup>6</sup>

3. But this survey was a proceeding of a nature that the law does not allow to be impeached. It may be likened to an award of arbitrators, being a tribunal of the parties' own creation; and you cannot, under the general issue, in an action at law, impeach the award of arbitrators, even for partiality or corruption.<sup>7</sup> The reason assigned for this doctrine is, that it would be a surprise on the opposite party. *And does not this reason emphatically [*602 apply to the case now under consideration?

1.—Sawyer v. Maine Fire Ins. Co. 12 Mass. Rep. 291.

2.—Haff. v. Mar. Ins. Co., 8 Johns. Rep. 163.

3.—Haff. v. Mar. Ins. Co., 4 Johns. Rep. 132.

Wheat. 7.

4.—Russell v. Union Ins. Co., 4 Dall. 423.

5.—Bull. N. P. 297; Phillips' Evid. 232.

6.—Haff. v. Mar. Ins. Co., 8 Johns. Rep. 163, 167.

7.—Wiles v. Maccarmick, 2. Wils. 148; Kyd on Awards, 327.

Neither can corruption or partiality be pleaded to an action on the arbitration bond.<sup>1</sup> The only remedy is by a bill in equity, where all persons implicated may be made parties. In the present case, the assured might have applied to the Court of Admiralty, or filed his bill in chancery.

Perhaps, however, the survey may be more properly likened to the verdict and judgment of a court. The policy contemplates, that the survey is to be a judicial act, when it requires "a regular survey."<sup>2</sup> The policy vests jurisdiction in the Court of Admiralty at the port of necessity; and in the present instance, the agent of the assured called that jurisdiction into activity. It is a settled maxim, that a verdict and judgment cannot be impeached. The sanctified character of a judicial proceeding attaches itself even to a foreign sentence, which is conclusive as to those facts which it professes to decide; and that, too, even if the sentence is founded on unjust and piratical principles.<sup>3</sup> During the French revolution, the firmness of the English judges was put to a severe test in respect to the principle now in discussion, and so was that of this court in the case of a judgment founded on the Milan decree.<sup>4</sup> Had it been competent, the party aggrieved would doubt-
603less *have been able to prove error, partiality, and even corruption in many of these foreign proceedings. But the reason why he could not be permitted to do this is stated by Mr. Justice Johnson, who says: "Not being at liberty, as it were, to lift the mantle of justice cast upon their decrees, it is, as to other tribunals of justice, immaterial what errors it covers; neither the fallibility of the judge, the perjury of witnesses, nor the oppression and injustice of nations, will sanction a deviation from this general rule."<sup>5</sup> The only inquiry the court feels itself authorized to make, is, had the foreign tribunal jurisdiction? And there is but a single instance where the sentence or judgement is not conclusive; and that is where the party claiming the benefit of it appears before our courts to enforce it.<sup>6</sup> So, also, other matters beside awards, verdicts, and judgments, are held unimpeachable. Thus, evidence was refused, to show that the official certificate of a regularly-appointed laud surveyor contained incorrect statements.<sup>7</sup>

We may perhaps concede another case in which judicial proceedings may be impeached, viz., where the judgment is proved to have been obtained by fraud or unfair practices, by the party attempting to avail himself of it. But the fraud here meant is not fraud in the officers of the court, but in the party. No fraud is imputed to the underwriters; and as to the agents, none can with justice be imputed to them. Besides they were only the general agents of the 604*defendants, and not their agents to perpetrate frauds. As to this survey, they were the agents of the assured, and did not at the time know that there was any insurance.

4. As to the other rejected evidence, the first item of it is the answer to the question, whether the master authorized the statement relative to the irreparable condition of the vessel. Here the assured calls upon his captain to swear that the statement contained in the petition presented by his proctors to the court was untrue. The acts of the attorney in the course of judicial proceedings bind his principal, and this, even if he have in fact no authority from the principal. The remedy must be against the attorney.<sup>8</sup> Here the authority of the proctors is not disputed. It is only contended that they misconceived or misrepresented the statement of their client.

All the other items of rejected evidence are liable to the objection that they contradict the record. Besides, affidavits of jurymen (and surveyors stand in the like predicament) cannot be admitted to impeach their verdict.<sup>9</sup>

As to the answer to the question, whether the Messrs. Storrs did not direct the master to call on one of the surveyors, as being a purchaser at the sale of the cargo, for the price, &c. Beside the consideration *that the account of [605 sales was better evidence; the declarations, or directions, of an agent, except when they are part of the res gesta, are not evidence against the principal. The circumstances, too, were irrelevant. No fair presumption flows from a purchase of part of the cargo.

5. As to the supposed collision between the survey and the finding of the jury, it may be observed, that there is no necessary collision. The survey finds the vessel unseaworthy on the 16th of October. The jury find that she was seaworthy when she sailed, on the 9th of September. But ships have the principle of decay inherent in their constitutions, and how can the court, judicially, say that during the 37 days which elapsed between the sailing and survey, the vessel may not have passed by the progress of decay from a state of bare seaworthiness to unseaworthiness? And, even supposing there is a collision, the finding of the jury must give way to the survey, because the finding in opposition to the survey was incorrect. Perhaps the court ought, upon the production of the survey, to have directed the jury to find for the defendants, and to have rendered instanter that judgment which they rendered afterwards. But was this delay error, and such an error as the plaintiff can take advantage of?

The agreement that the survey shall be conclusive, is the voluntary agreement of the parties. Persons of full age and sound minds have a right to make what contracts they please; and to have them enforced, provided they be not unlawful. Courts *will not inquire wheth- [606 er the clause be reasonable or unreasonable, expedient or inexpedient. It can be no more disregarded than any other part of the policy, such as a warranty. Does the court ever inquire into the reasonableness of a warranty?

The case cited from 3 Cranch,<sup>10</sup> 137, does not agitate the conclusiveness of the survey. It

1.—Braddick v. Thompson, 8 East Rep. 344.

2.—Coit v. Delaw. Ins. Co. 1 Cond'y's March. 159, n.

3.—Croudson v. Leonard, 4 Cranch, 434.

4.—Williams v. Armroyd, 7 Cranch, 423.

5.—Rose v. Himely, 4 Cranch, 512, Appx.

6.—Phillips v. Hunter, 2 H. Bl. 410.

7.—Pollard v. Dwight, 4 Cranch, 421.

8.—Anonymous, 1 Salk. 86; 1 Keb. 89; Reinholdt v. Alberti, 1 Binn. 461; Denton v. Noyes, 6 Johns. Rep. 296.

9.—Vaise v. Delaval, 1 T. R. 11; Jackson v. Williamson, 2 T. R. 281; Owen v. Warburton, 4 Bos. & Pull. 326; Rogers v. Rogers, 4 Johns. Rep. 485.

10.—Mar. Ins. Co. v. Wilson.

turned on the state of the pleadings. The plea was, that the vessel was unsound when she sailed on the 24th of October; and the court refused to direct the jury that the survey made on the 26th of November was evidence of that fact. All the other cases admit that a condemnation for rottenness or unsoundness alone, is a conclusive bar.

The special verdict finds the survey to be a regular survey. It is not to be expected that such surveys will adopt the very words of the clause. They are made abroad, and frequently in a foreign language; and such a coincidence would be suspicious. It is sufficient if it appear from the whole survey, that rottenness is the sole ground of condemnation. The survey condemns, in strong and decisive terms, and no cause is intimated but decay. It is true the surveyors find the vessel leaky. But was not rottenness a sufficient cause for that? They condemn her "as being unsafe and unfit ever to go to sea again." Now, there is but one disease in a vessel that is incurable, that is, rottenness; and there can be no doubt, from the face of the survey, that the vessel was condemned for unsoundness. The object of the clause was 607*] to have the state of a vessel definitely ascertained where she is broken up, and examined. It is a wise provision, which has been sanctioned by experience, and adopted in other states, and ought not to be made a dead letter by interpretation.

Mr. H. D. Sedgwick, in reply, stated, that it had been contended that it was the plaintiff's duty to have excepted at the trial to the proof of the survey. He did all that from the nature of the case could have been done. The proof, such as it was, of the survey, was inseparably connected with the preliminary proof of loss, which he was bound to produce. When the defendant's counsel claimed the effect now sought to be given to the supposed survey, the plaintiff resisted, and excepted to the opinion of the judge that the decree was sufficient evidence of the survey.

Besides, the plaintiff's guarded and qualified admission, viz., that the copy produced was a true copy of the record of the Vice-Admiralty Court, shows the intention of the parties. The defendants were therefore fully put upon their guard, and would have produced and proved the survey, if they could have done so.

An analogy is supposed to exist between the report of the surveyors, and the award of arbitrators; it is said that an award cannot be impeached under the general issue; and that partiality cannot be pleaded to an administration bond. But these remarks, true or false, apply only to the common law rules of pleading. We 608*] are ready to admit that the plea nul tiel record, which denies the fact of the award, would not lay a proper foundation for evidence to show partiality in the arbitrators. But it is enough for our argument, that an award may be impeached for the misconduct of the arbitrators; and whether for this purpose the resort be, as stated on the other side, to a court of equity, or whether the common law tribunals are competent to the purpose, is a matter wholly depending on the municipal institutions of the country. Some remedy is confessedly provided. Now, here we had none but to impeach the survey, as we sought to do, on the trial.

Wheat. 7.

The opposing counsel showed how much he was pressed by this consideration, when he referred us to the Vice-Admiralty Court at New Providence, to have the proceedings overhauled in that tribunal. Such an application would be without a precedent. A survey is never granted, but upon the application of the ship-master, founded on present necessity. The Holofern may now be at the bottom of the ocean, or if in existence, not at New Providence; and if she were there, how could a survey now ascertain what her state was on the 8th of October, 1819, the time when the survey was had, and to which the question relates?

Supposing that we are wrong in contending that the recitals of the decree are not evidence against us, inasmuch as we produced the decree, still it is competent to us to disprove them. The rule is merely that a party shall not impeach the character of his own witnesses. He may disprove any facts stated by them. This is the more essential in the case of a *wit-609ness produced by necessity, e. g., the subscribing witness to a deed or will. The evidence in relation to the survey was in this case produced by us of necessity.

But we are told that if the survey be struck out of the case, there is no ground to support the verdict for either a total or partial loss. There are these grounds: our policy, a vessel seaworthy when the voyage commenced, the springing a leak, and being forced from her course by the violence of the winds and waves, stranded in going into a port of necessity, there condemned for causes not legally shown, or not fully shown, or falsely stated; the voyage lost, ship and cargo sold, and the damages assessed.

It is always to be remembered, that we produced the decree as that which, in point of fact, occasioned the loss, without reference to its being void or valid in point of law. Suppose the decree had shown that the ship had been libeled and sold for wages, would this have been more than prima facie evidence?

The decree in question was that of an instance court. The cases cited against us of the conclusiveness of foreign sentences, are all those of prize courts, and the conclusive effect of the adjudication of these tribunals, is founded on peculiar reasons of international law.<sup>1</sup> This conclusive effect has been incautiously extended to cases between insurer and insured, where the title of the property is not drawn in question, but arises collaterally, and the ablest *judges have expressed their regret at [610 this application of the principle,<sup>2</sup> and the effort is now to restrict it within as narrow limits as possible. It is enough for us, however, that this principle has never been applied to any but prize jurisdictions. It is against first principles, that a man should be bound by a decree to which he is not a party. The effect sought to be given to this decree of an instance court, is greater than could be claimed for a judgment of a court of Westminster Hall, or even for a domestic judgment, unless against the same party, and after full notice.

1.—Croudson v. Leonard, 4 Cranch, 434.

2.—Fisher v. Ogle, 1 Campb. N. P. Rep. 418; Marshall v. Parker, 2 Campb. 70; Robinson v. Jones, 8 Mass. Rep. 540; Sawyer v. Maine Fire Insurance Company, 12 Mass. Rep. 291.

Mr. Justice JOHNSON delivered the opinion of the court:

The material question in this cause arises on the construction of a clause in the policy, expressed in these words, "and lastly, it is agreed that if the above vessel, upon a regular survey, should be thereby declared unseaworthy, by reason of her being unsound or rotten, or incapable of prosecuting her voyage on account of her being unsound or rotten," then the assurers shall not be bound to pay their subscription on this policy. The special verdict negatives the proposition of the vessel's being unsound at the time of her sailing, and it is contended for the plaintiff, that this neutralizes the condemnation and survey given in evidence; that contracts of insurance in their nature have 611*] reference to the commencement *of the risk, at least with relation to questions of seaworthiness; and as it is impossible for a sound vessel to become rotten in a month, it is argued that the verdict of the jury ought to prevail against the evidence, or influence of the condemnation.

But we think otherwise. The words of the contract expressly look forward to a future event, "if the said vessel, upon a regular survey, should be thereby declared unseaworthy;" obviously contemplating two objects: First, that a state of rottenness ascertained at any period of the voyage insured shall be conclusive evidence of original unsoundness; second, that the determination of that fact by means of a regular survey should be received as conclusive evidence between the parties. It is unquestionably true in the abstract, that a certificate of survey is not legal evidence; because the examination of the surveyors themselves would be better. But parties may by compact adopt that or any other, as the criterion for deciding on their relative rights; and in the case before us, the rights of the parties are made to depend on the fact of the survey rather than on the truth of it. They have chosen a rule of decision for themselves, and we are not to inquire into their motives or prudence in doing so. Whether the survey in this instance was duly substantiated, is the next question which the case presents. And here it becomes altogether unnecessary to decide whether a condemnation, in ordinary cases, carries with it the evidence of the fact or of the fairness of the survey. For, it must be observed that the exemplification of the proceedings in the Court of Vice-Admiralty 612*] in New Providence *was produced in evidence by the plaintiff himself. He claimed for a total loss, and to support this claim it became necessary to show that the vessel was condemned and sold, and the voyage broken up in New Providence. But if this exemplification should be admitted to prove those facts alone, without exposing the causes which led to them; if the eyes of the jury were to be shut against everything but the outside of the record, non constat, but the vessel may have been condemned for some cause for which the underwriters were not liable, and his case would not have been made out. Such subtleties cannot be countenanced; the survey was a part of the res gesta, and the plaintiff could not possibly have made out the loss without introducing the survey which led to it.

The survey was, therefore, properly in evidence, and that it was "a regular survey," in the language of the covenant, is to be deduced from two considerations: First, if there was any irregularity in the survey, it is attributable to the plaintiff's own agents; for even the Storrs, in this case, although the general agents of the company, were voluntarily selected by the captain. But, second, the survey bears every evidence of regularity or authenticity that can reasonably be required. On this subject, the nature of the contract of insurance casts the parties on the municipal regulations of all the world. Every commercial country has its own regulations on the subject of surveys. It is properly a subject of admiralty jurisdiction; since mariners and freighters have to claim the aid of the admiralty to release them from their contract in cases of a defect of seaworthiness. A *regular [613 survey must, therefore, in every instance, be such as is known to the laws and customs of the port in which a vessel happens to be. In this instance, both from the jurisdiction assumed by the court, and the known habits of British jurisprudence, the mode of passing a survey through a court to give it authenticity, may well be adjudged a regular survey according to the laws of the port into which this vessel was forced. If this be the case, it follows that the exemplification of the proceedings of that court is not only admissible evidence, but perhaps the only evidence that could be received of the survey. And as to the idea of extracting the original return from the files of that court, to produce it here, it will not bear reflection. The same considerations fully justify the court below in rejecting the evidence of the captain, offered to rebut the decision of a court, and that decision, both procured by the plaintiff's own agent, and produced by himself in evidence.

But it is contended, that though the construction of the covenant be with the defendants, and the survey be held to be legally before the jury, and "a regular survey" within the meaning of the policy, still it is not conclusive against the plaintiff, inasmuch as it certifies the existence of other causes of loss, besides the decayed state of the vessel.

It is unquestionably true, that the survey must respond to the covenant, and if the vessel be declared unseaworthy, for any additional cause, besides her being, in the language of the policy, "unsound or rotten," the defeasance, if it may be so called, will not avail the defendant. But what is the case here? *All [614 the facts to be gathered from the exemplification of the condemnation, taking it from the commencement to the close, are, that the vessel encountered tempestuous weather, that she was forced to put into New Providence, in consequence of springing a leak; that the captain, "conceiving her not only unfit to proceed to sea again in her present state, but altogether unworthy of being repaired," libeled her in the admiralty, and prayed a warrant of survey upon her. Upon issuing the warrant, the surveyors proceeded to an examination, and finding the vessel very leaky, stripped off part of her ceiling, and found her, as they report, "in a very decayed condition." They thereupon certified her to be "altogether unworthy of being repaired, and that she ought to be condemned as being unsafe and unfit ever to go to sea again." Here decay is exhibited exclusively as the mortal disease, and everything else is either inducement or consequence. A bad vessel might have made a safe voyage, had she experienced no trying weather, and a good vessel would have encountered gales without injury. Springing a leak was the consequence of that state of decay which weakened the whole fabric, and her being unworthy of repair, or unfit to go to sea, was no additional cause of condemnation, but the mode in which her disease produced her destruction. Causes upon similar policies, and under similar circumstances, have in several instances passed in review before the tribunals of this country, and received decisions consonant to this. The case between the Marine Insurance Company of Alexandria and Wilson, 615*] decided in this court, did *not resemble Wheat. 7.

this in any prominent feature, except that the policy contained the same clause, and the defense was attempted under the protection of it. But neither in the evidence nor in the pleadings, did the defendants bring themselves within the provisions of the clause.

This court is therefore of opinion, that there was no error in the decision of the court below. But an inconsiderable omission (made palpable by the briefs furnished by both parties) having been committed in copying the record, and which leaves it doubtful in what form this decision is to be certified to the court below, this court will, for the present, order a certiorari to issue, that the correction may be duly made.

Certiorari awarded.

Cited—10 Wheat. 416; 22 How. 417; 3 Sumn. 42, 43; 1 Ware, 491.

VII WHEATON.

---

7 Wheat. 1-7, 5 L. 381, MILLER v. KERR.

Public lands.—Warrant and survey do not, in themselves, constitute legal title; until grant, person acquiring an equity holds a right subject to examination, p. 6.

Cited and rule applied in Michigan Co. v. Rust, 168 U. S. 593, 42 L. 592, 18 S. Ct. 209, affirming right of land department to determine validity of rights claimed in land against government, until title passes; Wynn v. Garland, 16 Ark. 460, land department may annul a pre-emption right for cause any time before issuance of patent, holding further as to right of chancery to go back of patent to determine rights.

Public lands.—An equity arising from entry of land made on a warrant which had been issued by mistake cannot be sustained against a patent issued on a junior entry, p. 7.

Cited in Parkison v. Bracken, 1 Pinn. 181, 39 Am. Dec. 298, holding, in action at law, in case of conflicting patents, the first patent is conclusive. Cited without special application of the principle in Wallace v. Saunders, 7 Ohio, 177; arguendo, in Ware v. Brush, 1 McLean, 535, F. C. 17,171, and same case on appeal, 15 Pet. 106, 10 L. 677, as to when courts will go back of patent to examine equities; to same effect, Arnold v. Grimes, 2 Iowa, 13. Cited erroneously, arguendo, Lindsey v. Miller, 6 Pet. 676, 8 L. 542. Cited, arguendo, McClung v. Hughes, 5 Rand. 477, case decides as to when equity will lend its aid to one having prior equities against a grantee.

Modified in Parker v. Wallace, 3 Ohio, 494, holding senior entry upon resolution warrant, surveyed and patented conformable to laws of congress, may be aided in equity against an elder patent on a junior entry. Distinguished in Hoofnagle v. Anderson, 7 Wheat. 218, 5 L. 438, where court was asked to set aside a complete legal title, founded on a warrant issued by mistake, in favor of an entry made after consummation of that title; Thomas v. White, 2 Ohio St. 549, holding patent issued on warrant and survey, unless such entry be absolutely void, transfers title, which will not be set aside for irregularities in making entry.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Galloway v. Pinley, 12 Pet. 299, 9 L. 1092, as authority for holding claims for land for services in the "Virginia State line" cannot be satisfied out of lands in Ohio.

military district; Brown v. Clements, 3 How. 665, 11 L. 774, and in Keyser v. Sutherland, 59 Mich. 460, 26 N. W. 867, as authority for rule, that acts of ministerial officer beyond his powers or contrary to law are void.

7 Wheat. 7-13, 5 L. 382, NEWSOM v. PRYOR.

Bounds and boundaries.—The most material and certain calls control those which are less material and certain, and call for natural object controls both course and distance, p. 10.

The following citing cases affirm and apply the rule: Brown v. Huger, 21 How. 321, 16 L. 130, holding where survey and patent call for boundary to run down to and along a river, the river was intended as boundary, and courses must be disregarded; Higuera v. United States, 5 Wall. 836, 18 L. 471, where natural objects were held to control; County of St. Claire v. Lovington, 23 Wall. 62, 23 L. 62, where survey begins at stake on bank of river and is carried to a point in river, the river running along the general course of line, the tract surveyed is bounded by the river; Cleveland v. Smith, 2 Story, 290, F. C. 2,874, where description calls for a certain tree standing on a certain line, in case tree is not on line, tree will be considered as boundary; Brown v. Huger, 4 Fed. Cas. 396, where magnetic line conflicts with line running from permanent sensible objects, it must be abandoned; Garrard v. Mines, 82 Fed. 585, affirming the rule; Gaveny v. Hinton, 2 G. Greene, 349, where grantor reserves a house which was supposed to be on a certain strip on west side of quarter section of land sold, but which proved to be east of east line of strip, grantor was held entitled to house; Carmichael v. Foley, 1 How. (Miss.) 592, where the call for quantity appeared more certain and material than did call for boundaries; Rix v. Johnson, 5 N. H. 524, 22 Am. Dec. 474, bounding land as running to stake at river, thence to stake by river, makes river a boundary; Coburn v. Coxeter, 51 N. H. 164, and Erwin v. Moore, 6 Cow. 717, quantity being the least certain part of a description must yield to boundaries or other more certain description; Jackson v. Wendell, 5 Wend. 147, holding where place of beginning can be ascertained, and two first courses can be run according to description, whole patent will not be deranged because subsequent lines and monuments conflict; Hathaway v. Power, 6 Hill, 457, where description by lot number was held to prevail over that part of description stating number of acres in tract; Whiteside v. Singleton, Meigs, 218, holding where grant calls for certain number of poles to "stake, crossing river," line must cross river, though distance terminates before reaching it; Hubert v. Bartlett, 9 Tex. 104; George v. Thomas, 16 Tex. 87, 67 Am. Dec. 616, where boundary line was partially marked. Cited and rule approved, arguendo, in Stafford v. King, 30 Tex. 270, 271, 94 Am. Dec. 307, 308; Smith v. Chapman, 10 Gratt. 473, 474. Cited generally, Doe

v. Hildreth, 2 Ind. 284, as to boundary line where land bounds on water-course; Kellogg v. Smith, 7 Cush. 383, as to when line varying from true course but acquiesced in as true line for number of years, will be considered true line; Jennings v. Brizeadine, 44 Mo. 335, and Hunter v. Hume, 88 Va. 30, 13 S. E. 307, as to admission of parol evidence to explain description; Bowman v. Farmer, 8 N. H. 403, but holding, where description calls for boundary line, beginning at mouth of creek and running due west up said creek, the creek being very crooked does not control magnetic line. The general proposition is approved in Opdyke v. Stephens, 28 N. J. L. 86, but under facts, there being no monuments, courses and distances were held to control; and in Jackson v. Camp, 1 Cow. 612. Cited generally, without special application of the rule in Barnard v. Good, 44 Tex. 641. Cited in Boon v. Hunter, 62 Tex. 588, as to what descriptive calls will be considered when it is shown no actual survey was ever made. Notes, 30 Am. Dec. 735, 737, 16 Am. Rep. 524.

Modified in Miller v. Cullum, 4 Ala. 582, in case giving monuments controlling influence, absurd consequences would ensue, if courses furnish more certain guide, they will be followed.

Bounds and boundaries.—There is no distinction between a call to stop at a river and a call to cross a river, p. 12.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Williamson v. Simpson, 16 Tex. 441, as to reluctance of courts to adopt a rule which would lead to uncertainties in titles. Cited generally, Hull v. Fuller, 7 Vt. 106, as to duty of courts to correct manifest mistakes in contracts; Oakley v. Hibbard, 1 Pinn. 681, not in point.

7 Wheat. 13-22, 5 L. 384, TAYLOE v. SANDIFORD.

Damages.—In general a sum in gross, to be paid for nonperformance of an agreement, is considered as a penalty, and not as liquidated damages; a fortiori, when it is expressly reserved as a penalty, p. 17.

Cited and rule applied as follows: Watts v. Camors, 115 U. S. 361, 29 L. 408, 6 S. Ct. 94, to agreement in charterparty; White v. Arleth, 1 Bond. 325, F. C. 17,536, and holding it is optional with plaintiff either to sue for penalty or for actual damage; Beck v. Milling Co., 52 Fed. 703, 705, 10 U. S. App. 465, in determining right of party to rescind contract not performed within time stipulated but substantially performed after short delay; Hooper v. Savannah R. R. Co., 69 Ala. 535, holding, when it is doubtful whether sum stated was intended as liquidated damages, or as penalty, it will be construed as the latter; Nash v. Hermosilla, 9 Cal. 587, 70 Am. Dec. 677, where sum to be paid in case of breach of conditions in contract between landlord and tenant, was held a penalty and not liquidated damages; Smith v. Wedgwood, 74 Me.

460, to agreement to pay certain sum in case a drain was not completed within specified time; Higginson v. Weld, 14 Gray, 172; Kelly v. Seay, 3 Okl. 533, 41 Pac. 618, and Smith v. Brown, 164 Mass. 587, 42 N. E. 102, where parties stipulated sum should be considered as penalty; Davis v. Gillett, 52 N. H. 130, to agreement not to engage in specified business within certain time and place; Whitfield v. Levy, 35 N. J. L. 155, is to same effect; Lansing v. Dodd, 45 N. J. L. 528, to condition in agreement to convey land; Curry v. Larer, 7 Pa. St. 472, 49 Am. Dec. 488, to agreement in covenant to deliver coal by certain date; March v. Allabough, 103 Pa. St. 340, and Smith v. Wainwright, 24 Vt. 104, to agreement not to enter into business within specified limits. Cited generally as to meaning of word "penal;" Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 667, 36 L. 1127, 13 S. Ct. 227, dissenting opinion, Johnson v. Potomac Assn., 13 Fed. Cas. 793, without application; dissenting opinion, Johnson v. Clarke, 30 Fed. Cas. 1097, without application. Cited as containing discussion of general subject, Watts v. Sheppard, 2 Ala. 444; Williams v. Green, 14 Ark. 321. Cited, arguendo, Andrews v. Jones, 3 Blackf. 443, where the liability in an agreement in mortgage, that whole sum should be due on failure to make certain payments, was held not to be a penalty. Cited in Hamilton v. Overton, 6 Blackf. 207, 38 Am. Dec. 137, as to rule of interpretation when sum is designated a penalty; notes, 1 Ind. 445, and 11 Ind. 77. Cited in Foley v. McKeegan, 4 Iowa, 7, 8, 66 Am. Dec. 110, 112, where it is said, courts, in determining whether contract provides for penalty or liquidated damages, will not always be guided by terms used by parties, but will be governed by their intent, as shown by facts surrounding case. Cited, without special application of the rule, in McIntire v. Cagley, 37 Iowa, 678, deciding as to nature of agreement in note to pay attorney's fees. Cited as authority for holding, when it is doubtful whether sum was intended as a penalty or liquidated damages, it will be considered a penalty, Cheddick v. Marsh, 21 N. J. L. 467. Cited as bearing on subject, Thoroughgood v. Walker, 2 Jones (N. C.), 22, holding, where sum was stipulated for breach of agreement, and amount of damage caused by breach was readily ascertainable, such sum will be considered a penalty. Note, 1 Am. Dec. 334, 30 Am. Rep. 29.

Distinguished in United States v. Hatch, 1 Paine, 345, F. C. 15,325, holding the sum, in a bond given by master of ship for performance of certain act, is intended as a forfeiture, and not as a penalty to cover damages which may be assessed; Taylor v. Marcella, 1 Woods, 304, F. C. 13,797, where there was part performance and acceptance under contract; Degraff v. Wickham, 89 Iowa, 727, 728, 57 N. W. 420, 421, where contract provided for payment at certain rate per diem in case contract should not be performed within specified time, there being no evidence as to cost or rental value of house which was subject of contract; Geiger v. Mary- land, 41 Md. 15, where it was expressly stipulated that the sum should be considered liquidated damages.

Application of payments.—One owing under distinct contracts may apply payments to either, and this without express direction at the time, if accompanied by circumstances demonstrating its application, p. 20.

Cited and principle applied in Howland v. Rench, 7 Blackf. 237, where application of payments by creditor was shown from circumstances; Adams Co. v. Black, 62 Ind. 134, when intention of payor can be gathered from circumstances, application should be made in accordance with such intention; Mitchell v. Dall, 2 Harr. & G. 173, where debtor designated by letter to what debt payment should be applied; Lauten v. Rowan, 59 N. H. 217, where debtor's intention was shown by surrounding circumstances; Roakes v. Bailey, 55 Vt. 543, holding, where debtor, without knowledge of dissolution of firm, made payments supposing them to apply on partnership debt,—the law will apply them as he intended. Cited, arguendo, in The Pioneer, Deady, 80, F. C. 11,177, as to implying appropriation; Randall v. Lettes, 12 Fla. 535, in discussion on general subject. Cited as not being in point for point cited, Hansen v. Rounsavell, 74 Ill. 241, although apparently approved. Approved generally, Conduitt v. Ryan, 3 Ind. App. 9, 29 N. E. 163, holding further as to rule where appropriation is made by neither party. Cited in Mitchell v. Dall, 4 Gill & J. 372, but no inference will be drawn as to debtor's intention from fact payment was made by surety. Cited, arguendo, Summers v. Loder, 12 N. J. L. 106. Cited generally, White v. Trumbull, 15 N. J. L. 319, 29 Am. Dec. 690. Cited in Robinson v. Doolittle, 12 Vt. 249, as an instance where debtor's intention was shown by surrounding circumstances.

Distinguished in Nichols v. Knowles, 3 McCrary, 478, 17 Fed. 494, where payment was not voluntary but by compulsory process; Stafford v. Walker, 12 S. & R. 196, where there was but one entire contract.

Miscellaneous.—Cited, Page v. Patton, 5 Pet. 310, 8 L. 137, for what point not clear.

7 Wheat. 23-27, 5 L. 387, TAYLOR v. MYERS.

Public lands.—The owner of a survey made in conformity with his entry, and not interfering with any other person's right, may abandon his survey after it has been recorded, p. 27.

Cited and rule approved in Galt v. Galloway, 4 Pet. 341, 7 L. 879, where a warrant, under laws applicable to Virginia military lands, was withdrawn after survey thereunder had been made and recorded. Cited, arguendo, Hollingsworth v. Holshousen, 17 Tex. 49. Cited in Jackson v. McGavock, 5 Rand. 519, but to what point is not clear.

Distinguished in Jackson v. Clark, 1 Pet. 637, 639, 7 L. 294, 295, facts show no abandonment; Holt v. Hemphill, 3 Ohio, 236, where question raised was whether warrant having been entered and surveyed could, after withdrawal, be entered and surveyed elsewhere.

Public lands.—Proviso of act of 1807, as to Virginia military land warrants annulling locations made on lands previously surveyed, applies to subsisting surveys, not to those abandoned, p. 27.

Cited in Lindsey v. Miller, 6 Pet. 678, 8 L. 543, in discussion as to object of act of 1807. Reviewed in McArthur v. Dun, 7 How. 269, 12 L. 696, no application.

Distinguished in Miller v. Lindsay, 1 McLean, 34, F. C. 9,580, where survey was not supported by right of entry; Saunders v. Niswanger, 11 Ohio St. 302, 307, provisions of act do not extend to surveys made on invalid warrant.

7 Wheat. 27-34, 5 L. 388, GREEN v. WATKINS.

Writ of right.—In action under writ of right, tenant may introduce evidence to show title in third person for purpose of disproving defendant's seizin, p. 29.

Cited and rule applied in Inglis v. Trustees, 3 Pet. 133, 172, 7 L. 629, 643, holding in writ of right the tenant may, on the mise joined, set up a title out of himself and in a third person; Rollins v. Clay, 33 Me. 140, applying rule in an action of trespass. Cited, arguendo, Barr v. Galloway, 1 McLean, 482, F. C. 1,037. See note, 1 Blackf. 89.

Writ of right.—Demandant in order to maintain suit must show seizin either in fact or in law, p. 30.

Cited and applied in Lyon v. Mottuse, 19 Ala. 465, holding count in pleadings which does not allege such seizin is bad. Cited, arguendo, Wood v. Mansell, 3 Blackf. 130, as to whether grantee must show actual possession before he can maintain an action of trespass.

Seizin.—Patent confers constructive seizin, pp. 30, 32.

Cited to this point in Dawson v. Watkins, 2 Rob. (Va.) 268, holding further as to right of tenant to introduce evidence to disprove such constructive seizin. See note, 50 Am. Dec. 174.

Writ of right.—Where demandant proves actual seizin, tenant cannot prove superior outstanding title, p. 33.

Cited and principle similarly applied in Bolling v. Mayor, 3 Rand. 570.

Distinguished in Carter v. Ramey, 15 Gratt. 348, where seizin was constructive, holding under such circumstances tenant may disprove such seizin by showing better title in another.

7 Wheat. 35-38, 5 L. 390, PAGE v. BANK.

Evidence.—Under a count for money had and received, a bill or note is prima facie evidence against the drawer or indorser, although presumption of money received is rebuttable, p. 37.

Cited and rule applied in Hopkins v. Orr, 124 U. S. 513, 31 L. 525, 8 S. Ct. 591, action of assumpsit on promissory note; Benjamin v. Tillman, 2 McLean, 214, F. C. 1,304, acceptance is evidence of money had and received by acceptor to use of drawer; Frazer v. Carpenter, 2 McLean, 237, F. C. 5,069, rule applied in action between holder and acceptor of bill of exchange; Sandford v. Norton, 14 Vt. 232, indorser in blank, not payee, may always show by parol the extent of his liability; Bank v. Jackson, 9 Leigh. 231, 235, and if it be shown that indorser was mere accommodation indorser, recovery cannot be had on money counts. Cited, arguendo, Bank v. Moss, 6 How. 37, 12 L. 334; Brown v. Noyes, 2 Wood. & M. 78, F. C. 2,023. Approved in Brown v. Tower, Minor. 372, application not clear. Cited, without special application of the rule, in Springfield v. Hickox, 2 Gil. 248, note, 1 Blackf. 234. Cited, arguendo, Banking Co. v. Myer, 12 N. J. L. 148, holding a note is but rebuttable evidence of money had and received by maker to use of holder, or of money paid by holder to use of maker; Johnson v. Catlin, 27 Vt. 91, 62 Am. Dec. 624, as to right of cashier, who is payee of note given for value, to maintain action in his own name upon money counts; Austin v. Burlington, 34 Vt. 512. See valuable note, 52 Am. Dec. 756, 757.

Distinguished in Smith v. Frye, 14 Me. 464, where guaranty was written over name of payee of note, indorsed in blank, without his consent; Cayuga Bank v. Warden, 6 N. Y. 30, where statute makes indorsement evidence per se of money lent indorser; Bank v. Evans, 9 W. Va. 381, 384, where surety signs as maker he will be bound equally with maker.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Moses v. Bank, 149 U. S. 302, 37 L. 745, 13 S. Ct. 901, apparently not in point; in Stone v. Lawrence, 4 Cr. C. C. 12, F. C. 13,484, as authority for holding where there is a variance between note set out in pleadings and one offered in evidence, such note cannot be admitted.

7 Wheat. 38-45, 5 L. 391, Ex parte KEARNEY.

Constitutional law.—Supreme Court may issue habeas corpus where a person is imprisoned under warrant or order of any court of the United States, p. 42.

Cited as authority for this rule in Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 572, 8 L. 788, and in dissenting opinion in same case, p. 581, 8 L. 791; in dissenting opinion, In re Kaine, 14 How. 130, 132, 14 L. 356, 357, where party was held under commitment by commissioner acting under treaty of 1842, with Great Britain; dissenting opinion, Ex parte Wells, 18 How. 317, 5 L. 426, holding proposition true provided court is acting under its appellate jurisdiction. Cited generally in discussion of habeas corpus, Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 623, 628, also, note, In re Barry, 136 U. S. 613, 34 L. 509; S. C., 42 Fed. 125, F. C. 1,059, 10 L. 624, 627. Cited in Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 301, 32 L. 408, 9 S. Ct. 78; S. C., 13 Sawy. 460, where court holds, writ need not be awarded if it appear on showing of petitioner, that if brought into court, and cause of commitment inquired into, he would be remanded to prison. Cited, arguendo, In re Wong Guy, 6 Sawy. 241, 47 Fed. 719, where it is held Federal courts have jurisdiction under habeas corpus to inquire into validity of State statutes and State judgments based thereon. Cited in Barrett v. Hopkins, 2 McCrary, 132, 7 Fed. 314, holding United States Circuit Court may issue writ of habeas corpus to inquire into validity of judgment of a court-martial. Cited, arguendo, In re Haskell, 52 Fed. 797, as to when Federal courts will grant writ of habeas corpus when petitioner is held under sentence of State court; Peltier v. Pennington, 14 N. J. L. 318, as to power of Federal courts to issue writ of habeas corpus.

Qualified in Ex parte Parks, 93 U. S. 23, 23 L. 788, holding writ should not issue unless court below has acted without jurisdiction or has transcended its powers; Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S. 23, 25 L. 539, and In re Lennon, 166 U. S. 552, 41 L. 1112, 17 S. Ct. 659, where it was sought to have writ of habeas corpus perform functions of writ of error.

Constitutional law.—Supreme Court has no general authority to review on error or appeal judgments of Circuit Courts in criminal cases, p. 42.

Cited and this rule applied in the following: Ex parte Watkins, 3 Pet. 208, 7 L. 655, when court was asked on habeas corpus proceedings to review judgment of Circuit Court; In re Metzger, 5 How. 190, 12 L. 110, holding Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to issue habeas corpus for purpose of examining commitment by district judge, at chambers, under treaty with France; In re Kaine, 14 How. 119, 129, 14 L. 351, 355 (S. C., 14 Fed. Cas. 83, 87), in denying habeas corpus to party committed by commissioner appointed under treaty of 1842, with Great Britain; dissenting opinion, Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 185, 187, 188, 205, 21 L. 882, 888, and this cannot be done indirectly by means of writ of habeas corpus; New Orleans v. Steamship Co., 20 Wall. 392, 22 L. 357, holding contempt a specific criminal offense; United States v. Sanges, 144 U. S. 319, 36 L. 449, 12 S. Ct. 612, holding writ of error does not lie on behalf of United States in criminal case; In re Davison, 22 Blackf. 476, 21 Fed. 621, to proceedings in habeas corpus, where petitioner was held under sentence of court-martial; United States v. Miller, 2 Cr. C. C. 248, F. C. 15,772, where petition for writ of habeas corpus was denied, petitioner having been committed for contempt; United States v. Plummer, 3 Cliff. 27, F. C. 16,055, where applicant for writ of error had been convicted of a capital offense in Circuit Court; Ex parte Veremaitre, 28 Fed. Cas. 1149, on habeas corpus, District Court cannot review facts of case over which an inferior court has exclusive jurisdiction. Cited, arguendo, in Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 600, 603, 604, 10 L. 610, 612, as to conclusiveness of judgment of court whose jurisdiction is final; dissenting opinion, Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 283, 25 L. 657; Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 653, 28 L. 274, 4 S. Ct. 153, as authority for holding Supreme Court may review judgment of Circuit Court in criminal matters for purpose of ascertaining whether Circuit Court has acted within its jurisdiction; arguendo, in dissenting opinion, Sparf v. United States, 156 U. S. 176, 39 L. 387, 15 S. Ct. 321. Cited without application of the principle in Ex parte Davis, 7 Fed. Cas. 47. Cited, arguendo, in Curry v. Marvin, 2 Fla. 417, in determining constitutionality of a State act which limited jurisdiction of State Supreme Court; Whitten v. State, 36 Ind. 203; Cartwright's Case, 114 Mass. 239, as authority for holding proceedings in contempt are in nature of criminal proceedings; Yarbrough v. State, 2 Tex. 527, where a like rule is affirmed of appellate powers of State Supreme Court.

Distinguished in Forsyth v. United States, 9 How. 572, 13 L. 263, on ground of special statute affecting territorial courts; Worden v. Searls, 121 U. S. 25, 30 L. 857, 7 S. Ct. 820, on ground that proceedings were not criminal; United States v. McElroy, 2 Mont. 496, when appeal was from territorial District Court to territorial Supreme Court; State v. Knight, 3 S. Dak. 515, 44 Am. St. Rep. 813, 54 N. W. 414, where question presented was whether contempt proceedings could be brought up for review in State court by writ of error.

Federal courts have unquestionable authority to commit for contempt, p. 42.

Cited in support of this proposition U. S. v. Jacobi, 1 Flip 110, F. C. 15,460, a contempt for disobeying Federal court process.

Contempt.—Where a court commits for contempt, its adjudication is a conviction and its commitment in consequence is execution, p. 43.

Cited and doctrine applied in In re Muller, 7 Blatchf. 25, F. C. 9,911, holding court has no power to discharge or remit sentence; Erwin v. U. S., 37 Fed. 480, 2 L. R. A. 234, and Taylor v. U. S., 45 Fed. 539, holding contempt proceedings a "cause" within meaning of word as used in fee bill; Van Hoorebeke v. United States, 46 Fed. 459, is to the same effect. Cited in Ex parte O'Brien, 127 Mo. 488, 30 S. W. 160, holding contempt of court is a criminal offense; also, State v. Horner, 16 Mo. App. 194; Williamson's Case, 26 Pa. St. 19, 67 Am. Dec. 382. Cited in Sessions v. Gould, 63 Fed.

1002, 26 U. S. App. 368, as authority for holding a conviction in contempt proceedings is a judgment in a criminal case; also to same effect, State v. Markuson, 5 N. Dak. 150, 64 N. W. 935; Floyd v. State, 7 Tex. 216, and Jordan v. State, 14 Tex. 440, 441; Butler v. Fayerweather, 91 Fed. 459, holding commitment of witness for contempt in equity case, a final order reviewable on error. Cited, arguendo, Fanshawe v. Tracy, 4 Biss. 499, F. C. 4,643, in determining against whom the offense of contempt is committed; In re Ellerbe, 4 McCrary, 451, 13 Fed. 532, and Lester v. People, 150 Ill. 424, 41 Am. St. Rep. 384, 37 N. E. 1004, as to nature of contempt proceedings, and to same effect, In re Litchfield, 13 Fed. 868. Cited, arguendo, State v. Nathans, 49 S. C. 204, 27 S. E. 54, where authorities are collected and discussed; State v. Knight, 3 S. Dak. 514, 44 Am. St. Rep. 813, 54 N. W. 414; and Snow v. Snow, 13 Utah, 22, 43 Pac. 622, where contempts are classified. Cited generally in Casey v. State, 25 Tex. 385, where court holds contempt of court is not an offense within the meaning of the penal code; Una v. Dodd, 38 N. J. Eq. 462, arguendo, as to character of offense.

Contempt.—Discussion of right of courts to punish for, at common law, p. 43.

Cited in Ex parte Bun, 2 Cr. C. C. 392, F. C. 2,186; Ex parte Stickney, 40 Ala. 168, as authority for holding courts punished for, at common law. Cited, arguendo, Cossart v. State, 14 Ark. 541, as to rule at common law as to writ of error and habeas corpus in contempt proceedings; Cooper v. People, 13 Colo. 371, 22 Pac. 801, 6 L. R. A. 492, in such proceedings, one court should not judge jurisdiction of another of co-ordinate dignity and authority. Cited generally, Town v. Springer, 9 Ga. 132; Ex parte Wright, 65 Ind. 511, as containing discussion of general subject; also Baldwin v. State, 126 Ind. 31, 32, 25 N. E. 822. Cited as approving rules of common law on subject, Watson v. Williams, 36 Miss. 343. Cited generally, dissenting opinion, In re Pierce, 44 Wis. 447.

Contempt.—Supreme Court will not inquire into cause of commitment where party has been committed for contempt by court of competent jurisdiction, p. 44.

Cited and rule applied in New Orleans v. Steamship Co., 20 Wall. 392, 22 L. 357, where court refused to reverse a judgment by Circuit Court, inflicting fine for contempt; Hayes v. Fischer, 102 U. S. 122, 26 L. 96, and Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 306, 32 L. 400, 9 S. Ct. 80; S. C., 13 Sawy. 465, are to the same effect; Newport Light Co. v. Newport, 151 U. S. 539, 38 L. 263, 14 S. Ct. 433, holding act of State Court of Appeals in ordering court below to discharge rule for contempt, it is not subject of review in Federal Supreme Court; Ex parte Nugent, 18 Fed. Cas. 472, where petitioner for writ of habeas corpus was imprisoned for contempt by order of senate;

Ex parte McCarthy, 29 Cal. 400, holding legislative assembly may refuse to party summoned before it for contempt, the aid of counsel; Tyler v. Hamersley, 44 Conn. 409, 26 Am. Rep. 474, and Caro v. Marwell, 20 Fla. 18, matters of contempt are entirely within province of court adjudging same, and are not subject to review on writ of error; Clark v. People, Breese, 341, 12 Am. Dec. 178, holding that in case of abuse of discretion by committing judge, remedy is by indictment or impeachment; First Church v. Muscatine, 2 Iowa, 71, each court of record is sole and final judge in matters of contempt; Ex parte Adams, 25 Miss. 889, 890, 59 Am. Dec. 240, 241, holding as to procedure where discharge is sought on habeas corpus; Phillips v. Welch, 11 Nev. 194, holding State Supreme Court has no appellate jurisdiction in cases of contempt, where proceeding is purely criminal; Phillips v. Welch, 12 Nev. 179, where State Supreme Court refused, on certiorari, to review case on merits; State v. Towle, 42 N. H. 541, 544, 545, where justice of peace has jurisdiction to punish as contempt, his sentence will not be revised on habeas corpus; Williamson's Case, 26 Pa. St. 17, 18, 67 Am. Dec. 379, 380, the power to deal with an offense of this kind belongs exclusively to the court in which it is committed; Ex parte Whitmore, 9 Utah, 444, 35 Pac. 525, petitioner will not be discharged on habeas corpus unless committing court acted beyond its jurisdiction; In re Falvey, 7 Wis. 640, imprisonment by order of legislative assembly; Ex parte Whitmore, 9 Utah, 444, 35 Pac. 525, refusing to disturb commitment for contempt, no excess of jurisdiction appearing; Ex parte Tinsley, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 527, 66 Am. St. Rep. 820, 40 S. W. 307, refusing to consider propriety of order disobeyed by contemnor, jurisdiction to make the order appearing. Cited, arguendo, Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 621, 10 L. 623. Cited in In re Callicot, 8 Blatchf. 94, F. C. 2,323, as to jurisdiction of circuit judge to review on habeas corpus. Cited, arguendo, United States v. Bedford Bridge Co., 1 Wood. & M. 440, F. C. 15,867. Cited as to what is contempt in State v. Tugwell, 19 Wash. 252, 52 Pac. 1061, 43 L. R. A. 723; Una v. Dodd, 39 N. J. Eq. 180, holding party accused of contempt cannot excuse himself by showing the judgment or order violated is erroneous in point of law. See valuable note, 22 Am. St. Rep. 417, 422, 423.

Distinguished in case of Electoral College, 1 Hughes, 588, F. C. 4,336, where it clearly appeared from record State court had exceeded its powers; Indianapolis Water Co. v. American Co., 75 Fed. 977, where contempts are classified, and cases in which proceedings will be considered criminal pointed out; Ex parte Gould, 99 Cal. 362, 37 Am. St. Rep. 59, 33 Pac. 1112, 21 L. R. A. 752, and Stuart v. People, 3 Scam. 404, where committing court exceeded its jurisdiction. Distinguished on statutory grounds, Wells v. Commonwealth, 21 Gratt. 504; Chappell v. Giles, 10 Wis. 102. Criticised in In re Spofford, 62 Fed. 444.

Habeas corpus.—Supreme Court will not grant writ where party has been committed for contempt by court of competent jurisdiction, p. 45.

Cited as authority for same ruling in State Supreme Court, dissenting opinion, Ex parte Hardy, 68 Ala. 335; also, Robb v. McDonald, 29 Iowa, 334, 4 Am. Rep. 214; Gorham v. Luckett, 6 B. Mon. 648, "the only inquiry, on application for writ, is whether tribunal had power to punish for contempt in any case." Cited, arguendo, dissenting opinion, Hyatt v. Allen, 54 Cal. 364, as to right to issue habeas corpus in exercise of appellate jurisdiction; dissenting opinion, Ex parte Edwards 11 Fla. 190; dissenting opinion, Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 675, 15 N. W. 644. Cited in Ex parte Rollins, 80 Va. 317; Ex parte Marx, 86 Va. 44, 9 S. E. 477, as authority for holding writ of habeas corpus cannot be used in place of writ of error. See also note, 67 Am. Dec. 397.

Distinguished in Ex parte Holman, 28 Iowa. 152, where committing court was held to have exceeded its powers; Tinsley v. Anderson, 171 U. S. 105, sustaining Supreme Court's jurisdiction on appeal from order of State court committing for contempt, where a Federal privilege was set up by the defendant.

Miscellaneous.—Cited, arguendo, dissenting opinion, Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 210, 8 L. 100, as to necessity of courts proceeding according to uniform principles; and to same effect, Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 604, 10 L. 612, and Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 626, 10 L. 626. Cited, Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 309, 32 L. 410, 9 S. Ct. 81; S. C., 13 Sawy. 468, and In re Bogart, 2 Sawy. 409, F. C. 1,596, for statement, "fact that a power may be abused forms no solid objection against its exercise." Cited in note to In re Burrus, 136 U. S. 608, 34 L. 507; In re Barry, 42 Fed. 121, F. C. 1,059, and In re Salisbury, 16 Ill. 351, as to jurisdiction of United States courts. Cited in Bethuram v. Black, 11 Bush, 632, as to discretion left with judge in issuance of writ of habeas corpus; Knapp v. Thomas, 39 Ohio St. 389, 48 Am. Rep. 469, not in point. Cited generally, Ex parte Degener, 30 Tex. App. 574, 17 S. W. 1111, as to kinds of jurisdiction.

7 Wheat. 46-58, 5 L. 393, BAYLEY v. GREENLEAF.

Equity.—The lien of vendor of real property is defeated by an alienation to a bona fide purchaser without notice, p. 50.

Cited and principle applied in Fitzgerald v. Richmond, 9 Fed. Cas. 191, holding a mortgagee for valuable consideration a bona fide purchaser as against lienholder who asserted his claim subsequent to giving of mortgage; Houston v. Stanton, 11 Ala. 423, holding assignee of note given by bona fide purchaser from vendee, may enforce collection of note as against original vendor's lien; Woody v. Fislar, 55 Ind. 594, where purchase was without notice of lien; Selby v. Stanley, 4 Minn. 76, purchase without notice of existing lien; Kilpatrick v. Kilpatrick, 23 Miss. 127, 55 Am. Dec. 81, and Boone v. Barnes, 23 Miss. 139, applying rule to purchaser at sheriff's sale; Adams v. Buchanan, 49 Mo. 70, holding purchaser under attachment proceedings comes within rule; White v. Dougherty, 1 Mart. & Yerg. 323, 17 Am. Dec. 808, to case of bona fide purchaser of personal property; Moore v. Holcombe, 3 Leigh, 600, 601, 24 Am. Dec. 685, 686, holding vendor has no lien on bonds given his vendee by purchaser from vendee after assignment to innocent third party for value. Affirmed, Poe v. Paxton, 26 W. Va. 612, in determining lien of vendor of equitable title. Cited, arguendo, Halfman v. Ellison, 51 Ala. 551. Cited without particular application of the rule, Watkins v. Wassell, 15 Ark. 86.

Modified, Dufphey v. Frenaye, 5 Stew. & P. 241, where second vendee had notice of lien before paying all of purchase price; Mitchell v. Dawson, 23 W. Va. 89, subvendee is liable after notice to extent of purchase money not paid. Distinguished, Cahoon v. Robinson, 6 Cal. 227, holding vendor of realty has lien on same for purchase price when in hands of administrator; Mounce v. Byars, 16 Ga. 477, a surety on a note given before purchase of land, is not such a creditor as may defeat vendor's lien; Eubank v. Poston, 5 T. B. Mon. 293, mortgagee with notice of lien stands in same position as purchaser with notice; Nailor v. Fisk, 27 Miss. 264, purchaser bought with notice of lien; Kelly v. Mills, 41 Miss. 274, 275, 276, 277, holding purchasers at sheriff's sale and judgment creditors are not purchasers for valuable consideration, but are mere volunteers.

Equity.—The vendor of real property, who has taken no security for purchase money, retains an equitable lien for it on land against vendee and his heirs, p. 50.

Cited and principle applied, Hardin v. Boyd, 113 U. S. 765, 28 L. 1144, 5 S. Ct. 775, holding vendor holds title in trust; Coos Bay Co. v. Crocker, 6 Sawy. 580, 4 Fed. 582, vendee is trustee of vendor in respect to purchase money; Wellborn v. Williams, 9 Ga. 88, 52 Am. Dec. 429, where excellent discussion of vendor's lien may be found; Moreton v. Harrison, 1 Bland. Ch. 498, such lien is an incident of every contract for the sale of real estate; Iglehart v. Armiger, 1 Bland Ch. 527, and lien may arise as incident to sale of equitable interest; Clowler v. Rawlings, 9 Smedes & M. 127, 47 Am. Dec. 109, holding taking personal security from vendee does not destroy lien; Parker v. Kelly, 10 Smedes & M. 191, holding further as to rights of assignee of notes given for purchase money; Bledsoe v. Games, 30 Mo. 451, holding vendor of equitable title has same lien as vendor of legal; Brinkerhoff v. Vansciven, 4 N. J. Eq. 258, and fact that vendee gave mortgage to third party for part of purchase money will not affect lien; Herbert v. Scofield, 9 N. J.

Eq. 493, if part of purchase money remains unpaid, grantor has a lien to that amount on premises sold; Maroney v. Boyle, 141 N. Y. 467, 38 Am. St. Rep. 822, 36 N. E. 512, and the mere taking of promissory note for purchase money does not waive lien; Kent v. Gerhard, 12 R. I. 94, 34 Am. Rep. 613, holding where vendee, a feme covert, gives her sole note and mortgage to secure payment, vendor does not lose his lien thereby; Manly v. Slason, 21 Vt. 279, 52 Am. Dec. 65, and a purchaser from vendee who buys knowing that some part of purchase money has not been paid, takes with notice of lien; Graves v. McCall, 1 Call, 419, affirming right of vendor to pursue lands in hands of purchaser who took with notice; Crowe v. Colbeth, 63 Wis. 646, 24 N. W. 480, where lien was enforced against heirs. Cited approvingly without particular application of the rule in Kirksey v. Mitchell, 8 Ala. 409. Cited generally, Bankhead v. Owen, 60 Ala. 466, as to nature of vendor's lien. Cited, arguendo, Godwin v. Collins, 4 Houst. 60, Colquit v. Thomas, 8 Ga. 263, as to nature of lien. Cited without application of rule, Williams v. Chapman, 17 Ill. 425, 65 Am. Dec. 671. Cited, arguendo, Fair v. Howard, 6 Nev. 315, 316, as bearing on question when mortgagee will be considered bona fide purchaser.

Distinguished in Hall v. Click, 5 Ala. 364, 39 Am. Dec. 328, and Lewis v. Ragan, 7 Gill & J. 124, 125, 28 Am. Dec. 197, where vendor took note for purchase price and assigned same without recourse, assignee has no lien; Shall v. Biscoe, 18 Ark. 158, assignee of note given by vendee to vendor for purchase money is not subrogated to vendor's lien rights; dissenting opinion, Scott v. Warren, 21 Ga. 416, holding when mortgage given for purchase money, vendor's lien no longer exists; Briggs v. Hill, 6 How. (Miss.) 364, 369, 38 Am. Dec. 442, 446, holding vendor's lien does not pass to assignee of note given for purchase price.

Criticised in McCandlish v. Keen, 13 Gratt. 622. Cited in Herring v. Cannon, 21 S. C. 217, 53 Am. Rep. 666, remarking that the principle of secret liens is contrary to the laws and policy of South Carolina. Denied in Womble v. Battle, 3 Ired. Eq. 189, holding the doctrine does not obtain in North Carolina; Frame v. Sliter, 29 Or. 130, 45 Pac. 292, 34 L. R. A. 693, nor in Oregon; Ahrend v. Odiorne, 118 Mass. 267, 19 Am. Rep. 454; McCorkle v. Montgomery, 11 Rich. Eq. 132, "the doctrine has never prevailed in South Carolina;" to same effect, dissenting opinion, Carraway v. Carraway, 27 S. C. 590, 5 S. E. 165. Denied, Smith v. Allen, 18 Wash. 6, 63 Am. St. Rep. 867, 50 Pac. 784, 39 L. R. A. 84.

Vendor's lien.—Quære, whether lien can be asserted against assignees of a bankrupt, or other creditors coming in under purchaser by act of law, p. 51, ff.

Referred to in Ex parte General Assignee, 10 Fed. Cas. 166, holding assignment by operation of law passes rights of bankrupt in same plight as he possessed them; and to same effect, In re Perdue, 19 Fed. Cas. 220, 2 Bank. Reg. 67. Cited in Webb v. Robinson, 14 Ga. 225, 226, 229, holding creditors who become such without notice of vendor's lien, and those claiming under such creditors, are protected against lien; dissenting opinion, Eubank v. Poston, 5 T. B. Mon. 301, 309, holding lien cannot be asserted against vendee's mortgage; Bank v. Stone, 80 Ky. 121, lien may be asserted against assignee in bankruptcy; Shirley v. Sugar Refinery, 2 Edw. Ch. 511, 512, 513, holding conveyance to assignee for benefit of creditors does not defeat the lien; Gann v. Chester, 5 Yerg. 209, holding lien cannot be asserted against purchaser under foreclosure sale. Cited Whiteley v. Trust Co., 76 Fed. 79, 43 U. S. App. 643, 34 L. R. A. 306, for thorough discussion of general subject. Cited, arguendo, Haskell v. Sevier, 25 Ark. 161, in determining character of lien created by unrecorded mortgage. Cited generally, Hammond v. Peyton, 34 Minn. 530, 27 N. W. 72, as to general subject; Ellis v. Singletary, 45 Tex. 40, as to rights of creditors in property covered by vendor's lien.

Equity.—Vendor of real property cannot assert his lien against creditors holding under bona fide conveyance from vendee, p. 57.

Cited and principle applied in Judson v. Corcoran, 17 How. 615, 15 L. 233, where assignee of claim against Mexico gave no information thereof until subsequent assignee had successfully prosecuted his claim before commissioners; In re Butler, 2 Hughes, 249, F. C. 2,235, where assignee of vendor's claim failed for fifteen years to assert his claim, during which time other liens were created by vendee; Bank v. Tompkins, 57 Fed. 23, 13 U. S. App. 300, where vendee, bank president, conveyed to bank; dissenting opinion, Tuttle v. Walton, 1 Ga. 64, holding corporation having secret lien on shares of stock cannot enforce same against bona fide purchaser at execution sale; Dawson v. Insurance Co., 27 Minn. 414, 8 N. W. 144, holding lien will not prevail against claim of creditor, which claim accrued subsequent to lien and without notice of it; Dunlap v. Barnett, 5 S. & M. 710, 45 Am. Dec. 271, where creditors held under mortgage from vendee; Fain v. Inman, 6 Heisk. 11, 19 Am. Rep. 580, holding vendor's equitable lien subordinate to a specific lien acquired by a creditor of vendee, with or without notice, before proceedings are instituted to enforce such equitable lien. Cited generally in Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 210, 9 L. 400, as to principle, that equitable title, prior in time, is better in right; Byers v. Fowler, 12 Ark. 285, 54 Am. Dec. 286, and Shelton v. Lewis, 27 Ark. 197, are to same effect. Cited without application, Roberts v. Broom, 1 Harr. 64. The following cite this case as authority for holding a pre-existing debt is valuable consideration for a promise: Work v. Brayton, 5 Ind. 398; Babcock v. Jordan, 24 Ind. 20, where promise was contained in a mortgage; Moore v. Fuller, 6 Or. 274, 25 Am. Rep. 526, where wife gave mortgage in satisfaction of husband's debts; dissenting opinion, Oakley v. Hibbard, 1 Pinn. 682, debts were sufficient consideration for assignment.

Distinguished in Leland v. Ship Medora, 2 Wood. & M. 116, F. C. 8,237, holding assignee by operation of law is not like assignee a purchaser for value. Modified in Chance v. McWhorter, 26 Ga. 318, holding vendor's lien is not defeated by mortgage given by vendee to secure debt contracted before purchase; Briscoe v. Bronaugh, 1 Tex. 338, 46 Am. Dec. 118, where creditor took with notice of lien. That part of opinion which seems to hold pre-existing debt is valuable consideration for transfer of property is criticised in Twelves v. Williams, 3 Whart. 493, 31 Am. Dec. 544.

Vendor's lien should be preferred to any other subsequent equal equity, unconnected with a legal advantage, or equitable advantage which gives a superior claim to the legal estate, p. 57.

Cited with approval in Butterfield v. Okie, 36 N. J. Eq. 483, holding claim of vendee's mortgagee without consideration is subordinate to vendor's lien. Cited, arguendo, Cox v. Romine, 9 Gratt. 29; Hoult v. Donahue, 21 W. Va. 300, as to conflicting equities.

Distinguished in Wells Fargo Co. v. Smith, 2 Utah, 47, where prior creditor had failed to record his lien, his rights were postponed to subsequently acquired legal rights of others.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Rice v. Rice, 36 Fed. 861, not in point. Cited in Briscoe v. Bronaugh, 1 Tex. 330, 46 Am. Dec. 112, as to whether vendor must have legal title to lot to entitle him to lien for purchase money. Cited without application in Tingle v. Fisher, 20 W. Va. 507.

7 Wheat. 58-59, 5 L. 397, BROWDER v. McARTHUR.

Practice.—The Supreme Court will not grant a rehearing in a cause after it has been remitted to the court below, p. 58.

Rule affirmed and followed in Peck v. Sanderson, 18 How. 42, 15 L. 262; Bushnell v. Crooke Co., 150 U. S. 83, 37 L. 1007, 14 S. Ct. 22, an application for rehearing cannot be entertained after expiration of term at which judgment rendered; Lovett v. Florida, 29 Fla. 401, 11 So. 179, 16 L. R. A. 316, appellate court loses jurisdiction after remittitur issues and is lodged in lower court; Merchants' Bank v. Grunthal, 39 Fla. 394, 22 So. 687, is to same effect; Kingsbury v. Buckner, 70 Ill. 517, former adjudication is conclusive on second appeal as to points decided; Stationery Co. v. Hentig, 31 Kan. 323, motion for rehearing will not be entertained when made in second term after decision was rendered; Carr v. Green, Rich. Eq. Cas. 409, Court of Appeals will grant rehearing only on newly-discovered evidence. Cited, arguendo, in Noonan v. Bradley, 12 Wall. 129, 20 L. 281, stating an exception in case of fraud; Tyler v. Magwire, 17 Wall. 283, 21 L. 583. Approved, arguendo, in Poole v. Nixon, 19 Fed. Cas. 1000. See note, 21 Am. Dec. 119.

Modification suggested in Legg v. Overbagh, 4 Wend. 193, 21 Am. Dec. 118, if remittitur is irregularly obtained or erroneously entered. Approved generally in Chambers v. Hodges, 3 Tex. 529, but court is not prevented from declaring a judgment void in a case not legally before it.

Appeal and error.— On second appeal of same cause Supreme Court will not inquire into merits of original decree, p. 59.

Principle applied by the following citing cases: Washington Bridge Co. v. Stewart, 3 How. 426, 11 L. 664, holding after case has been decided upon its merits and remanded, it is too late on second appeal to allege court had no jurisdiction to try first appeal; Sizer v. Many, 16 How. 103, 14 L. 863, holding, where appeal was taken from order of Circuit Court fixing costs, Supreme Court will not look to original appeal for purpose of acquiring jurisdiction; Supervisors v. Kennicott, 94 U. S. 499, 24 L. 260, whatever has been decided in Supreme Court on appeal cannot be re-examined on a subsequent appeal of same case; Bissell Co. v. Goshen Co., 72 Fed. 553, 43 U. S. App. 41, holding like rule applies in Circuit Court of Appeals; Semple v. Anderson, 4 Gilm. 562, holding State Supreme Court will not go back of its former adjudication in same case, even though it acted without jurisdiction on first hearing; Hobson v. Doe, 4 Blackf. 490, where court refused to consider errors alleged to have happened prior to former judgment. Cited, arguendo, Ex parte Sibbald, 12 Pet. 492, 9 L. 1169. Cited, application not clear, in Kingsbury v. Buckner, 134 U. S. 671, 33 L. 1055, 10 S. Ct. 645. Cited generally in Dodge v. Gaylord, 53 Ind. 369, as to where decision of Supreme Court becomes law of case.

Miscellaneous.— Cited in Metcalf v. Watertown, 68 Fed. 861, 34 U. S. App. 107, not in point.

7 Wheat. 59-122, 5 L. 398, RICARD v. WILLIAMS.

Possession of land by party, claiming it as his own in fee, is prima facie evidence of his ownership and seizin of the inheritance, p. 105.

Cited and rule applied in Milsap v. Stone, 2 Colo. 139, in action of ejectment; Mason v. Park, 3 Scam. 533, holding this is sufficient proof of ownership to maintain ejectment or trespass for injury to inheritance; Davis v. Easley, 13 Ill. 198, 200, holding further as to evidence admissible to show possession; Gosselin v. Smith, 154 Ill. 78, 39 N. E. 981, and such title will descend; McFarlane v. Ray, 14 Mich. 471, these facts are prima facie evidence of title as against one who shows no right in himself; Dale v. Faivre, 43 Mo. 557, this gives sufficient title to maintain ejectment against one claiming under possession alone; Roebke v. Andrews, 26 Wis. 318, 340, holding as to admission in evidence of declarations made by possessor during possession, relative to title; explained in dissenting opinion, S. C. p. 340. Cited in Winchester v. Stevens Point, 58 Wis. 358, 17 N. W. 549, as authority for holding possession is evidence of seizin. Approved without particular application of the rule to question at issue, Brooks v. Bruyn, 18 Ill. 542, 68 Am. Dec. 581; White v. Loring, 24 Pick. 322. Cited in Straw v. Jones, 9 N. H. 402, as to necessity of possession being continuous; Southampton v. Mecox Bay Co., 116 N. Y. 16, 22 N. E. 392, without particular application. Note, 60 Am. Dec. 602.

Adverse possession.—Mere possession evidences no more than present occupation by right, p. 106.

Cited and principle applied in Kirk v. Smith, 9 Wheat. 288, 6 L. 92, holding to give title possession must be adverse; Stillman v. White Rock Co., 3 Wood. & M. 549, F. C. 13,446, possession to be adverse must be consistent with the idea of a deed, or raise presumption of one; Spalding v. Grigg, 4 Ga. 87, permissive possession cannot affect title; Grube v. Wells, 34 Iowa, 150, entry without color or claim of right does not set statute of limitations in motion; Arnold v. Stevens, 24 Pick. 111, 35 Am. Dec. 308, there can be no presumption of a regrant of a profit from possession by owner not inconsistent with rights of grantee; McDonald v. Fox, 20 Nev. 371, 22 Pac. 236, holding where party occupies land up to a fence, believed to be on the boundary line, his occupation is not adverse if his intent is to occupy to boundary line only; Cobb v. Davenport, 32 N. J. L. 385, to incorporeal hereditament; Bedell v. Shaw, 59 N. Y. 50, and the quality and extent of right acquired by possession depends on the claim accompanying it; Draper v. Monroe, 18 R. I. 401, 28 Atl. 341, where there were no acts on part of claimant of title by adverse possession which were inconsistent with permissive occupation. Cited, arguendo, dissenting opinion, Stafford v. Watson, 41 Ark. 31, bare possession is prima facie evidence of right to possession; Lancey v. Brock, 110 Ill. 615, holding as to presumptions arising from subsequent possession when prior possessor did not hold under claim of ownership. Cited generally in Walsh v. McIntire, 68 Md. 418, 13 Atl. 351, and White v. Keller, 114 Mo. 484, 21 S. W. 861, as to nature of possession which must be shown in order to base title on adverse possession; arguendo, Stark v. Smith, 5 Ohio, 456, as to when mere length of possession will be considered evidence of title; generally on this point in McKinney v. Daniel, 90 Va. 704, 19 S. E. 881.

Distinguished in Bradstreet v. Huntington, 5 Pet. 445, 8 L. 186, where grantee of tenant in common entered into possession claiming whole estate; Skipwith v. Martin, 50 Ark. 154, 6 S. W. 518, where possessor claimed in fee; Magee v. Magee, 37 Miss. 154, where jury inferred adverse possession from other acts taken in connection with possession.

Evidence.— Possession not proved to be wrongful will be presumed to be lawful, p. 107.

Principle applied in Burke v. Negro Joe, 6 Gill. & J. 143, an act will be presumed to be lawful when the commencement is not proved to be wrongful; McEwen v. Portland, 1 Or. 302, and title given thereby must prevail until complainants show a better one. Cited generally in Roberts v. Richards, 84 Me. 9, 24 Atl. 427, as to presumption of possession being in subordination to true title; with approval in Orr v. Hollidays, 9 B. Mon. 60, as to lessors in action of ejectment.

Adverse possession.— A disseizor cannot qualify his own wrong, p. 107.

Cited, arguendo, to this point in Carpenter v. Webster, 27 Cal. 562.

Evidence.— Presumptions of a grant arising from lapse of time are applied to corporeal as well as incorporeal hereditaments, p. 109.

Cited and rule applied in Fletcher v. Fuller, 120 U. S. 547, 30 L. 762, 7 S. Ct. 674, to corporeal hereditament; Williams v. Nelson, 23 Pick. 144, 34 Am. Dec. 48, where easement was presumed from twenty years' flowage of the land of another; Hanes v. Peck, Mart. & Y. 232, 233, "court will instruct jury to presume grant from long-continued and uninterrupted possession;" Hale v. Marshall, 14 Gratt. 494, a party in possession claiming under an equitable title for twenty-five years may be presumed to have received a conveyance of legal title. Cited generally in Jenkins v. Pye, 12 Pet. 262, 9 L. 1079, as to force that will be given to presumptions. Approved but not applied in United States v. Chaves, 159 U. S. 464, 40 L. 220, 16 S. Ct. 62; Arnold v. Stevens, 24 Pick. 110, 35 Am. Dec. 308. Cited generally in Warfield v. Lindell, 30 Mo. 289, 77 Am. Dec. 622, as to reasons for rule; and to same effect, Downing v. Pickering, 15 N. H. 349. Cited in discussion as to doctrine of presumptions in Jackson v. Schaubert, 7 Cow. 199; also in Schauber v. Jackson, 2 Wend. 47, and Jackson v. Mancius, 2 Wend. 363. Cited in reviewing authorities on doctrine of presumption of grant arising from lapse of time, Blake v. Davis, 20 Ohio, 242; also Caul v. Spring, 2 Watts, 396. Cited generally in Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 206, as to grounds on which rest presumption of grant; to same effect, Edwards v. Van Bibber, 1 Leigh, 194.

Grant.— Presumption of, cannot arise where claim is of such nature as to be at variance with supposition of, p. 110.

Cited and rule affirmed in Ransdale v. Grove, 4 McLean, 285, F. C. 11,570, where under facts it appeared claimant acquired title from another source; Jackson v. Porter, 1 Paine, 467, F. C. 7,143, where occupant claimed title from Indians who were able to grant no more than a possessory interest; McClaskey v. Barr, 47 Fed. 163, evidence showed that within period of statute of limitations claimants had sought to purchase title; Nelson v. Butterfield, 21 Me. 235, where servient tenant cannot maintain suit to prevent act, a grant cannot be presumed; Snoddy v. Kreutch, 3 Head, 305, where claimant of title through adverse possession did not show possession of disputed land; Smith v. Higbee, 12 Vt. 124, where title is claimed from a deed which is shown to be void, it will not be presumed there was an independent grant; Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 193, where surrounding circumstances were inconsistent with supposition of grant. Cited in note, 11 Wheat. 318, 6 L. 485. Cited generally in Edson v. Munsell, 10 Allen, 569, as to conditions which must be shown in order to warrant a jury to presume a grant; Wallace v. Minor, 7 Ohio, 250, holding patent cannot be presumed where proper records contain no evidence or indication of a grant having been made; Taylor v. Watkins, 26 Tex. 693, without particular application.

Grant.—In general, presumption of, is limited to periods analogous to those of statute of limitations, in cases where statute does not apply, p. 110.

Rule applied, Union Water Co. v. Crary, 25 Cal. 509, 85 Am. Dec. 149, holding a presumption of grant arises from five years' continued adverse possession and use of water; Williams v. Turner, 7 Ga. 353, where limitation period of statute was followed; Burdick v. Heivly, 23 Iowa, 514, from ten years' actual adverse possession and use of premises, grant will be presumed; House v. Montgomery, 19 Mo. App. 179, 180, in determining length of time required to acquire an easement by prescription; Wallace v. Fletcher, 30 N. H. 447, 448, an adverse, exclusive and uninterrupted enjoyment for twenty years of an incorporeal hereditament affords a conclusive presumption of a grant; Rogers v. Mabe, 4 Dev. 189, 190, grant will be presumed from twenty years' possession of land as owner; Cornett v. Rhudy, 80 Va. 714, holding, as to things incorporeal, twenty years' adverse, exclusive, undisturbed possession affords conclusive presumption of title; to same effect, Rogerson v. Shepherd, 33 W. Va. 315, 10 S. E. 635, collecting authorities. Cited in general discussion of subject, Fletcher v. Fuller, 120 U. S. 550, 30 L. 764, 7 S. Ct. 676; also in Roundtree v. Brantley, 34 Ala. 552, 73 Am. Dec. 471, as to period of adverse enjoyment required to give right to easement. Cited without particular application, Fitzhugh v. Crogan, 2 J. J. Marsh. 436, 19 Am. Dec. 146, in discussion of legal presumptions; Hunt v. Hunt, 3 Met. 185, 37 Am. Dec. 134. Cited, arguendo, Edson v. Munsell, 10 Allen, 567.

Evidence.—Where other circumstances are very cogent and full, a grant may be presumed within a period short of the statute of limitations, p. 110.

Apparently doubted, Gilman v. Tilton, 5 N. H. 233, holding adverse user of water for period short of twenty years, is not, of itself, sufficient ground to sustain presumption of a grant.

Executors and administrators.—Purchaser from an administrator enters into land by operation of law, so that he is under the estate of the intestate, p. 114.

Cited and principle applied, Crandall v. Gallup, 12 Conn. 376, holding there is no privity between administrator and purchaser under sale by order of court. Cited, arguendo, Covell v. Weston, 20 Johns. 420; McPherson v. Cunliff, 11 Serg. & R. 427, 14 Am. Dec. 648, in general discussion of estoppels.

Executors and administrators.—As long as administration legally subsists or may be granted, power to subject lands to payments of decedent's debts continues if land remains in heirs' possession, and it is not defeated simply by an alienation or disseizin of the heirs, p. 114.

Quoted on this point, Florida, etc., Co. v. Finlayson, 91 Fed. 16, enforcing a judgment against land in possession of heirs of the debtor.

Administrators.—Power of, to sell realty for payment of debts, in Connecticut, must be exercised within a reasonable time, to be fixed by analogy to statute of limitations, pp. 115, 117.

Cited and principle applied, Mays v. Rogers, 37 Ark. 160, holding a delay for ten years unreasonable; Roth v. Holland, 56 Ark. 637, 639, 35 Am. St. Rep. 129, 131, 20 S. W. 522, 523, an unexcused delay of seven years is unreasonable; Griswold v. Bigelow, 6 Conn. 265, 267, 268, holding, where creditor sought to take advantage of his lien within a year after his claim accrued, there was no laches, and power of administrator is not defeated by alienation by heir or devisee; Wooster v. Hunt's Co., 38 Conn. 260, 261, creditors by laches waived right to compel sale; Dorman v. Lane, 1 Gilm. 147, where administrator, being creditor, neglected for fifteen years to apply for power to sell intestates' realty; Unknown Heirs v. Baker, 23 Ill. 437, creditor who fails to prosecute his claim within seven years waives his right; State v. Probate Court, 40 Minn. 300, 41 N. W. 1034, application to sell, made after lapse of ten years, held properly refused; Mooers v. White, 6 Johns. Ch. 387, one year after administrator has entered on the execution of his trust will, generally, be considered a reasonable time; Ward v. Barrows, 2 Ohio St. 251, holding power given executor by will to sell land becomes legally inoperative, when estate is settled or all claims presumptively settled. Cited, arguendo, Hall v. Brewer, 40 Ark. 443, as to respective rights of vendee of heir and creditor of estate. Cited generally, McCoy v. Nichols, 4 How. (Miss.) 39, as to right of administrator, when twenty years have elapsed after a decree, to take steps in relation thereto which will prejudice the interest of the heir, or persons holding under him. Cited without particular application, Hatch v. Kelly, 63 N. H. 31. Cited, generally, Lliddel v. McVickar, 11 N. J. L. 56, 19 Am. Dec. 381, holding each case must, in some measure, depend on its own circumstances. Cited generally, McPherson v. Cunliff, 11 Serg. & R. 440, 14 Am. Dec. 662, in discussion of power to attack, collaterally, sales of Orphans' Court. Reason for rule approved, Porter v. Cocke, Peck, 47, in construction of Tennessee statute of limitations. Cited, Hickman v. Gaither, 2 Yerg. 204, application not clear; McCoy v. Morrow, 18 Ill. 526, 68 Am. Dec. 581, where from failure to prosecute claim within reasonable time, creditor was held to have waived lien as against purchaser from heirs. Note, 26 Am. St. Rep. 26.

Descent.—In general, entry of one heir inures to benefit of all, but one may disseize coheirs and hold adversely, p. 120.

Cited and principle applied in Westenfelder v. Green, 76 Fed. 928, where guardian of certain heirs entered, claiming exclusive title in his wards; Vaughan v. Bacon, 15 Me. 457, 33 Am. Dec. 628, holding the relinquishment by disseizor to one of several cotenants of all right of seizin, has the effect to put all tenants in common in seizin and possession of their shares respectively; Bird v. Bird, 40 Me. 403, and Warfield v. Lindell, 38 Mo. 581, 90 Am. Dec. 449, applying rule to possession by one cotenant; Jackson v. Brink, 5 Cow. 484, where cotenant after acquiring possession by notorious acts asserted entire estate; Clapp v. Bromagham, 9 Cow. 555, 577, where one cotenant entered claiming the whole; Caperton v. Gregory, 11 Gratt. 508, entry by one coparcener claiming entire estate. Cited generally, as authority for rule, Hoffman v. Beard, 22 Mich. 65, application vague; also, Lambert v. Blumenthal, 26 Mo. 474. Approved without particular application, Clark v. Wood, 34 N. H. 453. Cited, arguendo, La Frombois v. Jackson, 8 Cow. 619, 18 Am. Dec. 486. Cited generally, Jones v. Porter, 3 Penn. & W. 135, as to extent of possession by entry under deed conveying part only.

Adverse possession.—Ouster or disseizin will not be presumed from mere fact of sole possession, p. 121.

Principle applied, M'Kneely v. Terry, 61 Ark. 541, 33 S. W. 956, mere taking of rents by one tenant does not show ouster of cotenants; Squires v. Clark, 17 Kan. 87, applying rule to possession of one cotenant; Edwards v. Bishop, 4 N. Y. 64, 65, holding a tenant in common, in order to maintain ejectment against his cotenant, must show an actual denial of his title by cotenant. Cited generally, Owen v. Morton, 24 Cal. 376, in determining what amounts to ouster of cotenant. Approved without particular application, Munroe v. Luke, 1 Met. 471. Cited generally, Dubois v. Campau, 28 Mich. 318, where question was presented as to kind of presumption arising from possession by one cotenant, who gave leases and received rents, for more than twenty years, with knowledge of cotenant.

Qualified, Oglesby v. Hollister, 76 Cal. 141, 9 Am. St. Rep. 180, 18 Pac. 148, holding jury is warranted in inferring ouster from exclusive possession by one tenant in common for great number of years, without accounting to cotenant. Distinguished, Parker v. Proprietors, etc., 3 Mct. 102, 37 Am. Dec. 125, where one tenant in common granted whole estate, the deed of which was recorded, and cotenants did not set up claim until after statute of limitations had run; Gray v. Darby, Mart. & Y. 423, where one holding under void deed but claiming the fee, was held to disseize real owner.

Liens.—Creditors of an intestate have a lien on the intestate's land which may be enforced through the instrumentality of the administrator acting through Court of Probate, p. 121.

Cited to this point, but without particularly applying this rule, Crandall v. Gallup, 12 Conn. 374. Cited, arguendo, Davis v. Vansands, 45 Conn. 602.

Miscellaneous.—Cited as to pleadings, Lull v. Davis, 1 Mich. 81, 82, without particular application. Cited, Thorpe v. Corwin, 20 N. J. L. 319, not in point; Bogardus v. Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. 743, and Gibblehouse v. Stong, 3 Rawle, 452, to what point not clear; Duke v. Thompson, 16 Ohio, 48, not in point. Cited generally, in Martin v. Robinson, 67 Tex. 380, 3 S. W. 556, and Jackson v. Astor, 1 Pinn. 162, 39 Am. Dec. 294, as to power of appellate court to review proceedings of Probate Court. Cited, dissenting opinion, Oakley v. Hibbard, 1 Pinn. 681, not in point. Cited, but not in point, Link v. Doerfer, 42 Wis. 395, 24 Am. Rep. 420.

7 Wheat. 122-157, 5 L. 414, BOULDIN v. MASSIE'S HEIRS.

Public lands.—Patent issued on military warrant, under Virginia law, is prima facie evidence that every prerequisite of law was complied with, p. 151.

Cited and principle applied, Bagnell v. Broderick, 13 Pet. 448, 10 L. 241, holding in action at law the patent is conclusive; People v. Mauran, 5 Den. 398, patent is prima facie evidence that all things preliminary have been complied with.

Evidence.—A public officer may prove that, according to invariable practice of his office, certain official entries made could only have been made upon the production of a written instrument, the existence of which is now the subject of dispute, p. 153.

Rule applied in State v. Mayor, 52 Md. 422, holding such proof sufficient to show that vouchers once existed, on which it is shown payments were made.

Presumptions.—An assignment of a land warrant may be presumed from surrounding circumstances, p. 156.

Cited in McArthur v. Gallaher, 8 Ohio, 518, as containing discussion of general subject. Cited without particular application, Stark v. Smith, 5 Ohio, 457.

Evidence.—When patent is issued on assignment of warrant, which is lost, same proof of its existence is not required as if part of title, p. 156.

Cited in Edgell v. Conaway, 24 W. Va. 754, in determining evidence necessary to show loss or destruction of a document, before secondary evidence of its contents is admissible.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Brush v. Ware, 15 Pet. 107, 10 L. 678, and Kittridge v. Breaud, 4 Rob. (La.) 83, 39 Am. Dec. 516, to effect that patent under Virginia law conveys legal title, but leaves equities open. Cited, Doe v. Eslava, 9 How. 447, 13 L. 210, not in point.

7 Wheat. 158-163, 5 L. 423, WATTS v. LINDSEY'S HEIRS.

Equity.—It is a rule of equity, as well as of law, that party must recover on strength of his own title, and not on weakness of adversary's, p. 161.

Rule reaffirmed, Hogan v. Kurtz, 94 U. S. 775, 24 L. 319, action of ejectment; Lake Superior Co. v. Cunningham, 44 Fed. 832, where defendant in ejectment attacked plaintiff's title; Lingan v. Henderson, 1 Bland Ch. 249, and if facts stated in bill are not sufficient, complaint cannot resort to extraneous matter to supply defect; Grand Gulf Ry. Co. v. Bryan, 8 Smedes & M. 265, and where plaintiff relies on equitable title he must show perfect equitable title; Huntington v. Allen, 44 Miss. 662, and Griffin v. Harrison, 52 Miss. 826, in action to quiet title.

Public lands.—Valid entry must be such that objects called for are so described, or so notorious, that others, by using reasonable diligence, can readily find them, p. 161.

Rule cited with approval, McNeel v. Herold, 11 Gratt. 314, 316.

Evidence.—One witness cannot prove existence of fact by notoriety or general reputation, pp. 162, 163.

Cited in note, 18 Am. Rep. 207, to this point.

7 Wheat. 164-211, 5 L. 425, MATTHEWS v. ZANE.

Public lands.—No sale of public land can take place in absence of a receiver, p. 205.

Cited with approval, Groom v. Hill, 9 Mo. 325 (322), holding unavailing an application to register and deposit of money with him in absence of receiver.

Appeal and error.—In error to State court alleging a decision against a title claimed under Federal law, Supreme Court can examine only that title, not other equities creating new title, p. 206.

Cited, arguendo, Magwire v. Tyler, 47 Mo. 126.

Statutory construction.—A statute, for commencement of which no time is fixed, is operative from its date, p. 211.

The following citing cases affirm and apply this rule: Lapeyre v. United States, 17 Wall 198, 21 L. 608, holding act took effect from time it was officially attested by president of United States; United States v. Chong Sam, 47 Fed. 883, is to same effect; Salmon v. Burgess, 1 Hughes, 359, F. C. 12,262, and date is reckoned from hour president's signature was affixed; Seymour v. State, 51 Ala. 54, to act licensing peddlers; McGinnis v. Egbert, 8 Colo. 51, 5 Pac. 658, to act fixing time for commencement of annual period for unpatented claims; Smets v. Thomas, Charl. (Ga.) 537, and Heard v. Heard, 8 Ga. 384, to statute regulating procedure; Coal Co. v. Barber, 47 Kan. 30, 27 Pac. 115, holding where statute affects an act done on same day statute went into effect, the exact hour of publication may be shown; Commonwealth v. Brooks, 109 Mass. 357, applying rule to city ordinance; Ex parte De Hay, 3 S. C. 565, to act changing bounds of judicial district. Cited, arguendo, Taylor v. Brown, 147 U. S. 643, 37 L. 314, 13 S. Ct. 551, in determining from what date time should be computed in construing act forbidding alienation of lands by Indians for period of five years; In re Ankrim, 3 McLean, 285, F. C. 395, where question was raised whether petition for discharge in bankruptcy filed on day bankruptcy act was repealed was effectual. Cited generally, United States v. Collier, 3 Blatchf. 339, F. C. 14,833, in discussion of effect of later acts on prior, with which it is inconsistent; The Hiawatha, Blatchf. Pr. Cas. 5, F. C. 6,451, without particular application. Approved without application, Parkinson v. State, 14 Md. 200, 74 Am. Dec. 533. Cited, Leschi v. Washington, 1 Wash. Ter. 17, application not clear.

Distinguished, Martin v. Berry, 37 Cal. 218, and Temple v. Hayes, Morris, 10, on ground that time was fixed by act. Modified, Parkinson v. Brandenburg, 35 Minn. 295, 59 Am. Rep. 326, 28 N. W. 919, holding, in computing time when statute went into effect, day of its passage is to be excluded.

Miscellaneous.—Cited generally, Warren Co. v. Insurance Co., 2 Paine. 517, F. C. 17,206, as to effect of retroactive statutes; Lewis v. Lewis, 9 Mo. 190 (189), 43 Am. Dec. 546, as to jurisdiction of State courts regarding pre-emption of public lands. Note, 91 Am. Dec. 197, as to judgment of State courts reviewable by United States Supreme Court.

7 Wheat. 212-218, 5 L. 437, HOOFNAGLE v. ANDERSON.

Public lands.—Patent cures any defects in preliminary steps required by law as conditions precedent to issuance of, p. 214.

Cited and rule applied, Spencer v. Lapsley, 20 How. 272, 15 L. 906, where irregularities were alleged as to the survey; dissenting opinion, Doolan v. Carr, 125 U. S. 636, 31 L. 851, 8 S. Ct. 1237, the majority holding want of power in officer of land office to issue patent may be shown in action at law by extrinsic evidence; Noble v. Union River R. R. Co., 147 U. S. 175, 37 L. 127, 13 S. Ct. 274, holding conclusive the decision of secretary of interior, in exercise of his power, that designated railway company is entitled to right of way over public land; Janes v. Wilkinson, 2 Kan. App. 369, 42 Pac. 738, holding patent erroneously issued, while voidable by government, cannot be attacked by naked possessor of land; Bruckner v. Lawrence, 1 Doug. 33, where question was raised as to mistakes in survey on which patent was based; Hammond v. St. Louis Schools, 8 Mo. 83, where principle is applied to claim of title confirmed by congress; Thomas v. White, 2 Ohio St. 549, where entry and survey was irregular; White v. Allen, 3 Or. 111, holding objections to mode of proofs and other preliminary steps are of no force after issuance of patent; Todd v. Fisher, 26 Tex. 242, to patent issued for State lands by commissioner of land office; Horsky v. Moran, 53 Pac. 1067, holding town-site patent could not be collaterally attacked by holder of placer claim who had not perfected his title. Cited generally, St. Louis Smelting Co. v. Green, 4 McCrary, 235, 13 Fed. 210, as authority for rule, in action of ejectment patent cannot be attacked collaterally; Silver Bow Co. v. Clark, 5 Mont. 425, 5 Pac. 582, in discussion of effect of rulings of land department where it has acted beyond its jurisdiction.

Distinguished, Chamberlain v. Marshall, 8 Fed. 409, where patent was issued without authority of law; also, Lake Superior Canal Co. v. Cunningham, 44 Fed. 839, following view of majority in Doolan v. Carr, supra; Mantle v. Noyes, 5 Mont. 294, 5 Pac. 864, where patent was issued for lands which had previously been sold.

Public lands.—Equity will never sustain an entry as against an earlier patent, for the patent appropriates the land it covers and it is no longer subject to location and the government alone can attack a patent for irregularity, p. 215.

Cited to this point, dissenting opinion, Doolan v. Carr, 125 U. S. 636, 31 L. 851, 8 S. Ct. 1237, majority permitting evidence of want of authority in land office agent to issue patent; Horsky v. Moran, 53 Pac. 1067, holding town site patent not attackable collaterally by holder of placer claim who had not perfected his title.

Public lands.—Equity considers entry as the commencement of title, pp. 215, 217.

Cited and applied in Parker v. Wallace, 3 Ohio, 494, holding, rights acquired by senior entry will be aided in equity against elder patent on junior entry; Price v. Johnston, 1 Ohio St. 392, entry made in name of deceased person is void; Stubblefield v. Boggs, 2 Ohio St. 218, holding, by entry, an equitable estate of inheritance vests in person in whose name entry is made. Cited generally, Tal- bott v. King, 6 Mont. 108, 9 Pac. 442, as authority for rule that patent is given operation by relation at date of initiatory step.

Public lands.— Patent is title from its date, and is conclusive against all those whose rights did not commence previous to its emanation, p. 217.

Cited and explained, Stringer v. Young, 3 Pct. 341, 7 L. 700, but apparently no application; United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 732, 8 L. 562, application not clear. Cited generally, Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 645, 26 L. 878, holding patent duly executed for lands which land department was authorized to convey, cannot be collaterally impeached in action at law; Porter v. Robb, 7 Ohio, 210, and Decourt v. Sproul, 66 Tex. 372, 1 S. W. 339, after patent is issued land is no longer unappropriated. Cited in discussion, M'Clung v. Hughes, 5 Rand. 471, as to when equity will afford relief against fraud in acquiring legal title.

Distinguished, Stephens v. M'Cargo, 9 Wheat. 510, 511, 6 L. 147, 148, and Lindsey v. Miller, 6 Pet. 677, 8 L. 542, where rights arose prior to issuance of patent; Brush v. Ware, 15 Pet. 106, 10 L. 677, where equitable right arose prior to issuance of patent, and patentee had notice thereof.

Miscellaneous.— Cited, Galloway v. Finley, 12 Pet. 298, 9 L. 1093, not in point; Nisewanger v. Wallace, 16 Ohio, 559, to what point not clear; Kimmell v. Wheeler, 22 Tex. 85, as to nature of right given holder of certificate permitting him to locate certain public lands.

7 Wheat. 218-248, 5 L. 438, BROWN v. JACKSON.

Spanish land claims.— Decision of commissioners under act of congress, providing indemnity to claimants to public lands, are conclusive between parties in cases within jurisdiction of commissioners, p. 244.

Cited and principle applied, McConnell v. Wilcox, 1 Scam. 351, and Smiley v. Sampson, 1 Neb. 70, to decision of register and receiver of land office. Cited generally, Bruckner v. Lawrence, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 37, as to conclusiveness of patent as evidence of title.

Miscellaneous.— Cited, Sanford v. Cloud, 17 Fla. 569, not in point.

7 Wheat. 248-283, 5 L. 446, BLUNT v. SMITH.

Practice.— Decision of court below, granting or refusing new trial, is not reviewable on writ of error, p. 272.

Cited and approved, Pomeroy v. Bank, 1 Wall. 598, 17 L. 640, "no exception lies to overruling motion for new trial;" Ewing v. Howard, 7 Wall. 502, 19 L. 295, motion is addressed to discretion of trial court. Cited as authority for like rule in State Supreme Court, State v. Hunt, 4 La. Ann. 439; also, State v. Brette, 6 La. Ann. 660; Law v. Merrills, 6 Wend. 278, and Smith v. United States, 1 Wash. Ter. 274. Cited generally, Stafford v. Walker, 12 Serg. & R. 196, in discussion of bill of exceptions.

Modified in Welch v. County, 29 W. Va. 68, 1 S. E. 340, holding rule, that matters of discretion are not subject to review, only applies to matters which are purely discretionary. Distinguished in Goldsby v. Robertson, 1 Blackf. 22, holding like rule does not obtain in State Supreme Court.

Evidence.—Official copies of papers belonging to the title of the parties taken from office where regularly kept, and duly authenticated, are admissible in evidence, p. 273.

Ejectment.—In Tennessee, courts of law permit parties in ejectment to go back to original entry, and connect the patent with it, p. 273.

Cited as an exception to general rule, Arnold v. Grimes, 2 G. Greene, 84.

Miscellaneous.—Cited generally, in note to GrosLouis v. Northcut, 3 Or. 399, application not clear.

7 Wheat. 283-355, 5 L. 454, THE SANTISSIMA TRINIDAD.

International law.—In general, the commission of a public ship is conclusive proof of her national character, not examinable by a foreign court, p. 336.

Principle applied in State v. Crawford, 28 Fla. 492, 10 So. 124, 14 L. R. A. 259, holding public seal proves itself.

Distinguished, United States v. Bartlett, 2 Ware (Dav.), 16, F. C. 14,532, holding opposite party is not concluded from proving falsity or illegality of ship's papers.

International law.—The political department having recognized the belligerency of Buenos Ayres in its struggle for independence from Spain, the judiciary is bound thereby, p. 137.

Cited and principle applied, United States v. One Hundred Barrels, 27 Fed. Cas. 293, holding the political department alone has power to decide the status of a State, or its inhabitants, as to a condition of hostility against the Federal government; United States v. One Thousand Bales, 27 Fed. Cas. 328, to same effect; Thornburg v. Harris, 3 Cold. 169, in determining whether a de facto government existed in the Confederate States.

Cited in general discussion, dissenting opinion, Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 57, 12 L. 605. Cited generally, as authority for rule, United States v. Tropic Wind, 28 Fed. Cas. 221. Cited, arguendo, Mosely v. Tuthill, 45 Ala. 650, 6 Am. Rep. 716; Perkins v. Rogers, 35 Ind. 156, 9 Am. Rep. 664, status of a country as to peace or war is determined by the political and not the judicial department of government. Cited, arguendo, Wright v. Overall, 2 Cold. 341.

International law.—Declaration by one government of determination to remain neutral between parties engaged in war, is equivalent to recognizing them as belligerent nations, and entitles each to all the sovereign rights of war against the other, p. 337.

Cited and applied in Prize Cases, 2 Black, 669, 17 L. 477, to action of Great Britain with reference to civil war in United States; Ford v. Surget, 97 U. S. 613, 24 L. 1024, and it is not necessary that the independence of the revolting nation be recognized; Dole v. Insurance Co., 2 Cliff. 427, F. C. 3,966, in determining whether crews of ships of one belligerent nation should be considered pirates; Schooner Chapman, 4 Sawy. 512, F. C. 2,602, holding a vessel representing Confederate States government cannot be considered as fitted out for the commission of acts of piracy; Martin v. Hortin, 1 Bush, 632, and Smith v. Brazelton, 1 Heisk. 58, 64, 2 Am. Rep. 684, 688, where principle is applied in determining whether Confederates were entitled to right of belligerents. Cited, Miller v. United States, 11 Wall. 307, 20 L. 145, without particular application; Williams v. Bruffy, 96 U. S. 190, 24 L. 720, in discussion of rights of belligerents. Cited generally, The Hiawatha, Blatchf. Pr. 10, F. C. 6,451, as to rights, in regard to neutral powers, of government engaged in war to subdue insurrection of its own subjects. Cited in The Ambrose Light, 25 Fed. 429, as to necessity of recognition by some established government, before insurgents are entitled to rights of belligerents; dissenting opinion, Price v. Poynter, 1 Bush, 391, the majority holding the capture of horses for use of Confederate army by branch of army was a lawful exercise of belligerent rights; note, 91 Am. Dec. 280.

Evidence.—Where a witness falsifies a fact, in respect to which he cannot be presumed liable to mistake, courts are bound to apply maxim, falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus, p. 339.

Cited with approval, American Telephone Co. v. Peoples' Co., 22 Blatchf. 552, 22 Fed. 324, where witness testified falsely as to his pecuniary condition; Campbell v. State, 3 Kan. 498, holding refusal to instruct jury to this effect is error; Gillet v. Wimer, 23 Mo. 79, whenever testimony calls for such instruction, the court ought to give it; Paulette v. Brown, 40 Mo. 57, is to same effect; Dell v. Oppenheimer, 9 Neb. 457, 4 N. W. 53, where witness testified falsely as to rate of interest charged on loan made by him; Stoffer v. State, 15 Ohio St. 56, 86 Am. Dec. 477, holding, under such circumstances, court should instruct jury to reject entire testimony of witness so testifying. Approved generally, Skipper v. State, 59 Ga. 65; Callanan v. Shaw, 24 Iowa, 447, but maxim is applied only where witness willfully and knowingly gives false testimony; to same effect, Deering v. Metcalf, 74 N. Y. 506, where authorities are collected. Cited without particular application, People v. Chapleau, 121 N. Y. 276, 24 N. E. 472. See note, 81 Am. Dec. 270.

Modified, Moore v. Jones, 13 Ala. 304, application of rule should be made by jury; Lehman v. Marshall, 47 Ala. 377, province of determining credibility of a witness rests with jury; State v. Williams,

2 Jones (N. C.), 268, in common-law trial maxim is to be applied by jury, and is not rule by which judge may withdraw testimony from their consideration; to same effect, Mead v. McGraw, 19 Ohio St. 64. Cited, State v. Sexton, 10 S. Dak. 131, but held that maxim is inapplicable in absence of any motive or intent to deceive. Distinguished, Buffalo County v. Van Sickle, 16 Neb. 368, 20 N. W. 263, on ground that false statement of witness was not knowingly and willfully false; also in Pease v. Smith, 61 N. Y. 484, on same ground.

International law.—The sending of armed vessels, or of munitions of war, from a neutral country to a belligerent port, is not contrary to the law of the United States, nor to the law of nations, p. 340.

Cited with approval, in The City of Mexico, 24 Fed. 41, the sending of munitions of war from neutral port to port of belligerent is a commercial enterprise and is not a violation of neutrality laws; The Carondelet, 37 Fed. 802, to same effect; dissenting opinion, Hart v. United States, 84 Fed. 805, 55 U. S. App. 498, the majority holding one who furnished transportation for military expedition against Spanish government in Cuba, violated neutrality laws. Approved, The Laurada, 85 Fed. 769, collecting authorities. Cited, without particular application, Briggs v. Light Boats, 11 Allen, 185.

Denied, The Meteor, 17 Fed. Cas. 198, where it is stated the above rule was mere dictum. See The Itata, 56 Fed. 509, 15 U. S. App. 1, construing revised statutes, section 5283, abrogating the rule of the principal case.

International law.—Augmentation of force by belligerent in port of United States is breach of our neutrality, p. 344.

Citizenship.—Quære, whether citizen of United States, independent of legislation, can throw off his allegiance, p. 347.

Cited generally, Shanks v. Dupont, 3 Pet. 267, 7 L. 675, merely stating question is not decided; Comitis v. Parkerson, 56 Fed. 558, 22 L. R. A. 150, 151, and n., in discussion of general subject; Beavers v. Smith, 11 Ala. 29, where the question is again left open.

Prize.—Augmentation of force or illegal outfit, in neutral country, infects captures subsequently made during same cruise with character of torts and requires restitution to parties interested, p. 348.

Prize.—Captures by public ships as well as privateers, if made in violation of our neutrality, are subject to restitution, p. 350.

International law.—The exemption of the public property of one sovereign from local jurisdiction of another rests upon principles of public comity and convenience, and may be withdrawn on notice at any time, p. 353.

Cited, Walley v. Schooner Liberty, 12 La. 101, 32 Am. Dec. 115, application not clear.

Distinguished, Oyster Steamers, 31 Fed. 766, no considerations of comity between State and Federal governments shall prevent latter from enforcing laws of congress.

International law.—Exemption of foreign ships coming into our waters under license from local jurisdiction, does not extend to their prizes captured in violation of our neutrality, p. 354.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in The Siren, 7 Wall. 161, 19 L. 133, for what point is not clear; Ford v. Surget, 97 U. S. 611, 24 L. 1023, as to right of belligerent nation to establish blockade; The Florida, 101 U. S. 42, 25 L. 899, as involving a discussion of the rights of neutrals; In re Fassett, 142 U. S. 485, 35 L. 1089, 12 S. Ct. 298, and The Pizarro, 19 Fed. Cas. 788, as to jurisdiction of District Court in cases of marine tort. Cited, Amy Warwick, 2 Sprague, 133, F. C. 341, not in point; The S. L. Davis, 6 Blatchf. 139, F. C. 12,939, as containing discussion of principles of admiralty law; United States v. One Hundred Packages, 27 Fed. Cas. 286, not in point; Ingersoll v. Campbell, 46 Ala. 286, as to right of government to blockade its own ports. Erroneously cited, Hill v. Boyland, 40 Miss. 630.

7 Wheat. 356-452, 5 L. 472, EVANS v. EATON.

Evidence.—A person having an interest only in the question, and not in the event of the suit, is a competent witness, p. 425.

Principle applied in Berk v. Norton, 2 McLean, 425, F. C. 1,659, holding consignee of goods, who has delivered them over without payment of freight, is a competent witness in a suit by the master of the vessel against the owner of the goods; Fuller v. Rounceville, 31 N. H. 518, holding in action of trespass de bonis, the mortgagee is a competent witness for defendant; Runey v. Thompson, 1 Pinn. 507, in action of replevin if defendant pleads property in third person, such person is competent witness to sustain the plea.

Depositions, to be evidence in United States courts, must be taken according to laws of United States and rules of their courts, p. 426.

Cited in discussion of use of depositions as evidence, Bowman v. Sanborn, 25 N. H. 103.

Appeal and error.—Where appeal is taken on ground of error in charge to jury, the appellate court will examine the substance of the charge only, p. 427.

Rule applied, Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 193, 30 L. 648, 7 S. Ct. 504, bill of exceptions should contain only matter of law excepted to; Oliver v. Phelps, 20 N. J. L. 184, 195, 199, where plaintiff spread whole charge on record, and then assigned seventeen errors on different causes, all this without having called attention of court below to supposed errors. Referred to in Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 81, 7 L. 789, where court disapproves of practice of spreading the charge in extenso on record; Bradstreet v. Bradstreet, 64 Me. 210, and Harriman v. Sanger, 67 Me. 445, condemning practice of reporting whole charge in bill of exceptions; Burt v. Insurance Co., 115 Mass. 16, bill of exceptions should set forth only the points of law raised at the trial; Nutting v. Herbert, 37 N. H. 355, application not clear. Approved generally, Gibbs v. Cannon, 9 S. & R. 202, 11 Am. Dec. 702; Stafford v. Walker, 12 S. & R. 196.

Patent law.—If same combination existed before in machines of the same nature up to a certain point, and party's invention consists in adding some new machinery, or some improved mode of operation to the old, the patent should be limited to such improvement, p. 431.

Cited generally, Whitney v. Emmett, 1 Bald. 312, 314, F. C. 17,585, as to distinction between patent on machine and patent on improvement. See note, 31 Am. Dec. 205.

Patent law.—If patent include more than patentee's invention it cannot be supported, p. 431.

Cited and principle followed in Wyeth v. Stone, 1 Story, 286, F. C. 18,107, where patentee claimed exclusive title to art of cutting ice by means of any power other than human; Hovey v. Stevens, 3 Wood. & M. 23, F. C. 6,746, where specifications did not state clearly what part of machine was new invention; Stanley, etc., Co. v. Davis, 22 Fed. Cas. 1054, rejecting patent claim because too broad and not definitely distinguishable.

Patent law.—An application for a patent must contain specifications of the invention in full, clear and distinct terms, so as to distinguish the same from all other things before known, p. 434.

Principle approved, Hogg v. Emerson, 6 How. 485, 12 L. 525, but where patent is sought for improvement to machine, applicant need not describe particularly and disclaim all the old parts; Brooks v. Jenkins, 3 McLean, 444, F. C. 1,953, where from specifications no one could tell what had been invented; Webster Loom Co. v. Higgins, 15 Blatchf. 455, F. C. 17,342, where patent was held invalid because of insufficiency of specifications; Cross v. Huntly, 13 Wend. 386, 387, holding, where patent does not describe improvement, so that it may be known in what improvement consists, the defect may be taken advantage of in action on note given for right to vend such improvement. Cited generally, Brooks v. Fiske, 15 How. 215, 14 L. 667, as to reason for rule. Approved without particular application, Sawyer v. Miller, 4 Woods, 474, 12 Fed. 727.

Miscellaneous.—Referred to generally in Evans v. Hettich, 7 Wheat. 468, 469, 470, 5 L. 500, an action for infringement of same patent. Cited erroneously, Garrard v. Reynolds, 4 How. 127, 11 L. 905; also, Smith v. Kernochen, 7 How. 219, 12 L. 675, and Green v. Neal, 6 Pet. 297, 8 L. 405. Cited generally as bearing on questions in patent law, Whitney v. Emmett, 1 Bald. 315, 321, 322, F. C. 17,585. Cited, Blanchard v. Sprague, 2 Story, 171; S. C., 3 Sumn. 541, F. C. 1,518, as to constitutionality of grants of patents by congress. Cited erroneously, In re Josephine, 39 N. Y. 27.

7 Wheat. 453-470, 5 L. 496, EVANS v. HETTICH.

Evidence.—It is no objection to the competency of a witness in a patent cause that he is sued in another action for infringement of same patent, p. 468.

Evidence.—Where a deposition has once been read in evidence without opposition, it cannot be afterwards objected to as being irregularly taken, p. 470.

Cited and principle applied, Locke v. Farley, 41 Mich. 407, 1 N. W. 957, where irregular affidavit was introduced without objection; Williams v. Thomas, 3 N. Mex. 395, 9 Pac. 358, objection to evidence cannot be made for first time in appellate court. Approved, arguendo, Indianapolis Water Co. v. American Co., 65 Fed. 536.

Witnesses.—Fact that witness is subject to fits of derangement is no objection either to his competency or credibility, if sane when giving the testimony, p. 470.

Cited and principle applied, Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 74, where court excluded from jury such evidence; Bell v. Rinner, 16 Ohio St. 49, the credibility of a competent witness cannot be impeached by testimony of other witnesses that such witness is not possessed of ordinary intelligence; Coleman v. Commonwealth, 25 Gratt. 876, 18 Am. Rep. 713, fact that principal witness for State was deranged a few days prior and shortly subsequent to trial, is not sufficient ground for granting new trial. Approved generally, State v. Hayward, 62 Minn. 493, 65 N. W. 68, where distinction between insanity as a direct issue and as a collateral issue noted. Note, 28 Am. St. Rep. 942, 943.

Distinguished, Holcomb v. Holcomb, 28 Conn. 180, where evidence was introduced to show witness was insane at time transaction occurred about which he testified; White v. State, 52 Miss. 223, where witness was examined to ascertain whether he was compos mentis.

Miscellaneous.—Cited generally, Whitney v. Emmett, 1 Bald. 315, F. C. 17,585, as to extent of description required of article for which patent is sought; Blanchard v. Sprague, 2 Story, 171; 3 Sumn. 541, F. C. 1,518, as to power of congress to grant a patent.

7 Wheat. 471-489, 5 L. 501, THE GRAN PARA.

Admiralty.— Prizes made by armed vessels which have violated the statutes for preserving the neutrality of the United States, will be restored if brought into our ports, p. 486.

Cited to this point but without particular application of the rule in The Elmira, 16 Fed. 137.

International law.— Vessel manned and armed in United States port and sailing thence to belligerent port, with intent to cruise thence as privateer of another country, violates our neutrality laws, p. 488.

Miscellaneous.— Cited, The Gran Para, 10 Wheat. 498, 6 L. 375, another hearing in same cause. Erroneously cited, Pelton v. Platner, 13 Ohio, 217, 42 Am. Dec. 199, and United States v. Cement, 27 Fed. Cas. 297. Cited, The Meteor, 17 Fed. Cas. 199, for view of Supreme Court as to what constitutes a commercial adventure.

7 Wheat. 490-495, 5 L. 505, THE SANTA MARIA.

Admiralty.— Restitution will be required where captures are made in violation of neutrality laws, p. 495.

Cited generally, The Schooner Tilton, 5 Maçon, 471, F. C. 14,054, in discussion of jurisdiction and power of courts of admiralty.

7 Wheat. 496-519, 5 L. 507, THE ARROGANTE BARCELONES.

Admiralty.— Supreme Court will restore to former owners property captured in violation of neutrality laws where it is claimed by original wrongdoer, though it may have come back to his possession after regular condemnation as prize, p. 519.

Not cited.

7 Wheat. 520-522, 5 L. 513, THE MONTE ALLEGRE.

Prize.— When captures have been made in violation of our neutrality, restitution will be decreed, p. 521.

Cited, The Monte Allegre, 9 Wheat. 641, 6 L. 180, for fact that restitution in this case had been decreed.

7 Wheat. 522-529, 5 L. 513, CROCKET v. LEE.

Equity pleading.— The decree must conform to the allegations as well as the proofs, p. 525.

Cited and followed in Land v. Cowan, 19 Ala. 300, where remainderman complained of trespass on tenant for life without showing injury to his remainder; Trapnall v. Byrd, 22 Ark. 17, where decree was set aside because allegations did not sustain same; St. Andrews Bay Co. v. Campbell, 5 Fla. 565, where proof sustained decree but allegations did not; Phelan v. Phelan, 12 Fla.

453, where bill did not set forth prima facie cause for divorce; Hyer v. Caro, 17 Fla. 354, holding decree too broad which allowed complainant for sums which vessel might have earned, when prayer in bill asked only for account of "sums earned;" West v. McCarthy, 4 Blackf. 246, reversing decree founded on a finding of fraud when none was alleged in bill; Potomac Mfg. Co. v. Evans, 84 Va. 722, 6 S. E. 4, holding decree erroneous which ordered sale of trust property, when pleading showed suit was barred. Cited, arguendo, Livingston v. Hayes, 43 Mich. 134, 5 N. W. 82, and Miller v. Finn, 1 Neb. 296, and complainant cannot go to answer for facts he did not place in issue. Cited with approval, Hawthorn v. Smith, 3 Nev. 192, but holding, where complaint omits material allegations but these are admitted in answer, the answer will be held to aid complaint and sustain action. See note, 93 Am. Dec. 403.

Pleading.—Evidence will not be admitted to prove facts not put in issue by pleadings, p. 527.

Cited and rule applied, Baker v. Nachtrieb, 19 How. 130, 15 L. 531, holding a receipt and settlement will be held conclusive when validity of same is not impeached in pleading; Jones v. Morehead, 1 Wall. 165, 17 L. 664, where court refused evidence to disprove fact, which fact was not denied in answer; Bradley v. Converse, 4 Cliff. 373, F. C. 1,775, holding relief cannot be granted for matters not charged; Conway v. Ellison, 14 Ark. 363, where complainant sought to introduce evidence to show fraud, not having alleged same; Robson v. Harwell, 6 Ga. 599, recovery cannot be had on ground of fraud where fraud is not distinctly alleged in bill; Helm v. Cantrell, 59 Ill. 530, where evidence of admissions to show ratification was denied, when bill did not show such evidence would be relied on; Singleton v. Scott, 11 Iowa, 596, in case such evidence is admitted it should not be considered by the court even if there be no objection; Le Baron v. Shepherd, 21 Mich. 275, refusing evidence to show excuse for nonperformance of a condition, when no excuse was alleged; Ferguson v. Ferguson, 2 N. Y. 361, 362, holding facts tending to show breach of a condition happening subsequent to filing of suit are not admissible, and counsel may presume court will not consider such evidence; Kelsey v. Western, 2 N. Y. 506, applying principle to defendant's answer; Wren v. Moncure, 95 Va. 375, 28 S. E. 590, fraudulent representations not relied on in pleadings cannot be set up in evidence. Approved, Wiggins Ferry Co. v. O. & M. Ry. Co., 142 U. S. 413, 35 L. 1062, 12 S. Ct. 193, but in case equitable claim is shown, the Supreme Court may remand case for amendment of pleadings; McKinley v. Irvine, 13 Ala. 694, in general citation. Approved, Hauf v. Whittington, 42 Ark. 494, without particular application; also, Patton v. McClure, Mart. & Y. 352.

Criticised in Bradley Co. v. Eagle Co., 58 Fed. 721, 18 U. S. App.

455, so far as it permits this objection to be taken for first time in appellate court.

Miscellaneous.—Erroneously cited, Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. 54, 7 L. 600; Burdsall v. Waggoner, 4 Colo. 259.

7 Wheat. 530-533, 5 L. 515, MACKER v. THOMAS.

Abatement.—In real actions, death of ancestor before appearing abates suit, p. 531.

Cited as common-law rule, Gould v. Carr, 33 Fla. 537, 15 So. 264, 24 L. R. A. 136, and Hoffman v. St. Clair, 40 Mich. 352, where it is applied.

Modified in Warren v. Furstenheim, 35 Fed. 695, 1 L. R. A. 42, Federal courts will be governed by local law on subject. Distinguished, Mellus v. Thompson, 1 Cliff. 129, F. C. 9,405, on account of difference between rules in law and in equity.

Trial.—Exceptions to rulings of court are necessary when the error would not otherwise appear on the record, p. 532.

Approved, Dunbar v. Hollinshead, 10 Wis. 507, holding exceptions unnecessary to review proceedings on appeal from an order; Dorman v. Richards, 1 Fla. 296, and rule applied.

Appeal and error.—If, in real action, ancestor die before appearing and heirs are made parties by order and allow default to be taken, they may sue out writ of error and reverse judgment, p. 532.

7 Wheat. 534, 535, 5 L. 516, COLUMBIA INS. CO. v. WHEEL-RIGHT.

Appeal and error.—Writ of error lies from Supreme Court upon judgment of Circuit Court for District of Columbia, awarding peremptory mandamus, p. 535.

Cited and principle applied in United States v. Addison, 22 How. 184, 16 L. 306, to judgment of ouster from office; Muhlenberg v. Dyer, 65 Fed. 635, 31 U. S. App. 109, holding such judgment can be reviewed in Circuit Court of Appeals only on writ of error and not by appeal. Cited in Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 565, 566, 10 L. 592; Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 607, 10 L. 614, as to jurisdiction to issue writ to review decision of State court in habeas corpus proceedings. Cited, arguendo, United States v. Insurance Co., 2 Cr. C. C. 273, F. C. 14,840; in dissenting opinion, Hammond v. People, 32 Ill. 465, majority holding writ of error did not lie at common law to review judgment awarding or denying peremptory mandamus. Approved, dissenting opinion, Kendall v. United States, 12 Pet. 640, 641, 9 L. 1227, but holding this judgment cannot be considered as authority for holding Circuit Court had jurisdiction to issue mandamus; contra, majority opinion p. 618, 9 L. 1218; note, 83 Am. Dec. 292.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 173, 29 L. 603, 6 S. Ct. 573; South Carolina v. Seymour, 153 U. S. 357, 358, 38 L. 744, 14 S. Ct. 873, and Smith v. Adams, 130 U. S. 176, 32 L. 898, 9 S. Ct. 569, as to amount in dispute necessary to give Supreme Court jurisdiction. Cited generally, Dryden v. Swinburn, 15 W. Va. 249, as to mode of ascertaining value of a salaried office.

7 Wheat. 535-551, 5 L. 516, BLIGHT'S LESSEE v. ROCHESTER.

Aliens.—British subjects born before, as well as after, the Revolution are incapable of inheriting or transmitting the inheritance of lands in this country, p. 544.

Cited as authority for holding aliens cannot take by descent, Montgomery v. Dorion, 7 N. H. 480. Rule applied, Orser v. Hoag, 3 Hill, 85, similar case. Cited, arguendo, Inglis v. Snug Harbor, 3 Pet. 122, 7 L. 626, and Orser v. Hoag, 3 Hill, 82, as to who are citizens and who aliens. Cited generally, Pollard v. Kibbe, 14 Pet. 413, 10 L. 519, apparently not in point; Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 73, 4 Am. Rep. 441, as to power of aliens to inherit or transmit by inheritance.

Aliens.—Where a British subject came into the United States, subsequent to the treaty of 1783, and died, seized of land, before the treaty of 1794 went into effect, the title of his heirs was not protected by those treaties, p. 544.

Cited, arguendo, in construction of treaty of 1794, Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 66, 4 Am. Rep. 438, and Williams v. Wilson, Mart. & Y. 253, 254.

Distinguished, Brown v. Sprague, 5 Den. 549, 550, where British subject came into the country and acquired land prior to treaty of 1783, and died in 1789.

Citizenship under some circumstances may be presumed, p. 546.

Cited approvingly, Boyd v. Thayer, 143 U. S. 181, 36 L. 116, 12 S. Ct. 389, holding jury may infer naturalization from evidence that person has necessary qualifications to become a citizen and has for a long time exercised the right of citizenship. Cited in Dryden v. Swinburn, 20 W. Va. 121, 125, where authorities are reviewed, holding citizenship will not be presumed when the records of the only court by which he could be adjudged a citizen show that he has not been so admitted.

Presumptions.—In favor of long possession, and strong apparent equity, much may be presumed, p. 546.

Cited and applied in Sessions v. Reynolds, 7 Smedes & M. 159, holding where release of title was thirty-five years old it will be presumed it was operative at time of its execution.

Landlord and tenant.—Lessee cannot deny his lessor's title, p. 547.

Cited and rule applied, Rector v. Gibbon, 111 U. S. 284, 28 L. 430, 4 S. Ct. 608, where assignee of lessee sought to deny lessor's title;

Hackett v. Marmet Co., 52 Fed. 273, 8 U. S. App. 149, the facts showing the relation of landlord and tenant existed; Ramires v. Kent Bartell, 2 Cal. 560, where tenant in action for rent denied landlord's title; McLean v. Spratt, 20 Fla. 518, where, in action for unlawful detainer, tenant attacked his landlord's title; Funk v. Kincaid, 5 Md. 409, where, in action of ejectment, brought by grantee of reversion, defendant attempted to deny right of his lessor to make lease; Outtoun v. Dulin, 72 Md. 539, 20 Atl. 135, lessee cannot defeat action for rent by showing lessor did not have title to all ground described in lease; Hagar v. Wilkoff, 2 Okl. 584, 588, 39 Pac. 282, 283, person who goes into possession of town lot on public lands as tenant of one who has improved lot by erecting a building thereon, will not be heard to assert a claim adverse to his landlord; Whaley v. Whaley, 1 Spears L. 232, 40 Am. Dec. 595, applying rule to tenant by sufferance; Greeno v. Munson, 9 Vt. 39, 31 Am. Dec. 606, applying principle to one entering into possession under contract to purchase, also, to same effect, Ripley v. Yale, 19 Vt. 163. Cited, arguendo, Bishop v. Gibbon, 158 U. S. 170, 39 L. 937, 15 S. Ct. 785. Cited generally, Bowman v. Wathen, 2 McLean, 399, F. C. 1,740, as to what denial by trustee of title of cestui que trust puts statute of limitations in operation; Hanford v. Fitch, 41 Conn. 501, as bearing on question as to what acts by tenant are sufficient to warrant jury in finding a surrender of the tenancy to the landlord and an ouster afterwards. Cited generally, Duke v. Harper, 6 Yerg. 285, 27 Am. Dec. 464, in discussion of what acts by tenant constitute ouster of landlord.

Distinguished, Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. 47, 7 L. 598, and Tillotson v. Kennedy, 5 Ala. 410, 39 Am. Dec. 331, if possession of tenant becomes adverse to landlord for period of statute of limitations, he may then deny landlord's title; Merrick v. Hutt, 15 Ark. 342, where one against whom rule was invoked was held not to occupy the position of a tenant; Wiggin v. Wiggin, 58 N. H. 237, where tenant had accepted lease under entire misapprehension of its purport.

Vendor and vendee.—Vendee of property has the right to fortify his title by the purchase of any other which may protect him in the quiet enjoyment of the premises, p. 548.

Cited and principle applied in Converse v. Ringer, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 59, 24 S. W. 708, holding one in possession without title may strengthen his title by buying in a tax title without abandoning his advantage from possession under statute of limitations. Affirmed in Neher v. Armijo, 54 Pac. 240, sustaining title of grantee of certain tenants in common against the other cotenant after lapse of statutory time.

Vendor and vendee.—A vendor has no continuing interest in the maintenance of his title, unless he be called on in consequence of some covenant or warranty in his deed, p. 548.

Cited without particular application, Jones v. Madison County, 72 Miss. 808, 18 So. 94. Quoted on this point, arguendo, in Neher v. Armijo, 54 Pac. 240.

Estoppel.—Vendee is not estopped from denying his vendor's title, especially when former did not receive possession from latter, p. 550.

Principle applied in Society for Propagation, etc. v. Pawlet, 4 Pet. 507, 7 L. 936, vendee derives title from vendor, but such title, although derivative, is adverse; Bradstreet v. Huntington, 5 Pet. 439, 8 L. 184, where vendee of tenant in common set up title to whole; Hughes v. Clarksville, 6 Pct. 384, 8 L. 436, where defendant was in possession under an agreement which was intended as a conveyance of title; Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 224, 225, 226, 9 L. 405, 406, where plaintiff, vendor, sought to violate contract of purchase and eject vendee; Clymer v. Dawkins, 3 How. 690, 11 L. 786, where vendee of tenant in common claimed entire estate and possessed it in entirety for period of statute of limitations; Robertson v. Pickrell, 109 U. S. 614, 27 L. 1051, 3 S. Ct. 411, where defendant holding under deed of a life estate was not estopped from setting up a superior title; Bybee v. O. & C. Ry. Co., 139 U. S. 682, 35 L. 309, 11 S. Ct. 645 (affirming S. C., 11 Sawy. 486, 26 Fed. 591), holding grantee, who had entered into deed under misapprehension of his legal rights, is not estopped from denying his grantors' title; Elder v. McClaskey, 70 Fed. 547, 37 U. S. App. 1, where vendee forfeited his title by purchase of pretended titles derived from his remote grantor; San Francisco v. Lawton, 18 Cal. 476, 79 Am. Dec. 191, holding, after execution of conveyance the grantee holds the property for himself, and there is no relation existing between him and grantor; Wenzel v. Schultz, 100 Cal. 255, 34 Pac. 698, and Robinson v. Thornton, 102 Cal. 683, 34 Pac. 122, grantee in fee may treat his grantor as an utter stranger to the title; Green v. Dietrich, 114 Ill. 643, 3 N. E. 803, where vendee having purchased outstanding superior title denied that of vendor; King v. Carmichael, 136 Ind. 27, 43 Am. St. Rep. 308, 35 N. E. 512, affirming that vendee's title is adverse to that of vendor, and collecting authorities; Fox v. Widgery, 4 Me. 218, holding, if disseizor takes release from disseizee of all his interest, no relations arise between them; Sands v. Davis, 40 Mich. 19, no tenurial relations exist between grantee of tenant in common who claimed in severalty, and other tenants; Macklot v. Dubreuil, 9 Mo. 484, 43 Am. Dec. 553, where vendee denied vendor's title and established his by adverse possession; Vasquez v. Ewing, 24 Mo. 39, 66 Am. Dec. 697, cotenant in possession is not estopped from denying title of his cotenant, when he came into possession through deed from another cotenant against whom he held judgment for possession; Price v. Johnson, 1 Ohio St. 399, purchaser under void decree for sale of lands in the Virginia military district, is not estopped from averring that the entry and survey are void; Coakley v. Perry, 3 Ohio St. 346, and Gardner v. Green, 5 R. I. 110, and Whitmire v. Wright, 22 S. C. 452, 53 Am. Rep. 728, holding, in case of petition for dower, grantee of husband is not estopped; Hill v. Robertson, 1 Strob. 2, 3, vendee may produce any evidence of independent title; State v. Pacific Guano Co., 22 S. C. 81, applying rule where State is grantor; Moore v. Smead, 89 Wis. 565, where grantee showed his grantor's title had been divested by transfer to another; Neher v. Armijo, 54 Pac. 240, sustaining title of grantee of certain tenants in common against the remaining tenants in common, on ground of adverse possession. Cited without particular application in Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. 50, 7 L. 599. Approved in Watkins v. Holman, 16 Pet. 54, 10 L. 885, application not clear. Cited, arguendo, Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 296, 11 L. 982. Cited in Croxall v. Shererd, 5 Wall. 287, 18 L. 579, where defendant was bona fide purchaser from lessee, the case holding such a purchaser holds adversely to the whole world. Approved without particular application in Merryman v. Bourne, 9 Wall. 600, 19 L. 686. Cited, Grosholz v. Newman, 21 Wall. 488, 22 L. 472, as authority for holding the grantee of a grantee is not estopped from showing original grantor's deed, because his grantor had accepted mortgage on property from original grantor subsequent to acceptance of deed from same party. Cited to general subject without particular application, Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 545, F. C. 4,847, and, A. T. & S. F. Co. v. Starkweather, 21 Kan. 328. Cited in Ward v. Cochran, 71 Fed. 131, 36 U. S. App. 307, as authority for holding vendee in possession under parol contract of sale holds adversely to his vendor. Cited, arguendo, dissenting opinion, Stafford v. Watson, 41 Ark. 34, 36. Referred to in discussion, Logan v. Steel, 7 T. B. Mon. 104, 105, and in Casey v. Inloes, 1 Gill, 495, 39 Am. Dec. 671, as containing able exposition of doctrine. Cited, Warren v. Bowdran, 156 Mass. 284, 31 N. E. 302, as authority for holding person in possession, claiming ownership, may purchase outstanding title from third person, without impairing his own title by adverse possession; Morgan v. Lodge, 53 Miss. 677, as to right of defendant in ejectment to set up title in third person, when he and plaintiff claim title from common source; People v. Van Rensselaer, 9 N. Y. 343, and Trustees v. Jennings, 40 S. C. 183, 42 Am. St. Rep. 868, 18 S. E. 263, without particular application. Cited, arguendo, Rhett v. Jenkins, 25 S. C. 458; Gray v. Darby, Mart. & Y. 423; Ray v. Goodman, 1 Sneed, 592. Approved without particular application, Lawton v. Howe, 14 Wis. 247. See note, 22 Ind. 520.

Distinguished, Jackson v. Chew, 12 Wheat. 168, 6 L. 589, and McDonald v. Hannah, 59 Fed. 979, 15 U. S. App. 348, as not bearing on question for which cited; Burnett v. Caldwell, 9 Wall. 293, 19 L. 713, and Pyles v. Reeve, 4 Rich. L. 559, where vendee violated contract under which he obtained possession. In Mayor v. Hopkins, 13 La. 330, it is doubted whether doctrine will apply in contract of sale. Modification suggested, Ward v. McIntosh, 12 Ohio St. 239, where grantee receives possession from grantor and relies on his grant for title for such possession; Clark v. McClure, 10 Gratt. 311, where vendee enters under executory contract which leaves title where it was, this case reviews authorities.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Moore v. Green, 2 Chrt. 210, F. C. 9,763, not in point; Dalles v. Missionary Society, 6 Sawy. 145, 6 Fed. 374, and Green v. Gill, 47 Mich. 87, 10 N. W. 119, for what point is not clear. Erroneously cited, Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 593, 49 Am. Rep. 105, and Macklot v. Dubreuil, 9 Mo. 491, 43 Am. Dec. 560. Cited, Jones v. Porter, 3 Penr. & W. 135, and Brown v. Storm, 4 Vt. 44, not in point; McCnsker v. McEvey, 10 R. I. 610, as to origin of doctrine of estoppel; dissenting opinion, Ellege v. Cooke, 5 Lea, 639, as to nature of possession of purchaser by title bond.

7 Wheat. 551-552, 5 L. 520, THE IRRESISTIBLE.

Statutes.—An offense against a temporary act cannot be punished after the expiration of the act, unless a particular provision be made by law for the purpose; held, that provision made in this case was not effective for that purpose, p. 552.

Cited and principle followed in Assessors v. Osborn, 9 Wall. 575, 19 L. 751, holding, where jurisdiction is conferred by statute, suits brought during the existence of the statute fall with its repeal; Moore v. United States, 85 Fed. 468, 56 U. S. App. 477, holding no prosecution could be had under law applying only to territories after territory has been admitted as a State, unless so provided by statute; dissenting opinion, Jones v. State, 1 Iowa, 402, holding the repealing act contained a proviso applying to offenses committed under the act; Thayer v. Seavey, 11 Me. 287, where principle is applied in case of repeal of statute; Engle v. Shurts, 1 Mich. 151, where statute imposing penalty for taking usurious interest was repealed before bill was filed in action under; Peddle v. Hollinshead, 9 Serg. & R. 283, where certain privileges as to stay of execution were affected; Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co., 191 Pa. St. 150, to action to enforce penalties; Kenyon v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 14, 23 S. W. 191, holding, where party was convicted under statute repealed pending appeal, the prosecution should be dismissed.

7 Wheat. 553-556, 5 L. 553, HOLBROOK v. UNION BANK.

Corporations.—Construction of charter of local corporation.

No citations.

7 Wheat. 556-581, 5 L. 522, MARBURY v. BROOKS.

Fraudulent conveyances.—A debtor may prefer one creditor to another, p. 577.

Cited and principle applied, Tompkins v. Wheeler, 16 Pet. 118, where debtor made assignment in favor of certain creditors;

Huntley v. Kingman, 152 U. S. 532, 38 L. 542, 14 S. Ct. 690. and this may be done although fund for payment of other creditors be lessened; Ashby v. Steere, 2 Wood. & M. 357, F. C. 576, where debtor made conveyance several months before he went into bankruptcy; Gassett v. Wilson, 3 Fla. 260, where debtor after proceedings had been instituted against him by certain creditors made assignment of his property to certain other creditors in satisfaction of his debts to them; Thornton v. Davenport, 1 Scam. 298, 29 Am. Dec. 360, where debtor on day certain creditors obtained judgment against him, gave mortgage to other creditors; State of Maryland v. Bank of Md., 6 Gill & J. 219, 26 Am. Dec. 564, applying rule to assignment by corporation to trustee for benefit of creditors; McGuinnay v. Hitchcock, 8 Tex. 35, conveyance to preferred creditor. Cited without particular application, Emerson v. Senter, 118 U. S. 10, 30 L. 51, 6 S. Ct. 984; Halsey v. Whitney, 4 Mason, 213, F. C. 5,964, as common-law rule; Robinson v. Rapelye, 2 Stew. 100, as to right of debtor to control his property unrestrained; note, 1 Ind. 412. Cited, arguendo, dissenting opinion, Bank of Commerce v. Payne, 86 Ky. 479, 481, 8 S. W. 868, 869. Approved in general discussion of subject, McCall v. Hinkley, 4 Gill, 157, no particular application. Cited generally, Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 313, as to effect on grant of fraudulent intent in grantor where grant is to bona fide purchaser without notice. Approved without application, Nevitt v. Bank, 6 Smedes & M. 579; note, 26 Am. Dec. 584.

Distinguished, Robins v. Embry, 1 Smedes & M. Ch. 258, 259, holding a banking corporation cannot make an assignment in favor of particular creditors to exclusion of others.

Fraudulent conveyance.—Where debtor makes conveyance to part of his creditors only, any unlawful consideration moving from preferred creditors avoids conveyance, p. 577.

Principle applied in Cleveland v. La Crosse Ry. Co., 5 Fed. Cas. 1035, where corporation conveyed to two of its directors.

Fraudulent conveyance.—It is no objection to the validity of a conveyance in trust for certain creditors that it was made by grantor with the hope and expectation that it would prevent a prosecution for felony connected with his transaction with his creditors, p. 578.

Cited and principle followed, School District v. Alderson, 6 Dak. Ter. 153, 41 N. W. 468, where it was sought by parol to invalidate a written agreement on ground of its having been made to compound a felony; Billings v. Parsons, 53 Pac. 732, sustaining an assignment for creditors assuming it made with intent to defeat a threatened attachment; Jones v. Cullen, 100 Tenn. 19, 42 S. W. 877, sustaining an assignment alleged to have been made to prevent prosecution for embezzlement.

Consideration.—An existing debt is good consideration for a conveyance from debtor to creditor, p. 578.

Principle applied in Halsey v. Whitney, 4 Mason, 215, 216, 217, F. C. 5,964, and United States v. Bank of U. S., 8 Rob. (La.) 405, where debtor had made assignment of his property in trust for benefit of creditors. Cited without particular application, Bank of U. S. v. Huth, 4 B. Mon. 435.

Conveyance for benefit of creditors.—It is not necessary creditor should have notice of execution of deed, provided he afterwards assents, p. 579.

Principle applied, Houston v. Nowland, 7 Gill & J. 492, where conveyance was made to trustee for benefit of creditors; Ingram v. Kirkpatrick, 6 Ired. Eq. 473, 475, 51 Am. Dec. 434, 436, holding, where conveyance is made in trust for payment of debts and trustee accepts same, the relation of trustee and cestui que trust is established in favor of creditors, except as to those who do not assent; Milling Co. v. Eaton, 86 Tex. 406, 25 S. W. 615, 24 L. R. A. 381, by statute, a general assignment is valid without assent of creditors; Skipwith v. Cunningham, 8 Leigh, 286, 31 Am. Dec. 650, where creditor assented subsequently to the rendering of judgment against grantor in favor of other creditors; dissenting opinion, Oakley v. Hibbard, 1 Pinn. 681, the majority holding an assignment for benefit of creditors made by one not in failing circumstances, may be revoked after assignee has partly executed his trust, as to such creditors as had no notice of assignment. Cited in Robinson v. Rapelye, 2 Stew. 99, as to trustee being agent of assignor, and same case, p. 103, as to when assent of creditors will be presumed; State of Md. v. Bank of Md., 6 Gill & J. 230, 26 Am. Dec. 573, without particular application.

Distinguished, Townsend v. Harwell, 18 Ala. 305, holding there is no presumption of assent by creditors where conveyance is made with intent on part of debtor to delay, hinder and defraud creditors; Tompkins v. Bamberger, 3 Lea, 580, where creditors knew nothing of conveyance until four years after it happened, and in meantime other creditors had acquired lien on property by legal proceedings.

Trusts.—Should trustee for creditors refuse to act, court of chancery may compel him or appoint another in his stead, p. 580.

Cited, with approval, in Robinson v. Rapelye, 2 Stew. 98, and Dewoody v. Hubbard, 1 Stew. & P. 11, where conveyance had been made to trustee for benefit of creditors; Sutton v. Simon, 91 Tex. 641, 45 S. W. 560, sustaining an innocent creditor's rights under a fraudulent assignment.

Miscellaneous.—Referred to in Brooks v. Marbury, 11 Wheat. 85, 6 L. 425, the same case on second appeal. Cited erroneously, Adams v. Blodgett, 2 Wood. & M. 238, F. C. 46. Cited, arguendo, Ex parte Conway, 4 Ark. 351, as to power of debtor to make assignment to trustee for benefit of creditors. Cited, Mayhew v. Graham, 4 Gill, 361, and Brown v. Bonner, 8 Leigh, 7, 31 Am. Dec. 639, not in point. Cited generally, Cunningham v. Ward, 30 W. Va. 579, 5 S. E. 650, as to property bought with partnership funds but conveyed to partners as individuals being liable for partnership debts.

7 Wheat. 591-615, 5 L. 528, DORR v. PACIFIC INS. CO.

Marine insurance.—Certificate of survey is not legal evidence, because examination of surveyors themselves would be better, p. 611.

Cited in The Dawn, 1 Ware, 491, F. C. 3,665, as bearing on question whether report of surveyors is ever admissible as evidence.

Marine insurance.—Contract of, construed with reference to meaning of expression "regular survey" used therein, p. 612.

Cited generally, Potter v. Ocean Ins. Co., 3 Sumn. 42, 43, F. C. 11,334, as bearing on question who has jurisdiction to order survey in foreign port.

Marine insurance.—Under policy containing the following clause: "It is agreed that if the vessel, upon a regular survey, shall be declared unseaworthy, then the assurers shall not be bound to pay their subscription on policy," proof by regular survey of unsoundness at any subsequent period of voyage discharged underwriters, p. 615.

Cited in Griswold v. Insurance Co., 3 Cow. 118, as authority for holding a survey as set out in plea was good bar to action. Referred to in Janney v. Columbia Ins. Co., 10 Wheat. 416, 6 L. 355, no particular application.

Distinguished on ground question of construction was not raised at trial, Insurance Co. v. Mordecai, 22 How. 117, 16 L. 332.

REPORTS

OF

CASES

ARGUED AND ADJUDGED IN

THE

Supreme Court of the United States,

IN FEBRUARY TERM, 1823.

---

BY HENRY WHEATON,

Counselor at law.

---

VOL. VIII.

JUDGES
OF THE
SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
DURING THE TIME OF THESE REPORTS.

---

The Hon. JOHN MARSHALL, Chief Justice.
The Hon. BUSHROD WASHINGTON, Associate Justice.
The Hon. WILLIAM JOHNSON, Associate Justice.
The Hon. BROCKHOLST LIVINGSTON, Associate Justice.
The Hon. THOMAS TODD, Associate Justice.
The Hon. GABRIEL DUVAL, Associate Justice.
The Hon. JOSEPH STORY, Associate Justice.
WILLIAM WIRT, Esq., Attorney-General.

MEMORANDUM.

---

On the 18th of March, a few days after the close of the present term, died the Honorable Broekholst Livingston, an Associate Justice of this court, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. He was appointed in 1806, being at that time a Judge of the Supreme Court of New York, and having before occupied an eminent rank at the bar of that state. He had served his country with distinguished military reputation during the war of the revolution, and subsequently filled several important civil stations at home and abroad. He was an accomplished classical scholar, and versed in the elegant languages and literature of the southern nations of Europe. At the bar he was an ingenious and learned advocate, fruitful in invention, and possessing a brilliant and persuasive elocution. On the bench, his candor and modesty were no less distinguished than his learning, acuteness and discrimination. His genius and taste had directed his principal attention to the maritime and commercial law; and his extensive experience gave to his judgments in that branch of jurisprudence a peculiar value, which was enhanced by the gravity and beauty of his judicial eloquence. In private life, he was beloved for his amiable manners and general kindness of disposition, and admired for all those qualities which constitute the finished gentleman. He died with the deep regret of all who knew him; leaving behind him the character of an upright, enlightened and humane judge, a patriotic citizen, and a bright ornament of the profession. Isque et oratorum in numero est habendus, et fuit reliquis rebus ornatus, atque elegans.

---

RULE OF COURT.

---

FEBRUARY TERM, 1823.

No cause will hereafter be heard until a complete record shall be filed, containing in itself, without references aliunde, all the papers, exhibits, depositions, and other proceedings which are necessary to the hearing in this court.

MEMORANDUM.—Mr. Justice Todd was absent, from indisposition, during the whole of this term; and Mr. Justice Livingston was absent, from the same cause, from Monday, the 24th of February, until the end of the term.

REPORTS OF THE DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of the United States.

FEBRUARY TERM, 1823.

1*] [*CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.]

GREEN ET AL. v. BIDDLE.

The act of the state of Kentucky, of the 27th of February, 1797, concerning occupying claimants of land, whilst it was in force, was repugnant to the constitution of the United States, but it was repealed by a subsequent act of the 31st of January, 1812, to amend the said act; and the last-mentioned act is also repugnant to the constitution of the United States, as being in violation of the compact between the states of Virginia and Kentucky, contained in the act of the legislature of Virginia, of the 18th of December, 1789, and incorporated into the constitution of Kentucky.

By the common law, the statute law of Virginia, the principles of equity, and the civil law, the claimant of lands who succeeds in his suit is entitled to an account of mesne profits, received by the occupant from some period prior to the judgment of eviction, or decree.

At common law, whoever takes and holds possession of land to which another has a better title, whether he be a bonæ fidei or a malæ fidei possessor, is liable to the true owner for all the rents and profits which he has received; but the disseisor, if he be a bonæ fidei occupant, may recoup the value of the meliorations made by him against the claim of damages.

2*] *Equity allows an account of rents and profits in all cases, from the time of the title accrued (provided it does not exceed six years), unless under special circumstances, as where the defendant had no notice of the plaintiff's title, nor had the deeds in which the plaintiff's title appeared in his custody, or where there has been laches in the plaintiff in not asserting his title, or where his title appeared by deeds in a stranger's custody; in all which, and other similar cases, the account is confined to the time of filing the bill.

By the civil law, the exemption of the occupant from an account for rents and profits is strictly confined to the case of a bonæ fidei possessor, who not only supposes himself to be the true owner of the land, but who is ignorant that his title is contested by some other person claiming a better right. And such a possessor is entitled only to the fruits or profits which were produced by his own industry, and not even to those, unless they were consumed.

Distinctions between these rules of the civil and common law, and of the court of chancery, and the provisions of the acts of Kentucky, concerning occupying claimants of land.

The invalidity of a state law, as impairing the obligation of contracts, does not depend upon the extent of the change which the law effects in the contract.

Any deviation from its terms, by postponing or accelerating the period of its performance, imposing conditions not expressed in the contract, or dispensing with the performance of those which are expressed, however minute or apparently immaterial in their effect upon the contract, impairs its obligation.

The compact of 1789, between Virginia and Kentucky, was valid under that provision of the constitution which declares that "no state shall, without the consent of Congress, enter into any agreement or compact with another state, or with a foreign power"—no particular mode, in which that consent must be given, having been prescribed by the constitution; and Congress having consented to the admission of Kentucky into the Union, as a sovereign state, upon the conditions mentioned in the compact.

The compact is not invalid upon the ground of its surrendering rights of sovereignty, which are unalienable.

This court has authority to declare a state law unconstitutional, upon the ground of its impairing the obligation of a compact between different states of the Union.

The prohibition of the constitution embraces all contracts, executed or executory, between private individuals, or a state and individuals, or corporations, or between the states themselves.

THIS was a writ of right, brought in the Circuit *Court of Kentucky, by the de- [*3 mandants, Green and others, who were the heirs of John Green, deceased, against the tenant

NOTE.—Mesne Profits.—The plaintiff can recover mesne profits, in the nature of damages, only from the time of the ouster laid in the complaint in ejectment. Hylton v. Brown, 2 Wash. C. C. 165.

May be recovered of the landlord who is in possession by his tenant, and who aids in withholding possession, or actually defends, though he does not appear on the record as defendant. Chirac v. Reinicker, 11 Wheat. 280; Hunter v. Britts, 3 Camp. N. P. R. 455.

Defendant may set-off the value of his improvements. But they should be first deducted from the profits received before the date of the demise alleged. Hylton v. Brown, 2 Wash. C. C. 165.

Where, after a recovery at law from a bona fide possessor for a valuable consideration without notice, plaintiff seeks to recover the rents and profits, the defendant will be allowed to deduct therefrom for beneficial improvements made by him on the estate and recoup them from the rents and profits.

Wheat. 8.

Krause v. Means, 12 Kansas, 335; 1 Sawy. 15; Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story, C. C. 478; Coulter's case, 5 Coke, 30; Jackson v. Loomis, 4 Cow. 108; Millingham v. Long, 47 Ga. 540.

The confession of entry by the defendant in ejectment is sufficient to enable plaintiff to recover; aliter, when the judgment in ejectment was recovered by default. Then there must be proof that defendant has had possession. Lessee of Brown v. Galloway, 1 Pet. C. C. 291; Stewart v. Railroad Co., 33 N. J. L. 115.

In ejectment plaintiff may recover mesne profits, if he has previously notified defendant of his intention to proceed for them, and thus prevented any surprise. Lessee of Batten v. Bigelow, 1 Pet. C. C. 452. In the statutory action of ejectment in Pennsylvania, mesne profits may be recovered. Dawson v. McGill, 4 Wheat. 230.

The legal right of action for mesne profits, which accrued during the pendency of the action, is lost

Richard Biddle, to recover certain lands in the state of Kentucky, in his possession. The cause was brought before this court upon a division of opinion of the judges of the court below, on the following questions:

1. Whether the acts of the legislature of the state of Kentucky, of the 27th of February, 1797, and of the 31st of January, 1812, concerning occupying claimants of land, are constitutional or not; the demandants and the tenant both claiming title to the land in controversy under patents from the state of Virginia, prior to the erection of the District of Kentucky into a state.

2. Whether the question of improvements ought to be settled under the above act of 1797, the suit having been brought before the passage of the act of 1812, although judgment for the demandant was not rendered until after the passage of the last-mentioned act.

The ground upon which the unconstitutionality of the above acts was asserted, was, that they impaired the obligation of the compact between the states of Virginia and Kentucky, contained in an act of the legislature of the former state, passed the 18th of December, 1789, which declares "that all private rights and interests of lands within the said district" (of Kentucky) "derived from the laws of Virginia prior to such separation, shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed state, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in this state." This compact was 4*] *ratified by the convention which framed the constitution of Kentucky, and incorporated into that constitution as one of its fundamental articles.

The most material provisions in the act of 1797, which were supposed to impair the obligation of the compact of 1789, and therefore void, are the following:

1. It provides that the occupant of land, from which he is evicted by better title, shall, in all cases, be excused from the payment of rents and profits accrued prior to actual notice of the adverse title, provided his possession in its inception was peaceable, and he shows a plain and connected title, in law or equity, deduced from some record.

2. That the successful claimant is liable to a judgment against him for all valuable and lasting improvements made on the land prior to actual notice of the adverse title, after deducting from the amount the damages which the land has sustained by waste or deterioration of the soil by cultivation.

3. As to improvements made, and rents and profits accrued, after notice of the adverse title, the amount of the one shall be deducted from that of the other, and the balance added to, or subtracted from, the estimated value of the improvements made before such notice, as the nature of the case may require. But it is provided, by a subsequent clause, that in no case shall the successful claimant be obliged to pay for improvements made after notice, more than what is equal to the rents and profits.

4. If the improvements exceed the value of the *land in its unimproved state, the [*5 claimant shall be allowed the privilege of conveying the land to the occupant, and receiving in return the assessed value of it without the improvements, and thus to protect himself against a judgment and execution for the value of the improvements. If he declines doing this, he shall recover possession of his land, but shall then pay the estimated value of the improvements, and also lose the rents and profits accrued before notice of the claim. But to entitle him to claim the value of the land as above mentioned, he must give bond and security to warrant the title.

The act of 1812 contains the following provisions:

1. That the peaceable occupant of land, who supposes it to belong to him in virtue of some legal or equitable title founded on a record, shall be paid by the successful claimant for his improvements.

2. That the claimant may avoid the payment of the value of such improvements, at his election, by relinquishing the land to the occupant, and be paid its estimated value in its unimproved state.

Thus, if the claimant elect to pay for the value of the improvements, he is to give bond and security to pay the same, with interest, at different installments. If he fail to do this, or if the value of the improvements exceeds three-fourths of the unimproved land, an election is given to the occupant to have a judgment entered against the claimant for the assessed value by the defendant's death after the recovery in ejectment had, and the action will not lie against his personal representatives. Although such legal right of action for the mesne profits, which accrued during the pendency of an action of ejectment, survives, where plaintiff dies after recovery had in the action, and the action for them is properly brought in the name of his heir at common law. Mears v. Pres. Church, 3 Penn. 93; Harper v. Whittaker, 5 Watts, 474; Bard v. Nevin, 9 Watts, 328.

Defendant who quits the premises during suit is not liable for mesne profits afterwards accrued. Mitchell v. Findley, 10 Penn. 198.

After judgment in ejectment plaintiff can only recover for what accrued within six years before the commencement of the action; for those accruing previously the statute of limitations is a bar. Hill v. Meyers, 46 Penn. 15.

The common law action for mesne profits may be brought in Maryland; and although the action cannot be brought before a recovery in ejectment, it may be brought pending a writ of error, but execution therefor will be stayed until the writ of error is determined. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 1 Md. 59; see Mitchell v. Mitchell, 10 Md. 234.

In Kentucky, by the Civil Code, sec. 111, the plaintiff may unite claims for the recovery of real property, "and the rents, profits, and damages for withholding the same;" and if a claim for rents issues, and profits be set up in the action for the recovery of the land, it is a bar to a separate suit for the rents. Walker v. Mitchell, 18 B. Mon. 541.

In North Carolina the record of recovery in ejectment is conclusive evidence of title at the date of the demise in an action for the mesne profits, but not evidence that defendant's possession commenced before the action of ejectment was commenced, but is conclusive of his possession at commencement of the ejectment, and prima facie evidence that his possession continued till the judgment and execution. Poston v. Jones, 2 Dev. & Batt. L. R. 294. See Doe v. Roe, 30 Ga. 553.

A judgment in ejectment is conclusive against the defendant, his landlord or tenant, claiming under him, for all profits since the date of the demise stated in the declaration in ejectment; and the right to mesne profits is a necessary consequence of a recovery in ejectment. Doe v. Whitcomb, 8 Bing. 46; City of Apalachicola v. Ap. L. Co., 9 Fla. 340; Doe v. Harlow, 12 Ad. & Ell. 42; Shipley v. Alexander, 3 Har. & J. 84; 1 Barb. 158; 11 Ired. 301; of the improvements, or to take the land, giving bond and security to *pay the value of the land, if unimproved, by installments, with interest.

Wheat. 8.

But if the claimant is not willing to pay for the improvements, and they should exceed three-fourths of the value of the unimproved land, the occupant is obliged to give bond and security to pay the assessed value of the land, with interest; which if he fail to do, judgment is to be entered against him for such value, the claimant releasing his right to the land, and giving bond and security to warrant the title.

If the value of the improvements does not exceed three-fourths of the value of the unimproved land, then the occupant is not bound (as he is in the former case) to give bond and security to pay the value of the land; but he may claim a judgment for the value of his improvements, or take the land, giving bond and security, as before mentioned, to pay the estimated value of the land.

3. The exemption of the occupant from the payment of the rents and profits, extends to all such as accrued during his occupancy before judgment rendered against him in the first instance; but such as accrue after such judgment, for a term not exceeding five years, as also waste and damage committed by the occupant after suit brought, are to be deducted from the value of the improvements, or the court may render judgment for them against the occupant.

4. The amount of such rents and profits, damages and waste, and also the value of the improvements, and of the land without the improvements, *are to be ascertained by commissioners to be appointed by the court, and who act under oath.

The cause was argued at February term, 1821, by Mr. Talbot and Mr. B. Hardin for the demandants, no counsel appearing for the tenant.

They contended that the acts of the state legislature in question were inconsistent with the true meaning and spirit of the compact of 1789, their avowed scope and object being to change the existing condition of the parties litigant, respecting the security of private rights and interests of land, within the territory of Kentucky, derived from the laws of Virginia prior to the separation. These acts do not merely attempt to alter the mode of prosecuting remedies for the recovery of rights and interests thus derived (which possibly they might do), but essentially affect the right and interest in the land recovered. They seek to accomplish this by diminishing or destroying the value of the interest in controversy, by compelling the successful claimant and rightful owner of the land to pay the one-half, and in some instances the entire value of the land recovered; not the actual value of the amelioration of the land while held by the occupying claimant, but the expense and labor of making the improvements.

Both the acts are framed in the same spirit and with the same object; both are adapted to change the relative condition of the parties, to the great prejudice of the rightful owner. The principal object in view in the act of 1797 was to exempt the occupant from his liability for waste committed by him, or rents and profits received by him, prior *to the commence- [*8 ment of the suit for the land, although he may, when he first took possession, have had full notice of the plaintiff's title, and consequently be a malæ fidei possessor. The act of 1812, purporting to be in amendment of the former act, with the avowed purpose of still further protecting the interests of the occupant, completely exempts him from all liability for waste committed, or for rents and profits received, before the judgment or decree in the suit. In no possible case can the right owner recover more than five years' rent, although the litigation may, and frequently does, last a much longer period, whilst he is subjected to the payment for all improvements made at any period of the suit, down to the time of final judgment, to be set-off against the amount of his claim for rents and profits, abridged and limited as it is by this act.

The object of the compact was plainly to secure to all persons deriving titles under the then existing laws of Virginia, the entire and perpetual enjoyment of their rights of property against any future legislative acts of the state of Kentucky, which it was foreseen might be passed under the influence of local feelings and interests. The compact did not merely intend

Jackson v. Stone, 13 John. 447; Lamson v. Ross, 65 N. Y. 411.

The action for mesne profits cannot be maintained until there is a recovery of the land by the plaintiff in ejectment, and as a general rule the right to the mesne profits follows such recovery. Burton v. Austin, 4 Vt. 105; Smith v. Benson, 9 Vt. 138; Baron v. Abeel, 3 John. 481; Van Allen v. Rogers, 1 John. Cas. 281; Holmes v. Davis, 19 N. Y. 488; S. C. 21 Barb. 265; Benson v. Blathford, 2 John. 369; Trabue v. Kellar, 3 A. K. Marsh. 517; Goodtitle v. Tombs, 3 Wils. 118; Bennit v. Bullock, 35 Penn. 367; Haven v. Adams, 8 Allen, 368; Jackson v. Peer, 4 Cow. 147; Dewey v. Osborn, 4 Cow. 329; Aslin v. Parkins, 2 Burr. 665; Denn v. Chubb, Cox, 466; Jackson v. Stone, 13 John. 447; West v. Hughes, 1 Har. & J. 574; Chamier v. Lignon, 5 Maule & S. 64; 2 Chit. 410; Holdfast v. Shepard, 9 Ired. 222; Benson v. Matsdorf, 2 John. 369; Jackson v. Randall, 11 John. 405; Whittington v. Christian, 2 Rand. 353; Poston v. Jones, 2 Dev. & Batt. 294.

A tenant in common may recover his proportionate part of mesne profits after recovery in ejectment. Clark v. Huber, 20 Cal. 196; Goodtitle v. Tombs, 3 Wils. 118; Cutting v. Derby, 2 Wm. Black. 1077; Camp v. Homesley, 11 Ired. 211; Langeudyeck Wheat. 8.

v. Burbans, 11 John. 461; Myers v. Myers, 46 Cal. 535.

Recovery for rents and profits can only be had for six years, where defendant pleads the statute of limitations. Jackson v. Wood, 24 Wend. 443; Ainslie v. Mayor, 1 Barb. 168; Hill v. Meyers, 46 Penn. 15; Blodgett v. Hitt, 29 Wis. 169; Prendergast v. McCaslin, 2 Ind. 87; N. Orleans v. Gaines, 15 Wall. 624.

Recovery of nominal damages in ejectment is no bar to a subsequent action for mesne profits. Van Alen v. Rogers, 1 John. Cas. 281; Jackson v. Wood, 24 Wend. 443; Grout v. Cooper, 9 Hun. 326.

To entitle defendant to an allowance for improvements as against the mesne profits, it is usually held essential that he shall have held under color of title, and have made such improvements in good faith, and that they be permanent and valuable to the inheritance. Lunquest v. Ten Eyck, 40 Iowa, 213; Carpentier v. Small, 35 Cal. 346; Whitney v. Richardson, 31 Vt. 300; Roe v. Malcom, 39 Ga. 328; Learned v. Corley, 43 Miss. 687; Lee v. Bouman, 55 Mo. 400; Shroyer v. Nickell, 55 Mo. 264; Ringhouse v. Keener, 63 Ill. 230.

Recovery may be apportioned among defendants, according to their interests. Woodhall v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382.

to secure the determination of the titles to land by those laws, but also the actual enjoyment of the rights and interests thus established. It did not intend to give the true owner a right to recover, and then to couple that right with such onerous conditions as to make it worthless; to compel him to repurchase his own land, by indemnifying the occupant (often a malæ fidei possessor), not for his expenses and labor in improving the value, but frequently in the deterioration of the land, to the great injury of the owner. The "rights and interests" of which the compact speaks, were not only to be rendered valid and secure by preserving the modes and forms of proceeding for the assertion of those rights, but by preserving the existing provisions of law and rules of equity, under which the practical object and end of a suit are to be attained; the possession and enjoyment of the land, unburthened with any unjust conditions extorted by fraud and violence. Its letter and spirit both forbid the interpretation by which laws are made to exempt the occupant from his liability to account for the mesne profits, upon the pre-existing principles of law and equity, and by which that exemption is extended to every period of time, from his first taking possession down to his being actually ejected, without any regard to the circumstances by which the original character of his possession may be entirely changed by notice of a better title, of which he might have been originally ignorant. And is not the loss or injury resulting from the diminution of the value or amount recovered and actually received by the true owner, by taking one-half the value of the land to pay for the estimated value or cost of the pretended ameliorations, of the same extent as if, upon a recovery of an entire tract of land, the judgment was to be declared satisfied by delivering possession of a moiety only? Do, then, the rights and interests of land, as they were derived from the laws of Virginia, 10*] remain valid and secure under these acts of the legislature of Kentucky? If, by validity and security be meant injury, forfeiture and destruction, then, indeed, the terms of the compact are amply satisfied. But if an entire and complete protection of these rights and interests, as to their value, use and enjoyment by the true owner was intended, then the laws in question (the avowed object and intention, as well as the practical operation of which, is to better the condition of the occupant at the expense of the true and lawful owner, by compelling the latter, after he has recovered a formal judgment establishing the validity of his title, to purchase the execution of that judgment by the performance of conditions which the laws existing in 1789 did not require) are a gross violation of the compact, and consequently unconstitutional and void. If, in short, that which cannot be done directly, ought not to be permitted to be done indirectly and circuitously, the legislature of Kentucky were no more authorized to enact rules or regulations, by the operation of which the land recovered by the real owner is encumbered with a lien, to the amount of half, or any other proportion of its value, for the benefit of the occupant, and to indemnify him for his fault or misfortune in claiming under a defective title, than they would have been to produce the same effect, and to equalize the condition of the parties, by dividing the specific land between them.

Mr. Justice STORY delivered the opinion of the court:

*The first question certified from the [*11] Circuit Court of Kentucky, in this cause, is, whether the acts of Kentucky, of the 27th of February, 1797, and of the 31st of January, 1812, concerning occupying claimants of land, are unconstitutional.

This question depends principally upon the construction of the seventh article of the compact made between Virginia and Kentucky, upon the separation of the latter from the former state, that compact being a part of the constitution of Kentucky. The seventh article declares "that all private rights and interests of lands within the said district, derived from the laws of Virginia, shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed state, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in this state."

We should have been glad, in the consideration of this subject, to have had the benefit of an argument on behalf of the tenant; but as no counsel has appeared for him, and the cause has been for some time before the court, it is necessary to pronounce the decision, which, upon deliberation, we have formed.

As far as we can understand the construction of the seventh article of the compact contended for by those who assert the constitutionality of the laws in question, it is that it was intended to secure to claimants of lands their rights and interests therein by preserving a determination of their titles by the laws under which they were acquired. If this be the true and only import of the article, it is a mere nullity; for, by the general principles of law, and from the necessity of the case, titles to **real estate* [*12] can be determined only by the laws of the state under which they are acquired. Titles to land cannot be acquired or transferred in any other mode than that prescribed by the laws of the territory where it is situate. Every government has, and from the nature of sovereignty must have, the exclusive right of regulating the descent, distribution and grants of the domain within its own boundaries; and this right must remain until it yields it up by compact or conquest. When once a title to lands is asserted under the laws of a territory, the validity of that title can be judged of by no other rule than those laws furnish in which it had its origin; for no title can be acquired contrary to those laws; and a title good by those laws cannot be disregarded but by a departure from the first principles of justice. If the article meant, therefore, what has been supposed, it meant only to provide for the affirmation of that which is the universal rule in the courts of civilized nations, professing to be governed by the dictates of law.

Besides, the titles to lands can, in no just sense, in compacts of this sort, be supposed to be separated from the rights and interests in those lands. It would be almost a mockery to suppose that Virginia could feel any solicitude as to the recognition of the abstract validity of titles, when they would draw after them no beneficial enjoyment of the property. Of what value is that title which communicates no right or interest in the land itself? or how can that be said to be any title at all which cannot be 13*] asserted in a court of justice *by the owner, to defend or obtain possession of his property?

The language of the seventh article cannot, in our judgment, be so construed. The word title does not occur in it. It declares, in the most explicit terms, that all private rights and interests of lands derived from the laws of Virginia, shall remain valid and secure under the laws of Kentucky, and shall be determined by the laws then existing in Virginia. It plainly imports, therefore, that these rights and interests, as to their nature and extent, shall be exclusively determined by the laws of Virginia, and that their security and validity shall not be in any way impaired by the laws of Kentucky. Whatever law, therefore, of Kentucky, does narrow these rights and diminish these interests, is a violation of the compact, and is consequently unconstitutional.

The only question, therefore, is whether the acts of 1797 and 1812 have this effect. It is undeniable that no acts of a similar character were in existence in Virginia at the time when the compact was made, and therefore no aid can be derived from the actual legislation of Virginia to support them. The act of 1797 provides that persons evicted from lands to which they can show a plain and connected title in law or equity, without actual notice of an adverse title, shall be exempt from all suits for rents or profits prior to actual notice of such adverse title. It also provides that commissioners shall be appointed by the court pronouncing the judgment of eviction, to assess the value of all lasting and valuable improvements 14*] made on the land prior to such notice, and they are to return the assessment thereof, after subtracting all damages to the land by waste, &c., to the court; and judgment is to be entered for the assessment in favor of the person evicted, if the balance be for him, against the successful party, upon which judgment execution shall immediately issue, unless such party shall give bond for the payment of the same, with five per cent. interest, in twelve months from the date thereof. And if the balance be in favor of the successful party, a like judgment and proceedings are to be had in his favor. The act further provides that the commissioners shall also estimate the value of the lands, exclusive of the improvements; and if the value of the improvements shall exceed the value of the lands, the successful claimant may transfer his title to the other party and have a judgment in his favor against such party for such estimated value of the lands, &c. There are other provisions not material to be stated.

The act of the 31st of January, 1812, provides that if any person hath seated or improved, or shall thereafter seat or improve any lands, supposing them to be his own by reason of a claim in law or equity, the foundation of such claim being of public record, but which lands shall be proved to belong to another, the charge and value of such seating and improving shall be paid by the right owner to such seater or improver or his assignee, or occupant so claiming. If the right owner is not willing to disburse so much, an estimate is to be made of the value of the lands, exclusive of the seating *and 15 improvements, and also of the value of such seating and improvements. If the value of the seating and improving exceeds three-fourths of the value of the lands if unimproved, then the valuation of the land is to be paid by the seater or improver; if not exceeding three-fourths, then the valuation of the seating and improving is to be paid by the right owner of the land. The act further provides that no action shall be maintained for rents or profits against the occupier, for any time elapsed before the judgment or decree in the suit. The act then provides for the appointment of commissioners to make the valuations, and for the giving of bonds, &c., for the amount of the valuations, by the party who is to pay the same; and in default thereof, provides that judgment shall be given against the party for the amount; or if the right owner fails to give bond, &c., the other party may, at his election, give bond, &c., and take the land. And the act then proceeds to declare that the occupant shall not be evicted or dispossessed by a writ of possession, until the report of the commissioners is made and judgment rendered, or bonds executed in pursuance of the act.

From this summary of the principal provisions of the acts of 1797 and 1812, it is apparent that they materially impair the rights and interests of the rightful owner in the land itself. They are parts of a system, the object of which is to compel the rightful owner to relinquish his lands, or pay for all lasting improvements made upon them, without his consent or default; and in many cases *those improve- 16 ments may greatly exceed the original cost and value of the lands in his hands. No judgment can be executed, and no possession obtained for the lands, unless upon the terms of complying with the requisitions of the acts. They, therefore, in effect, create a direct and permanent lien upon the lands for the value of all lasting improvements made upon them; without the payment of which, the possession and enjoyment of the lands cannot be acquired. It requires no reasoning to show that such laws necessarily diminish the beneficial interests of the rightful owner in the lands. Under the laws of Virginia no such burthen was imposed on the owner. He had a right to sue for, recover and enjoy them, without any such deductions or payments.

The seventh article of the compact meant to secure all private rights and interests derived from the laws of Virginia, as valid and secure under the laws of Kentucky, as they were under the then existing laws of Virginia. To make those rights and interests so valid and secure, it is essential to preserve the beneficial proprietary interest of the rightful owner in the same state in which they were, by the laws of Virginia, at the time of the separation. If the legislature of Kentucky had declared by law that no person should recover lands in this predicament, unless upon payment, by the owner, of a moiety, or of the whole of their value, it would be obvious that the former rights and interests of the owner would be completely extinguished pro tanto. If it had further provided that he should be compelled to sell the same at *one-half or one-third of their 17 value, or compelled to sell, without his own consent, at a price to be fixed by others, it would hardly be doubted that such laws were a violation of the compact. These cases may seem strong; but they differ not in the nature, but in the degree only of the wrong inflicted on the innocent owner. He is no more bound by the laws of Virginia to pay for improvements which he has not authorized, which he may not want, or which he may deem useless, than he is to pay a sum to a stranger for the liberty of possessing and using his own property according to the rights and interests secured to him by those laws. It is no answer that the acts of Kentucky, now in question, are regulations of the remedy, and not of the right to lands. If those acts so change the nature and extent of existing remedies, as materially to impair the rights and interests of the owner, they are just as much a violation of the compact as if they directly overturned his rights and interests.

It is the unanimous opinion of the court that the acts of 1797 and 1812 are a violation of the seventh article of the compact with Virginia, and therefore are unconstitutional. This opinion renders it unnecessary to give any opinion on the second question certified to us from the Circuit Court.<sup>1</sup>

Mr. Clay (as amicus curiæ) moved for a rehearing in the cause, upon the ground that it 18*involved *the rights and claims of numerous occupants of land in Kentucky, who had been allowed by the laws of that state, in consequence of the confusion of the land titles arising out of the vicious system of location under the land law of Virginia, an indemnity for their expenses and labor bestowed upon lands of which they had been the bonæ fidei possessors and improvers, and which were reclaimed by the true owners. He stated that the rights and interests of those claimants would be irrevocably determined by this decision of the court, the tenant in the present cause having permitted it to be brought to a hearing without appearing by his counsel, and without any argument on that side of the question. He therefore moved, that the certificate to the Circuit Court, of the opinion of this court upon the questions stated, should be withheld, and the cause continued to the next term for argument.

Motion granted.

Mr. Montgomery, for the demandant, made three points:

1st. That this court is invested with the power of questioning the validity of the legislative acts of Kentucky, under which the tenant claims, both by the national constitution and the state constitution of Kentucky.

2d. That the acts of Kentucky, so far as they respect the present controversy, are null and void.

3d. That the act of 1812 cannot be applied to the case consistently with the provisions of the constitution of Kentucky and of the United States.

19* *1. He denied that this court was bound by the exposition given by the state courts, to that part of the state constitution now drawn in question, even in a case of which the national judiciary had cognizance merely from the character of the parties litigant, as being citizens of different states; and still less where the subject-matter in controversy was connected with that provision of the United States constitution, which secured the inviolability of contracts against state legislative acts. Such a doctrine would furnish an effectual recipe for sanctioning injustice by the forms of law, by giving to local decisions a much more extensive effect than had ever been before attributed to them. Unquestionably, the adjudications of the state courts, where they have become a settled rule of property, are in general to be regarded as conclusive evidence of the local law; but where the interpretation of the fundamental law of the state is involved, and especially where that interpretation depends upon the constitution of the Union (which is the supreme law), the state courts must necessarily be controlled by the superintending authority of this court. This depends upon a principle peculiar to our constitutions, and which distinguishes them from every free and limited government which has been hitherto known in the world. In England, the legislative power of Parliament is not only supreme, but it is absolute; and (so far as depends upon written rules) despotic and uncontrollable by any other authority whatever.<sup>2</sup> But various *limitations upon the legislative power [*20 are contained in the constitution of Kentucky; and that of the United States contains other restraints upon the legislative power of the several states, and gives to the national judiciary the authority of enforcing them, especially in controversies arising between citizens of different states, as the present case does.

2. He stated that the second point would be maintained by establishing two propositions: First, that the legislative acts in question are repugnant to the terms of the compact of 1789, between the states of Virginia and Kentucky, which is made a fundamental article of the constitution of Kentucky. Second, that the acts are repugnant to that constitution, in depriving the demandant of the trial by jury.

The terms used in the compact, "rights and interests of land," import something more than a mere formal title. A right of property necessarily includes the right to recover the possession, to enter, to enjoy the rents and profits, and to continue to possess undisturbed by others.<sup>3</sup>

He who has a right to land, and is in possession, has a right to be maintained in that possession, and in the use of the land and its fruits; and he who has a right to land, but is out of possession, has a right to recover the possession or seizin. These are the qualities and incidents of a right to land at common law, none of which had been taken away by the statute at the time the compact was made. As *to the word "interest," it might have [*21 been inserted ex abundanti cautela, to protect rights which, at the time of the compact, were not yet carried into grant. The term interest, as applied to land, according to many authorities, may be something different from a right to land in fee-simple; yet it cannot be doubted that he who has a fee-simple has an interest in the land. A term for years is an interest, and so is the right both of mortgagee and mortgagee. It is then quite clear that the term "rights and interests of land" means a great deal more than the mere use and possession of the evidence of title.

2.—1 Bl. Comm. 160-162.

3.—Jao. Law Dic. tit. Right, 536; Co. Litt., s. 445, 447; 8 Rep., Altham's case; Plowd., 478.

1.—Present, Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, and Justices Johnson, Livingston, Todd, Duvall and Story.

What, then, were the pre-existing rules of law and equity, with reference to which the compact of 1789 is to be construed? By the common law then in force in Virginia, and by the statute of 1785, the remedy by writ of right was given to him who had the fee; and if the demandant recovered his seizin, he might also recover damages, to be assessed by the recognitors of assize, for the tenant's withholding possession of the tenement demanded.<sup>1</sup> In cases where an ejectment was brought, the party might have his separate action for the mesne profits, which could only be restrained in its operation by the statute of limitations of five years. As to the system of positive equity, which had been established at the period referred to, and which it was supposed was not infringed by the legislative acts now in question, it will be found that the cases where the 22* court of chancery has interfered, may be reduced to the following classes: (1) Where the party came into equity in order to disembarass his legal title of difficulties resulting from the defect of evidence at law, and also prayed a decree for the mesne profits. (2) Where the title was merely equitable, chancery has decreed both as to the title and for the mesne profits. (3) So also in cases of dower, the title as well as the mesne profits have been decreed. (4) In cases where infants are interested, the title and mesne profits has both been determined. In all these cases, the plaintiff sought relief, as well touching the title, as for an account of the mesne profits; and the claimant has therefore been allowed for valuable and lasting improvements bona fide made. In the first and second classes, the account for mesne profits has been taken from the time of bringing the suit only, because the plaintiff had improperly lain by with his title. But where that fact does not appear, the account is always carried back to the time the title accrued.<sup>2</sup> There is no case where a bill has been filed by the occupant claiming the value of his improvements against the right owner. The cases where it has been allowed, are where the title and an account of rents and profits constituted the manner of the complainant's bill, and where the defendant resisted the relief sought, by setting up some color of title in himself, with a claim 23* for the improvements. This went upon the favorite maxim of the court of chancery, that he who will have equity must do equity. But though no case, where the occupant was the plaintiff, is to be found before 1789, yet it is admitted there are certain maxims and principles of equity, which, combined with the peculiar state of land titles in Kentucky, would authorize a court of equity to relieve. Yet it is quite evident that a party coming with his bill for relief, after a recovery had against him at law, must have stood upon a very different ground than the complainants in the cases above referred to. His application must have been to the extraordinary powers of the court; he must have come in under the rule that he who will have equity must do equity; he would not have been permitted to gain by the loss of the other party.<sup>3</sup> Upon a bill brought after a recovery in a real action, the account would have been carried back to the time of his first taking possession; complete equity would have been done by making a full estimate of the value of the rents and waste on one side, and of the improvements on the other; the want of notice of the defendant's title could not have been considered as important, since he would stand upon his judgment at law; but the decree would be for the balance of the account thus taken. After a recovery of mesne profits, in the action of trespass, following a re-24covery in ejectment, if the occupant had not pleaded the statute of limitations, he might have brought his bill and the matter would have been adjusted in the same mode; but if he had pleaded the statute, and thus deprived the true owner of a part of his indemnity, he could not stand before the court as a party willing to do equity, and consequently could not have equity. But even supposing that a bill would be retained in such a case, most certainly the same rule of limitations which deprived the proprietor of a part of his damages, would also be applied to the improvements made before the time of limitation. Admitting, too, that with respect to questions between the owner of the title as complainant, claiming relief, as well touching the title as for the rents and profits, and the other party, all the cases cannot be reconciled, yet there is a very decided preponderance in favor of the doctrine now maintained; and, with respect to a naked claim for improvements, there is no contradiction whatever.

As to the terms "valid and secure," which are used in the compact, with reference to the rights and interests of land derived from the laws of Virginia, they must import the permanent validity and security of whatever is included in, or incident to, the complete enjoyment of those rights and interests. This validity and security is impaired by the acts of the state legislature now in question. By the common law connected with the statute of Virginia, before cited, the demandant, in a writ of right, was entitled to recover, together 25with his seizin, such damages as the jury might think him entitled to for the detention of the land, and for the waste committed upon it, extending back to the time when the occupant entered upon the land. But by the act of 1797, s. 1, he is to recover no damages for the use of the land before actual notice, nor even subsequent to that notice, unless the suit is brought within a year. By the third section of the act of 1812, his damages for the detention are not to commence until the final judgment or decree in the court of original jurisdiction. Under the first

1.—1 Virg. Rev. Cod. 33.

2.—2 Vern. 724; 1 Atk. 524-526; 2 Atk. 88, 283; 3 Atk. 130, 134; 2 P. Wms. 645, 646; 1 Madd. Chan. 73, 75; 1 Wash. 329.

Wheat. 8.

3.—Locupletiores neminem fieri cum alterius detrimento et injuria jure naturæ æquum est. L. Jure Naturæ, 206; De Div. Reg. Jur. Antiq.

act, his right to damages is greatly diminished; under the second, it is almost annihilated. But suppose the respective rights of the parties are tested by the settled doctrines of positive equity; the tenant, in the present case, seeking equity from a party who had a clear legal right, would have been compelled to do complete equity. He would have received an equitable allowance for his improvements, if bona fide made; but the judgment of the demandant would not have been disturbed; the value of the improvements would have been compared with the amount of his damages, and a decree rendered according to the result of that comparison. In the case of a recovery by ejectment, followed by the action of trespass for mesne profits, which was the undoubted right of the owner of the land as the law stood in 1789, the right of the plaintiff is diminished by the acts now in question. Under the old law, he could not be restricted from inquiring into the damages sustained from 26*] the time the defendant entered upon the land down to the time of suit brought, unless the defendant pleaded the statute of limitations. But if the occupant insisted on that defense, he could have no remedy in equity. The act of 1812 also makes the giving a bond for the value of the improvements a condition to the recovery of possession, thus depriving the true owner of his pre-existent absolute right to the appropriate writ of execution.

It is clear, then, that the rights of the proprietor of the land are impaired by the statutes in question; they are neither determined by the same laws, nor by the same principles of equity incorporated into new laws.

Nor can these statutes be supported on the principles of abstract justice. It is not only a maxim of the court of chancery, but of every wise legislator, that equality is equity. So, also, one ought not to gain by the loss of another who was in no fault. From these two maxims, the corollary may be drawn, that where the respective capitals of two individuals are equal, and their occupations, skill and industry are the same, their condition in the social state (so far as it depends upon legislative regulations) ought to be precisely the same. Not that one may not benefit by turns of good fortune, without sharing his gains with the other, but that the law should not take from the one, to give to the other, rendering the one richer to make the other poorer, without some fault of the latter. Here the counsel illustrated the application of these principles by putting a variety of cases which might occur under the 27*] statutes, to show the extreme injustice and inequality of their operation.

Nor does the fourth article of the compact of 1789 warrant the passage of the acts under consideration. It merely gives to Kentucky the power of requiring lands to be improved and cultivated after six years. That this article does not apply to the present case may be shown by several considerations. (1) The acts in question do not, by their terms, purport to be in execution of such a power. (2) A power to require the owners of land to improve and cultivate for the general welfare, is one thing; and a power to take away the property of one citizen and give it to another, is a very different thing. (3) A law requiring improvement and cultivation, and declaring a forfeiture for non-compliance, would only be applied to unoccupied lands; whereas the lands to which alone the acts are applied are actually improved and cultivated. The true owner is prevented by the acts of him who has usurped the possession from personal compliance.

It may be contended that there are certain ancient statutes of Virginia, recognizing the same obnoxious principles with the recent acts of Kentucky. But the only statute at all partaking of this character was that (called) of the 13th of Charles II., but in fact passed immediately after the restoration. This statute was entirely retrospective in its operation, and was intended to apply to a peculiar state of things existing during the civil wars and the commonwealth, as distinctly appears both by the preamble and the enacting clauses. It contained, however, no provision for depriving the true owner of the rents, &c., and was actually repealed in 1748.

As to the second particular proposition under this general head, the constitution of Kentucky expressly declares (art. 10, s. 6) that "The ancient mode of trial by jury shall be held sacred, and the right thereof remain inviolate." The law of Virginia prescribed this mode of trial as to writs of right with all its details, and, amongst others, that the damages of the demandant for the detention of the land should be assessed by the jury. An arbitrary tribunal of commissioners is substituted for this ancient mode of trial by the acts, the validity of which is now drawn in question. Thus is not only the amount of damages to which the demandant was entitled, under the old law, diminished to a pittance, but even that is to be liquidated by a tribunal far more unfavorable to him than a jury.

3. The third general point would follow as a corollary from the proof of the two following propositions, or either of them: (1) That the act of 1812 is repugnant both to the United States constitution and that of Kentucky, as being retrospective in its operation upon vested rights, and as impairing the obligation of contracts. (2) That it is repugnant to the constitution of Kentucky, in determining, by the legislative department, a matter which is exclusively cognizable by the judicial.

And first, the state constitution provides (art. 10, s. 18) that "No ex post facto law, nor law impairing contracts, shall be made;" 29*] and the national constitution declares (art. 1, s. 13) that "No state shall pass any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts." The terms of the prohibition are very similar, and the substance is absolutely the same. In the case at bar, the injury to the demandant was committed long before the passage of the act of 1812, which has interposed and violently deprived him of his remedy, even pendente lite. Considering the two prohibitions against ex post facto laws, and against laws impairing the obligation of contracts, together, they will be found to afford a complete protection to vested rights of property, and to apply precisely to the present case. All rights of action are founded either upon contracts or upon torts; they are either ex contractu or ex delictu. The framers of our constitutions, by the prohibitions against impairing the obligation of contracts, intended to profect all rights dependent upon contract from being diminished or destroyed; and they could not certainly have intended to leave injuries to property arising ex delictu wholly unredressed, or to leave the remedy to the caprice of the state legislatures. Doubtless the more generally received opinion is that this prohibition of ex post facto laws is to be restricted to criminal matters. But there are great authorities to the contrary. The commentator on the laws of England, in laying down the maxim of political philosophy, that ex post facto laws ought not to be passed, does indeed illustrate his position by a criminal case; and probably some have 30* been misled *by taking the example for the rule.<sup>1</sup> Dr. Paley, however, lays down the rule without any qualification whatever.<sup>2</sup>

But supposing this first proposition to be questionable, there certainly can be no doubt as to the second. By the constitution of Kentucky, it is declared that "The powers of government shall be divided into three distinct departments, and each of them be confided to a separate body of magistracy, to wit, those which are legislative to one; those which are executive to another; and those which are judicial to another." And by the second section of the same article, that "No person, or collection of persons, shall exercise any power properly belonging to either of the others, excepting in the instances hereinafter expressly directed or permitted." Now, it cannot be denied that a particular controversy, arising out of facts, which, by an existing law, give the parties a right to certain remedies in the courts, is a matter exclusively of judicial cognizance. But here the legislative department has adjudicated upon it by interfering with these remedies, after a lis pendens, so as to take away the property of one and give it to another party. It is an adjudication discharging the tenant from a just claim which the demandant had against him under the former law, without any equivalent or indemnity to the latter. That this adjudication has been clothed with the forms of public and general legislation, and includes every case of the same class, can make no difference.<sup>3</sup> *This is an example of that very sort of legislation which Dr. Paley reprobates and calls double; it being the exercise both of judicial and legislative power. Such legislative acts do not discriminate between different cases, according to their peculiar circumstances, as the judicial authority would do. Thus the act of 1812 confounds together the case of the person lying in wait with his title, to take an unfair advantage of the compact, and that of the rightful owner, who has constantly and openly pursued his claim; cases of infancy and of full age; of fair and fraudulent settlement; in short, all circumstances and qualities are indistinguishably blended in one sweeping act of retrospective injustice.

Mr. Bibb, contra, contended, that the substantial effect of the acts of 1797 and 1812, went merely to allow the grantee from the commonwealth, who, under faith in his grant, has made valuable and lasting improvements, the amount of those improvements; and to exempt him from accounting for rents and profits down to the time when he begins to be a mala fidei possessor by resisting the better title of the true owner. That the acts did not apply even to cases of disputed boundaries, but only to cases of conflicting titles; nor to cases of fraud, or of lauds previously cultivated and improved. He entered into a detail of the provisions of the laws, of the practice under them, and of the exposition they had received from the courts, and contended.

1st. That the principle of the act of 1812 is a *principle of natural equity and justice, [32 as to permanent improvements by a bonæ fidei possessor.

2d. That the principle of postponing the account of rents and profits is the true chancery rule, and such as is familiarly applied in the practice of courts of equity.

3d. That the laws are not repugnant to the compact of 1789.

1. The circumstances under which the country, where this momentous question arises, was settled, are to be considered. The manner in which it was colonized, and in which the titles to land were first acquired, and the consequent confusion of conflicting claims and litigation, are, unfortunately, but too well known to the court. Under these difficult circumstances, all that the local legislature has done is to assert the principle of natural justice and artificial equity, that he who takes possession of vacant lands, under a prima facie legal title, and makes valuable and lasting improvements, shall be considered as a bonæ fidei possessor. Such is the well-established rule of the court of chancery as to improvements which must pass with the freehold to the party asserting his paramount title. It is applied where a vendee, under an agreement for a sale, takes possession, so, also, where a mortgagee is in possession, the court never permits a redemption without paying for permanent improvements. If, then, the party has a right, in similar cases, to an indemnity, is it any objection that the statute has defined a rule declaring what requisites shall be indispensable? *What better [33 evidence of bona fides can there be than a grant under the great seal?

There is a great variety of claims, consisting of different grades or classes, complicating the titles to lands in Kentucky, and depending not merely on legal doubts, but on questions of evidence of great difficulty.<sup>3</sup> What is the opposing claim, which is of such validity as, prima facie, to convert the occupant into a mala fidei possessor? The local tribunals have laid down the only safe practical rule, which is that the positive decision of a court of record shall alone be sufficient. All grants are by record, and the patent can only be repealed by matter of record. There must be a scire facias to repeal the patent; and in the case of escheat, a regular inquisition is indispensable. Until the grant of the commonwealth is annulled, a person claiming and holding under it cannot be considered as a mala fidei possessor. The validity of the laws in question has been confirmed by innumerable decisions; and they have been always strictly confined in their operation to cases of conflicting titles under grants, and have

1.—1 Bl. Comm. 46.

2.—Paley's Mor. and Pol. Phil. 444.

Wheat. 8.

3.—1 Bibb's Rep., Preface.

never been extended to protect a malæ fidei possession.<sup>1</sup>

2. The general principle of equity is settled by a series of decisions, both in England and in this country. A leading case on this subject is that of the Duke of Bolton v. Deane.<sup>2</sup> There the 34* doctrine was established that if the lessor suffers the lessee to hold over, equity will not compel the tenant to account for mesne profits, unless the lessor was hindered from entering by fraud or some extraordinary accident. The same principle is laid down as to mesne profits, in several other adjudged cases.<sup>3</sup> And wherever there has been any default or laches on the part of the true owner in asserting his title, the account is restrained to the filing of the bill.<sup>4</sup> So, where a man suffers another to build on his ground, without setting up a right till afterwards, a court of equity will compel the owner to permit the builder to enjoy it quietly.<sup>5</sup> The same principle has been recognized by our own courts, and is also to be found among the maxims of the Roman law.<sup>6</sup>

3. As to the compact of 1789, between Virginia and Kentucky, it is a treaty for good faith; a mere recognition of the principles of natural law and morality. A change of sovereignty does not usually make any change in proprietary interests in the soil; and the compact is merely declaratory of that principle of public law. The Louisiana treaty contains stipulations for the protection of the property of the inhabitants, but it has never been construed to limit the sovereign rights of the United States over the domain of that province. 35* Neither did the compact of 1789 intend to limit the sovereignty of Kentucky. It is merely a stipulation for the conservation of titles in their integrity; for fair and impartial legislation upon the rights of property which were originally derived from the laws of Virginia. It could not have meant to prevent the modification of remedies in the courts, and generally what is called the lex fori. According to the doctrine contended for on the other side, the legislature of Kentucky could not even extend the time for entering surveys, than which nothing could be more absurd and extravagant.

But the true principles by which the compact is to be interpreted have already been settled by this court. In Bodley v. Taylor it is laid down that if the same measure of justice be meted to the citizens of each state; if laws be neither made nor expounded, for the purpose of depriving those who are meant to be protected by the compact of their rights, no violation of the compact can be said to exist.<sup>7</sup> This case also determines the principle that the decisions of the local courts are to be followed; and the inconveniences which would flow from shaking the system of land titles established by the uniform series of their adjudications, is insisted on as a reason for adhering to the rules of property thus established.<sup>8</sup> So, also, this court has solemnly sanctioned the act of Kentucky, giving further time for surveys; as well as the statute of limitations of that 36 state, and the act concerning champerty and maintenance.<sup>9</sup>

The system of legislation now in question does but follow the maxims laid down by Montesquieu, that the laws should encourage industry; that the more climate and other circumstances, tend to discourage the cultivation of the earth, the more should the legislator excite agriculture; and that those laws which tend to monopolize the lands, and take from individuals the proprietary spirit, augment the effect of those unfavorable circumstances.<sup>10</sup> Here, though it is acknowledged that the titles are to be decided according to the laws of Virginia, existing at the epoch of the compact, a new proprietary interest has grown up since, not foreseen nor provided for. The possessor in good faith has covered the face of the country with his own property, the fruits of his toil and industry, which it is not just that the owner of the unimproved land should take from him without an indemnity.

Again, how can this court interfere, after the settled decisions of the local courts has confirmed the validity of these laws, and thus disturb the rules of property which have been firmly established; and that, too, in a case where the parties on both sides, really interested in the controversy, are citizens of the same state? The subject is not within the jurisdiction of the court, either as to the character of the parties really interested, or 37 as to the subject-matter of the controversy. The jurisdiction originally given by the constitution has been defined and limited by the judiciary act, and is not co-extensive with what might have been granted by Congress under the constitution.<sup>11</sup> The states may, with the consent of Congress, make compacts or agreements with each other; but they cannot make a treaty, even with the consent of Congress. The judicial power, then, does not extend to such compacts, considering them as treaties, nor does that clause of the constitution which prohibits the states from making any law impairing the obligation of contracts, apply to the present case. That prohibition can only be fairly construed to extend to contracts between private individuals, or at most between a state and individuals. An agreement or compact between two different states, in their sovereign capacities, and respecting their sovereign rights, can never, by the utmost latitude of construction, be brought within the grasp of a prohibition which was evidently intended merely for the protection of private rights, growing out of private contracts, or out of a grant from the state, vesting a proprietary interest in the grantee. The only

1.—1 Marsh. Kentucky Rep. 443; 2 Marsh. 214; 3 Bibb's Rep. 298; 4 Bibb's Rep. 461; 1 Marsh. 246, 247.

2.—Finch's Pree. in Ch. 516.

3.—3 Eq. Cas. Abr. 588, tit. Mesne Profits; 1 Atk. 526.

4.—Dormer v. Forteseue, 3 P. Wms. 136.

5.—East Ind. Company v. Vineent, 2 Atk. 83.

6.—Southall v. M'Kean, 1 Wash. 336; 2 Domat's.

Civ. Law, 432, Straban's Translation; Kaimes' Eq. 189; 1st Ed. 270.

7.—5 Cranch's Rep. 223.

8.—1b. 234.

9.—2 Wheat. Rep. 324; 1 Wheat. Rep. 292.

10.—Esprit des Loix, b. 14, c. 6, 8, 9, 11.

11.—United States v. Bevens, 3 Wheat. Rep. 336, 387, 390; United States v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat. Rep. 93.

remaining question, then, is whether this court can declare a state law void, as being repugnant to the constitution of the state, contrary to the uniform decisions of the state courts, who are the rightful exclusive expounders of 38*] their own local law? It is *conceived that this point is irrevocably settled by the decisions of this court.<sup>1</sup> But even supposing this to be a mistaken inference, it is quite clear, from the uniform language and conduct of the court, that it will not declare an act, whether of the state or national legislature, to be void, as being repugnant to the fundamental law, unless in a very clear case. Besides, there is the less necessity for the interference of the court in the present case, as the compact itself provides a tribunal for the adjustment of any disputes which may arise under it; and that stipulation, if it does not entirely exclude the jurisdiction of any other tribunal in all cases arising under it, will at least furnish a motive for great caution on the part of the national judiciary in a case where, if citizens of Kentucky alone are interested, they ought to be bound by the decisions of their own courts; and if the rights of citizens of Virginia are involved, it depends upon the pleasure of that state to create the tribunal by which they are to be determined.

Mr. Clay, on the same side, stated that the great question in the cause was, what is that paramount rule with which these laws are to be compared, and if found repugnant, to be declared void by this court. If the jurisdiction now to be exercised arises under that clause of the national constitution prohibiting the individual states from making any law impairing the obligation of contracts, then the court may 39*] draw to its cognizance *the subject-matter in controversy. But if otherwise, then it can only acquire jurisdiction by the character of the parties litigant, as being citizens of different states, and so entitled to the protection of the federal forum.

The first inquiry then would be, whether there was any subsisting compact between the states of Virginia and Kentucky, upon which the jurisdiction of the court could fasten.

If there be a compact, it must be between parties capable of making it; upon a subject on which they might constitutionally stipulate; and made in a form warranted by the constitution.

Waiving the question as to the parties, he would contend,

1st. That the supposed compact had not been constitutionally made; and,

2d. That if the compact is to be interpreted as restraining the state of Kentucky from passing the laws in question, the restraint itself would be unconstitutional and void.

1. Both by the original articles of confederation, and the existing national constitution, the states are prohibited from treating or contracting with each other without the consent of Congress. The terms of the prohibition in the constitution are very strong: "No state shall, without the consent of Congress, enter into any agreement or compact with another state, or a foreign power." It extends to all agreements or compacts, no matter what is the subject of them. It is immaterial, therefore, whether that subject be harmless or dangerous to the Union. There is here no *room for interpreta- [*40 tion. "Any agreement or compact" are the words, and all contracts between the states, without the consent of Congress, are interdicted. To make, therefore, the supposed compact binding, it must have been entered into with that consent. It is not now insisted (though perhaps it might be), that this consent must precede the compact. All that will be asked is (what cannot be denied) that it must either precede or follow the compact.

In the present case there is no pretense for alleging a subsequent express assent. Was there, then, a prior one? The act of Virginia did not even profess to ask the consent of Congress to the compact. All that it demanded was that Congress should consent to the admission of the proposed state into the Union, &c., and Congress has not even responded to all that was asked. What it has assented to can only be ascertained by resorting to the language it has thought fit to use. The act of February 4, 1791 (by which alone the will of Congress on this subject is signified), merely declares the consent of that body to the erecting of the district of Kentucky into a separate and independent state, and its reception into the Union upon a certain day. Beyond what was asked of it, Congress has not gone; as to the rest of the matters connected with these, it was altogether passive. There was, then, no compact. It was a mere negotiation; for the people of Kentucky did not meet in convention until 1792, when it is supposed that their assent to the compact was given.

*But it may be said that though Con- [*41 gress did not expressly consent, yet it acquiesced in the compact, which is equivalent. This is what is denied. The consent of Congress being required, it must be evidenced by some positive act. Congress is a collective body, or, rather, it consists of three bodies, each of which participates in the exercise of the legislative power of the nation. The forms and ceremonies of passing laws must be observed. The doctrine of acquiescence cannot apply to the exercise of such a sovereign power. Did the House of Representatives; did the Senate; did the President, acquiesce? How do you ascertain it? Their silence cannot be interpreted into acquiescence. It was not necessary for them to interpose in order to prevent that which, without their consent, would be a mere nullity. If they had actually interposed by an express prohibition, in the most solemn form, it could not make the compact more void than it was before. Being a nullity from an inherent defect in its original formation, it could not be made more so by any extraneous act. Never having existed, its existence could not be destroyed by any conceivable power whatever. Indeed, to set up the doctrine, that Congress can tacitly acquiesce in agreements unconstitutional made between the states, would be of most dangerous and fatal consequences. It would sanction whatever agreements the several states might choose to make with each other, and introduce chaos into the confederacy, by engagements between its different members, inconsistent with *each other, and con- [*42 flicting with the duties they all owe to the 1.—Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. Rep. 386.

Wheat. 8.

Union. All the analogies of the constitution are against such a doctrine. Various prohibitions of the exercise of different powers by the States, without the consent of Congress, are contained in the constitution. Thus they are prohibited, without that consent, from laying imposts or duties on imports or exports, except such as are necessary for executing the inspection laws; or any tonnage duty; and from keeping troops or ships in time of peace; and from engaging in war, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay. These prohibitions are all connected in the same clause with the prohibition against their making contracts with each other. Yet, surely, it cannot be pretended that in all these cases the consent of Congress can be inferred from its silence. It is true that the consent of Congress to such acts has not always been asked by the states. But it was their duty to have asked it, and the acts are mere nullities unless the consent be obtained.

2. If the supposed compact is to be interpreted to restrain the state of Kentucky from passing the laws in question, such restraint would be unconstitutional.

It is incontestable that there are some attributes of sovereignty of which a state cannot be deprived, even with the concurrence of Congress and the state itself. The true theory of our government is that of perfect equality among the members of the Union. Whatever sovereign power one has, each and all have. A 43* state may *refuse to allow another state to be carved out of its territory; but if it consents to the formation of a new state, such new state becomes invested with all the sovereign attributes of every old one. Congress may refuse to admit a new state; but if it admits it, the state stands in the Union, freed and liberated from every condition which would degrade it below its compeers. Whatever one state can do, all can do. The pressure of the whole on all the parts is equal, and all the parts are equal to each other. This implied prohibition extends to every compact, in every form, by which a state attempts to deprive itself of its sovereign faculties. The sovereignty of a state cannot exist without a territorial domain upon which it is to act: and there can be no other restrictions upon its action within its own territory, but what is to be found in its own constitution, or in the national constitution. Of all the attributes of sovereignty, none is more indisputable than that of its action upon its own territory. If that territory happens to be in a waste and wilderness state, it may pass laws to reclaim it; to encourage its population; to promote cultivation; to increase production. That any of the old states can pass such laws, is incontestable; and if they may rightfully do it, then Kentucky may do the same.

If, then, there be no compact constitutionally made, and could have been none, with the power of restricting the state legislature from passing the laws in question, there is no fundamental rule with the violation of which they stand chargeable.

44* But it may be said that this rule is incorporated into the state constitution.

To this it is answered that the incorporation of the supposed compact into the state constitution did not make it a compact, if otherwise it wanted the requisite sanctions under the federal constitution. If it were inserted upon the mistaken supposition of its being a binding contract, does the insertion produce any effect? Is it not to be considered as the insertion of that which, being before void, remains null, notwithstanding the insertion? That it is not made a compact by the insertion, is clear; for the prohibition upon the states, to contract or agree without the consent of Congress, is a prohibition to contract or agree in any form, constitutional or otherwise.

But, although it has not the properties of a compact, it may possibly be contended that it is nevertheless a part of the constitution of Kentucky, and, therefore, binding upon the legislature of the state. The convention of Kentucky proceeded upon the notion that it was a compact. If in that they were mistaken, ought it to be treated in a character which was never intended? Can it be treated in that character? There are reciprocal provisions in it. Supposing it to be no compact, those stipulations on the part of Virginia, which formed the consideration of stipulations on the part of Kentucky, would not be binding on Virginia. It would, therefore, be most unjust to hold Kentucky bound for grants, the equivalents for which she cannot enforce. If one party is not bound the other ought to be deemed free; and *the incorporation of the compact [45] into the constitution of Kentucky ought to be considered as proceeding upon the erroneous supposition. It was the compact, emphatically, that was made a part of the constitution. If there were no compact, nothing was inserted; or it was the will of one party, expressed in the most solemn form, to which there was wanting the will of the other, or the federal sanction to make it a compact. If, notwithstanding the freedom of Virginia from any obligations, Kentucky is to be regarded as bound by her separate constitutional act, then the question is, what did she intend by that act? Who is to expound it? Are we to look for the meaning of the constitution of a state within the state itself, or are we to look abroad for foreign interpreters? It need not be denied, that in case of an appeal to the federal tribunals, by citizens of other states, against the acts of local legislation, upon the ground of repugnance to the state constitutions, they may pronounce on that repugnancy. But it must be a clear case of repugnancy to justify them in annulling the state law. And after all the departments of a state government had united in giving an exposition to its constitution, which had been uniformly acted on for a series of years and become a rule of property, this court would solemnly pause before it overturned such a construction. This court, in Bodley v. Taylor,<sup>1</sup> determined that it would follow the decisions of one department only (the judiciary) in respect to *the [46] laws of Virginia, although it intimated strong doubts of their correctness. The ground on which this determination justly proceeds is a regard to the peace of society, a respect for the rights of property, and the prevention of those disorders which would flow from opposite and conflicting rules.

The convention, by inserting the declaration

1.—5 Cranch's Rep. 223.

in the constitution that the compact was to be considered as a part of it, could not have intended to prevent the passage of the laws for the benefit of the occupying claimants, because the first of those laws preceded the formation of the last constitution. The state court of last resort has affirmed the consistency of the law with the compact; and, consequently, its consistency with the constitution.<sup>1</sup> Thus we have the deliberate adoption of that system by the legislative authority, almost contemporaneously with the date of the compact; the formation of the present constitution, without disapproving of that system; and an adherence to it by the legislative authority for a long series of years, during which it has reviewed it, expressly adhered to its principle, and given it a more expansive effect.

3. If the compact is to be treated as one made with all necessary solemnities, the jurisdiction of this court cannot attach until the party charged with a violation of it has refused to constitute the tribunal of the compact.

The eighth article of the compact provides 47*] for "a special tribunal. That provision is as much a part of the compact as any other. It is admitted that rights which existed prior to and independent of the compact, cannot be affected by the decisions of that tribunal. But whatever rights spring out of the compact, originate with it, and are liable to be affected by it. They rest, coupled with all the conditions which the enactment that gave them birth had imposed upon them. If the party complained of for violating the compact had refused to co-operate in the constitution of the tribunal of the compact, then the jurisdiction of this court might attach under that branch of the distribution of judicial power which gives it cognizance of controversies between the states (if Congress had made provision for giving effect to that part of the constitution), or perhaps the court might, in such case, exercise jurisdiction as between the individuals interested. If there be cause of complaint, it is by Virginia against Kentucky. But Virginia has never (until recently) complained; she has acquiesced; and Kentucky, as far from refusing to create the tribunal of the compact, has offered to refer to it this very matter.

It will probably be contended that this provision is like the ordinary stipulation in policies of insurance, and other contracts for referring to arbitration, which has never been held to exclude the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts of the land. But the ground on which the courts of Westminster have assumed jurisdiction 48*] in such cases is "that of their transcendent authority."<sup>2</sup> If it were res integra, there would certainly be great reason to contend that in these cases the forum domesticum stipulated for by the parties ought to have exclusive jurisdiction. But, be this as it may, there is this plain distinction, that the courts of Westminster Hall have a general jurisdiction over the realm, whilst this court is one of limited jurisdiction, having special cognizance of a few classes of cases only. So far as that jurisdiction results from the will of the states, who are parties to the compact, it must be taken with the restrictions which that will imposes. The parties, in effect say: "We make such a contract; if we differ about its interpretation, or execution, we will constitute a special tribunal to decide that difference." Congress might indeed give you jurisdiction over the compact, by providing a mode in which your constitutional jurisdiction over controversies between the states shall be exercised. But all jurisdiction over sovereign states (however derived), is limited by the very nature of things. Suppose this were a foreign treaty, and provided for a reference to the arbitration of a foreign sovereign, would you take jurisdiction in that case?

Supposing, however, that the court should feel itself compelled to take cognizance of the present cause, as being a private controversy between citizens of different states, it will exercise its power with the most deliberate caution. This court is invested with the most important trust that was ever possessed by any tribunal [49* for the benefit of mankind. The political problem is to be solved in America, whether written constitutions of government can exist. They certainly cannot exist without a depositary somewhere of the power to pronounce upon the conformity of the acts of the delegated authority to the fundamental law. This court is that depositary, and I know not of any better. But the success of this experiment, so interesting to all that is dear to the interests of human nature, depends upon the prudence with which this high trust is executed.

4. The compact, supposing it to be valid and binding, does not prohibit the passage of these laws.

The mode by which private individuals could acquire a part of the public domain in Virginia, as prescribed by the act of 1748, was by a survey, accompanied with certain specified improvements.<sup>3</sup> If not settled within three years, the grant was forfeited, without any formal proceeding to repeal the patent. In 1779 commenced the calamitous system under which Kentucky now suffers. In order to raise a revenue and provide for the defense of the frontier, the previous survey was dispensed with, and hence the conflicting claims which now cover the whole surface of the country. At the period of the separation of the two states, the titles acquired under the law of 1779 were incomplete and in every stage of progression, from the entry to the patent. Virginia was about [50* to part with the sovereignty; that is, with the power of consummating the titles and fulfilling her engagements. If she made no provision; if she obtained no guarantee for the complete execution of her engagements; if she exposed those who had acquired the right to, or interests in, land from her, to the uncontrolled action of the new sovereignty, she might justly be reproached with infidelity to her engagements. Faithful to these, the stipulation in question was inserted. The object, and the only object of it, was to notify the new state that it must not abuse its power to the detriment of persons claiming under Virginia, and to proclaim to those persons her parental attention to their interests. It was to announce to them, and to the new state, that their titles were to remain valid and secure under the new sovereign. It was a 1.—4 Bibb's Rep. 52.

2.—2 Marsh. Ins. 679.

Wheat. 8.

3.—Leigh's Rev. Virg. Laws, 333.

devolution upon the new sovereign of all the duties toward them of the old sovereign, and nothing more. It was to bind the new state as far as Virginia was bound, but to leave it as free as she would have been had there been no separation. Virginia could have had no imaginable motive to prevent the new state from exercising all the accustomed rights of sovereignty. On the contrary, she displayed a solicitude for the admission of a new state into the Union, making it a condition of its independence. In conformity with this view is the language of the third article. It provides, "that all private rights and interests of lands, within the said district, derived from the laws of Virginia, prior to such separation, shall 51*] *remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed state, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in this state." If the reason for using the terms "rights and interests" be attended to, it will be seen that it is a guarantee for the security of the title, and nothing but the title. It is no restriction upon the new sovereignty as to any public policy which it might think fit to adopt. All the parts of the compact are to be taken together, and one article may serve to expound another, where there is ambiguity. What it meant by the third, may be ascertained by the fourth condition. That is a clear recognition of the right of the new state to enforce cultivation or improvement by forfeiture or other penalty. It expressly recognizes the right to exercise that power forthwith as to citizens; and as to non-residents, merely leaves a reasonable time (six years) to enable them to settle and improve. It admits the right of the state to effect the object by forfeiture or other penalty. If the parties to the compact had intended, by a provision for the security of the title, to exclude the legislative authority from acting at all upon the subject, would they have left that subject exposed to the most formidable action of the sovereign power, by forfeiture or other penalty?

The courts of Kentucky, the people of Kentucky, the legislature of Kentucky, have all proceeded upon the principle of the perfect validity of the titles derived from the laws of Virginia. Everybody is interested in the preservation of those titles. The legislative 52*] system of Kentucky *does not begin to act until the system of Virginia has had its complete effect. After the decision upon the title, and after it has been pronounced valid; after the terms of the compact are completely fulfilled, the laws of Kentucky commence their operation. When they do operate, it is not upon the title but upon the subject. It is not on account of any defect in the title that they operate at all. They spring from those considerations of policy which a sovereign state has a right to weigh and give effect to. The title is admitted; but from other causes dehors the title, the owner of it is not compelled to pay for the title, nor for the land which he had a right to only in its native state; but he is compelled (on grounds of public policy) to pay for something which is not inherent in the title, which does not naturally belong to the land. If this be not according to the true interpretation of the compact, then the erection of Kentucky into an independent state was a solemn mockery. It was a grant of the sovereignty without a capacity to exercise it, and a transfer of the sovereign power of Virginia to the new state with a prohibition to the exercise of any sovereign power. If the compact restrains her from legislating on the subject to this extent, it goes a great deal farther and exempts the subject entirely from her legislative jurisdiction. She could not tax the lands of non-residents; nor subject the land to the payment of debts in any novel manner; nor make a new law of descents; nor establish a ferry; nor lay out a road; nor build a town. In short, she can exert no sovereign power *whatever over the [*53 subject. For if those considerations of public policy, which led her to adopt the system of compensation to the bona fidei occupant, cannot prevail, neither could similar considerations in any other case prevail to authorize her legislative interference. The Virginia code of 1789 must immutably govern the territory.

But it may be said that the words of the third article must mean something more than a mere security of the title, according to the laws under which it is derived; otherwise the insertion of the article was utterly useless, since it would create no obligation other than what would exist without it. The answer to this is, that the necessity of such a stipulation grew out of the very extraordinary state of land titles in Kentucky. Even, however, if this reason had not existed, instances might be cited, without number, of similar precautions in international pacts and treaties. Such are, among others, the cession by Virginia of her western territory to Congress, which contains a confirmation to the settlers of Kaskias, Vincennes, &c., of their possessions and titles; the Louisiana treaty, and the Florida treaty, all of which contain similar confirmations.

It may, however, be urged that the rights and interests in land, as derived from the laws of Virginia, cannot be valid and secure if these acts have their effect; that there would be a nominal compliance with the compact, but a real violation of it.

If the laws operated on the title; if they obstructed or defeated it, the argument would indeed *have weight. It would, how- [*54 ever, at the same time, be equally applicable to a case of forfeiture for non-settlement or non-cultivation; for in that case, too, it might be said that you admit the title, but forfeit the land. So, in all other cases where the state exercises its right of eminent domain, it might be said that the title was acknowledged, but the land taken away. The ground on which the laws repose is not that of any inherent taint or defect in the title. It is one of policy, founded on the peculiar condition of the country; the multitude of dormant claims to the same land; the non-assertion of their titles by adverse claimants, and the necessity of encouraging improvement. The decisions of this court conform to these principles of interpretation. In Wilson v. Mason,<sup>1</sup> the court says: "It must be considered as providing for the preservation of titles, not for the tribunals which should decide on those titles." The laws are of universal and impartial application. They apply as well between citizens of the state as between them and non-residents. Such an application of them was considered by the court, in Taylor v. Bodley,<sup>1</sup> as a conclusive test of their validity.

1.—1 Cranch's Rep. 45, 91.

5. If the compact limited the action of the new sovereignty to the situation of the Virginia laws respecting real property, in all cases whatever, at the period of the separation, still it is insisted that the principle on which the occupying claimant laws are founded, had been [*55*] recognized by that state, and was then in force, and that Kentucky had a right to constitute the tribunals which should execute it and to direct its application. That the whole subject of remedy devolved on the new state is too clear a proposition to be contested. It might refuse to establish courts of justice at all. It might adopt the civil law or the Napoleon code. It might abolish the court of chancery. In Wilson v. Mason,<sup>2</sup> this doctrine was substantially held. The principle of the acts in question was first adopted by a law of the colony of Virginia, enacted in 1643.<sup>3</sup> It seems that this law never was repealed; and by it even the occupant, without color of title, was exempted from the payment of rents on eviction. But on general principles of law and equity, such as they have been recognized in every system of jurisprudence which has prevailed among civilized nations, the meliorations by a bonæ fidei possessor are to be paid for on eviction by the true owner; and such possessor is also exempt from responsibility for rents and profits.<sup>4</sup> The whole law of prescription proceeds by the same analogy. Southall v. McKean<sup>5</sup> is an adjudication on that principle, posterior to the separation, in a case occurring prior to it. Lovther v. The Commonwealth<sup>6</sup> proceeded on the same ground; and the case of a party claiming under the state is much stronger than if he claimed under a private individual. The principle, then, being [*56*] in existence in the parent state, it was competent to the new state to modify it and direct its application. The cases are numerous where a principle originally applied by courts of equity is adopted by the legislature, and, being incorporated into a statute, is enforced by the courts of law as a legal rule. Such are the cases of set-off, of penal bonds, and the remedy of creditors against devisees.

6. At all events, the laws are not wholly repugnant to the compact in their application to every species of action or suit; and the court will discriminate between the void and the valid provisions. The two laws provide, in substance:

(1) That there shall be no allowance of rents and profits prior to notice. (2) A definition of what shall be considered as notice. By the act of 1797 it is the commencement of a suit, or the delivery of a certified copy of the record on which the party claims, and the bringing a suit within a year. By the act of 1812 it is the rendering a judgment or decree. (3) That the occupant shall be paid for all valuable and lasting improvements, subject, by the act of 1797, to the restriction that the value of such improvements after notice shall not exceed the amount of the rents and profits after notice. (4) That the occupant shall be chargeable with all waste or damage committed on the land. (5) That he shall hold possession until the balance due to him is secured or paid. (6) That a sworn board of commissioners shall liquidate the account between the parties. (7) The right of election given by the act of 1812.

*Are all, and if not all, which of these principles contrary to the compact? Is the repugnancy in the principles adopted, or the mode of executing them? As to what is that notice which shall convert a bonæ fidei into a malæ fidei possession, it is so uncertain in itself that it cannot be denied that the legislature has a right to establish a rule of positive institution on that subject. As to the remedy, it may certainly change the form of action, and the proceedings in any action; or convert an equitable into a legal right, with its appropriate legal remedy. Or it may forfeit the whole property, for non-cultivation or non-improvement.

This court is not a mere court of justice, applying ordinary laws. It is a political tribunal, and may look to political considerations and consequences. If there be doubt, ought the settled policy of a state, and its rules of property to be disturbed? The protection of property should extend as well to one subject as to another; to that which results from improvements, made under the faith of titles emanating from the government, as to a proprietary interest in the soil, derived from the same source. It extends to literary property, the fruit of mental labor. Here is a confusion of the proprietary interest in the land, with the accession to its value, from the industry of man fairly bestowed upon it. The wisdom of the legislator is tasked to separate the two and do exact justice to the claimants of each. The laws now in question are founded upon that great law of nature which secures the right resulting from occupation and bodily labor. The laws [*58] of society are but modifications of that superior law. If there be doubt respecting their validity, considerations of convenience and utility ought to prevail in a case where the settled order of a great people would be disturbed. Conquerors themselves respect the religion, the laws, the property of the vanquished; and surely this court will respect those rules of property which had their origin in early colonial times, which were adopted by the parent state, and have been so long acquiesced in and confirmed by inveterate habit and usage among the people where they prevail.

Mr. B. Hardin, for the demandant, in reply, stated that the cause divided itself into the following questions:

1. What were the laws of Virginia respecting a compensation for ameliorations by a bonæ fidei possessor (for no other could be entitled), and his accountability for rents and profits at the time the compact was made?

2. Whether the consent of Congress was given to the compact in the manner required by the constitution of the United States.

1.—5 Cranch's Rep. 223.

2.—1 Cranch's Rep. 45, 91.

3.—1 Henn. Dig. LL. Virg. Pref. 15.

Wheat. 8. U. S., Book 5.

4.—Kaines' Prin. Eq. 26-23, 139.

5.—1 Wash. Rep. 336.

6.—1 Hen. & Mun. Rep. 201.

3. What is the true exposition of the compact?

4. The exposition of the legislative acts of Kentucky of 1797 and 1812, and an examination of the question, how far they depart from the laws of Virginia on the same subject-matter existing in 1789.

5. Whether this court has jurisdiction over the cause, and power to declare the acts of Kentucky null and void, as being repugnant to 59* the compact and the constitution of the United States; and whether it will exercise that jurisdiction and power in the present case.

1. The laws of Virginia, respecting this matter, in force at the time of the compact, could only consist of such parts of the common law of England as had been adopted in that state; of the system of equity, and the principles of the civil law applicable to the question; or of the then existing local statutes respecting it.

The rule of the common law, as to the action for mesne profits, is well ascertained to be that the plaintiff is entitled to the mesne profits from the time of the demise laid in the declaration in ejectment, and that the tenant cannot set-off his improvements made upon the land.<sup>1</sup> At law, then, the occupant was not entitled to compensation for his meliorations; and in equity, the universal rule is that the rents and profits are to be accounted for; though under some circumstances, the bonæ fidei occupant will be allowed to deduct the value of his improvements, i. e., of the increased value of the land.<sup>2</sup> But, both by the chancery rule, and that of the civil law, the bona fides of his possession ceases the moment he has notice of the adverse better title. In the case cited on the other side, of Southall v. M'Kean,<sup>3</sup> the Court of Appeals of Virginia did not mean to impugn the rule uniformly applied by the English Court 60* of Chancery. It went on the *ordinary ground that he who will have equity must do equity; and that if a party purchases land, with notice of another's equitable title, but that other lies by and neglects to assert his right for a long time, during which valuable improvements are made, the purchaser ought not, in equity, to lose these improvements. Still less does the case of Lowther v. The Commonwealth<sup>4</sup> impugn the rule. It decides nothing more than that where land is sold with warranty, and the vendee is evicted, he shall recover of the vendor, not the value of the land at the time of eviction, but the purchase moneys, with interest.

2. The consent of Congress was given to the compact between Virginia and Kentucky, in the manner required by the constitution of the United States. No particular form of words is necessary to signify this assent. Congress had the compact before them, and have agreed to the agreement for the formation of the new state and its admission into the Union. The state courts have repeatedly and constantly recognized the validity of the compact;<sup>5</sup> and if this court were now to determine it to be void, Kentucky would be compelled to recede the whole country south of Green River, which was one of the equivalents she received for the stipulations on her part. The compact is also recognized as valid and binding by the sovereign authority of the people of Kentucky, being *incorporated into the state constitution [61 and thus made a part of their fundamental law.

3. As to the interpretation of the compact (supposing it valid), if that on the other side be correct, the compact is merely declaratory of the public law as applicable to the case. It is a well-established principle that changes of sovereignty work no change in the rights of property in the soil; and this applies even to such rights acquired by governments de facto, established by violence, against legal right. The stipulations inserted in the treaties and other public pacts, referred to on the other side, are merely in affirmation of this principle of universal law. Such is the stipulation in the third article of the Louisiana treaty, that "the inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion they profess." Such a general provision must be considered as merely declaratory of what the high contracting parties understood and admitted to be the law of nations, as to the effect of a change of sovereignty on proprietary interests of private individuals. But how much broader and stronger is the provision in the compact, that "all rights and interests of land derived from the laws of this state (i. e., Virginia) shall remain valid and secure, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in this state." It must surely have been meant to protect, not merely the naked title, but the beneficial enjoyment of the interest in the land. The public law of the world, and the constitution of the United States, would have been *sufficient to protect the [62 mere naked title.<sup>6</sup> "All private rights and interests," legal and equitable, were to "remain valid and secure." The term valid is applicable to rights, and the term secure to interests, and both to each. But the provision does not stop here. These "rights and interests" are to be "determined by the laws now existing in this state." Most certainly this was not intended to prevent Kentucky from making general regulations on the subject of real property, and the remedies applicable to it, so far as they make a part of the lex fori. But she stipulates that she will not affect injuriously "private rights and interests" of land derived under the laws of Virginia, i. e., the beneficial proprietary interest in land. The MS. case of Brown v. M'Murray shows that this exposition has been given to the compact by the Court of Appeals of Kentucky. So; also, the Circuit Court in that district has determined that the act of Assembly of Kentucky, 1814<sup>7</sup>, which alters the statute of limitations of 1808, as to real actions,<sup>8</sup> by taking away the proviso in favor of non-residents, is void, as being repugnant to the compact,

1.—1 Runnington's Eject. 437, 438.

2.—1 Madd. Chanc. 73, 74.

3.—1 Wash. Rep. 336.

4.—1 Hen. & Mun. Rep. 201.

5.—1 Marshall's Kentucky Rep. 199; Brown v.

M'Murray, MS. decision of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky.

6.—Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch's Rep. 143, per Mr. Justice Johnson.

7.—5 Littel, LL., of Kentucky, 91.

8.—4 Littel, LL., of Kentucky, 56.

not merely as an alteration of the remedy, but as rendering invalid and insecure the rights and interests of land derived under the laws of Virginia.

As to the objections made on the other side to our interpretation of the compact, that it 63* impugns *the right to the pursuit of happiness, which is inherent in every society of men, and is incompatible with these unalienable rights of sovereignty and of self-government, which every independent state must possess, the answer is obvious; that no people has a right to pursue its own happiness to the injury of others, for whose protection solemn compacts, like the present, have been made. It is a trite maxim, that man gives up a part of his natural liberty when he enters into civil society, as the price of the blessings of that state; and it may be said, with truth, that liberty is well exchanged for the advantages which flow from law and justice. The sovereignty of Kentucky will not be impaired by a faithful observance of this compact in its true spirit. It does not prevent her from making any general regulations of police and revenue, which any other state may make; but it does prevent her from confiscating the property of individuals under the pretext of a mere modification of the law as to improvements made by occupying claimants. There can be no doubt that sovereign states may make pacts with each other, limiting and restraining their rights of sovereignty as to proprietary interests in the soil. Such conventions are not inconsistent with the eminent domain which the law of nations attributes to them. Here the sole object of the compact is perpetually to secure the vested rights of private individuals from violation by legislative acts. It is in furtherance of the most sacred duty which society owes to its members. And even if it stipulated a special restraint upon the legisla- 64* tive *power, in respect to the public revenue, it would not be the less obligatory. All the new states, on their admission into the Union, uniformly bind themselves not to tax the lands of the United States. Various other restraints upon their sovereign powers have been voluntarily consented to by the states; such, for example, as that contained in the act for the admission of Louisiana into the Union, which provides that all the legislative proceedings shall be conducted in the English language.

But this compact, so far from interfering with the revenue of Kentucky, plainly recognizes her right to tax the lands; and if it did not, it is clear that she might exercise the right, since she could not exist nor support her civil government without a revenue. The means involve the end; and therefore she may not only tax, but sell the lands to enforce payment. Nor is there anything in the compact interfering with the legislative authority of the state, to regulate the course of descents, or the liability of real estates for the payment of debts. An alteration of the law of descents does not affect the right, title or interest in land, as derived from the laws in force at the epoch of the compact, unless, indeed, the new law of descents be retrospective in its operation. Nor is it denied that the remedies in the courts of law and equity, the lex fori may be modified as the wisdom of the legislature shall deem expedient. The forms of action, real and possessory, may be changed; the remedy, whether legal or equitable, may be adapted to the purposes of justice; *the period of limi- 65 tation, and the mode of execution, all these may be modified and altered according to the fluctuating wants of society, provided they do not have an unjust retrospective operation upon vested rights. All these changes in the civil legislation of the state may be made, and the titles to land, as acquired under the laws of Virginia, will still remain unimpaired

4. A fair exposition of the legislative acts of 1797 and 1812 will show that they operate to invalidate the rights and interests of land derived under the laws of Virginia.

And first, as to the law of 1812. It was intended for the protection of any person "peaceably seating or improving any vacant land, supposing it to be his own in law or equity." The land not being occupied by the true owner it is not necessary (under this law) that the party occupying it should bona fide and honestly believe it to be his own property; but only that he should believe it to be so from the circumstance of his "having a connected title." The law supplies him with his ground of belief, or rather it substitutes a fact in the place of his belief. The state courts, whose peculiar province it is to interpret the local law, have expressly determined that the words, "supposing them to be his own," &c., are satisfied if the party had that foundation for his supposition. No matter how much mala fides there may be, if the possession was vacant and he can deduce a connected paper title. This interpretation goes far beyond the ancient chancery rule, and therefore the statute goes beyond the *principle of that rule. Be- 66 sides, the rule of equity only pays the occupant for the increased value of the land; not for "improvements" (in the sense which local usage has given to that word, as indicating any fixtures annexed to the freehold), but only for actual ameliorations in the value of the land. The statute, on the contrary, compensates him for accessions to the property which are really deteriorations instead of ameliorations of its value to the real owner. The terms used by the legislature—"the charge and value of seating and improving"—shows evidently that it meant to transcend the rule of equity, which, according to Lord Kaimes, goes to make compensation for ameliorations only. The whole discussion in the legislature turned on these emphatic words, "charge and value;" and various amendments were proposed to strike them out of the bill, and to proceed on the true chancery principle of taking a fair account between the parties, of rents and profits on the one side, and the actual amelioration of the property on the other.

5. The law in question is both a violation of the compact and the national and state constitutions; and the court will declare it void.

It is void by its retrospective operation, in giving compensation for work and labor antecedent to the epoch of the compact of 1789, and even back to the first settlement of the country; and that, too, whether this work and labor bestowed upon the land actually deteriorated or ameliorated its value. It may be admitted that it is not an ex post facto law in the sense of the 67*] constitutional prohibition,*as that is only applied to penal matters. But, upon general principles, all retrospective laws, whether civil or criminal, are unjust, and contrary to the fundamental maxims of universal jurisprudence. The nature of the social state, and of civil government itself, prescribe some limits to the legislative power, independent of the express provisions of a written constitution.<sup>1</sup> What is a retrospective law has been well defined by one of the learned judges of this court, and it is a definition which admits of an accurate and practical application. "Upon principle, every statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability in respect to transactions already past, must be deemed retrospective."<sup>2</sup> There is something in the very nature of all just legislation which prevents its being retrospective. It necessarily deals with future, and not with past transactions.<sup>3</sup>

The statute now in question is retrospective in releasing rights of action already vested. By the pre-existing local law, the successful claimant was entitled to recover the mesne profits even in a real action. But this act deprives him of this right as to rents and profits previously acquired, and even antecedent to the compact itself; and repeals the saving clause in the former act as to infants, &c. It is, in effect, a law releasing A from the right of action which B has against him.

68*] *But even considered as a prospective enactment, the law operates unjustly and oppressively, because the lawful owner is compelled to pay, not merely for the actual ameliorations in the land; not its increased value only; but the expense incurred by the occupant in making pretended improvements, whether they are merely useful or fanciful, and matter of taste and ornament only dictated by his whim and caprice. He is not even liable for waste, unless committed after suit brought; and may destroy the timber, constituting, perhaps, the sole value of the land, without being called to any account.

If the law be partly constitutional, and partly not, the whole must fall; and there can be no doubt that the character of the parties, as being citizens of different states, gives the court cognizance of the cause, and jurisdiction to pronounce the law a nullity. If you have jurisdiction, you must decide according to law. But you cannot so decide without looking to see whether the acts of the state legislature are repugnant to the state constitution. This repugnancy has been frequently made the ground of decision in the federal courts, where the character of the parties gave them jurisdiction of the cause.<sup>4</sup>

But the acts are clearly void, as being repugnant to the constitution of the United States. They are laws impairing the obligation of contracts within the spirit of all the decisions of this court, according to which it is immaterial whether the*sovereign states of the Union [69 are parties to the contract, or whether it is made between private individuals.<sup>5</sup> The special tribunal provided by the compact cannot oust the transcendent jurisdiction of this court. Even according to the maxims of private jurisprudence, an agreement to submit to arbitration cannot be pleaded in bar, without an award actually made; and this must apply in a case where the agreement, though made by the high contracting parties, was intended exclusively for the benefit of private individuals, and for the protection of private rights.

Mr. Justice WASHINGTON delivered the opinion of the court: In the examination of the first question stated by the court below, we are naturally led to the following inquiries: 1st. Are the rights and interests of lands lying in Kentucky, derived from the laws of Virginia prior to the separation of Kentucky from that state, as valid and secure under the above acts as they were under the laws of Virginia on the 18th of December, 1789? If they were not, then,

2d. Is the Circuit Court, in which this cause is depending, authorized to declare those acts, so far as they are repugnant to the laws of Virginia existing at the above period, unconstitutional?

The material provisions of the act of 1797 are as follow:

*1st. That the occupant of land, from [70 which he is evicted by better title, is, in all cases, excused from the payment of rents and profits accrued prior to actual notice of the adverse title, provided his possession in its inception was peaceable, and he shows a plain and connected title, in law or equity, deduced from some record.

2d. That the claimant is liable to a judgment against him for all valuable and lasting improvements made on the land prior to actual notice of the adverse title, after deducting from the amount the damages which the land has sustained by waste or deterioration of the soil by cultivation.

3d. As to improvements made, and rents and profits accrued, after notice of the adverse title, the amount of the one was to be deducted from that of the other, and the balance was to be added to, or subtracted from, the estimated value of the improvements made before such notice, as the nature of the case should require. But it was provided by a subsequent clause that in no case should the successful claimant be obliged to pay for improvements made after notice, more than what should be equal to the rents and profits.

4th. If the improvements exceed the value of the land in its unimproved state, the claimant was allowed the privilege of conveying the land to the occupant, and receiving in return the assessed value of it without the improvements, and thus to protect himself against a judgment and execution for the value of the

1.—Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch's Rep. 135.

2.—Per Mr. Justice Story; Society, &c., v. Wheeler, 2 Gallis. Rep. 139.

3.—4 Wheat. Rep. 578; Note a.

4.—Society, &c., v. Wheeler, 2 Gallis. Rep. 105.

5.—Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch's Rep. 87; New Jersey v. Wilson, 7 Cranch's Rep. 164; Terret v. Taylor, 9 Cranch's Rep. 48; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. Rep. 518.

improvements. If he should decline doing this, 71* he might recover possession of his land, but then he must pay the estimated value of the improvements, and lose also the rents and profits accrued before notice of the claim. But to entitle him to claim the value of the land, as above mentioned, he must give bond and security to warrant the title.

The act of 1812 contains the following provisions: 1. That the peaceable occupant of land, who supposes it to belong to him, in virtue of some legal or equitable title, founded on a record, is to be paid by the successful claimant for his improvements. 2. But the claimant may avoid the payment of the value of such improvements, if he please, by relinquishing his land to the occupant, and be paid its estimated value in its unimproved state; thus,

If he elect to pay for the value of the improvements, he is to give bond and security to pay the same, with interest, at different installments. If he fail to do this, or if the value of the improvements exceed three-fourths the value of the unimproved land, an election is given to the occupant to have a judgment entered against the claimant for the assessed value of the improvements, or to take the land, giving bond and security to pay the assessed value of the land, if unimproved, with interest, and by installments.

But if the claimant is not willing to pay for the improvements, and they should exceed three-fourths the value of the unimproved land, the occupant is obliged to give bond and security to pay the assessed value of the land, with interest, which, if he fail to do, judgment 72* is to be entered against him for such value; the claimant releasing his right to the land and giving bond and security to warrant the title.

If the value of the improvements does not exceed three-fourths that of the land, then the occupant is not bound (as he is in the former case) to give bond and security to pay the value of the land, but he may claim a judgment for the value of his improvements, or take the land, giving bond and security, as before mentioned, to pay the estimated value of the land.

3. The exemption of the occupant from the payment of the rents and profits, extends to all such as accrued during his occupancy, before judgment rendered against him in the first instance. But such as accrue after such judgment, for a term not exceeding five years, as also waste and damages committed by the occupant after suit brought, are to be deducted from the value of the improvements; or the court may render judgment for them against the occupant.

4. The amount of such rents and profits, damages and waste; also the value of the improvements, and of the land, clear of the improvements, are to be ascertained by commissioners, to be appointed by the court, and who act on oath.

These laws differ from each other only in degree; in principle they are the same. They agree in depriving the rightful owner of the land of the rents and profits received by the occupant up to a certain period, the first act fixing it to the time of actual notice of the adverse claim, and the latter act to the time of the judgment rendered against the occupant.

They also agree in compelling the successful claimant to pay, to a certain extent, the assessed value of the improvements made on the land by the occupant.

They differ in the following particulars:

1. By the former act, the improvements to be paid for must be valuable and lasting. By the latter, they need not be either.

2. By the former, the successful claimant was entitled to a deduction from the value of the improvements for all damages sustained by the land, by waste or deterioration of the soil by cultivation, during the occupancy of the defendant. By the latter, he is entitled to such a deduction only for the damages and waste committed after suit brought.

3. By the former, the claimant was bound to pay for such improvements only as were made before notice of the adverse title; if those made afterwards should exceed the rents and profits which afterwards accrued, then he was not liable beyond the rents and profits for the value of such improvements. By the latter, he is liable for the value of all improvements made up to the time of the judgment, deducting only the rents and profits accrued and the damage and waste committed after suit brought.

4. By the former, the claimant might, if he pleased, protect himself against a judgment for the value of the improvements, by surrendering the land to his adversary, and giving bond and security to warrant the title. But he was not bound to do so, nor was his giving bond and security to pay the value of the improvements a prerequisite to his obtaining possession of his land, nor was the judgment against him made a lien on the land.

By the latter act, the claimant is bound to give such bond, at the peril of losing his land; for if he fail to give it, the occupant is at liberty to keep the land, upon giving bond and security to pay the estimated value of it unimproved; and even this he may avoid where the value of the improvements exceeds three-fourths that of the land, unless the claimant will convey to the occupant his right to the land; for upon this condition alone is judgment to be rendered against the occupant for the assessed value of the land.

The only remaining provision of these acts, which is all important, and is not comprised in the above view of them, is the mode pointed out for estimating the value of the land in its unimproved state, of the improvements, and of the rents and profits; and this is the same, or nearly so, in both; so that it may be safely affirmed that every part of the act of 1797 is within the purview of the act of 1812; and, consequently, the former act was repealed by the repealing clause contained in the latter.

In pursuing the first head of inquiry, therefore, to which this case gives rise, the court will confine its observations to the act of 1812, and compare its provisions with the law of Virginia, as it existed on the 18th of December, 1789.

The common law of England was, at that period, as it still is, the law of that state; 75* and we are informed, by the highest authority, that a right to land, by that law, includes the right to enter on it when the possession is withheld from the right owner; to recover the possession by suit; to retain the possession, and to receive the issues and profits arising from it. (Altham's case, 8 Co., 299.) In Liford's case (11 Co., 46), it is laid down that the regress of the disseisee reverts the property in him in the fruits or profits of the land, as well those that were produced by the industry of the occupant as those which were the natural production of the land, not only against the disseisor himself, but against his feoffee, lessee, or disseisor; "for," says the book, "the act of my disseisor may alter my action, but cannot take away my action, property or right; so that after the regress, the disseisee may seize these fruits, though removed from the land, and the only remedy of the disseisor, in such case, is to recoup their value against the claim of damages." The doctrine laid down in this case, that the disseisee can maintain trespass only against the disseisor for the rents and profits, is, with great reason, overruled in the case of Holcomb v. Rowlyns (Cro Eliz., 540). (See also Bull, N. P., 87.)

Nothing, in short, can be more clear, upon principles of law and reason, than that a law which denies to the owner of land a remedy to recover the possession of it, when withheld by any person, however innocently he may have obtained it; or to recover the profits received from it by the occupant; or which 76* clogs his recovery of such possession *and profits, by conditions and restrictions tending to diminish the value and amount of the thing recovered, impairs his right to, and interest in, the property. If there be no remedy to recover the possession, the law necessarily presumes a want of right to it. If the remedy afforded be qualified and restrained by conditions of any kind, the right of the owner may indeed subsist and be acknowledged; but it is impaired, and rendered insecure, according to the nature and extent of such restrictions.

A right to land essentially implies a right to the profits accruing from it, since, without the latter, the former can be of no value. Thus, a devise of the profits of land, or even a grant of them, will pass a right to the land itself. (Shep. Touch., 93, Co. Litt., 4, b.) "For what," says Lord Coke, in this page, "is the land, but the profits thereof."

Thus stood the common law in Virginia at the period before mentioned; and it is not pretended that there was any statute of that state less favorable to the rights of those who derived title under her than the common law. On the contrary, the act respecting writs of right declares, in express terms, that "if the demandant recover his seisin, he may recover damages to be assessed by the recognitors of assize, for the tenant's withholding possession of the tenement demanded;" which damages could be nothing else but the rents and profits of the land. (2 Vol. Last Revisal, p. 463.) This provision of the act was rendered necessary on account of the intended repeal of all the British statutes, and the denial of damages by the common 77* law in all real actions, except in assize, which was considered as a mixed action. (Co. Litt., 257.) But in trespass quare clausum fregit, damages were always given at common law. (10 Co., 116.) And that the successful claimant of land in Virginia, who recovers in ejectment, was at all times entitled to recover rents and profits in an action of trespass, was not, and could not, be questioned by the counsel for the tenant in this case.

If, then, such was the common and statute law of Virginia, in 1789, it only remains to inquire whether any principle of equity was recognized by the courts of that state, which exempted the occupant of land from the payment of rents and profits to the real owner, who has successfully established his right to the land, either in a court of law or of equity. No decision of the courts of that state was cited, or is recollected, which in the remotest degree sanctions such a principle.

The case of Southall v. M'Kean, which was much relied upon by the counsel for the tenant, relates altogether to the subjects of improvements, and decides no more than this: that if the equitable owner of land, who is conscious of his right to it, will stand by and see another occupy and improve the property, without asserting his right to it, he shall not, in equity, enrich himself by the loss of another, which it was in his power to have prevented, but must be satisfied to recover the value of the land, independent of the improvements. The acquiescence of the owner in the adverse possession of a person who he found engaged in making valuable improvements on the *property, [78] was little short of a fraud, and justified the occupant in the conclusion, that the equitable claim which the owner asserted had been abandoned. How different is the principle of this case from that which governs the same subject by the act under consideration. By this, the principle is applicable to all cases, whether at law or in equity; whether the claimant knew or did not know of his rights and of the improvements which were making on the land, and even after he had asserted his right by suit.

The rule of the English Court of Chancery, as laid down in 1 Madd. Chanc., 72, is fully supported by the authorities to which he refers. It is, that equity allows an account of rents and profits in all cases, from the time of the title accrued, provided that do not exceed six years, unless under special circumstances; as where the defendant had no notice of the plaintiff's title, nor had the deeds and writings in his custody, in which the plaintiff's title appeared; or where there has been laches in the plaintiff in not asserting his title; or where the plaintiff's title appeared by deeds in a stranger's custody; in all which cases, and others similar to them in principle, the account is confined to the time of filing the bill. The language of Lord Hardwicke, in Dormer v. Fortescue (3 Atk., 128), which was the case of an infant plaintiff, is remarkably strong. "Nothing," he observes, "can be clearer, both in law and equity, and from natural justice, than that the plaintiff is entitled to the rents and profits from the time when his title accrued." His lordship afterwards adds, that "where the title [79] of the plaintiff is purely equitable, that court allows the account of rents and profits from the time the title accrued, unless under special circumstances, such as have been referred to."

Nor is it understood by the court that the principles of the act under consideration can be vindicated by the doctrines of the civil law, admitting, which we do not, that those doctrines were recognized by the laws of Virginia, or by the decisions of her courts.

The exemption of the occupant, by that law, from an account for profits, is strictly confined to the case of a bonæ fidei possessor, who not only supposes himself to be the true proprietor of the land, but who is ignorant that his title is contested by some other person claiming a better right to it. Most unquestionably, this character cannot be maintained, for a moment, after the occupant has notice of an adverse claim, especially if that be followed up by a suit to recover the possession. After this he becomes a malæ fidei possessor and holds at his peril, and is liable to restore all the mesne profits, together with the land. (Just., Lib. 2, tit. 1, s. 35.)

There is another material difference between the civil law and the provisions of this act, altogether favorable to the right of the successful claimant. By the former, the occupant is entitled only to those fruits or profits of the land which were produced by his own industry, and not even to those unless they were consumed; if they were realized, and contributed to enrich 80* the occupant, *he is accountable for them to the real owner, as he is for all the natural fruits of the land. (See Just., the sect. before quoted; Lord Kaimies, B. 2, c. 1, p. 411, et seq.) Puffendorf, indeed (B. 4, c. 7, s. 3), lays it down in broad and general terms, that fruits of industry, as well as those of nature, belong to him who is master of the thing from which they flow.

By the act in question, the occupant is not accountable for profits, from whatever source they may have been drawn or however they may have been employed, which were received by him prior to the judgment of eviction.

But even these doctrines of the civil law, so much more favorable to the rights of the true owner of the land than the act under consideration, are not recognized by the common law of England. Whoever takes and holds the possession of land to which another has a better title, whether by disseisin or under a grant from the disseisor, is liable to the true owner for the profits which he has received, of whatever nature they may be, and whether consumed by him or not; and the owner may even seize them, although removed from the land, as has already been shown by Lilford's case.

We are not aware of any common law case which recognizes the distinction between a bonæ fidei possessor and one who holds malæ fidei, in relation to the subject of rents and profits; and we understand Lilford's case as fully proving that the right of the true owner to the mesne profits is equally valid against both. How far 81* this distinction *is noticed in a court of equity has already been shown.

Upon the whole, then, we take it to be perfectly clear, that, according to the common law, the statute law of Virginia, the principles of equity, and even those of the civil law, the successful claimant of land is entitled to an account of the mesne profits received by the occupant from some period prior to the judgment of eviction, or decrec. In a real action, as this is, no restriction whatever is imposed by the law of Virginia upon the recognitors, in assessing the damages for the demandant, except that they should be commensurate with the withholding of the possession.

If this act of Kentucky renders the rights of claimants to lands, under Virginia, less valid and secure than they were under the laws of Virginia, by depriving them of the fruits of their land during its occupation by another, its provisions, in regard to the value of the improvements put upon the land by the occupant, can, with still less reason, be vindicated. It is not alleged by any person that such a claim was ever sanctioned by any law of Virginia, or by her courts of justice. The case of Southall v. M'Kean has already been noticed and commented upon. It is laid down, we admit, in Coulter's case (5 Co., 30), that the disseisor, upon a recovery against him, may recoup the damages to the value of all that he has expended in amending the houses. (See, also, Bro. tit. Damages, pl. 82, who cites 24 Edw. III., 50.) If any common law decision has ever gone beyond the principle here laid down, we have not *been fortunate enough to meet with it. [82 The doctrine of Coulter's case is not dissimilar in principle from that which Lord Kaimies considers to be the law of nature. His words are: "It is a maxim suggested by nature, that reparations and meliorations bestowed upon a house, or on land, ought to be defrayed out of the rents. By this maxim we sustain no claim against the proprietor for meliorations, if the expense exceed not the rents levied by the bonæ fidei possessor." He cites Papinian, L. 48, de rei vindicatione.

Taking it for granted that the rule, as laid down in Coulter's case, would be recognized as good law by the courts of Virginia, let us see in what respects it differs from the act of Kentucky. That rule is, that meliorations of the property (which necessarily mean valuable and lasting improvements), made at the expense of the occupant of the land, shall be set-off against the legal claim of the proprietor for profits which have accrued to the occupant during his possession. But, by the act, the occupant is entitled to the value of the improvements to whatever extent they may exceed that of the profits; not on the ground of set-off against the profits, but as a substantive demand. For the account for improvements is carried down to the day of the judgment, although the occupant was for a great part of the time a malæ fidei possessor, against whom no more can be offset, but the rents and profits accrued after suit brought. Thus it may happen that the occupant, who may have enriched himself to any amount, by the natural, as well as the industrial *products of land, to which he [83 had no legal title (as by the sale of timber, coal, ore, or the like), is accountable for no part of those profits but such as accrued after suit brought; and on the other hand, may demand full remuneration for all the improvements made upon the land, although they were placed there by means of those very profits, in violation of that maxim of equity, and of natural law, nemo debet locupletari aliena jactura.

If the principle which this law asserts has a precedent to warrant it, we can truly say that we have not met with it. But we feel the fullest confidence in saying that it is not to be found in the laws of Virginia, or in the decisions of her courts.

But the act goes further than merely giving to the occupant a substantive claim against the owner of the land for the value of the improvements, beyond that of the profits received since the suit brought. It creates a binding lien on the land for the value of the improvements, and transfers the right of the successful claimant in the land to the occupant, who appears, judicially, to have no title to it, unless the former will give security to pay such value within a stipulated period. In other words, the claimant is permitted to purchase his own land, by paying to the occupant whatever sum the commissioners may estimate the improvements at, whether valuable and lasting, or worthless and unserviceable to the owner, although they were made with the money justly and legally belonging to the owner; and upon these terms only can he recover possession of his land.

If the law of Virginia has been correctly stated, <sup>84*</sup> need it be asked whether the right and interest of such a claimant is as valid and secure under this act as it was under the laws of Virginia, by which, and by which alone, they were to be determined? We think this can hardly be asserted. If the article of the compact, applicable to this case, meant anything, the claimant of land under Virginia had a right to appear in a Kentucky court as he might have done in a Virginia court if the separation had not taken place, and to demand a trial of his right by the same principles of law which would have governed his case in the latter state. What those principles are have already been shown.

If the act in question does not render the right of the true owner less valid and secure than it was under the laws of Virginia, then an act declaring that no occupant should be evicted but upon the terms of his being paid the value, or double the value of the land, by the successful claimant, would not be chargeable with that consequence, since it cannot be denied but that the principle of both laws would be the same.

The objection to a law, on the ground of its impairing the obligation of a contract, can never depend upon the extent of the change which the law effects in it. Any deviation from its terms, by postponing, or accelerating, the period of performance which it prescribes, imposing conditions not expressed in the contract, or dispensing with the performance of those which are, however, minute or apparently immaterial in their effect upon the contract of <sup>85*</sup> the parties, impairs its obligation. *Upon this principle it is, that if a creditor agree with his debtor to postpone the day of payment, or in any other way to change the terms of the contract, without the consent of the surety, the latter is discharged, although the change was for his advantage.

2. The only remaining question is, whether this act of 1812 is repugnant to the constitution of the United States, and can be declared void by this court, or by the circuit court from which this case comes by adjournment?

But, previous to the investigation of this question, it will be proper to relieve the case from some preliminary objections to the validity and construction of the compact itself.

1st. It was contended by the counsel for the tenant that the compact was invalid in toto, because it was not made in conformity with the provisions of the constitution of the United States; and, if not invalid to that extent, still,

2d. The clause of it applicable to the point in controversy was so, inasmuch as it surrenders, according to the construction given to it by the opposite counsel, rights of sovereignty which are unalienable.

1. The first objection is founded upon the allegation that the compact was made without the consent of Congress, contrary to the tenth section of the first article, which declares that "no state shall, without the consent of Congress, enter into any agreement or compact with another state, or with a foreign power." Let it be observed, in the first place, that the constitution makes no provision respecting the mode or form in which the consent <sup>of</sup> <sup>[*86]</sup> Congress is to be signified, very properly leaving that matter to the wisdom of that body, to be decided upon according to the ordinary rules of law and of right reason. The only question in cases which involve that point is, has Congress, by some positive act in relation to such agreement, signified the consent of that body to its validity? Now, how stands the present case? The compact was entered into between Virginia and the people of Kentucky, upon the express condition that the general government should, prior to a certain day, assent to the erection of the district of Kentucky into an independent state, and agree that the proposed state should immediately, after a certain day, or at some convenient time future thereto, be admitted into the federal Union. On the 28th of July, 1790, the convention of that district assembled, under the provisions of the law of Virginia, and declared its assent to the terms and conditions prescribed by the proposed compact; and that the same was accepted as a solemn compact, and that the said district should become a separate state on the 1st of June, 1792. These resolutions, accompanied by a memorial from the convention, being communicated by the President of the United States to Congress, a report was made by a committee to whom the subject was referred, setting forth the agreement of Virginia, that Kentucky should be erected into a state upon certain terms and conditions, and the acceptance by Kentucky upon the terms and conditions so prescribed; and, on the 4th of February, 1791, Congress passed an act which, after referring to <sup>the compact,</sup> <sup>[*87]</sup> and the acceptance of it by Kentucky, declares the consent of that body to the erecting of the said district into a separate and independent state, upon a certain day, and receiving her into the Union.

Now, it is perfectly clear, that although Congress might have refused their consent to the proposed separation, yet they had no authority to declare Kentucky a separate and independent state without the assent of Virginia, or upon terms variant from those which Virginia had prescribed. But Congress, after recognizing the conditions upon which alone Virginia agreed to the separation, expressed, by a solemn act, the consent of that body to the separation. The terms and conditions, then, on which alone the separation could take place, or the act of Congress become a valid one, were necessarily assented to; not by a mere tacit acquiescence, but by an express declaration of the legislative mind, resulting from the manifest construction of the act itself. To deny this is to deny the validity of the act of Congress, without which Kentucky could not have become an independent state; and then it would follow that she is at this moment a part of the state of Virginia, and all her laws are acts of usurpation. The counsel who urged this argument would not, we are persuaded, consent to this conclusion; and yet it would seem to be inevitable if the premises insisted upon be true.

Wheat. 8.

2. The next objection, which is to the validity of the particular clause of the compact involved in this controversy, rests upon a principle, the correctness of which remains to be proved. It is practically opposed by the theory of all limited governments, and especially of those which constitute this Union. The powers of legislation granted to the government of the United States, as well as to the several state governments, by their respective constitutions, are all limited. The article of the constitution of the United States, involved in this very case, is one, amongst many others, of the restrictions alluded to. If it be answered that these limitations were imposed by the people in their sovereign character, it may be asked, was not the acceptance of the compact the act of the people of Kentucky in their sovereign character? If, then, the principle contended for be a sound one, we can only say that it is one of a most alarming nature, but which, it is believed, cannot be seriously entertained by any American statesman or jurist.

Various objections were made to the literal construction of the compact, one only of which we deem it necessary particularly to notice. That was, that if it be so construed as to deny to the legislature of Kentucky the right to pass the act in question, it will follow that that state cannot pass laws to affect lands, the title to which was derived under Virginia, although the same should be wanted for public use. If such a consequence grows necessarily out of this provision of the compact, still we can perceive no reason why the assent to it by the people of Kentucky should not be binding on the legislature of that state. Nor can we perceive why the admission of the conclusion involved in the argument should invalidate an express article of the compact in relation to a quite different subject. The agreement, that the rights of claimants under Virginia should remain as valid and secure as they were under the laws of that state, contains a plain, intelligible proposition, about the meaning of which it is impossible there can be two opinions. Can the government of Kentucky fly from this agreement, acceded to by the people in their sovereign capacity, because it involves a principle which might be inconvenient, or even pernicious to the state, in some other respect? The court cannot perceive how this proposition could be maintained.

But the fact is that the consequence drawn by counsel from a literal construction of this article of the compact, cannot be fairly deduced from the premises, because, by the common law of Virginia, if not by the universal law of all free governments, private property may be taken for public use, upon making to the individual a just compensation. The admission of this principle never has been imagined by any person as rendering his right to property less valid and secure than it would be were it excluded; and, consequently, it would be an unnatural and forced construction of this article of the compact to say that it included such a case.

We pass over the other observations of counsel upon the construction of this article with the following remark: that where the words of a law, treaty or contract, have a plain and obvious meaning, all construction, in hostility with such meaning, is excluded. This is a maxim of law, and a dictate of common sense; for were a different rule to be admitted, no man, however cautious and intelligent, could safely estimate the extent of his engagements, or rest upon his own understanding of a law, until a judicial construction of those instruments had been obtained.

We now come to the consideration of the question whether this court has authority to declare the act in question unconstitutional and void, upon the ground that it impairs the obligation of the compact? This is denied for the following reasons: It is insisted, in the first place, that this court has no such authority, where the objection to the validity of the law is founded upon its opposition to the constitution of Kentucky, as it was, in part, in this case. It will be a sufficient answer to this observation, that our opinion is founded exclusively upon the constitution of the United States.

2d. It was objected that Virginia and Kentucky, having fixed upon a tribunal to determine the meaning of the compact, the jurisdiction of this court is excluded. If this be so, it must be admitted that all controversies which involve a construction of the compact are equally excluded from the jurisdiction of the state courts of Virginia and Kentucky. How, then, are those controversies, which we were informed by the counsel on both sides crowded the federal and state courts of Kentucky, to be settled? The answer, we presume, would be, by commissioners, to be appointed by those states. But none such have been appointed; what then? Suppose either of those states, Virginia, for example, should refuse to appoint commissioners? Are the occupants of lands, to which they have no title, to retain their possessions until this tribunal is appointed, and to enrich themselves, in the meantime, by the profits of them, not only to the injury of non-residents, but of the citizens of Kentucky? The supposition of such a state of things is too monstrous to be for a moment entertained. The best feelings of our nature revolt against a construction which leads to it.

But how happens it that the questions submitted to this court have been entertained, and decided, by the courts of Kentucky, for twenty-five years, as we were informed by the counsel? Have these courts, cautious and learned as they must be acknowledged to be, committed the crime of usurping a jurisdiction which did not belong to them? We should feel very unwilling to come to such a conclusion.

The answer, in a few words, to the whole of the argument, is to be found in the explicit language of that provision of the compact which respects the tribunal of the commissioners. It is to be appointed in no case but where a complaint, or dispute shall arise, not between individuals, but between the commonwealth of Virginia and the state of Kentucky, in their high sovereign characters.

Having thus endeavored to clear the question of these preliminary objections, we have only to add, by way of conclusion, that the 92* duty, not less **than* the power of this court, as well as of every other court in the Union, to declare a law unconstitutional which impairs the obligation of contracts, whoever may be the parties to them, is too clearly enjoined by the constitution itself, and too firmly established by the decisions of this and other courts, to be now shaken; and that those decisions entirely cover the present case.

A slight effort to prove that a compact between two states is not a case within the meaning of the constitution, which speaks of contracts, was made by the counsel for the tenant, but was not much pressed. If we attend to the definition of a contract, which is the agreement of two or more parties, to do, or not to do, certain acts, it must be obvious that the propositions offered, and agreed to by Virginia, being accepted and ratified by Kentucky, is a contract. In fact, the terms compact and contract are synonymous; and in Fletcher v. Peck the Chief Justice defines a contract to be a compact between two or more parties. The principles laid down in that case are, that the constitution of the United States embraces all contracts, executed or executory, whether between individuals, or between a state and individuals; and that a state has no more power to impair an obligation into which she herself has entered, than she can the contracts of individuals. Kentucky, therefore, being a party to the compact which guaranteed to claimants of land lying in that state, under titles derived from Virginia, their rights as they existed under the laws of Virginia, was incompetent to violate 93* that contract, by passing **any* law which rendered those rights less valid and secure.

It was said by the counsel for the tenant, that the validity of the above laws of Kentucky have been maintained by an unvarying series of decisions of the courts of that state, and by the opinions and declarations of the other branches of her government. Not having had an opportunity of examining the reported cases of the Kentucky courts, we do not feel ourselves at liberty to admit or deny the first part of this assertion. We may be permitted, however, to observe that the principles decided by the Court of Appeals of that state, in the cases of Haye's heirs v. M' Murray, a manuscript report of which was handed to the court when this cause was argued, are in strict conformity with this opinion. As to the other branches of the government of that state, we need only observe that whilst the legislature has maintained the opinion, most honestly, we believe, that the acts of 1797 and 1812 were consistent with the compact, the objections of the Governor to the validity of the latter act and the reasons assigned by him in their support, taken in connection with the above case, incline us strongly to suspect that a great diversity of opinion prevails in that state upon the question we have been examining. However this may be, we hold ourselves answerable to God, our consciences and our country, to decide this question according to the dictates of our best judgment, be the consequences of the decision what they may. If we have ventured to entertain a wish as to the result of the investigation which **we* have laboriously given to the case, [94* it was that it might be favorable to the validity of the laws; our feelings being always on that side of the question, unless the objections to them are fairly and clearly made out.

The above is the opinion of a majority of the court.

The opinion given upon the first question proposed by the Circuit Court, renders it unnecessary to notice the second question.

Mr. Justice JOHNSON. Whoever will candidly weigh the intrinsic difficulties which this case presents, must acknowledge that the questions certified to this court are among those on which any two minds may differ, without incurring the imputation of willful, or precipitate error.

We are fortunate, in this instance, in being placed aloof from that unavoidable jealousy which awaits decisions founded on appeals from the exercise of state jurisdiction. This suit was originally instituted in the Circuit Court of the United States; and the duty now imposed upon us is, to decide, according to the best judgment we can form, on the law of Kentucky. We sit, and adjudicate, in the present instance, in the capacity of judges of that state. I am bound to decide according to those principles which ought to govern the courts of that state when adjudicating between its own citizens.

The first of the two questions certified to this court is, whether the laws, well known by the **description* of the occupying claimant [95* laws of Kentucky, are constitutional.

The laws known by that denomination are the acts passed the 27th of February, 1797, and the 31st of January, 1812. The general purport of the former is to give to a defendant in ejectment, compensation for actual improvements innocently made upon the lands of another. The practical effect of the latter is to give him compensation for all the labor and expense bestowed upon it, whether productive of improvement or not.

The two acts differ as to the time from which damages and rents are to be estimated, but concur,

1st. In enjoining on the courts the substitution of commissioners, for a jury, in assessing damages.

2d. In converting the plaintiff's right to a judgment, after having established his right to land, from an absolute, into a conditional right; and,

3d. Under some circumstances, in requiring that judgment should be given for the defendant, and that the plaintiff, in lieu of land, should recover an assessed sum of money, or, rather, bonds to pay that sum, i. e., another right of action, if anything.

The second question certified is, on which of these two acts the court shall give judgment, and seems to have arisen out of an argument insisted on at the trial, that as the suit was instituted prior to the passage of the last act, it ought to be adjudicated under the first act, notwithstanding that the act of 1812 was in force when judgment was given.

96*] *As the language of the first question is sufficiently general to embrace all questions that may arise, either under the state, or United States constitution, much of the argument before this court turned upon the inquiry, whether the rights of the parties were affected by that article of the United States constitution which makes provision against the violation of contracts.

The general question I shall decline passing an opinion upon. I consider such an inquiry as a work of supererogation, until the benefit of that provision in the constitution shall be claimed in an appeal from the decision of a court of the state. There is, however, one view of this point, presented by one of the gentlemen who appeared on behalf of the state, which cannot pass unnoticed. It was contended that the constitution of Kentucky, in recognizing the compact with Virginia, recognizes it only as a compact; and, therefore, that it acquires no more force under that constitution than it had before; and that but for the constitution of Kentucky, questions arising under it were of mere diplomatic cognizance, and were not, by the constitution, transmuted into subjects of judicial cognizance.

I am constrained to entertain a different view of this subject; and, without passing an opinion on the legal effect of the compact, in its separate existence, upon individual rights, I must adopt the opinion that when the people of Kentucky declared that "the compact with the state of Virginia, subject to such alterations as may be made therein, agreeably to the mode 97*] prescribed by the *said compact, shall be considered as part of this constitution," they enacted it as a law for themselves, in all those parts in which it was previously obligatory on them as a contract; and made it a fundamental law, one which could only be repealed in the mode prescribed for altering that constitution. Had it been enacted in the ordinary form of legislation, notwithstanding the absurdity insisted on of enacting laws obligatory on Virginia, it is certain that the maxim utile per inutile non vitiatur, would have been applied to it, and it would have been enforced as a law of Kentucky in every court of justice sitting in judgment upon Kentucky rights. How much more so, when the people thought proper to give it the force and solemnity of a fundamental law.

I therefore consider the article of the compact which has relation to this question, as operating on the rights and interests of the parties, with the force of a fundamental law of the state; and, certainly, it can, then, need no support from viewing it as a contract, unless it be that the constitution may be repealed by one of the parties, but the contract cannot. While the constitution continues unrepealed, it is putting a fifth wheel to the carriage to invoke the contract into this cause. It can only eventuate in crowding our docket with appeals from the state courts.

I consider, therefore, the following extract from the compact, as an enacted law of Kentucky: "That all private rights and interests of lands within (Kentucky), derived from the laws of Virginia prior to (their) separation, 98*] shall remain valid *and secure under the laws of the proposed state, and shall be determined by the laws (existing in Virginia at the time of the separation)." The alterations here made in the phraseology are such as necessarily result from the adaptation of it to a legislative form. The occupying claimant laws, therefore, must conform to this constitutional provision, or be void; for a legislature, constituted under that constitution, can exercise no powers inconsistent with the instrument which created it. The will of the people has decreed otherwise, and the interests of the individual cannot be affected by the exercise of powers which the people have forbidden their legislature to exercise.

To constitute the sovereign and independent state of Kentucky was, unquestionably, the leading object of the act of Virginia of the 18th of December, 1789. To exercise unlimited legislative power over the territory within her own limits, is one of the essential attributes of that sovereignty; and every restraint in the exercise of this power, I consider as a restriction on the intended grant, and subject to a rigorous construction. On general principles, private property would have remained unaffected by the transfer of sovereignty; but thenceforth would have continued subject, both as to right and remedy, to the legislative power of the state newly created. The argument for the plaintiff is, that the provision now under consideration goes beyond the recognition or enforcement of this principle, and restrains the state of Kentucky from any legislative act that can in any way impair, or encumber, or vary the beneficiary interests *which the grant- [99ees of land acquired under the laws of Virginia. Or, in other words, that it creates a peculiar tenure on the lands granted by Virginia, which exempts them from that extent of legislative action to which the residue of the state is unquestionably subjected. It must mean this, if it means anything. For, supposing all the grantees of lands, under the laws of Virginia, in actual possession of their respective premises, unless the lands thus reduced into possession be still under the supposed protection of this compact, neither could they have been at any time previous. The words of the compact, if they carry the immunity contended for beyond the period of separation, are equally operative to continue it ever after.

But where would this land us? If the state of Kentucky had, by law, enacted that the dower of a widow should extend to a life estate in one-half of her husband's land, would the widow of a Virginian, whose husband died the day after, have lost the benefit of this law, because the laws of Virginia had given the wife an inchoate right in but one-third? This would be cutting deep, indeed, into the sovereign powers of Kentucky, and would be establishing the anomaly of a territory over which no government could legislate; not Virginia, for she had parted with the sovereignty; not Kentucky, for the laws of Virginia were irrevocably fastened upon two-thirds of her territory.

But it is contended that the clause of the compact under consideration must have meant more *than what is implied in every [100cession of territory, or it was nugatory to have inserted it.

I confess I cannot discover the force of this argument. In the present case it admits of two answers; the one is found in the very peculiar nature of the land titles created by Virginia, and then floating over the state of Kentucky. Land they were not, and yet all the attributes of real estate were extended to them, and intended by the compact to be preserved to them under the dominion of the new state. There was, then, something more than the ordinary rights of individuals in the ceded territory to be perpetuated, and enough to justify the insertion of such a provision as a necessary measure. But there is another answer to be found in the ordinary practice of nations in their treaties, in which, from abundant caution, or, perhaps, diplomatic parade, many stipulations are inserted for the preservation of rights which no civilian would suppose could be affected by a change of sovereignty. Witness the frequent stipulations for the restoration of wrecked goods, or goods piratically taken; witness, also, the third article of the treaty ceding Louisiana, and the sixth article of that ceding Florida, both of which are intended to secure to the inhabitants of the ceded territory, rights which, under our civil institutions, could not be withheld from them.

But let us now reverse the picture, and inquire whether this stipulation of the compact, or of the constitution, prescribed no limits to the legislative power of Kentucky over the ceded territory. Had the state of Kentucky, immediately 101*] after it was organized, *passed a law declaring that wherever a plaintiff in ejectment, or in a writ of right, shall have established his right in law to recover, the jury shall value the premises claimed, and, instead of judgment for the land, and the writ of possession, the plaintiff shall have his judgment for the value so assessed, and the ordinary process of law to recover a sum of money on judgment; who is there who would not have felt that this was a mere mockery of the compact, a violation of the first principles of private right and of faith in contracts? Yet such a law is, in degree, not in principle, variant from the occupying claimant laws under consideration, and the same latitude of legislative power which will justify the one, would justify the other.

But, again, on the other hand (and I acknowledge that I am groping my way through a labyrinth, trying to lay hold of sensible objects to guide me), who can doubt that where private property had been wanted for national purposes, the legislature of Kentucky might have compelled the individual to convey it for a value tendered, notwithstanding it was held under a grant from Virginia, and notwithstanding such a violation of private right had been even constitutionally forbidden by the state of Virginia? Or who can doubt the power of Kentucky to regulate the course of descents, the forms of conveying, the power of devising, the nature and extent of liens, within her territorial limits? For example: By the civil law, the workman who erects an edifice acquires a lien on both the building and the land it stands 102*] upon, *for payment of his bill. Why should not the state of Kentucky have adopted this wise and just principle into her jurisprudence? Or why not have extended it to the case of the laborer who clears a field? Yet, in principle, the occupying claimant laws, at least that of 1797, was really intended to engraft this very provision into the Kentucky code, as to the innocent improver of another man's property. It was thought, and justly thought, that as the state of Virginia had pursued a course of legislation in settling the country which had introduced such a state of confusion in the titles to landed property, as rendered it impossible for her to guaranty any specific tract to the individual, it was but fair and right that some security should be held out to him for the labor and expense bestowed in improving the country; and that where the successful claimant recovered his land, enhanced in value by the labors of another, it was but right that he should make compensation for the enhanced value. To secure this benefit to the occupying claimant, to give a lien upon the land for his indemnity, and avoid the necessity of a suit in equity, were in fact, the sole objects of the act of 1797. The misfortune of this system appears to have been that to curtail litigation, by providing the means of closing this account current of rights and liabilities in a court of law, and in a single suit, so as to obviate the necessity of going into equity; or of an action for mesne profits on the one side, and an action for compensation on the other, appears to have absorbed the attention of the legislature. The consequence of *which is, that a course [*103 of proceeding, quite inconsistent with the simplicity of the common law process, and a curious debit and credit of land, damages and mesne profits on the one hand, and of quantum meruit on the other, has been adopted, exhibiting an anomaly well calculated to alarm the precise notions of the common law.

But suppose that instead of imposing this complex mode of coming at the end proposed, the legislature of Kentucky had passed a law simply declaring that the innocent improver of lands, without notice, should have his action to recover indemnity for his improvements, and a lien on the premises so improved, in preference to all other creditors. I can see no principle on which such a law could be declared unconstitutional, nor anything that is to prevent the party from enforcing it in any court having competent jurisdiction.

But the inconsistency which strikes everyone in considering the laws as they now stand is, that one party should have a verdict, and another, finally, the judgment. That, eodem flatu, the plaintiff should be declared entitled to recover land, and yet not entitled to recover land.

After thus mooting the difficulties of this case, I am led to the opinion that if we depart from the restricted construction of the article under consideration, we are left to float on a sea of uncertainty as to the extent of the legislative power of Kentucky over the territory held under Virginia grants; that if obliged to elect between the assumed exercise, and the utter extinction of the power of Kentucky over the subject, I would *adopt the former; [*104 that every question between those extremes is one of expediency or diplomacy, rather than of judicial cognizance, and not to be decided before this tribunal. If compelled to decide on the constitutionality of these laws, strictly speaking, I would say that they in no wise impugn the force of the laws of Virginia, under which the titles of landholders are derived, but operate to enforce a right acquired subsequently, and capable of existing consistently with those acquired under the laws of Virginia. I cannot admit that it was ever the intention of the framers of this constitution, or of the parties to this compact, or of the United States, in sanctioning that compact, that Kentucky should be forever chained down to a state of hopeless imbecility—embarrassed with a thousand minute discriminations drawn from the common law, refinements on mesne profits, set-offs, &c., appropriate to a state of society, and a state of property, having no analogy whatever to the actual state of things in Kentucky—and yet no power on earth existing to repeal or to alter, or to effect those accommodations to the ever varying state of human things, which the necessities or improvements of society may require. If anything more was intended than the preservation of that very peculiar and complex system of land laws then operating over this country, under the laws of Virginia, it would not have extended beyond the maintenance of those great leading principles of the fundamental laws of that state, which, as far as they limited the legislative power of the state of Virginia over 105*] the rights of *individuals, became, also, blended with the law of the land, then about to pass under a new sovereignty. And if it be admitted, that the state of Kentucky might in any one instance, have legislated as far as the state of Virginia might have legislated on the same subject, I acknowledge that I cannot perceive where the line is to be drawn so as to exclude the powers asserted under, at least, the first of the laws now under consideration. But it appears to me that this cause ought to be decided upon another view of the subject.

The practice of the courts of the United States, that is, the remedy of parties therein, is subject to no other power than that of Congress. By the act of 1789, the practice of the respective state courts was adopted into the courts of the United States, with power to the respective courts, and to the Supreme Court, to make all necessary alterations. Whatever changes the practice of the respective states may have undergone since that time, that of the United States courts has continued uniform, except so far as the respective courts have thought it advisable to adopt the changes introduced by the state legislatures.

The District of Kentucky was established while it was yet a part of Virginia. (Judiciary Act, September, 24, 1789.) The practice of the state of Virginia, therefore, was made the practice of the United States courts in Kentucky. Now, according to the practice of Virginia, the plaintiff, here, upon making out his title, ought to have had a verdict and judgment in the usual form. Nor can I recognize the right of the 106*] state of Kentucky *to compel him, or to compel the courts of the United States, to pass through this subsequent process before a board of commissioners, and, afterwards, to purchase his judgment in the mode prescribed by the state laws. I do not deny the right of the state to give the lien, and to give the action for improvements; but I do deny the right to lay the courts of the United States under an obligation to withhold from a plaintiff the judgment to which, under the established practice of that court, he had entitled himself.

Wheat. 8.

It may be argued, that the courts of the United States, in Kentucky, have long acquiesced in a compliance with these laws, and thereby have adopted this course of proceeding into their own practice. This, I admit, is correct reasoning; for the court possessed the power of making rules of practice, and such rules may be adopted by habit, as well as by framing a literal rule. But the facts, with regard to the Circuit Court here, could only sustain the argument as to the occupying claimant law of 1797, since that of 1812 appears to have been early resisted. Here, however, I am led to an inquiry which will equally affect the validity of both laws, viewed as rules of practice, as affecting a fundamental right, incident to remedies in our courts of law.

It is, obviously, a leading object of these laws, to substitute a trial by a board of commissioners, for the trial by jury, as to mesne profits, damages, and a quantum meruit. Without examining how far the legislative power of Kentucky is adequate *to this change [107] in its own courts, I am perfectly satisfied that it cannot be introduced by state authority into the courts of the United States. And I go farther. The judges of these courts have not power to make the change; for the constitution has too sedulously guarded the trial by jury (seventh article of amendments), and the judiciary act of the United States both recognizes the separation between common law and equity proceedings, and forbids that any court should blend and confound them.

These considerations lead me to the conclusion that the defendant is not entitled to judgment under either of the acts under consideration, even admitting them to be constitutional; but if, under either, certainly under that alone which has been adopted into the practice of the United States courts in Kentucky.

CERTIFICATE.—This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kentucky, on certain questions upon which the opinions of the judges of the said Circuit Court were opposed, and which were certified to this court for their decision by the judges of the said Circuit Court, and was argued by counsel. On consideration whereof, it is the opinion of this court, that the act of the said state of Kentucky, of the 27th of February, 1797, concerning occupying claimants of land, whilst it was in force, was repugnant to the constitution of the United *States, but [108] that the same was repealed by the act of the 31st of January, 1812, to amend the said act; and that the act last mentioned is also repugnant to the constitution of the United States. .

The opinion given on the first question submitted to this court by the said Circuit Court, renders it unnecessary to notice the second question.

All which is ordered to be certified to the said Circuit Court.

Cited—4 Pet. 101; 5 Pet. 47, 465; 11 Pet. 582; 12 Pet. 69; 14 Pet. 414; 1 How. 316, 327; 6 How. 327, 332; 7 How. 66; 12 How. 156; 13 How. 566; 15 How. 319; 18 How. 432, 433; 20 How. 538; 23 How. 235; 4 Wall. 550; 552; 17 Wall. 292; 6 Otto, 604; 1 Sawy. 26; Hemp. 325; 3 Wood. & M. 482, 512; 12 Bank. Reg. 520; 4 Blatchf. 411; 1 Story, 493, 494, 496; 3 Woods, 363.

[PRIZE. CONCLUSIVENESS OF SENTENCE.]

LA NEREYDA.

THE SPANISH CONSUL, Libellant.

Quære, Whether a regular sentence of condemnation in a court of the captor, or his ally, the captured property having been carried infra præsidia, will preclude the courts of this country from restoring it to the original owners, where the capture was made in violation of our laws, treaties and neutral obligations.

Whoever claims under such a condemnation, must show that he is a bonæ fidei purchaser for a valuable consideration, unaffected with any participation in the violation of our neutrality by the captors.

Whoever sets up a title under any condemnation, as prize, is bound to produce the libel, or other equivalent proceeding, under which the condemnation was pronounced, as well as the sentence of condemnation itself.

Where an order for farther proof is made, and the party disobeys, or neglects to comply with its injunctions, courts of prize generally consider such disobedience, or neglect, as fatal to his claim.

Upon such an order, it is almost the invariable practice for the claimant (besides other testimony) to make proof by his own oath of his proprietary interest, and to explain the other circumstances of 109* the transaction; and the absence of such proof and explanation always leads to considerable doubts.

Quære, Whether a condemnation in the court of an ally, of property carried into his ports by a cogeligerent, is valid.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of Maryland.

This was an allegation filed by the Spanish consul against the brig Nereyda, a public vessel of war belonging to the King of Spain, stating that the vessel had been captured by the privateer Irresistible, John O. Daniels, master, in violation of the laws, treaties and neutral obligations of the United States. The claim given in by Henry Child, as agent in behalf of the claimant, Antonio Julio Francesche, set up a title in him acquired under a sale in pursuance of a sentence of condemnation, as prize to the captors, pronounced by the Vice-Admiralty Court at Juan Griego, in the Island of Margarita, in Venezuela. The capture was made under an alleged commission from Jose Artega, chief of the Oriental Republic of Rio de la Plata, and the prize carried into Juan Griego, as to a port of an ally in the war, for adjudication. The capturing vessel was built, owned, armed and equipped in the port of Baltimore, and having provided herself with the commission, sailed from that port on a cruise, and captured the Nereyda at sea, in the year 1818. The sentence of condemnation was pronounced and the alleged sale took place in March, 1819, and the name of the captured vessel having been changed to that of El Congreso de Venezuela, and a commission obtained for her as a privateer from the government of Venezuela, she set sail for Baltimore, under 110*] the command of Henry Childs, who was the original prize-master, where she arrived, and was libeled as before stated. It appeared in evidence that the vessel had continued, from the time of the capture, under the direction and control of Daniels and Childs, both of whom were citizens of the United States, and domiciled at Baltimore. No bill of sale to Francesche was produced, and no other evidence of his purchase except a certificate from the auctioneer. A decree of restitution to the claimant was pronounced in the District Court, which was affirmed, pro forma, in the Circuit Court, and the cause was brought by appeal to this court.

The cause was argued, at the last term, on the original evidence, by Mr. Harper and Mr. D. Hoffman for the appellant, and by Mr. Winder for the respondent.

Mr. D. Hoffman, for the appellant, contended, (1) That the court is competent to restore this property to the appellant, by the general principles of the jus gentium, without any reference to the proof, that the neutrality and laws of this country have been violated by the captors, but on the sole ground that this taking on the high seas was not jure belli, but wholly without commission, as Jose Artega does not represent a state or nation, or a power at war with Spain. That the principles established by cases recently decided in this court do not impugn the doctrine contended for, as they occurred in the case of commissions *granted by such of the South Ameri- [*111 can provinces as our government, in the opinion of the court, had recognized to be engaged in a civil war with Spain. That our government, and this court, having, in no instance whatever, recognized Artega as engaged in a war with Spain, he is as incompetent to grant commissions of prize as any other individual in the Spanish provinces. That this court, therefore, as an instance court, will decree restitution and damages, as in ordinary cases of maritime tort.

2. That the neutrality and laws of this country having been violated by the captors, this court will decree restitution on that ground, even if the authority under which they acted were, in other respects, fully competent.

3. If the court has the power to restore this property, either on the ground of the total inability of Artega to issue commissions of prize, or in vindication of our violated laws and neutrality, it will look behind the condemnation of any court for the existence of these facts, and if they be found to exist, will wholly disregard the condemnation and consider it rather as an aggravation than an extenuation of the wrong.

4. That this court, in restoring this property, on the ground of violated neutrality and laws, will not disturb the decree of condemnation, or in any degree impugn the received doctrine of the conclusiveness of admiralty decrees, as said condemnation was made without any reference to our laws, or inquiry as to the ownership or equipment of the privateer.

*5. That there is no sufficient proof [*112 of the condemnation, which is relied on; that this court will require the exhibition at least of the libel, in order to disclose the grounds of the prize proceedings.

6. That the Vice-Admiralty of Juan Griego must be regarded by this court as wholly incompetent to pass on this prize, first, because there is no evidence whatever of an alliance between Venezuela and the Banda Oriental; and, if the alliance were proved, then, second, because this sentence was passed by the court of an ally, and not by a court of the belligerent captor sitting in the country of an ally.

7. That the evidence of the claimant's purchase is not sufficient; and if it were, his title would be affected by those infirmities which attached to the right of the captors.<sup>1</sup>

Wheat. 8.

8. That under the circumstances of this case, the new commission granted to the Nereyda, by the government of Venezuela, after its condemnation, and the alleged purchase of it by Francesche, can afford it no protection in this court; that the doctrine of the immunity of sovereign rights, when it has an extraterritorial operation, is altogether inapplicable to the present case.

9. That as the evidence in this cause connects the court of Juan Griego, its proceedings, and 113* the commission of the Nereyda, with the manifest violators of our laws of neutrality, and the treaty with Spain, and evinces the whole to be a congeries of frauds practiced on our laws by our own citizens, aided and sustained by foreigners, this court will maintain the integrity of those laws, and pay no more regard, and perhaps less, to the commission, than to the condemnation.

And, first, as to the effect of the commission; most of what has already been submitted to the court as to the inefficiency even of a genuine sale of such a privateer to the government of any of the South American provinces, and the inability of a condemnation, even of a competent court, to deprive this tribunal of its restoring power, will apply with equal, and perhaps greater force, to the immunity claimed for this prize from the commission with which she is now clothed.

If this immunity be allowed, it must be on the ground that the sovereignty of Venezuela would be improperly subjected to judicature, and that this commission imparts to the vessel the same privilege from arrest, or detention, which is due in certain cases to a sovereign, or his ambassadors. This is founded wholly on an assumption, first of the fact that sovereignty is by this proceeding brought into judicature; and secondly, of a principle that sovereignty cannot, in any case, be thus dealt with; both of which, it is presumed, are untenable. We contend that the restoration of this prize, notwithstanding the commission, would in no degree effect the rights or dignity of the government of Venezuela; and that if our laws have 114* been violated, the power of restitution cannot be impaired, even if the rights of sovereignty were implicated; that the government of Venezuela, even if regarded, in all respects, as that of a free and independent state, has no sovereign rights in this country, when they come in collision with our own; that all sovereignty is, in its nature, as a general rule, local, and that its extraterritorial operation is to be found only in a few cases of exception to that rule.

This commission, like the condemnation, is a sovereign act, good for some purposes, and wholly inoperative as to others. The commission would justify the capture of Spanish property; that power this court cannot call in question; but the commission is not good to disarm this court of a power which it would otherwise possess, viz., of restoring this vessel, because gained by the unlawful use of American means. The taking of this vessel, by our citizens, per se, rendered her justiciable in this court; she is liable to the jurisdiction of American admiralty tribunals, at any remote period and into whatsoever hands she may have come, whether by condemnation, bona fide sale, or otherwise; and though, in the exercise of this power, such condemnation, sale, or commission, may be rendered (in a degree) inoperative, this is only an incidental or collateral effect; the court would not directly impugn either; it merely restores the possession to those from whom, quoad this country, it had been illegally wrested. And if subsequently the condemnation, sale, or commission could benefit those claiming under them, *or either of them, this court [*115] would have no power to disturb such possession or title.

The commission which has been given to this prize is not sustained by any principles similar, or equivalent to those on which the force of condemnations ordinarily rests. It can seek no aid, from the doctrine of comity; it can claim no exemption from the binding operation of an actual or supposed notice of a proceeding, in which all the world is a party; it can demand no privilege from the doctrine of the absolute co-equality of all nations. On what principle, then, can the commission shield the vessel from the power of this court? These cruisers bear the flag and are clothed with the commissions of the country of their adoption; and yet we know that this court, in vindication of the laws of the land, would condemn them on informations filed under the neutrality acts; and this, too, even were they public, or national vessels of war.<sup>2</sup> Sovereignty, no doubt, would be as much implicated in the one case as in the other. It may, however, be said, that the Nereyda never violated the laws of this country, but that it is the capturing vessel which is in delicto; true; but the very ground on which the res subjecta is now claimed, is, that it never vested in the captors, as far as concerns this country. The innocence of the res capta, and the illegal means used for its acquisition, are the very grounds of our libel, and the foundation on which the power of this court reposes. If the capturing vessel has broken our [*116] laws, and the fruit of its illegal act be within the reach of this court, no power is competent to arrest its arm. If a commission or condemnation of the prize could effect this, legislation would be worse than vain; it would be clothing foreign powers with the right of dispensing with our most solemn, important and penal laws; and, in the present case, it would be yielding to an unknown, undefined, self-created power, not only the rights of nations in their fullest extent, but the privilege of seducing our own citizens to the violation of our laws; and this, too, with perfect impunity, as the personal sanctions of the laws are not only extremely difficult to be enforced, but there is no occasion for the offenders to come within the reach of our courts.

The cases of The Exchange,<sup>3</sup> and The Cas-

1.—These points having been argued by Mr. Hoffman in the preceding cases of The Grand Para (ante, Vol. VII., p. 471), The Santa Maria (Id. p. 490), and The Arrogante Barcelones (Id. p. 496), he referred the court to his former arguments, which will be found reported in those cases.

2.—1 Wheat. Rep. 258.

3.—7 Cranch, 116.

suis,<sup>1</sup> will probably be relied on as establishing the doctrine that the commission conferred on this vessel by the government of Venezuela, as the sovereign act of a state or nation, so effectually screens the vessel from judicial cognizance that this court dare not examine into the cause, but must leave the vessel in the undisturbed possession of those holding the commission. If we analyze this celebrated case of The Exchange, and collate its facts and principles with that now under adjudication, we shall find them to stand on grounds essentially different.

1. The seizure of the Exchange was made by the sovereign power of France, from an American citizen who had violated his neutrality, and had thereby become quasi an enemy of that country. 2. The seizure was in the exercise of what was claimed by France as a belligerent right. 3. The Exchange, when she returned into our waters, was actually and bona fide a public vessel of war, held by the Emperor Napoleon, jure coronæ, and bore the flag and commission of a national ship of war. 4. The Exchange was in the possession of a sovereign who claimed a title in her, and who had done no act by which he could be subjected to judicature. 5. The case of The Exchange rested on the personal character and immunity of sovereigns, and an immunity was claimed for this vessel only as extensive as that which is allowed in the three cases, of the sovereign himself, his ambassadors, and his armies in transitu. 6. The Exchange entered the port of Philadelphia in distress, and sought an asylum bona fide. During this time she demeaned herself with strict propriety, and no act was done manifesting a consent to submit to judicature, nor by our government to exact it. 7. The libel against the Exchange involved the question of sovereign title as well as possession. It was a petitory suit, of which this court could have no jurisdiction whatever. 8. There was a suggestion by the law officer of the government, on behalf of the French sovereign, and the case was wholly coram non judice, even if the Exchange had not been a national vessel of war. 9. The Exchange was not seized on the high seas; it was a seizure within a port of the French empire, by order of the sovereign, under his [118*] Rambouillet decree. There was, therefore, no case within the admiralty. The taking was neither a capture, nor a maritime tort; the court was, consequently, compelled to leave the possession undisturbed. 10. Its being, at the time of the seizure, American property, could in no way invest this court with the power of restitution, even had it been a maritime seizure jure belli. The legality of all captures is to be judged by the courts of the captor, unless in the two excepted cases of a violation of our territorial limits in effecting the capture, and equipment, ownership, or augmentation of the force of the vessel in this country. The Exchange was embraced by neither exception.

Setting aside the question of the sovereign's title, the case of The Exchange presented nothing more than the ordinary case of an American vessel, which, after being seized jure belli, for a violation of her neutrality, returned to this country; the legality of which seizure, it must be admitted, belonged exclusively to the courts of France. The violation of her neutrality rendered her quoad hoc a belligerent. Nay, the very suggestion filed by the Attorney-General was avowedly for the purpose of maintaining our neutrality inviolate, and although the decree to which she had rendered herself obnoxious might have been a most arbitrary, and even wanton departure from the law of nations. This was not a matter for our courts, but for our government to judge of and to remedy; for had the government declared the Rambouillet decree contrary to the law of nations, still this court could not have [119 restored the Exchange.<sup>2</sup> This principle alone would have justified the court in refusing to restore the Exchange to its former owner. The case of The Exchange was made to rest on two distinct points, either of which was sufficient to decide the cause. First, whether the court could restore American property which might have been unjustly or illegally seized by a foreign government. This was, in truth, the only essential point. The cases of The Betsey,<sup>3</sup> Del Col v. Arnold,<sup>4</sup> and some others, seemed to sanction the right of restoring, simply on the ground of its being American property. A second question was therefore made, which, though but auxiliary, assumed, in the course of the argument, the chief importance. It was contended, that as the Exchange was now the property of a sovereign, which had been admitted into our country by implied consent, and which, during her stay, had done no act to terminate that permission, this court must regard the vessel as entitled to the same immunity as would be due to ambassadors or foreign troops passing by consent through our country. Much learning and eloquence were, no doubt, displayed in the argument of this point; but it is conceived that had the doctrine, since so clearly laid down in the case of The Invincible,<sup>5</sup> been at that time as well defined and understood as it is [120 at present, the case of The Exchange would have been decided without reference to the question of sovereign immunity.

The following points of comparison occur between The Exchange and the case now under adjudication:

1. The Nereyda was not seized by any sovereign power, but by Daniels, a private individual, a citizen of the United States, acting under an authority wholly unknown to this court, because in no way recognized by this government. 2. The Nereyda never was, and is not at this time, a public vessel of war of the government of Venezuela; but a privateer, the private property of Daniels, and in his, or, perhaps, Francesche's possession. The commission under which she now appears imports nothing more than an authority in Childs, her commander, to capture Spanish property; but it does not render her national or public property. The commission in the case of The Exchange, on the contrary, was also an evidence or muniment of the sovereign's title. The restitution of the Nereyda would deprive an indi-

1.—3 Dall. 123.

2.—Williams v. Amroyd, 7 Cranch, 423.

3.—2 Peters' Adm. Dec. 330.

4.—3 Dall. 333.

5.—2 Gallis. Rep. 36; 1 Wheat. Rep. 238.

Wheat. 8.

vidual of his possession; but the restitution of the Exchange could not have been effected without judging of the validity of the original seizure, annulling the commission, and pronouncing a sovereign's title wholly void. 3. The Nereyda is expressly claimed on behalf of a private individual. Neither Francesche nor Childs makes any mention of any possession or property being in the government of Venezuela. This proceeding, then, does not call on sovereignty to submit to judicature; and the commission cannot *require of us to consider that as national property which the whole history of the case proves to be a mere private possession. 4. The Nereyda entered our waters voluntarily and for the express purpose of obtaining an unlawful equipment, and the very persons who brought her here had violated our laws and subjected themselves, and the property in their possession, to the jurisdiction of our courts. No asylum, therefore, was granted to the Nereyda, and her officers and crew. The United States cannot be supposed to have admitted the Nereyda exempt from all inquiry as to her real character, and as to the conduct of those in whose possession she was found. But the Exchange not only arrived here in distress, and demeaned herself with strict propriety, but those who had her in possession had never violated our laws, nor was she ever capable of restitution by this court; she entered our ports under an acknowledged and certain immunity. No cession, then, of territorial jurisdiction can be inferred from the entry of the Nereyda into our waters; and her commission, even if it made her a national vessel, would not, under the circumstances of the case, protect her, allowing the doctrine of sovereign immunity its greatest latitude. Sovereignty is essentially local in its operation; the moral equality of all nations establishes this as an aphorism in public law. Beyond a nation's dominions, sovereignty has, ordinarily, no operation; its extraterritorial power is but an exception to a well-known rule; and if we for a moment attend to the principle which supports the exception, we shall *find it, in all cases, to rest on the consent, express or implied, of that nation within whose territory the immunity is claimed. The three exceptions so forcibly illustrated in the judgment of the court in the case of The Exchange, show the local nature of sovereignty, and strongly evince the special grounds on which the deviation from the general rule is justified. But even in the excepted cases, if there be not the utmost good faith, if there be any circumstances to negative the implication of consent, or any facts unknown at the time of an express compact, which would have prevented such compact had they been disclosed, the immunity would at once cease.

The claim of immunity for the Exchange was exacted only to the extent of, and made to rest on, those principles which protect from detention or arrest, 1st, a sovereign entering the territory of another; 2d, ambassadors; and 3d, the troops of a foreign prince, to whom a right of passage had been allowed. Now, if a sovereign should enter the dominions of another without such implied or express consent; or if, after he has entered with consent, he should commit an act malum in se, or against the jus gentium; or if it be discovered that an ambassador had, prior to his appointment, committed some capital offense against the country to which he is sent; or if the troops, in their passage, should violate the rights of persons, or of property, it is presumed neither of them would be shielded from the penal law of the country.<sup>1</sup> If this be correct, the commission granted to *the Nereyda cannot, on principle, [*123 screen her from the restoring power of this court. The vessels of all nations, public as well as private, may seek an asylum in our ports. During this we have, ordinarily, no jurisdiction over them. The consent, however, under which they enter, is always subject to the qualification that they have not previously violated our laws or hospitality, and that they are in no other respect amenable to judicature. If the Nereyda had not been taken by United States arms, this court could not have interfered in behalf of the Spanish sovereign, from whom his rebellious subjects had taken her. The commission, then, it is presumed, can no more protect her from the power of this court, than the solemn and public documents by which an ambassador is made the representative of his sovereign could shield him from the criminal law of the country in which he resides, and whose laws he had previously violated unknown to that country.

The libel in this case does not involve the question of title. As relates to Venezuela, even the right of possession of this prize is not implicated. If this were a petitory suit, this court would disclaim any interference.<sup>2</sup> But the question simply is, whether those who have gained a possession, or their representatives, by means illegal in reference to our laws, shall be permitted to retain that possession against its original possessors, in the very country whose laws have been violated.

*The Nereyda being at one time sub- [*124 ject to the jurisdiction of this court (had she come into our possession), the court will not permit that to be done indirectly which could not be done directly. This contingent jurisdiction can no more be annihilated or impaired by the act of a nation or state than by an individual. As to this country, the taking was an absolute nullity. There was a deep-seated infirmity in the original capture, which could not be cured by the condemnation, nor by Francesche's purchase, even if it had been genuine. For if the condemnation be not sufficient, no act done in execution of that judicial sentence could be thus operative; debile fundamentum fallit opus; and Francesche could succeed only to the title of Daniels, whatever that was. Nor could the commission rehabilitate or perfect the title. It does not pretend to assert a title in anyone, nor does it design to confer a title on Francesche, or to intimate any claim of property in the government granting it. This sovereign act, then, imports nothing further than an authority to that vessel to capture Spanish property.

In the case of The Exchange, the prominent

1.—4 Inst. 152; 3 Bulst. 28; Molloy, B. 1, ch. 10, sec. 12.

Wheat. 8. U. S., Book 5.

2.—2 Bro. Civ. & Adm. Law, 110, 113, 114, 115, 117, 7 Cranch, 120, 121.

difficulty was, that its possessor, being a sovereign, could not be brought into court. But, in the present case, those claiming under the commission, have not only voluntarily appeared and claimed the Nereyda, but they have expressly submitted the case to the jurisdiction of this court. The claimant asked for and received the Nereyda on stipulation; this cancels, 125* or waives every objection *to jurisdiction, if any existed.<sup>1</sup> Not that it is meant to assert, in general, that consent can confer jurisdiction; but that wherever a court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, but not of the person, consent would remove the objection. If, on the other hand, the court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter, but of the persons only, it would not be competent to act for the consent of the parties. In the case now before the court, there is no one act of the claimant, or of others, indicating any interest in this proceeding on the part of the government of Venezuela; but the case is impressed throughout with the character of a mere private and individual claim.

In the case of The Cassius, a prohibition was allowed on the ground, 1st. That the prize itself had been carried infra præsidia. 2d. That the question of damages should follow the main question, which belonged exclusively to the court of the captor. 3d. That as the Cassius was, and ever had been, the property of a sovereign nation, and not a mere privateer, our courts had no power to make her respond in damages. 4th. That there was no proof that the commander of the Cassius was an American citizen. 5th. That the treaty with France gave the exclusive cognizance, in all cases of prizes made by their vessels of war, to the courts of France.

Is there any point in this case which militates against the restitution of the Nereyda? In the 126* case of The Cassius, the court very properly decided that the privateer should not respond in damages for the captured property, as this had been taken infra præsidia capiendum; and the court of the captors having the exclusive right to judge of the legality of the capture, the question of damages should follow the main question. It also assumed the doctrine, which has been subsequently fully established in the case of The Invincible,<sup>2</sup> viz., that the power of this court to take the res capta from the possession of a belligerent and restore it to its former owner, could only be brought into action where the neutrality or territorial jurisdiction of this country had been violated by the captor. The case of The Cassius is, in all its points, good law; it is nothing more than the ordinary case of calling on this court to decree damages for an illegal capture of American property; no one will pretend to say that this can be done unless the court acquires a jurisdiction by reason of the existence of either of those facts which take the case out of the control of the general rule, which gives to the courts of the captors the sole right of judging of the validity of all captures. American ownership in the thing captured is not sufficient per se, and in the case of The Cassius no other fact appeared in proof. Further, if we advert to the fact that the Cassius was subsequently prosecuted on an information for an illegal outfit, which, on that proceeding, was proved, and *she condemned, maugre her commis- [127 sion, the case of The Cassius,<sup>3</sup> on the civil proceeding, cannot be regarded as any authority to establish the doctrine of sovereign immunity, when the rights of two sovereigns come in collision.

Mr. Winder, contra, contended, 1. That there was no competent claimant before the court. The vessel libeled originally belonged, as was asserted, to the King of Spain, and was libeled by the Spanish consul, who cannot be considered by this court as authorized in his general character to appear for his government, when its sovereign rights are drawn in question in our tribunals. He must show some special authority for this purpose.<sup>4</sup>

2. The capture was made jure belli, under a regular commission from Artigas, the chief of one of the South American provinces engaged in the present war between Spain and her colonies. The existence of this civil war is notorious. It has been recognized by various acts of our government; and the consequent right of all the parties engaged in it to carry on hostilities against each other, has been repeatedly admitted by this court, and is laid down by all the text writers on the law of nations. The Oriental Republic, or Banda Oriental, is that portion of the ancient vice-royalty of La Plata, lying between the river Uruguay and Brazil; which, for a long period, and at the time *the present capture was made, [128 carried on hostilities both against its parent country, Spain, and against Portugal, independent of the government established at Buenos Ayres. This fact is stated in the President's message of the 17th of November, 1818, and in the reports of our commissioners, transmitted with it;<sup>5</sup> and is sufficient to authorize the court to allow to Artigas all the rights of war, according to the principles already settled as applicable to this subject. It is impossible to make any intelligible distinction, in this respect, between the different governments which have successively sprung up in different parts of South America. The rights of war must be allowed to all or to none. Their existence as governments de facto is matter of history and public notoriety; and the United States have since acknowledged the independence of all of them as they now exist, without pretending accurately to adjust their conflicting claims of territorial jurisdiction among each other.

3. The capture having been made under a lawful commission, was carried into a port of Venezuela, an ally or co-belligerent with the Banda Oriental in the war with Spain, and there condemned as prize to the captors, in the regular court of the ally. The present claimant asserts his claim as a purchaser under that sentence of condemnation. The fact of the connection between the different Spanish provinces in the war with the parent country, is mentioned by the President *in his [129 different communications to Congress, and he

1.—The Abby, 1 Mason's Rep. 364; 2 Bro. Civ. & Adm. Law, 398.

2.—1 Wheat. Rep. 238.

3.—1 Wheat. Rep. 253.

4.—The Anne, 3 Wheat. Rep. 435.

5.—4 Wheat. Rep. App'x, Note II., p. 23.

has the exclusive authority of determining the relations of foreign states. There is no doubt that a valid condemnation may be pronounced in the court of the captor's country, where the prize is lying in the port of an ally in the war. And if his ports may be used for this, and all other hostile purposes, it is not perceived why the aid of his courts may not be imparted for the purpose of consummating that title which is acquired by capture, and bringing infra præsidia. Indeed, it seems to be settled by the authority of text writers on the law of nations, and by express adjudications, that this may be done.<sup>1</sup> It must be mere matter of arrangement and mutual convenience between the co-belligerents themselves, and no neutral, or other nation, can have any right to complain. The validity of the capture is inquired into by a court of prize, having an inherent capacity to make the investigation, and to do justice to the claimants as well as the captors. Such was our own practice during the war of the revolution, when Congress authorized our prize courts to condemn prizes taken by French cruizers, and brought into the ports of the United States.<sup>2</sup> But even supposing the court of Venezuela not to be competent to adjudicate on the capture by its ally, yet the thing taken being once in its possession, and being the property of Spain, 130* its enemy, it *might proceeds to condemn it as such, and the condemnation must give a valid title against all the world.

4. The captured vessel having been thus condemned as prize, was sold and fitted out as a privateer under a commission from the government of Venezuela. It is insisted that this condemnation, and the commission thus obtained, are alone sufficient to prevent the court from inquiring into her former history. The vessel comes into our ports under the general license which both South American and Spanish cruizers enjoy of frequenting them; and so long as she does not abuse that hospitality by augmenting her force contrary to our laws, has a right to remain and depart at pleasure. This was the principle established in the case of The Exchange. It was not upon the ground that the vessel had become the property of the French emperor by a regular condemnation as prize, but that she bore his flag and commission, and coming into our ports under a general permission, was not amenable to the jurisdiction of our courts, any more than that sovereign himself, or his ambassador, would have been. Whether the ship be a public or a private armed vessel, can make no difference. It is sufficient that she bears the commission of the state and is engaged in the service of the state. To exert any jurisdiction over her is to exert a jurisdiction over the sovereign rights of that state of whose military force she constitutes a part, and, from the nature of the present war, an important part. You may, indeed, by a 131* prospective regulation, revoke the *permission which you have granted to the cruizers of the South American states, provided your act of revocation be impartial and extend to those of Spain also. But you cannot violate in a particular case the permission you have already granted, and draw to your judicial cognizance the sovereign rights of a state which is co-equal, in the view of the law of nations, with the oldest and proudest sovereignty in the world.

The learned counsel also referred to his arguments in other analogous cases before the court at the same term, which will be found reported in those cases.<sup>3</sup>

Mr. Harper, for the appellant, in reply, noticed, 1. The preliminary objection which had been urged on the part of the respondent, that the Spanish consul had no competent authority to institute the present proceeding.

This objection admitted of several answers. In the first place, it was to be recollected that it was not the sovereignty or the sovereign rights of the Spanish government that were here in question. It was a mere right of property, held and claimed by the king, in trust, indeed, for the nation, but still a right of property. Some doubts had been raised—how well founded it was not then necessary to inquire—whether a sovereign could be brought into judicature to defend any of his rights; but surely it had never been doubted that he might go *there if he thought fit, to assert his [132 rights of property. This was the daily practice of our own, and every other government, that respected the laws, and did not act in all cases by its arbitrary will. If the King of Spain could appear voluntarily in a court of justice, to assert his rights of property, surely he might appear by his agent, his proctor, or his attorney. The consul is the general agent for asserting in courts of justice the rights of his countrymen, and of his government, as far as they related to property. Here the consul claims, not, however, in his own name or for himself, but in the name and for the rights of his government. As to the case of The Anne, which has been cited on the other side,<sup>4</sup> the claim was not founded on a right of property, but of violated sovereignty. During the war between the United States and Great Britain, an American privateer had taken a British vessel on the coast of Hispaniola, and, as was alleged, within the Spanish jurisdiction. Spain was neutral; and there being no acknowledged Spanish minister, the Spanish consul interposed a claim to protect the neutral rights of his government and complain of their violation. He had no extraordinary power; and the court decided that for this purpose his ordinary powers were not competent. But surely it does not follow from this decision that if the vessel taken had been a public ship of Spain, he might not have interposed a claim for the property; for he is peculiarly intrusted with the rights of property, *while these of sovereignty are confid- [133 ed to the ambassador or public minister.

But, in the second place, if the public minister of Spain alone can act in a matter of this kind, he has acted here. An express written authority has been produced from him to the consul, to claim in this very case for the King of Spain. Surely if the King of Spain may come into court to prosecute his rights, he may

1.—2 Brown's Adm. & Civ. Law, 257-281; Oddy v. Bovill, 2 East's Rep. 479.

2.—5 Wheat. Rep. App'x, 123.

Wheat. 8.

3.—The Santissima Trinidad, ante, Vol. VII., p. 290; The Grand Para Id. p. 484; The Arrogante Barcelones, Id. p. 498, 516.

4.—3 Wheat. Rep. 435.

come by his attorney, his proctor, or his solicitor, as the case may require. The Canton of Berne once filed a bill in the English High Court of Chancery;<sup>1</sup> and surely the Canton of Berne must have appeared by a solicitor. And how was this solicitor appointed? Unquestionably as the proctor was in the present case—by the accredited minister of the sovereign.

2. He then proceeded to consider the principal questions in the cause, the first of which related to the validity of the commission under which the capture complained of was made, which he contended was invalid, and did not authorize the capture. The commission relied on is from Jose Artigas, styling himself "Chief of the Oriental Republic," and "Protector of the Orientals;" and the question is, whether any such republic, community or government, is known to this court. This depends upon their recognition by the government of this country, through the President, its constitutional organ for such purposes. This recognition certainly need not include Artigas [134*] *by name, as the chief of the supposed republic, government or community; because, when once their existence is properly made known to this court, the persons who from time to time act as their chief officers, must be taken to be so. But the government itself must have been acknowledged by the proper authority, before its existence can be noticed, or its acts treated as valid, by this court. The question, then, is, has any such government as that of "the Oriental Republic," or "the Orientals," been recognized by the government of the United States? For the decision of this question we must refer to the various acts of recognition which have been done by the President.

The only message of the President to Congress, which contains a distinct recognition of the different South American governments, is that of the 17th of November, 1818.<sup>2</sup> It states "that the government of Buenos Ayres declared itself independent in July, 1816, having previously exercised the powers of an independent government, though in the name of the King of Spain, from the year 1810. That the Banda Oriental, Entre-Rios, and Paraguay, with the city of Santa Fe, all of which are also independent, are unconnected with the present government of Buenos Ayres; that Chili has declared itself independent, and is closely connected with Buenos Ayres; that Venezuela has also declared itself independent, and now maintains the conflict with various [135*] *success; and that the remaining parts of South America, except Monte Video, and such other portions of the eastern bank of the La Plata, as are held by Portugal, are still in the possession of Spain, or in a certain degree under her influence."

Here we find various countries distinctly enumerated, of some of which the governments are noticed, but no mention whatever of the "Orientals," or the "Oriental Republic." A country called the "Banda Oriental," indeed, is mentioned, and we may conjecture, but are nowhere informed, that it constitutes the whole, or a part of this supposed republic. It is mentioned in connection with two other countries, called "Entre-Rios," and "Paraguay." Do they, also, form parts of "the Orientals," of whom Jose Artigas is the protector; or of the "Oriental Republic," of which he claims to be the chief? We are nowhere informed by the President; and although it might be plausibly conjectured, yet we know the fact to be otherwise. Paraguay, we know, historically, to be altogether separate from the Banda Oriental, and to have a chief of its own, one Francia, who is said to style himself "consul," and to conduct his government according to the forms of the Roman commonwealth. Venezuela is spoken of in the message as a distinct community, and we know it by that name. Chili is mentioned in the same manner, as a distinct community of that name, and, consequently, capable of having a government. The three other countries, or communities, are named in connection; but we are not *informed whether they constitute [*136 the territory of one government, of two, or of three; and no mention whatever is made of any such government, community or people, as the "Orientals," or the "Oriental Republic."

We are, then, left wholly in the dark by the President on this point; and we cannot look beyond his messages for information which he alone is authorized to give. We cannot look to the reports of the commissioners for the recognition of this government. This recognition appertains to the President alone, as the constitutional organ of the nation for all such purposes. He has, indeed, thought fit to lay before Congress the reports of the commissioners, as his justification for the step which he took, in recognizing some of these governments and for declining to recognize others. But he cannot have intended by this act to transfer the decision of this great question of national policy to this court, or to any other department of the government; and if he had intended to do so, it was not in his power. And if we look to the reports of the commissioners, we shall find abundant matter to justify the President in forbearing to recognize this pretended government. These reasons exist in its unsettled, irregular and ephemeral character. We were fully informed, by these reports, of the existence and pretensions of Artigas, of the nature of his government, and the countries over which it claimed to extend. One of the reports, that of Mr. Rodney, speaking of the people of the Banda Oriental, and Entre-Rios, says that they "have *been compelled [*137 to give up everything like civil avocations, and to continue, without any regular kind of government, under the absolute control of a chief, who, whatever may be his political principles or professions, in practice concentrates all power, legislative, executive and judicial, in himself."

3. But, admitting the commission to be valid, there was no valid condemnation of the property captured under its authority.

The paper produced as a condemnation, purports to be the sentence of a prize court of Venezuela, sitting at Juan Griego, or Gregorio, in the Island of Margarita, within the territory of that republic. It is objected to this condemnation, first, that it is not proved; and,

Wheat. 8.

1—9 Ves. 347.

2—4 Wheat. Rep. App'x, Note II., p. 24.

second, that it was pronounced by a court which had no jurisdiction.

The objection to the proof rests on two grounds. In the first place, the sentence is not certified under the seal of any court, or by any person who appears, or is stated or proved to be, the officer of any court. The person who certifies this sentence is stated, and proved to be, "the notary of the marine at Juan Griego, in Margarita;" but we are nowhere informed that he is charged with, or executes, the functions of clerk or register of the Admiralty Court, whose sentence this purports to be, or that he is in any manner employed by it, or authorized to authenticate its proceedings.

In the next place, this sentence, admitting it to be properly authenticated, appears alone. It 138* is "unaccompanied by any part of the proceedings in the cause in which it purports to have been pronounced. Before the sentence, decree or judgment of any court whatever, can be given in evidence, it must be shown that it was pronounced in a cause depending before that court, and within its jurisdiction. This is a universal rule, and applies, for the plainest reasons, to the decisions of prize courts, and of all other courts of justice. Without the production of the proceedings, it will always be impossible to ascertain whether the court had jurisdiction of the case; a point always, and in all cases, examinable, and which must always be established before the sentence, judgment or decree, can be given in evidence. For this reason the libel and claim, in admiralty and prize cases, must be produced, in order to let in the sentence. Not being produced here, the sentence, however well authenticated, must be disregarded.

But if received, it can produce no effect; because it appears, on its face, to be the sentence of a court which had no jurisdiction in the case which it undertook to adjudicate.

The commission under which the vessel and cargo in question were captured, as prize of war, was granted by Artegas, as chief of the Orientals, and protector of the Oriental Republic; a government which, if it have any such existence as can be noticed here, is entirely distinct from that of Venezuela, in the Prize Court of which, sitting at Juan Griego, in the Island of Margarita, the condemnation took place. But it is said that Venezuela was the ally of Artegas in the war; and that the prize 139* "court of an ally may condemn. We deny both these positions.

How does it appear that Venezuela was the ally of Artegas? The fact is not stated by the President in any of his public communications to Congress. Nor do the commissioners to South America, whose reports he communicated to the legislature, say anything of such an alliance, or anything from which it must, or even could, be inferred. The President, indeed, states to Congress, as the commissioners had done to him, that both Artegas and Venezuela were at war with Spain. But does it follow that they were in alliance with each other? We have lately learned that war has broken out between the Turks and the Persians. It may very soon break out between Russia and the Turks. Will the Russians and Persians, in that case, be ipso facto allies in the war against Turkey? Alliance means a connected union of efforts and means; and not merely an accidental coincidence of objects. It follows that the President, by declaring to Congress that Artegas and Venezuela were both engaged in war with Spain, did not declare that Artegas and Venezuela were allies. But, admitting that he had declared it, still his declaration would not be competent evidence of such a fact. When the question relates to the existence of a government, it is proper to refer it to the decision of the chief magistrate, who is intrusted by the constitution with the care and management of our relations with other countries and governments; he must, of necessity, therefore, be constituted the *judge, and the sole judge. [*140 of the fact of their existence, upon which the exercise of these important functions must depend. As these relations, moreover, must often depend on the state of peace or war in which foreign governments may be, as it respects each other, it may be proper that the President should be constituted, for many purposes, the judge, and even the sole judge, of the existence of a state of war between certain nations; because, out of such a state may grow very important relations between us and them. But what relations can arise out of the fact of their being allies in the war, or each carrying it on separately, by his separate counsels and means? None whatever. It is a mere matter of fact, which, like any other matter, may affect the rights or interests of individuals, but cannot, in any way, become a public concern. Those, consequently, who may wish to set it up, in the course of a judicial proceeding, as the foundation of any right or claim, must prove it, as every other fact is proved. As well might it be attempted to prove, by an executive communication, the fact of capture, or of spoliation of papers, or any other fact on which either party in a prize proceeding might rely, as this fact of an alliance between Artegas and Venezuela, in the war against Spain.

Admitting it, however, to be proved, it immediately brings up the second question, whether the prize courts of one ally are competent to take cognizance of captures made under commissions from the other. We insist that they are not, according *to the best established principles of prize law. [*141

In this opinion, the most eminent advocates, the soundest elementary writers, and the highest judicial tribunals, with one voice, unite. They all lay it down as an elementary principle, universal in its application, and subject to no exception, that the question of "prize, or no prize, belongs exclusively to the courts of the captors' country." In the case of The Invincible,<sup>1</sup> that most eminent and distinguished advocate, now unhappily no more, who so long adorned and enlightened this court, and whose opinions had almost acquired the authority of judicial decisions, treats this rule as an axiom, about which there could be no dispute. Mr. Pinkney there says that "if there be any rule of public law better established than another, it is that the question of prize is solely to be determined in the courts of the captors' country. The report on the memorial of the King of Prussia's minister, refers to it as the customary law of the whole civilized world. The English courts of prize have recorded it. The French courts have recorded it; this court has recorded it. It pervades all the adjudications on the law of prize, and it lays as an elementary principle at the very foundation of that law."

1.—1 Wheat. Rep. 246.

The judgment of this court, in the same case, fully supports the doctrine. It speaks of a sentence as prize under a commission from a 142* power *at war, as the "act of the sovereign;" as entitled to exemption from scrutiny, "except in the courts of that sovereign;" and as not subjecting the captors to any question whatever in any other court, till those of his sovereign shall have decided that the seizure was not authorized by the commission. It expressly asserts that "the exclusive cognizance of prize questions is yielded to the courts of the capturing power;" and admits this exclusive cognizance as a general principle.

So, in the case of The Estrella,<sup>1</sup> the court says: "We have been told, as heretofore, that to the courts of the nation to which the captor belongs, and from which his commission issues, exclusively appertains the right of adjudicating on all captures and questions of prize. This is not denied, nor has the court ever felt any disposition to intrench on this rule; but, on the contrary, whenever it occurred, as in the case of The Invincible, it has been governed by it." It is stated to be a rule "well established by the customary and conventional law of nations;" and the reasons on which it rests are stated in a clear and satisfactory manner. The rule is thus placed on three grounds: (1) The dignity of the sovereign who grants the commission, which would be impaired, if any tribunal but those authorized by himself were permitted to take cognizance of the acts done under that commission; in other words, if anyone but himself were allowed to superintend the conduct of his agents and officers. (2) The 143* efficient restraint and control of those officers and agents, to whom a power most liable to abuse is confided by the prize commission; and (3) The responsibility of their sovereign and nation, for the acts of unlawful violence which they may commit against neutrals, should those acts be sanctioned by their own government, through its prize courts. Undoubtedly, all these reasons, and especially the two first, require that the cognizance of questions of prize should be confined exclusively to the courts of the captors' country; and these reasons apply as strongly to the courts of an ally as to those of a neutral. The courts of an ally, like those of the neutral, are destitute of the means of inflicting punishment on the captor, if, in making the seizure, he have violated the instructions of his government, acted contrary to its general policy, or exceeded the authority conferred by the commission. Equally with the courts of a neutral, they are without the means of ascertaining what was the policy of the commissioning government, or its general rules and regulations, or what particular instructions accompanied the commission. It is the practice of every government to require sureties from those to whom it grants commissions of prize, for their proper conduct under the commission, and for the observance of their instructions. These sureties must reside in the country where the commission is granted. Consequently, they must be out of the reach of the government and courts of an ally, as much as of a neutral; and, consequently, the security must be wholly unavailing, if the *prizes made under the commission, [144 or by color of it, may be carried into the ports of an ally, and adjudicated in his courts. Not being able to reach the sureties, they would be equally unable to reach the property of the principal offender, which would, also, be in his own country. No decree for damages, or even for costs, however flagrant the case might be, could be enforced against his sureties, or his property. Nothing would be left but the imprisonment of his person; and, as he would have offended against no law of the ally, would have infringed none of its orders or instructions, it would be extremely doubtful, at least, how far any penal proceedings could be supported against his person. All that could be done, would be to rescue his illegally acquired booty from his grasp, by a sentence of restitution. It is easy to see how utterly inadequate this remedy must often prove, and how greatly the temptations to take the chance of succeeding in an illegal and unauthorized seizure must be increased by such a state of impunity.

It cannot escape observation, that nowhere, by no writer or advocate, nor in any adjudged case, is any distinction taken, or hinted at, between the case of an ally and that of a neutral, in the application of this rule. It is everywhere laid down absolutely, and without exception; and in a very recent case, The Josefa Segunda,<sup>2</sup> it is taken for granted by this court, and forms the basis of its decision.

*If we advert to the foundation of [145 the prize jurisdiction, we shall find reasons equally strong for confining it exclusively to the courts of the captors' country. This jurisdiction is declared by this court, in the case of Hudson v. Guestier,<sup>3</sup> to be founded entirely on the "possession" of the res capta. "The seizure vests the possession in the sovereign of the captor, and subjects the vessel to the jurisdiction of his courts." And again, "possession of the res by the sovereign has been considered as giving jurisdiction to his courts." Now, let it be asked, who had possession of the Nereyda while she lay at Juan Griego? Certainly not the government of Venezuela, but that of Artigas, through its agent and officer, the commander of the capturing vessel. This court asserts most positively, in the case just cited, "that the possession of the captor is, in principle, the possession of his sovereign." They add, "he, the captor, is commissioned to seize in the name of the sovereign, and is as much an officer appointed for that service, as one who, in the body of a county, serves a civil process." Then the possession of the res capta was in the government of Artigas; and as it is the possession of the res by the sovereign that gives jurisdiction to his courts, it follows inevitably, that the courts of Venezuela, the government of which had no possession of the captured property, could take no cognizance of the capture; and, consequently, that the sentence of the court of Juan Griego is void, for 146*] *want of jurisdiction in the court by which it was pronounced.

1.—4 Wheat. Rep. 307.

2.—5 Wheat. Rep. 338.

3.—4 Cranch's Rep. 296, 297.

Let it not be imagined that the possession was altered, or in any manner affected, by the bringing of the captured property into the port of the ally. This court has emphatically declared, in the same case before cited, that "the sovereign whose officer has, in his name, captured a vessel as prize of war, remains in possession of that vessel, and has full power over her so long as she is in a situation in which that possession cannot be rightfully devested." The same doctrine is asserted by all the judges, in the case of Rose v. Himely,<sup>1</sup> although there was much difference of opinion among the judges on other points. Could, then, this possession have been rightfully devested by the government of Venezuela, within whose territory the captured vessel had been brought? In the case of a neutral territory, this court has expressly adjudged, in Hudson v. Guestier,<sup>2</sup> that it could not. Upon what principle, then, could it be devested by the government of an ally? Ought not the captor to have as much immunity, as much safety, as many privileges in the ports of his friend and ally, his co-belligerent, as in those of a mere neutral? How could he be deprived of the possession? It could only be by an act of violence; and that, ex vi termini, would be wrongful. So far from being rightful, it would be an act of hostility and war.

But might not the captor, it may be asked, 147*] part *from his possession, and transfer it to the sovereign of the ally, so as to give jurisdiction to the courts of the latter? I answer that he could not; because the possession belongs to his sovereign, and not to him. He is merely the agent of the sovereign, for taking and holding the possession; and having no authority to transfer the possession, he could not rightfully transfer it so as to affect the right of his sovereign, to whom it belongs. It would be a breach of faith and duty, in him, to make the transfer; and to accept it would be a wrongful act on the part of the allied sovereign, upon which, according to a universal principle of law, no right could be founded. The captor, it is true, has an interest in the prize, by the grant of his sovereign; but, until a legal condemnation, that interest is inchoate and contingent. In the meantime, he has no power over it, except that of conducting it into a place of safety, and keeping it safely, till it can be brought to adjudication in the courts of his sovereign.

The treatise of Dr. Brown on the civil and admiralty law,<sup>3</sup> and the case of Oddy v. Bovill, in the English court of K. B.,<sup>4</sup> have been cited on the other side, to show that the courts of one ally may take cognizance of prizes made under the commissions of the other. But Dr. Brown cites no authority, and offers no reasons in support of his doctrine; which is evidently a mere mistake, arising from his having confounded the courts of an ally with prize courts of the 148*] capturing power, sitting *within the territory of his ally. This was the case in Oddy v. Bovill, and in the cases there cited from Robinson's reports. The case of Oddy v. Bovill related to a Danish vessel, captured by the French, and condemned by the French consul at Malaga, exercising there, by the consent of Spain, the powers of a prize court of France, at a time when those two nations were at war against Great Britain, as allies. The question was, whether the condemnation was valid; in other words, whether the French prize court had jurisdiction of the case. The decision of the court of K. B. (two judges only being present) was in favor of the jurisdiction. It might here be remarked, that the determination of an English court of common law, on such a question, made long since our independence, possesses no intrinsic authority here; and that a single case, decided by two judges only, out of four, or rather out of twelve, has very little authority anywhere. But, waiving these objections, let it be asked, to what does this decision really amount? Does it affirm the principle contended for—that the prize courts of one ally may take cognizance of questions of prize, arising under captures made by the other? Certainly not. It establishes nothing more than this: That one ally may, with the assent of the other, establish prize courts of his own, within the territory of that other. This is obviously a very different principle, and entirely free from the objections to which the other is liable. It preserves entire that great and beneficial rule of public law, founded on the most solid reasons of general safety, convenience and benefit, that [*149 questions of prize shall be exclusively reserved to the courts of the captors' country. The French court sitting in Malaga, was as much a French court; to all intents and purposes, as if it had sat in Marseilles or Brest. Its location in a Spanish port was a matter in which Spain alone had any concern. It was wholly indifferent to the opposite belligerent and to neutrals. Its proceedings and decrees were exactly the same in the one case as in the other. The dignity of the French government was as well preserved, the court had the same control over the captors, the same means of judging how far their conduct was conformable to the instructions, laws and policy of their government, and the same means of enforcing decrees against them for costs and damages. Recourse could as effectually be had to their property or their sureties; and, in case of need, to their government, for redress. The rule is therefore maintained in this case, and all its beneficial objects are secured. Whereas, by extending this jurisdiction to the courts of the ally, this great and beneficial rule is wholly subverted.

These remarks on the case of Oddy v. Bovill apply fully to those which are there cited from Robinson's reports. The first of them, that of The Christopher,<sup>5</sup> by no means comes up to the case just commented on. It was the case of a British ship taken by the French, and carried into a port of Spain, then the ally of France, from *whence the papers were [*150 sent to Bayonne in France. The ship was there libeled in the prize court, and condemned; and the objection to the validity of this condemnation, was not that it was pronounced by

1.—4 Cranch's Rep. 268.

2.—4 Cranch's Rep. 297.

Wheat. 8.

3.—Vol. II., p. 257, 231.

4.—2 East's Rep. 479.

5.—2 Rob. 273.

the court of an ally, or by a court of the captors' government sitting in the territory of an ally; but that when it was pronounced, the res capta was within the territory of the ally. This objection was overruled by Sir W. Scott, on the principle repeatedly affirmed by this court, that the possession of the captor, for and in behalf of his government, which is the foundation of the prize jurisdiction, continued in the country of the ally. This principle, after much hesitation, was afterwards extended by him in the case of The Henrick and Maria,<sup>1</sup> to the case of captured property carried into a neutral port, and lying there when it was condemned in a court of the captors' country. He declared his own opinion to be different, but held himself bound by a practice long established in the court where he presided.

The other cases from Robinson, relied on in Oddy v. Bovill, are those of The Harmony the Adelaide, and The Betsey Cruger. They are all referred to in a note to the case of The Christopher,<sup>2</sup> and were all cases of condemnations by French prize courts, sitting in the territory of Holland, while that power was an ally of France, in the war against Great Britain. The vessels were all condemned by the French Commissary of Marine, at Rotterdam. The [*151*] two first cases *occurred in 1799; and an order for further proof being passed, the question of law respecting the legality of such condemnation was reserved. In the third case, that of The Betsey Cruger, in 1800, it was given up by the counsel, and the legality of the condemnation was admitted by the court. But still it was a condemnation, not by the court of the ally, as in the case at bar, but by the court of the captors' country, in strict conformity to the rule for which we contend.

Some general expressions of Sir W. Scott, in pronouncing his judgment in the case of The Christopher, are supposed to countenance the doctrine of condemnation by the courts of an ally. But these expressions must be modified and restrained by reference to the subject-matter. He was speaking of a case of condemnation by a court of the captors' country, sitting in that country, while the res capta was in the territory of an ally. To such a case alone was his attention directed; and in reference to such a case alone are his expressions to be considered. Taken, as they must be, with this limitation, they leave untouched the rule for which we contend.

It has been urged on the other side, that the mere presence of the captured property in the territory of Venezuela, then at war with Spain, gave its courts a right to treat that property as enemy's property, and to proceed against it as prize. But we are to recollect that this property was brought there by the captors, in the possession of whose government it was, by force of the seizure; and that this possession, [*152*] thus acquired, *could not rightfully be divested or disturbed. The property did not come thither as the property of Spain, the enemy of Venezuela; but as the property of the captors, her allies, from whom she had no right, or pretense of right, to take it by force. The sovereign of the captors had the possession.

The right of the original owner was provisionally divested and destroyed by the capture; and, in this state of things, it could not be considered, or proceeded against, by the government of Venezuela itself, and much less by its prize courts, as the property of Spain. Venezuela herself considered the matter in this light. She did not interfere with the possession of the captors, or their rights of property. Her courts merely attempted, at the instance of the captors, and for their benefit, to exercise, in relation to this property, that prize jurisdiction which belonged exclusively to the courts of their own country.

4. Admitting, however, the sentence of condemnation to be valid, there is still another ground on which the claim set up under it ought to be rejected by this court. It is admitted that Daniels is a citizen of the United States, resident with his family in Baltimore; and it is in proof, that the vessel with which he made this capture was fitted out, armed and manned in the Chesapeake. If, then, he shall appear to be the real claimant, and not Francesche, in which name Childs professes to claim, his case is exposed to the full operation of that maxim of law which declares that no rights can be founded on a wrong: Quod ex maleficio non oritur actio. He appears, in that [*153*] case, in a court of the United States, to ask its aid in the assertion of a claim founded on a direct violation of our laws and treaties. The acts of Congress expressly forbid, under severe penalties, the armament of vessels within our territory, by our citizens or others, to cruise against any nation with whom we are at peace; and the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1795, with Spain, expressly stipulates that no American citizen shall take a commission from any foreign power, to cruise against Spain, her people or property, on pain of being treated as pirates. Although it might be difficult, as this court remarked on a former occasion, to enforce the penalty of piracy against Daniels, there can be no doubt that, if he be the real claimant, his claim is founded on his violation of the laws and treaties of his own country.

Here the learned counsel argued minutely upon the facts, to show that the alleged sale to Francesche was fraudulent, or had never taken place. He also insisted upon the want of a bill of sale, or some equivalent document, as a fatal objection to the claim of the pretended purchaser.<sup>3</sup>

5. If, however, Francesche must be considered as a real purchaser for himself, and our objections to the commission under which the capture was made, and to the condemnation founded on it, are to be regarded as invalid, we still insist that the captured property ought to be restored *on the ground of the [*154*] illegal outfit of the capturing vessel. Here we are met by two objections; one founded on the condemnation in the prize court of Venezuela, by which it is alleged that all inquiry on the subject is closed; and the other on the commission of prize granted by the government of Venezuela to the captured vessel, after the condemnation.

1.—4 Rob. 52.

2.—2 Rob. 172.

3.—The Bello Corrunes, 6 Wheat. Rep. 170; The Conception, Id. 239.

The first of these objections rests on the ground that both the capture and the condemnation are valid. We have endeavored to show that neither of them is so; because the Oriental republic, of which Artagas, in granting the commission under which the capture was made, claims to act as the chief, is not a government acknowledged by ours, so as to be known to our courts of justice; and because the prize court of Venezuela had no jurisdiction of the capture, admitting it to have been rightfully made. But if the capture and condemnation be free from these objections, what is the effect of the sentence in withdrawing from our courts the power of protecting and enforcing our neutrality? This is a momentous question, novel in itself, and of the utmost importance in its consequences to the peace and honor of this nation.

In discussing it we must first turn our attention to the peculiar state of things to which it applies, to the nature of the war out of which it arises, and to the character and structure of the courts for whose decisions such an effect is claimed.

In adverting to the state of things to which this question applies, we cannot but remark 155* that the *nations of South America, now engaged in war against Spain, are composed of colonies heretofore kept in a most rigid and slavish state of dependence on the mother country, and studiously debarred from all means of acquiring general knowledge, habits of self-government, or an acquaintance with the rules and principles of public law, as practiced or acknowledged by civilized states. Hence, they may be expected to be, and are, in fact, much more anxious to find means of annoying their enemy, than capable of judging how far those means might be consistent with the rights of neutral and friendly nations. They are, moreover, wholly destitute of the elements of maritime power. Their former masters restrained them from commerce, ship-building and navigation; for all of which, indeed, their country, from its want of ports, is peculiarly unfit. Their pursuits and habits are essentially agricultural. They are destitute of ships, equipments, ship-builders and mariners. For a naval force, consequently, the want of which they have always severely felt, they must look to foreigners; and there are none so near as the United States, or so ready to aid them as that portion of our maritime population which is ever more eager for enterprise and gain than scrupulous of means.

The manner in which the war has been carried on between the South Americans and Spain; and in which it will, no doubt, continue to be carried on, while it exists, is peculiarly calculated to inflame the resentments of both parties, and to render each more and more eager 156* to seize on every *means of distressing its enemy. The South Americans, too, from the infant state and imperfection of their systems of finance, the disturbed state of their country, and their great sacrifices and efforts, are extremely deficient in revenue, and little able to maintain, or to provide a regular naval force for the public service. They cannot take North American vessels into pay, and commission them as public ships. Their only resource, consequently, is to engage and encourage private adventurers, by granting them privateering commissions; and they, unfortunately, find multitudes in this country, who, through lust of gain, or a restless and irregular spirit of enterprise, catch eagerly at this bait. The profits of these irregular adventures depend, almost entirely, on the power of bringing the prizes into the United States, where alone they can find an adequate and advantageous market. Our laws inflict restitution to the former owners, as one of the means, and by far the most efficacious, of restraining these proceedings, so incompatible with our honor, peace and true interest. Our courts rigorously and successfully enforce this penalty of restitution. The other, and more penal enactments, are much more easily eluded by the various artifices and subterfuges which such persons know but too well how to employ. An attempt is now made to elude this penalty also, by the intervention of South American courts of prize. Let this attempt succeed; let such a sentence as that now relied on be once declared by this court to be a bar to all inquiry concerning the violation of our laws, our treaties *and our neutral obligations, by means [*157] of which a capture may have been effected; and what prize, seized by forces provided or augmented in our ports, will ever enter them unprovided with such a sentence? Can we shut our eyes to the character and composition of the courts where these decrees are pronounced; to the course of proceeding by which they are produced; to the means by which they may be, and in fact are, procured? Can we conceal from ourselves what has passed in this very case, and the manner in which the sentence relied on appears to have been obtained? Can we forget what has passed on this subject, in other cases which have been heard during the present term? With all these instructive lessons before our eyes, can we declare that the doctrine of the conclusiveness of the sentences of prize courts will apply, under such circumstances as are connected with this class of cases, and to such an extent as to shut out all inquiry into those antecedent violations of our laws, in which the captures originated? If such a declaration shall be made by this high tribunal, pronouncing, in the last resort, the maritime law of the country, most certainly no future capture will be made under a South American commission, the fruits of which will not find their way hither immediately, clothed with this protecting mantle; and this certainly of success and impunity will multiply tenfold the number of depredators, armed and equipped in our ports, to sally forth and seize the property of our neighbors, our friends and our own citizens.

*That we are at liberty to look to [*158] considerations of this sort in the application of established maxims and rules of law, to new combinations of circumstances, is not only manifest from the nature of the thing, and the general practice of all courts in analogous cases, but has been emphatically asserted by one of the members of this tribunal, in a very learned and elaborate judgment, which contains many important principles, and cannot fail to attract great attention.<sup>1</sup>

Our laws against arming and equipping vessels

1.—Per Mr. Justice Story, in the case of The Jeune Eugenie, since reported in the second volume of Mr. Mason's Reports.

in our waters, to cruise against our friends, cannot be enforced; our treaties on this subject cannot be executed; our peace and our honor cannot be preserved, if it shall be adjudged by this court that a sentence of condemnation such as this precludes all inquiry into the measures and means by which the force for making the capture was provided. Considerations of such magnitude would justify and require a modification of the principle on which this doctrine of conclusiveness rests, in its application to cases of this description, if it were so extensive as to embrace them.

But we deny that it does embrace them. The principle is merely this: That as prize courts are open to all the world, all the world are parties to a prize proceeding, and it therefore concludes all the world. There may be some objections to the terms in which this proposition is commonly stated, and to the correctness of the 159* reasoning *which it embraces; but it may be admitted to be true in relation to those matters, which come, or might have come, rightfully before the prize court. Such are all questions of prize or no prize, and all their incidents. But the rule has never been held to extend, nor do any of the reasons, solid or fanciful, on which it rests, extend to matters which could not, or did not, come rightfully before the prize court pronouncing the sentence. Such are all cases where it had no jurisdiction. The point of its jurisdiction, though asserted by it ever so formally and positively, is always open to inquiry; and where it has gone beyond its jurisdiction, its acts are treated as nullities. Why? Because those matters did not, and could not, come rightfully before it. So its sentence will be disregarded, unless the libel on which it was founded be shown; because, without the libel, it cannot appear that there was jurisdiction; or, consequently, that the matters adjudicated came rightfully before the court. Now, it is quite clear that this violation of our neutral duties and our laws, by providing or augmenting within our territory the force by which this capture was effected, never did come, and never could have come before the prize court at Margarita. That court had no knowledge of our laws, and nothing to do with their enforcement. There neither was, nor could be, any party in the proceedings, who had a right to make the objection. It could not have been made by the former owners; who would have been told, and correctly told, that as they were enemies, their property was liable to condemnation, however it 160* might have been seized; that they had nothing to do with the mode or the means of capture; and that it belonged to the government of the United States alone, whose rights were alleged to have been infringed, to assert and protect those rights, and to complain of the violation of its laws. This would have been a solid and sufficient answer to the former owners. As to the United States, they had not then acknowledged the government of Venezuela, and, consequently, could have no minister or diplomatic agent there, to interpose for the protection of their rights. The question, therefore, never could have been raised or adjudicated in the prize court of Venezuela, which had no jurisdiction over it, nor any means of bringing it into judgment. The sentence, consequently, of this prize court, is not conclusive on the question of antecedent violation of our laws, committed by making the capture, or preparing or augmenting the force by means of which it was made. These violations formed no part of the question of prize or no prize, or of any of its incidents; and, consequently, could never have come rightfully, and, in fact, did not come at all, before the court pronouncing this sentence. Therefore they make no part of the sentence, which is not in the least impugned or impeached by inquiring into them, or inflicting on their authors the penalty of restitution.

Where, indeed, is the difference between this and any other penalty pronounced by our laws against similar violators? Will it be pretended that we cannot proceed criminally against these *captors, for arming, fitting, or recruiting in our waters, because the fruits of their offense have been adjudged to them as prize, by the prize court of Venezuela? I presume not; and if the sentence cannot screen them from one part of the punishment, upon what ground can it be considered as sufficient to screen them from another? Does this court, in ordering restitution, impeach the sentence, or meddle with it in any manner whatever? Does it inquire whether the sentence was right or wrong? Certainly not. But admitting that the sentence rightly disposed of the question of prize or no prize, and all its incidents, it seizes the goods, when found within our jurisdiction, as forfeited by the violation of the law, and restores them to the former owner as part of the penalty of this offense. This is the substance, although the form is different.

6. The last question in the cause is, whether the commission of prize, granted to this captured vessel by the government of Venezuela, after the condemnation, can shut out all inquiry into the antecedent violation of our laws, by means of which the capture was effected.

Much of what has already been said, as to the effect of the condemnation itself, will apply here. We cannot but know how easily such commissions as this may be obtained, how readily they are granted, and how certainly every prize ship would be clothed with one, if it were pronounced here to have the effect of preventing all inquiry into the means or place of capture. The mischief, indeed, thus produced, would be less formidable than the *other; because it would apply only to 162 vessels, which are by far the least important objects of capture; but as far as it goes, it would render our laws for the preservation of our neutrality a complete nullity.

And upon what principle can it be contended, that a foreign commission of prize will produce such effects? Upon the principle of comity, it is answered, upon the ground of implied assent, under which the public ships of friendly states come into our ports, and which protects them from molestation while here. But this immunity is granted so long as they comport themselves well; and has never been considered as protecting them from the consequences of violating our laws. To this point the case of The Cassius<sup>1</sup> is full and express. The Cassius was not merely a vessel bearing a French commission of prize, but a public ship of the French government, regularly commissioned as a part of the French navy. But she had been fitted out within our territory, in contravention of our laws; and coming, afterwards, within our jurisdiction, under the French flag, and a regular commission, she was proceeded against to forfeiture for this offense. The decision is cited, relied on, and sanctioned by this court, in the case of The Invincible,<sup>1</sup> and it is declared that "there could be no reason suggested for creating a distinction (in relation to the restitution of prizes made in violation of 163*) neutrality) *between the national and the private armed vessels of a belligerent."

1.—1 Dall. Rep. 121; 2 Dall. Rep. 365.

In this case, indeed, of The Cassius, the vessel which was subjected to the operation of the law, notwithstanding her foreign commission, had herself committed the offense of illegal outfit. But this circumstance can make no difference in the application of the principle of comity and implied license. If that principle would not protect the offending vessel herself, though clothed with a public commission, and the flag of the navy, a fortiori, I apprehend it will not protect the spoil, the fruit of the offense. Why should it protect one more than the other? One is the instrument of the offense, and the other is its product. The offense is committed in relation to both. To punish the offense, and by punishing to restrain its commission, is the object in both cases. This furnishes the reason of the application, which is as strong at least in one case as in the other; indeed, it is much stronger, as far as the practical consequences of the two acts are concerned, for the capturing ship may avoid our ports after she has been well equipped; but the captured ship, which is either to be sold or equipped, must come here for a purchaser, or for equipment. Therefore, in every case, she will be sure to come under the protecting cover of a commission, if you once declare such a cover sufficient.

The cases of The Exchange,<sup>2</sup> and The Invincible,<sup>3</sup> have been relied on to support the 164*) doctrine *of immunity, in application to this case. But neither of our resemble it in its great and distinguishing feature of violation of our neutrality. The Exchange was an American vessel, seized by a French force at St. Sebastians, in Spain, and conducted to Bayonne, where she was taken into the service of the French government, and regularly commissioned as a part of the French marine. She was afterwards sent to sea, and on her passage to the East Indies was compelled to put into one of our ports by stress of weather. While here, she was libeled by the former owner, on the ground that she had been unlawfully seized, and, consequently, that he never had been divested of his property. The French commander produced his commission; and the question was, whether this vessel, not having been in any manner connected, either as instrument or subject, with a violation of our neutrality, was protected by the comity of nations, and the implied license under which she entered our waters. This is manifestly a question altogether different from that now under consideration. There was no violation of our laws, or our neutral obligations, as in the present case. The vessel had demeaned herself peaceably and correctly while within our territory; and though seized, undoubtedly, in a violent and unjustifiable manner, the seizure was not made by means acquired or increased within our territory. It was, in some measure, analogous to the case of a British, or a Portuguese vessel, seized on the high seas by a cruiser regularly fitted out in Venezuela, and commissioned to cruise *against Spain. [165 We could not inquire into the legality of this seizure, which might be legal on the ground of unneutral conduct on the part of the captured vessel. Even if it were one of our own vessels, we could not institute this inquiry, but must, in both cases, remit the question to the domestic forum of the captor. But this case of The Exchange has no analogy whatsoever to the case now in question, where the demand of restitution is founded expressly on the violation of our neutrality, our treaties and our laws.

Neither has the case of The Invincible any analogy to this. That was the case of a French privateer, taken by a British cruiser during the war between Great Britain and France, retaken by an American cruiser, we also being then at war with Great Britain, and brought by the recaptor into an American port, where he libeled her for salvage. While these proceedings were pending, a claim for damages was interposed by certain American citizens, who alleged that the Invincible, before her capture by the British, had plundered them at sea. And the question was, whether this claim could be sustained, or the claimant must be left to seek his remedy against the privateer in the courts of France. This court decided that the seizure of the American property was an exercise of the rights of war, which must depend for its justification or condemnation on the circumstances of the case. Consequently, that it involved the question of prize or no prize, which belonged exclusively to the courts of the captors' country. In this respect, they said, there was no *differ- [166 ence between the case of The Invincible and those of The Cassius and The Exchange; that is, between a private armed ship, and a ship belonging to the national marine. They were all parts of the public force, though raised and supported in different manners; and the legality or illegality of their conduct in making any capture, being a question of prize or no prize, equally belonged to the exclusive cognizance of their domestic tribunals. This principle, it is quite clear, had no analogy to that now advanced in support of the claim of the captors. There was no illegal outfit. No violation of our neutrality or our laws was alleged or pretended. The act complained of was a capture, as of enemy's property, under a regular French commission, by a vessel regularly fitted out in the French territory. This capture might be a good prize, according to the law of nations, by reason of some unneutral conduct in the owner, or his agents, which rendered him, pro tanto, a belligerent. Consequently, it was a simple question of prize or no prize, and was most correctly adjudged to belong exclusively to the courts of the captors' country. But had a violation of our neutrality been alleged, either in making the capture or in preparing the means of making it, the case would so far have resembled ours, and a different course would, no doubt, have been pursued.

1.—1 Wheat. Rep. 253.

2.—7 Cranch's Rep. 116.

3.—1 Wheat. Rep. 250.

The cause was continued to the next term, under the following order for farther proof:

167*] *ORDER.—This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Maryland, and on certain exhibits and depositions filed by consent, and was argued by counsel. On consideration whereof, this court doth direct and order that the respondent have liberty to produce a copy of the libel or other paper on which the sentence of condemnation in the proceedings mentioned was founded, or to account for the non-production of such document; and that the parties be at liberty to take any proof which may tend to show that the sale of the Nereyda was or was not real, and that Antonio Julio Francesche, in the proceedings mentioned, was or was not a bonæ fidei purchaser for himself, and is, or is not the present owner of the said vessel.

The cause was again argued by the same counsel, on the further proof produced at the present term.

Mr. Justice STORY delivered the opinion of the court: This cause was heard at the last term, and an order was then made requiring the claimant to produce a copy of the libel, or other paper on which the sentence was founded, or to account for the non-production of such document; that also requiring the production of farther proof of the reality of the asserted sale of the Nereyda, and of the proprietary interest of the asserted owner. The cause has now been argued upon the farther proof brought in by the parties, and stands for the judgment of the court.

168*] *The Nereyda was a Spanish ship of war, and was captured by the privateer Irresistible, of which John D. Daniels was commander, and Henry Childs (the claimant), a lieutenant, under an asserted commission of the Oriental Republic of Rio de la Plata, and was carried into Margarita, in Venezuela, and there condemned as prize of the captors by the Vice-Admiralty Court of that island. A sale is asserted to have been there made of her to the claimant, Francesche, after condemnation, for the sum of thirty thousand dollars. She soon afterwards left Margarita, under the command of Childs, who was the original prize-master, and arrived at Baltimore, the place of residence of Childs and Daniels, who are both American citizens; and her subsequent history, after seizure and delivery upon stipulation or bail to the claimant, show that she has continued exclusively under the control, management and direction of the same persons.

The order to produce the libel, or to account for the omission, was made upon the fullest consideration by the court. Whoever sets up a title under a condemnation, is bound to show that the court has jurisdiction of the cause and that the sentence has been rightly pronounced upon the application of parties competent to ask it. For this purpose it is necessary to show who are the captors and how the court has acquired authority to decide the cause. In the ordinary cases of belligerent capture, no difficulty arises on this subject, for the courts of the captors have general jurisdiction of prize, and their adjudication is *conclusive. [*169 upon the proprietary interest. But where, as in the present case, the capture is made by captors acting under the commission of a foreign country, such capture gives them a right which no other nation, neutral to them, has authority to impugn, unless for the purpose of vindicating its own violated neutrality. The courts of another nation, whether an ally or a co-belligerent only, can acquire no general right to entertain cognizance of the cause, unless by the assent or upon the voluntary submission of the captors. In such a case it is peculiarly proper to show the jurisdiction of the court by an exemplification of the proceedings anterior to the sentence of condemnation. And in all cases it is the habit of courts of justice to require the production of the libel, or other equivalent document, to verify the nature of the case, and ascertain the foundation of the claim of forfeiture as prize.

